Sir G. GREY.—Not at all, nor do they ask for a separate representation. What I have contended for is that they ought to be blended absolutely with the European population, as if they were one people, which they are now quite qualified to be. Now let me come to the question of finance, and I ask why that should be delayed for the purpose of considering this totally unnecessary matter on the present occasion. I appeal to the House, and to old members, whether it has not always been the habit of the Premier to start the question of finance, and then never allow it to be fairly considered by the House. I recollect one very memorable occasion here where, to the very end of the session, we tried to get the question of finance brought forward, and could not get it done; and the only chance of doing it was on the last day previous to our being sent for by the Governor, and I was in my place in the House to speak on that subject and to expose the shortcomings of the Government, when the gentleman who occupied the chair of the Speaker, in the Speaker's absence, absolutely refused to allow any member to speak within the walls of the House. I think that was the most disgraceful breach of the rules that Parliament has ever committed, and it was committed with the connivance of the honourable gentleman on that occasion, because he, as leader of the House, sat on the opposite side and allowed a wrong ruling to be given, and Parliament to be shut out from its privilege of speaking; and then the Acting-Speaker, when I insisted on the right, got out of the chair and left it, and went and sat in the chair occupied by the Clerk of Parliaments; and the House for a time was left without a Speaker purposely that the voice of members might be closed, and no debate or commentary whatever should be allowed on the financial condition of the colony. And I say the effort made now to bring this variety of Bills forward before the great financial question is settled, before we have determined what reductions shall be made, is done with the deliberate intention of preventing our going into the estimates and rigidly and carefully considering every item of expenditure. I am as sure as that I am standing here that that object will be secured; that again Parliament will be, I may say, made fools of, because it really comes to that, and the country will be shut out of that knowledge of its finances of which it ought to be in possession. Then, I would ask this: What are we to gain by losing the power of debating the finances? What object is there in passing this measure now? Will honourable gentlemen all resign their seats when it is passed? If it were enacted that this Parliament should terminate the moment the Bill was passed; if we brought about great reduction of expenditure; if we brought about a new system for the conduct of the public service of the colony; if we made those great and beneficial changes which we might do, if we reduced our expenditure within the narrow limits it should occupy—if we had done all that, then we might deal with this question of the reduction in number of members; we might, with propriety, pass a Bill greatly reducing the number of members, and saving a great expense to the country; then get rid of ourselves, and give the people of the country an opportunity of electing a new House under the new system of representation, to carry out the great and beneficial changes which we had introduced, whilst the saving made would instantly commence, instead of being delayed for three years. We should then show that we were really a band of patriots doing our duty. That would be something worth doing—to give the people a new basis to stand upon, to give them a rigid system of finance, and to give them a new Parliament to carry that out. That would be a proposition worthy of a statesman; but for honourable members to vote that, after they have been a short time in office, they are still to have two or two and a half years to occupy this Chamber in greater numbers than the country requires, and at a greater expense, and this for their personal benefit—for them to do that, and to say, "Having thought of ourselves, and secured ourselves in office for the time we were elected for, when we knew that the number of members was greater than was necessary, we will insist on our successors economizing," that would be very wrong indeed. Is it worthy of honourable members to do that? Is it not better, if they really think the number of members is beyond what New Zealand requires, that they should say that, after the end of this session, when they have done all they could do to benefit New Zealand, they will get out of the way, and let the people elect the proper number of members to sit here, and thus immediately save an expenditure they know to be unnecessary? Is not that their bounden duty? I appeal to all honourable members to say so. But there is no intention of doing that; not at all. The same party will be made use of to carry this measure which has been allowed to do the things which have been done this session; to do the things we saw done the other night by which large runs and vast possessions are to be given to a foreign company in fee-simple for a long period of time—that is, for ever. To say that, and that the people are to be robbed of land to an almost incredible extent, millions of acres—to carry that by the majority which the Government has here at present is a very great wrong. And, then, what is the Premier, careless of all argument, about to do? He will have got you to do that, and, then, with the same majority which has enabled him to do these things, he is to remain in office for yet two years, to enable those plans to enrich great companies to be completed. It is, to me, as if some necromancer sat here such as we have read of in Eastern tales, who had slaves—

a slave of a ring, or a slave of a casket, or a slave of—what shall I say?

An Hon. MEMBER.—A bank.

Sir G. GREY.—Yes, a slave of a bank, as some honourable member says, to help on his followers still further to rob the people of the country, as he has done within the last week or ten days. That is what the course of proceedings is to be; and, after all these things have been achieved, then let the spirits who accomplished it be dismissed. Their work will have been achieved, and then a new state of things is to be introduced; and the number of members is to be reduced, to carry on the same system for a time. I am sure all honourable members will feel with me that this is an unnecessary measure; that it is better for the country that those who have done these things within the last few days should return to their constituents when this session is over, and that a new Parliament under this Bill, if it is to be passed, reduced in number, shall be sent back by the people, who will then have these things fresh in their memory. Let the people of New Zealand do that before they have forgotten what has been done; because it is the very essence of punishment that it should follow quickly on the crime. Let this Parliament, if it chooses, reduce the number of members, and then let the people of New Zealand, in the new elections which will immediately take place, state whether they approve of the action of those who have robbed this country for ever of millions of acres of land—whether they approve that the people who, from being unable to obtain lands on fair terms, have been reduced to poverty throughout the country, should now have no hope of acquiring land hereafter; and whether they approve of great foreign companies obtaining possession of vast areas of land to be given to them, and which we did not know until within the last few days would be given to them. Let the people say whether they approve of that, or return new members who will, as far as possible, remedy the evils which have been done. I wish I had not been hurried on to speak until I had heard further arguments used, for I have not yet heard one in favour of this measure. But I still believe there are left in this House some who will yet rise to answer those arguments, and that when the division takes place there are some who will recollect what they owe to the people of the country, and who will not support a measure providing for the benefit of this Parliament and reducing the number of members who are to follow them. Let them put into the Bill an amendment, which we can yet make, that it shall take effect immediately after the close of this session. Let that justice be done to the people of New Zealand. I say let it be done: but I speak without hope. I live at present without hope to do anything. But I do believe that some others will give utterance to such vigorous sentiments and enter such protests as they ought against this measure that the Premier may yet be compelled, notwithstanding promises just now given to the House

Sir G. Grey

—promises which I believe he knew to be delusive—I say that he yet may be compelled to give an opportunity to consider the finances before we go on with this measure. I cannot conceive that promises to vote for this measure should have been extorted before the debate is concluded. I think it was a crime to demand such promises under such circumstances, and an abuse which this House ought not to sanction; and I hope honourable gentlemen will vigorously do that which they conceive to be their duty on this occasion, and, if they do, that they will prevent this measure being disposed of before we have thoroughly considered the finances of the country.

Mr. FISHER.—Sir, if I do not succeed in making anything else clear, I should like to make this clear: that if this Bill is not passed this session it will not be passed during the present Parliament. And I urge it upon those honourable gentlemen who claim to sit here as the representatives of "Liberalism" and as the representatives of all that concerns the interests of the working-classes that it is one of the disadvantages of the system of triennial Parliaments that it is impossible to carry any large measure of reform through the Legislature unless it is introduced in the first session of a three-years Parliament. For it is they who make it impossible. And for proof of the correctness of that statement I call up the evidence afforded by the experience of the last Parliament. In the session of 1886 we had presented to us the fact of one member in this House dictating to the late Premier and declaring that no other measure should pass that session if the Representation Bill was proceeded with; and the Premier, the first Minister of the Crown in this country, was forced to yield, although he was warned by the late member for Waitotara (Mr. Bryce) that, if the Bill were not passed that session, the Premier would find himself entirely at the mercy of any two or three honourable members who might choose to make themselves masters of the situation in the expiring session of a Parliament. And that was exactly what happened, for, after the House reduced the number of members to seventy-one, the Premier, under the compulsion of a single member, the member for Kumara, had to raise the number to ninety-one again to get the Bill through. Now, Sir, I wish to point out to the honourable member for New Plymouth that I think it was a little unfair to say that the Government ought not to proceed with this measure until the whole of their financial proposals were before the House. That was not at all a fair statement of the position. It is useless now to take up time referring to the tactics which have been resorted to to delay the Government business. We need not do that. It is sufficient to say that time has been consumed—I will not say wasted, if that word is objectionable—and obstacles have been placed in the way of bringing them on. But are not our financial proposals fully before the House? We have brought in and passed a Bill to reduce the Governor's salary, a Bill to reduce the salaries of Ministers, and a Bill to regulate the honorarium of members. These Bills, it is true, are referred to by some honourable members as Bills of no importance, while, quite inconsistently, others, for example the honourable member for Christchurch North and the honourable member for Kumara, refer to them as Bills of enormous importance. And they are Bills of enormous importance. They are part of a large and comprehensive scheme which will mark out this Parliament as a Parliament the equal of which has not existed in this colony for very many years. Then, Sir, did not the Financial Statement exhaustively outline the whole of the financial policy of the Government? And have we not, I am happy to say, passed the Land Bill?

AN HON. MEMBER.—No.

MR. FISHER.—It has passed its second reading. We have also passed through its second reading a Bill of enormous importance, the Railway Board Bill, which will remove those defects in the railway system which have formed the subject of adverse public comment for many years past. Sir, I fail to see on what ground the objection of the honourable member for New Plymouth is based. But, having combated these objections, I desire to pay a passing tribute to the extreme fairness with which the honourable member for Christchurch North treated the Bill. The honourable gentleman said that, while he recognised that the constituencies had had the question prominently before them during the late elections, he still feared that it would lead to a great deal of dissatisfaction when carried into practical effect. Well, that, of course, is a matter of opinion. My opinion is that, instead of creating dissatisfaction, it will meet with almost universal approval. The honourable gentleman made a valuable suggestion, to the effect that care should be taken, in providing for a dissolution, that proper means were provided for readjusting the electorates. That is a suggestion that may be given effect to in the course of the passage of the Bill through the House. I come now to the objections urged by the Native members. They urge that, as they are under-represented in proportion to population, it is unfair that they should have one of their members taken away. But it must have escaped their notice that, while only one of their number is taken from them, twenty-four members are taken from us. The honourable member for the Eastern Maori District objects to any interference with the special representation, and says that, rather than have it interfered with, he would prefer to see it taken away altogether. That is a fair matter of argument, and one which, I assume, will be fairly discussed when the honourable gentleman's motion upon the subject comes before the House. It is not for me to say why that motion has not come up for discussion. The question is one of very large importance, and when it does come before us it will doubtless receive the fullest and fairest consideration at the hands of the House. I must now revert to some of the statements of the honourable member for Kumara, which were composed solely of denunciations and abuse similar to those very frequently indulged in by another prominent member of the Opposition. Is it argument to tell us that this Bill is introduced by the present Ministry because they represent a dominant party? Does it in any way affect the question to say that the Ministry is supported by wealthy land rings and land combinations of all descriptions? Sir, I should be very sorry to lose my temper because a member of this House chooses to make such absurd and ridiculous statements; but one may ask whether it can with truth be alleged against any member of this Government that he is the representative of wealth, or that he is the representative of a land ring. Which member of this Ministry represents either wealth or land? There is not a shadow of foundation for these wild denunciations. They are totally untrue.

MR. SEDDON.—There is such a thing as a dummy.

MR. FISHER.—Well, if we are going to discuss principles, let us discuss principles; but I am not going to descend to bandying charges of such a character across the floor of this House with the honourable gentleman. Now, in what way will this Bill deprive the country districts of a fair share of representation, as the honourable gentleman asserts? I have been long enough in this country, long enough have I been a spectator of the proceedings of this House, fully to understand whether the fact of there being a smaller number of members would injuriously affect the country districts. I remember the time when the country districts had fewer members than now, and when, I take leave to think, they were far more ably represented. They were represented by the best intellects of the country—some of those grand intellects of which this colony could boast a quarter of a century ago. I say the comparison is to the advantage of the times gone by, though I should be sorry to have it supposed that I am in any way reflecting upon the honourable member for Kumara. Next, I should like to ask the honourable gentleman how this Bill is likely to foster local jealousies, or to lead to a want of community of interest. Surely the larger the district the less localism; and I should assume that it would be the duty of honourable members, whether they come from cities or from country districts, to study the community of interest, and advance the interests of the constituencies collectively and as a whole. Once again we are treated to a dissertation on democracy. The honourable gentleman tells us that he opposes the Bill in the interests of democracy;—and once again “the rights of the people are to be invaded” by the reduction of the number of members. What puerile nonsense! We are informed also that the comparison as to the proportion of representation in France, England, and other nations of the Old World has no bearing upon the question. Very well, we will come nearer home. We will give the honourable gentleman a fair and legitimate answer; and the fair and legitimate answer is this: Take his own model colony, the Colony of Victoria—the democratic, the great Protectionist colony, which makes such rapid strides because of its Protection and its democracy. That colony has a population of 1,038,052, and it has only 86 representatives, which is one member for every 12,012 of population. New South Wales has a population of 1,080,762, and 122 members, which is one member for every 8,448 of population. New Zealand, with a population of only 578,482, has 95 representatives, which is one representative for every 6,089 of population. Now, if it be said that Victoria prospers because of her protective policy, and her radicalism, and her democracy, and her parliamentary representation, which prevents “the rights of the people being invaded,” surely we, who have twice Victoria’s representation, should prosper; for, while she has only one member for every 12,000 people, we have one member for every 6,000 people. If that does not show that our representation is altogether disproportionate to our population, then figures and comparisons go for nothing. Sir, I beg of the honourable gentleman to remember that strong language is not argument, and that when he comes to deal with a large question such as this he should have something like solid fact to go upon. Now, this Government and this House, the honourable gentleman says, do not represent the people, the democracy, to the extent to which it ought to be represented. Well, if this House does not represent the people, and does not represent democracy, did the last House represent them?

Mr. SEDDON.—Yes.

Mr. FISHER.—Then the last House did what this House is asked to do now. It adopted the proposal to reduce the number of members to 71. And how was that decision reversed? By the dogged influence of one member, who controlled every act of the late Premier in this House. And, Sir, if it be true that this House does not represent the people and the democracy of the country, it was not for want of abundant representation of the principles which actuate that party, for we had the late Premier, who poses as par excellence the great leader of the great “Liberal” party, stumping the country from end to end, together with his colleague the late Minister of Lands, another great apostle of democracy. So that, if this House does not represent the radical and democratic party, it does not say much for the influence, for the democratic power, or for the power of oratory of those two very eminent persons. But there are members on this side of the House and on these benches, I venture to say, who as truly and faithfully represent the feelings of the people of this country, aye, and of its democratic feeling too, as any honourable member who sits on the Opposition benches; and to tell me that those honourable gentlemen have a monopoly of the right to represent the feelings of the people of New Zealand is to tell me something that shall always receive a ready and a sharp answer. Sir, I resent this assumption on the part of those honourable gentlemen of the exclusive right to speak in the name of the working-classes of this country. Another strong point made by the honourable member for Kumara was that every pound saved by this proposal would cost the colony a thousand pounds. Now, let us discuss that point for a moment. According to the dictum of the honourable member for the Peninsula, a member of Parliament costs the country £500 a year. Therefore to reduce the number of members by twenty would save the colony £10,000 a year.

Mr. Fisher

An Hon. MEMBER.—That does not follow.

Mr. FISHER.—That may or may not be a fair way of putting it; but I prefer to give it in that form, as it is the estimate of a member of the Opposition, and therefore is more likely to be acceptable to that party. The saving by the reduction of members, as I have said, would represent £10,000. Then, we have to take into account the expensive annual demands made upon Parliament by each of those twenty members for works for their districts, and my impression is that by the absence of these demands the country will save at least another £10,000.

An Hon. MEMBER.—There are twenty-five members.

Mr. FISHER.—Yes; I was a little in error in naming twenty. We are to reduce, of course, by twenty-five. But I will put the saving, roundly, at £20,000; and, if that, in the straitened circumstances of the colony, is not a saving worth aiming at, I should like to know what is. Next, the honourable gentleman made a powerful and pathetic appeal to the Maori members, and made tender reference to the wrongs they would suffer if this proposal were given effect to. Now, does the honourable gentleman for one moment suppose that the Maori representatives in this House are so wanting in intellectual power as not to fully comprehend the nature of this proposal? And does he think they are at all likely to go to him for light and leading? I undertake to say that every one of those Maori representatives understands the effect of every measure affecting themselves quite as well as does the honourable member for Kumara. And I take it to be rather a reflection upon the intelligence of the House that we should be compelled to sit and listen to the honourable gentleman’s lectures to the Native members upon the effect of this proposal. If the honourable member has so much at heart the welfare of the Native race as he would have us believe, he ought to bring in a Bill to do justice to the Native race by enabling them to resume all the goldfields lands, which lands formerly belonged to the Maori race, and all their fishing and riparian rights for all the streams on the West Coast have been polluted and destroyed by the miners. Then we shall see what the real feelings of the honourable member for Kumara are in regard to the Maori race.

Mr. SEDDON.—I have always stuck up for them, and will do so again.

Mr. FISHER.—The honourable member for

Kumara made the further rash statement that our bonds had receded to 92. Sir, our bonds have never yet receded to 92, and are never likely to do so. There may have been some little ambiguity in the telegrams which have passed between the colonies and London relating to the financial policy of the Government which has led to a fall to 97; but so soon as the full effect of the Government proposals is understood in London the bonds will, without doubt, go up very considerably. I hold in my hand a copy of Westgarth's Circular, which has come to hand by to-day's English mail—and I think it will be admitted that the conductors of that Circular understand as much about these matters as the honourable member for Kumara; and here is what the Circular of the 14th October says: "The news of the recent change of Government in New Zealand, and of the programme of economies that has resulted, have been highly satisfactory to this market"—that is, the London market. The honourable gentleman has been telling us a great deal about the state of the market in Kumara. Now, Sir, when the full text of the Financial Statement reaches London, and it becomes understood that we are, for the first time during the past ten years, going to make an honest and a vigorous effort to put the finances of the colony on a sound footing, we shall see the price our stock will reach. Reverting again to the remarks of the honourable member for New Plymouth, I wish to say that the Government have placed their proposals before the House with every expedition. It is not their fault if numerous delays have taken place. For those delays we are not at all responsible. We have worked night and day. Our measures have been before the House for a considerable time now, and they have been acknowledged by the leaders of the Opposition to be measures of immense importance. And when so described they were truthfully described; for I venture to say that when full effect is given to them the colony will reap such advantage as can hardly at present be conceived.

Mr. SAMUEL.—I desire to say that what I said in the connection mentioned by the honourable gentleman was, that no expected saving from reducing the number of members forms any part of the financial proposals referred to in the Financial Statement.

Mr. FISHER.—I do not desire to put the statement any stronger than to say that the criticism of the honourable gentleman was hardly fair. I do not suppose the honourable gentleman intended to do the Government any injustice. I think, speaking generally, he will be prepared to admit that the Government has done all that any set of men could be expected to do. Sir, I thought it only fair to put the position of the Government fairly before the House and the country. I do not object to fair, honest, straightforward criticism; but I do object to those statements which are only remarkable for strength of expression, and are entirely destitute of any form of argument.

Mr. M. J. S. MACKENZIE.—Whatever may be the effect of the speech which the honourable gentleman has just delivered, I do not think it is calculated to much advance the progress of this Bill. The honourable member has not advanced a single argument in favour of the Bill. He has dealt with the somewhat loose and irrelevant remarks of some of those who have spoken; but he has said nothing calculated to promote the passage of the Bill through the House. If there was any argument in what he said, it was this: that in this Parliament of New Zealand a measure, to be passed at all, ought to be passed three years ahead of its time. I understood him to say that no measure having for its object a constitutional change could be passed at all unless it was passed three years ahead. Well, if that is the case, why should we limit the period to three years? Why not pass Bills six or nine years ahead? The one is quite as allowable as the other. He forgot, as a democrat, that, whether in the first or third year of a Parliament, if the people of this country are earnest in their desire for the passage of a Bill it will pass. That may be depended on; and the nearer to the end of the term, in accordance with the dictates of human nature, the more likely is it to pass. We are told that this Bill is part of the financial scheme of the Government. Let me here say that I do not attach any blame to the Government for delaying financial business. I do not agree with the proposed amendment, because it does not solve the difficulty, but merely endeavours to postpone the consideration of this Bill; whereas I am of those who think this Bill ought to be considered and negatived. But the honourable member told us that this is part of the great financial scheme of the Government. Now, how can it possibly be that? Here we are now, desperately in want of money. Does this Bill propose to give us any? Not a single farthing, because it is not to take effect for three years. We want the money now, and cannot get it. We may not want it, as I hope and believe, in three years. We want it now, but it is not forthcoming; and hence this Bill cannot be called a part of their financial scheme, and is not a financial measure at all. Then, again, we were told that when this Bill was passed it would effect a saving equal to the demands of some twenty members. Now, if that is a valid argument at all, it is an argument that, by mere extension, can be used against the presence of any honourable member. If we can save the demands of twenty members, why not of twenty-five or thirty or forty, as the case may be? It is absurd. There is really no arbitrary number: the question is purely one of convenience in the representation of a people. We cannot specify a particular number and say, "This is the perfection of parliamentary representation." If there is weight in such an argument, it is our duty to carry the argument further and cut down the number still more. I have no patience with that class of argument at all. It was precisely the same that was used in favour of Railway Boards—that because Governments are weak therefore we should withdraw the railways from their control. It is a tacit admission on the part of the Government, who in effect say, "In God's name take this department away from us, or we shall be corrupt under it." Instead of reducing the number so as to get rid of the demands of honourable members, it would be much more natural and proper if we insisted on Governments resisting such demands, as they ought to do, and as they would do if we took that course with them. My principal object in rising was to say that I opposed this Bill before, as I oppose it now; and I do think that we have a right seriously to object to the manner in which the Premier has introduced it. I say that with all respect for the honourable gentleman. The position the honourable gentleman took up was this—I never heard the like of it before: He said, "Here is a Bill of great importance. I have no particular arguments to adduce, myself, in favour of it"—(Oh!)—"but I will leave it for all those who are opposed to the measure to say what they have got to say, and I will reply to them." That is, practically, what the honourable member said.

Major ATKINSON.—No; nothing like it.

Mr. M. J. S. MACKENZIE.—He may not have put it as broadly as that; but that represents in effect what he said. He said this Bill was passed in the last Parliament,—that there were a great many arguments in favour of it, but he was not going to repeat them. The Bill of last session was different. It aimed at the same thing, but was to take effect without delay. I opposed it. The object then was to pass it and to go to the country at once on the reduction, and consequently get whatever saving there was in it. It is proposed that this Bill shall take effect in three years; and we shall not have the saving, if there is any attached to it, at the very moment we most require it. Therefore it is a totally different thing; and when he introduced the Bill he should have given all the reasons which make it desirable that we should pass such a measure now. Instead of that, he left other honourable members to object, saying that he would deal with their objections in reply. All he did was to give a number of bald statistics, which I listened to with amazement, about the number of persons represented by a single member in the different countries of the world. He told us, for instance, that in the United Kingdom the number was 56,000; in France, 67,000; in the United States, 174,000; down to Canada, 20,000. I listened in amazement to that, because it was curious that he did not perceive that these statistics tell against and not in favour of this Bill. What lesson do we learn from these statistics? Simply that the divergence in the various countries is such as to show that there is no absolute rule—that each nation takes the number that best suits its circumstances. We in New Zealand do precisely the same thing. We have found out what number best suits us and our circumstances, and have adhered to it. And not only that, but if any honourable member will take the trouble to look up the debates of 1881, when the number was increased to ninety-one, he will see that the principle upon which the Government went then was that the country should be divided into convenient districts—that is, that convenient geographical distribution was to be considered, and then the population basis adhered to as nearly as possible. The districts were very convenient. Now, I do not believe that honourable members quite recognise the full extent to which the Bill goes. What it proposes is, that we should double back on our past history for twenty-two years; and no reason has been adduced why we should do so except a vague notion that at some future time we may save some money by the process. Does the House know that the number of members was raised to seventy in 1865?—and that, let it be understood, was not at a time of great inflation, or even of prosperity. It was before the public-works policy was initiated—a time of great distress, when Parliament would be very careful not to unnecessarily add to expense. In 1865, in spite of all these circumstances, it was thought wise to increase the number to seventy; and it has been increased at different periods since then. In 1871 it was increased to seventy-four; in 1875, to eighty-four; in 1881, to ninety-one, at which number it has since remained. And now it is proposed to travel back upon our history to the year 1865; and no substantial reason that I know of is advanced in favour of it, except that we shall save on the now reduced hono- rarium some £3,000 in three years' time. We shall commence to save it when we may not require it; and we are led, indeed, to expect by the measures of the Government that we shall not require it. The reason for such a change is altogether too slender, and we have a right to expect something better; otherwise it will be our duty to negative the Bill. The principle can be stated, I think, in a single sentence. If it is a valuable Bill and a financial measure, it is worthy of being passed, and its operation should be commenced now at the cost of a general election. If it is not a valuable measure, I should like to know for what reason we should pass it three years before it can have effect: why should we not consider it fairly and on its merits when the time approaches? There is just one other argument which has to be considered by honourable members before they pass this Bill. It is a very good and sound principle in politics that nothing should ever be done by a violent wrench and sudden change which can be accomplished by the quiet healing process of time. That is the case now. If we leave things alone, and take care not to increase the present number of members, the population will be increasing all the time; and all the evils of over-representation—if such there be—will disappear without disturbance and without taking from the people a representation they do not perhaps sufficiently appreciate, but the loss or curtailment of which they will certainly feel.

Mr. FERGUS.—The honourable member for Mount Ida has said that my colleague the Minister of Education advanced not a single argument why this Bill should be passed. He advanced one which, to my mind, was unanswerable, which was, that the last Parliament, of which we both had the honour to be members, passed the measure, and then, by a piece of political jugglery, the country was robbed of its benefits. It is a well-known fact that in the division on the amendment of the honourable member for Caversham last session a mistake was committed by the honourable member for Bruce. He explained to his constituents on a public platform that he had voted under a misapprehension, which rendered the number of votes equal, and the Chairman of Committees gave his casting-vote against reduction. That was the only thing that threw out the amendment the second time. The reduction to seventy had been carried; but, as I have said, by a piece of political jugglery the country was robbed of the benefits of the reduction. Another argument that might probably be advanced was, that the country has most unmistakably spoken in favour of the reduction. That was admitted by the honourable member for Christchurch North, and by the honourable member for Kumara, and by almost every honourable gentleman who has spoken on this subject to-day. They admitted that there is a majority of honourable members here pledged to vote in favour of the reduction of members; and, if the House recognises the opinion of the people and of the people's representatives that the number of members should be reduced, I ask, what harm can there be in passing the measure now? All the talk that its opponents can indulge in, or all the tactics they may resort to to postpone the question, will result in nothing more than preventing the expression of opinion which this House is prepared to give just now—it could only delay that expression of opinion until another session. It seems to me that the honourable member for Mount Ida was not fair in saying that my honourable colleague advanced no reasons why the Bill should not be passed at the present time. The honourable member says that the Bill might just as well be postponed for three years. But what possible advantage could there be in delaying it? The honourable gentleman admits that there is a majority in the House and the country in favour of the measure. Then, if that is so, by all that is fair, let us pass it now and have done with it. We do not know what questions may demand the attention of the House next session. In fact, we do not know what complications may arise next session. We cannot tell what will be the result of the measures which the Government propose to introduce. We shall have great questions to deal with, which will take up the whole of the time that can be spared next year; and why are we, then, not to dispose of a measure which we can easily deal with now? The Minister of Education was perfectly right in saying that no really good measures are passed except in the first session of a Parliament. And, to my mind, any great measure of reform ought not only to be introduced in the first session of a Parliament, but on the very first day of the session. The people want this reduction, and if we allow the question to be burked this session there will be the very same tactics against it next session, when other questions will absorb our attention thoroughly; and then, in the third session, we shall not be able to pass it at all, because of the multiplicity of work which Parliament will have in hand. The honourable member for Mount Ida also asked, in reference to the argument of my honourable colleague that the operation of the Bill will save the colony £10,000 per annum—it will really be £12,500—

Mr. M. J. S. Mackenzie

Mr. M. J. S. MACKENZIE.—Abolish Parliament altogether!

Mr. FERGUS.—The honourable gentleman assumes, what he is perfectly unwarranted in so doing, that we have now the charmed number—that ninety-five is the exact number required for the good government of the colony. That I utterly deny; and the people of the colony deny it, as is shown by two-thirds of the members of this House, when before the electors recently, pledging themselves to vote for the reduction of the number of members. The honourable member for Dunedin West has admitted that the country has pronounced for this measure. The honourable member voted against reduction last session; and just afterwards I had the pleasure of being at a public dinner with him in Dunedin, when the whole of those present gave him to understand that he had acted wrongly and against the opinion of the country. The honourable gentleman was convinced of his mistake, and he now admits that the mind of the country is made up for this reduction, and is prepared to support it.

Mr. M. J. S. MACKENZIE.—He has changed his mind.

Mr. FERGUS.—No doubt the honourable gentleman will change his mind many times in the course of his life. The honourable member for Mount Ida said the same class of arguments were used for this Bill as for the Railway Boards. Yes; and the very same class of arguments apply. The honourable gentleman said the action of the Government in proposing the Railway Board was an admission by them that they could not manage the railways satisfactorily. No Government in any of the constitutionally-governed colonies have been able to manage their railways satisfactorily to the people; and that is why, throughout the Australian Colonies and New Zealand at the present time, there is such a widespread feeling in favour of taking the management of the railways entirely out of the hands of the Government and placing it in the hands of Commissioners—men of some knowledge of the working of railways. And the state of things which this Bill is intended to alter is partly the cause why the management of the railways by the Government has not been, and cannot be, successful. There are claims from every petty out-of-the-way corner of a district on account of railways and railway service, and honourable members are compelled to urge on the Government the demands of portions of their districts for what they know those localities ought not to get in the way of expenditure of public money, or, if they do not do so, they know that they will get block-votes against them at the next election. That is the state of things from the North Cape to Stewart Island.

Mr. WARD.—Not Stewart Island.

Mr. FERGUS.—Yes; I had an address from there to-day for the expenditure of public money. Every member must struggle for the expenditure of public money for some out-of-the-way corner of his district, or he knows he will get no support there; and I say that by increasing the size of the constituencies you will inevitably get a more healthy feeling in that respect, and you will get better men to represent the people, and honourable members who then represent constituencies will be able to treat with scorn unjust attempts to make them get spoil from the public chest for the benefit of every little locality that chooses to be clamorous and persistent. The honourable member for Mount Ida said the Premier, in introducing the Bill, had adduced no argument in its favour. The Premier knew quite well, and it has been admitted by other honourable gentlemen, that nine-tenths of the Press of the colony are in favour of the reduction of the number of members. The merits of the question were threshed out last session; the bulk of the members of this House are pledged to it; and what the Premier wanted to find out was if any honourable gentleman had any fresh argument to bring against the proposal. It was useless to bring forward again the same arguments as were urged many times for the Bill a few months ago, or to refute those which were then refuted over and over again. I was very much amused when the honourable member for Mount Ida said the Bill of last session provided that the geographical features of the country should be taken into account; and that this Bill—

Mr. M. J. S. MACKENZIE.—The Bill of 1881.

Mr. FERGUS.—Yes, and that of last session too. The honourable member said the Bill of last session provided that geographical features should be taken into account. I entirely disagree with the honourable gentleman. The measure we passed last session for the redistribution of seats did not at all insure consideration of the geographical features of the country. Take, for instance, the part of the country he and I represent. Going by geographical features, the electorate of the honourable gentleman, that of the Dunstan, and my own should be two electorates, and the honourable gentleman's district should not be thrown so far towards the sea-coast, on the one hand, and mine should not be thrown so far into Southland, on the other. The honourable gentleman said we are going back in the action we now propose. I am free to admit it is going back, and a very healthy going-back it is. The honourable gentleman said that in 1865 the number of members was raised to seventy. But what have we been doing during the last two or three days? Have we not been going back? The Governor's salary has been put back to what it was ten or twelve years ago; it is the same with the salary of Ministers and the honorarium of honourable members. If we find we can do it, and the people desire it, and it is in the interest of the colony, we have a perfect right to go back now. We are only following out the legitimate course that was indicated in the Financial Statement. I have searched in vain through the "heap of chaff" in what the honourable gentleman said for one grain of wheat, but have not been able to find one; and now I will leave the honourable gentleman, and refer to remarks made by other speakers. I was very much surprised at the manner in which the honourable member for Auckland Central condemned the Bill. I do not wish to say a word in disparagement of that honourable gentleman, whom I hold in very high esteem; but I must say his action on this question is very inconsistent. Last session there was no stronger supporter of reduction of the number of members than he: he then voted, on both occasions, for reduction. I will say no more in regard to the honourable gentleman than that his conduct seems to me exceedingly inconsistent. I will say just one word in reference to the proposal to reduce the number of Maori members from four to three. It has been pointed out by several honourable members that we are not treating the Natives in any unfair fashion whatever, seeing that, while we propose to reduce the Maori representation by 25 per cent. by taking one out of four, we reduce the European representation by a larger percentage in taking away twenty-four from ninety-one. We are practically strengthening their power and their position at the present time. We do not wish to take a single representative from the North Island, but we do wish to do away with what has been a great farce; and it is a perfect farce that a member should be returned by a constituency in which, as was the case during last election, there were only some 418 votes polled in the whole of the district, extending from Pictou to Riverton, especially when it is considered that the men who cast those votes are just as fit as any of us to take their position as electors in the ordinary elections for this House. I say it is a mere farce that one honourable gentleman should represent such an exceedingly small section of the people as the honourable member for the Southern Maori District does. Then, we are told that if we reduce the number of members of this House we shall increase the power of property; and my honourable friend the member for Dunedin East was insulted by having it said of him that he was put in by the power of "land-rings" and absentees; and that sort of nonsense. I should like it to go forth to the electors of Dunedin East that they are the nominees of "land-rings" and absentees. Never was greater "bosh," if I may use the expression, talked in this House than that. And then, as my honourable friend the Minister of Education has said, the democrats and Liberals, so called, are always dragging democracy and Liberalism across the floor of this House. I deny that they have any right to do so. The working-men of this country have given these honourable gentlemen no such right as they claim. The working-men of this country are not, and are not likely to be, led away by such specious arguments as those which have been used against this measure to-day. Working-men—who know their own interests and their own power—know very well that they will possess far greater power if this measure is passed. That they will insist upon its being passed I am certain; and I venture to say that when honourable gentlemen, who talk so loudly about the interests of the working-men, go back to their constituents after this session, they will, if it is seen that they have had anything to do with interfering with the passage of the measure, receive a warm reception at the hands of their constituents. We are told that a great injustice will be done; that it will be a crying shame if we cut down the number of the members of this House. Well, I will take the electorate that I represent at the present time, and also the district represented by the honourable member for Hokonui. The population we had in those districts at the election preceding this last one was just equivalent to what we shall have, provided that this Bill be passed; yet there was no outcry owing to the smallness of the representation then. Then, the honourable member for Sydenham also represented a constituency which did not want to be broken up. If that constituency had been left as it was I venture to say that the people would have been just as well satisfied, and that the district would have been just as well represented, as it is now. And so it would be all over the country. This is not a measure against the interests of the working-men at all. If it is against any interest it is as much against the interest of property as it can be. But it is in the interests of the working-man and of every class in the community, it is in the best interests of the whole community, that this measure is demanded. It is in the interests of economy as regards the expenditure, it is in the interests of securing less of what is known as "log-rolling," it is in the interests of securing purer political air than we have now, or have had for some time past, that this measure is promoted, and I am sure that the bulk of the members of this House are in favour of it.

Mr. Fergus

Mr. W. P. REEVES.—I cannot hope to rise to the height of the impassioned eloquence of the honourable gentleman who has sat down, but at least I can congratulate the Premier that at last we have seen the spectacle of two of his colleagues standing up and instructing the House on a Government Bill. After the very curt introduction of this measure at the hands of the Premier, I thought it was to be thrown down as one of those Bills which we were to be permitted to do what we liked with, and to get what we could out of it; but it would seem that the Premier held his hand or held his tongue to enable two of his colleagues to distinguish themselves. Whether he regrets the course he took or not is a matter on which he is better informed than I am, but I am afraid that the honourable gentleman who has just sat down has not given us very many reasons why this Bill should be passed. He has told us that the larger the number of members of the House the larger the demands for local works. I do not agree with him in that opinion, although I will admit that probably he knows more about the matter than I do; because I can well remember that during the time that what was known as the "Continuous Ministry" sat in power the honourable gentleman made a good deal of capital out of the fact that he got more out of them for his own district in the way of local works than any other member in the House. I had the honour of paying a visit to the honourable gentleman's constituency in 1888, I think, and I can remember very well that the Minister of Lands at that date, Mr. Rolleston, was then also on a visit to that district. I think he was "personally conducted" by the honourable member for Wakatipu, and, if I am not mistaken, they came into Queenstown in the midst of a procession headed by a couple of brass bands. They were received in triumph, and the honourable gentleman was at the pinnacle of fame on account of his having so skillfully worked the Minister of Lands. There was a scene of revelry by night. They had a banquet in the evening, and I recollect being awakened about two o'clock in the morning by the tumultuous shouts of the honourable gentleman and his delighted friends. I quite agree, therefore, that the honourable gentleman probably knows what he is talking about when he informs us of the log-rolling which goes on in this House; but I do not agree with him that Ministers will be less liable to pressure if the constituencies were made fewer in number, because it is perfectly well known that the fewer members there are in the House the greater is the power of the "railers." I remember in the past, when there were not so many members in the House as there are now, the enormous power that was exercised by small and unscrupulous sections of the House, and I believe that, if the number of members is reduced to seventy, you will find that two or three members sitting on a rail will be able to hold the balance of power between parties, and that when men find themselves in that position they will be more aggressive in their demands for public works. The Minister of Education made a vigorous speech indeed, and I may say that it contained less personal denunciation than usual, and more endeavour to deal with argument; but I shall try to point out what I think were errors in his argument. He told us that you cannot expect to pass any measure in this House unless you do it in the first session. If there is anything in this argument at all, then we had better at once adjourn this House at the conclusion of this session until next Parliament, and not come here for the next two sessions at all; because really, I think that if we are to come here and not to carry important measures we might as well stay away. But I think the honourable gentleman's memory was at fault; because, if he will think again, he will remember that last session there was passed in this House some very important legislation—for instance, the Redistribution of Seats Bill; while in the session previously there was a very important Railway Bill, and also a Native Land Bill of great importance. The Minister of Defence told us that this measure was in the interests of democracy. Of course, "democracy" is a term which is made use of on both sides of the House. There is no doubt about it—there is keen competition for it. But I do not admit that we on this side of the House drag the coat-tail of Democracy across the floor of this House. We do not attempt to take it over there. That has been done by the democrats who have taken their seats among the capitalists and Conservatives, who form the bulk of the Ministerial party. The Minister of Education claims to be a democrat, and yet comes down here and champions the most reactionary policy that the oldest members of this House have ever witnessed—a series of reactionary measures calculated to undo all that the Liberals have achieved after the toils and struggles of years. If he is a democrat, it is very singular that his ideas should be so completely on all fours with those of the most Tory members of this House. Measure after measure which he advocates has been cordially supported by such Tories as the honourable member for Napier, the honourable member for Waipawa, and the honourable member for Gladstone. The lion of democracy has lain down with the capitalists' lambs. Certainly that is an impressive spectacle; but I do not think that people of the colony will consider that it is at all a logical position. The Minister of Education, in his new-born zeal for Conservatism, thinks it necessary to draw comparisons, and says that the members who represented the country districts twenty-five years ago were a great deal better representatives than those we see here to-day. That was the time when this House was filled with gentlemen who represented a great many sheep and very few men; and if this House had continued to be dominated by such men honourable members would still represent a great many sheep but very few men. The change which has come over New Zealand has been brought about, not by members of the class whom the honourable gentleman regrets, but by democratic members, who have made the people's will felt in the people's House. I cannot conceive how a gentleman of the ability of the Minister of Education can intentionally and deliberately attempt to induce this House to believe that Victoria is at all a parallel case with ours as regards sufficiency of representation. It is perfectly well known that Victoria is one of the most centralised colonies of the Australasian group, and the one most easily governed from a centre. It is a country to any part of which, starting from Melbourne, you may get in a few hours. Whereas New Zealand is a country cut up by Nature in a way that legislation cannot undo. This Bill flies in the face of geography. It is of no possible use attempting to fly in the face of Nature. You cannot level the Southern Alps by legislation; you cannot blot out Cook Strait; you cannot dry up impassable rivers. If you could do all that by law, you might give certain districts which are now utterly separated from each other such a community of interest that they might be well represented together by one member. But, while New Zealand is cut up as now it is, it is perfectly impossible that it should be properly represented if its members are reduced to the extent that this Bill proposes. Now, I am in a peculiar position. I am willing that there should be a reasonable reduction in the extent of the present representation. I never could quite understand why the number of eighty-four members—which did perfectly well until 1870—was then raised to ninety-five. It seems to me that if we had kept the number as it then stood we should have none of the present trouble about the number of members in this House; but, having increased the number unnecessarily at the bidding of the honourable member for Egmont and the honourable member for Selwyn—for it was they who proposed and carried that change—I do not see why we should rush now, at their bidding, from one extreme to the other, and go back by twenty-five members. I do not see the necessity for doing that; but, at the same time, as I pledged myself to a reasonable reduction of the number of members, I shall not oppose the second reading of this Bill; but I think, if honourable members on this side of the House and on the other side could see the real damage this Bill will certainly do to the Liberal cause in New Zealand, they would not abandon the fight; and I do hope that, if this reading is carried, these honourable gentlemen will, in Committee, insist that this reactionary measure shall not go beyond what is reasonable.

Dr. HODGKINSON.—As I intend to vote for the second reading of this Bill, I wish to justify the vote I am about to give. I shall give my vote in the full hope and expectation that during the next session of Parliament the Ministry will bring down some scheme for the decentralisation of this Parliament, and a measure for the reform of our local government. I submit that those Bills ought to have been the accompaniment of this Bill, and I consider it a very great omission on the part of the Ministry not to have brought such Bills forward even this session, or, if it were not possible in such a short session as this, at least to have given the House some assurance that it was their intention to bring them forward next session. I do not wish to argue the merits of the Bill; but I wish to point out that much of what the Premier has said in support of it is quite out of the question. He argued that in the United States there was only one representative in Congress to every hundred or hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants; but he forgot to tell us that there are thirty-eight States which deal with all matters except foreign policy and a few other questions. It is the same with Canada. There are a number of provinces in that Dominion which do a great part of the work: so that what the Premier told us was quite irrelevant. I will not take up the time of the House in arguing this Bill; but I must express my opinion that it is a very grave reflection on the Ministry, and an evidence of great want of statesmanship, that they have altogether ignored this question of decentralisation and reform of local government; and I hope that other honourable members will impress that upon them also. For my part, I do not hesitate to say that, if I should come back to this House, and the Ministry do not bring forward some measure in that direction, I shall not feel it my duty to assist in keeping them on those benches any longer.

Mr. W. P. Reeves

Mr. TAYLOR.—I intend to say a few words on this Bill, although the honourable member for St. Albans has pretty well touched on all the points I intended to refer to. I am astonished at the innocence of some honourable members, especially the honourable member for Wallace, in imagining for one moment that local self-government is going to be anything else than this: the right of the ratepayers throughout the colony to tax themselves, while the central and governmental expenditure of the country is increased. That is the view I take of the matter; and that is borne out by facts. We have had for many years past numbers of duties shunted upon local bodies under this cry: "Give the local bodies self-government." But the local bodies have to raise the means of carrying on self-government. I consider that would be justifiable, providing the general governmental expenditure was reduced thereby; but it is not so. The general expenditure is increasing, notwithstanding that we burden the local bodies with this additional taxation. That is a matter I want to see dealt with. I want to see this governmental expenditure reduced. I know the local bodies will always have the power of taxing themselves; but I say, if they have that power, and choose to exercise it, the general expenditure of this colony must be reduced enormously. It is something monstrous to see, year after year, the general expenditure of the country increasing, and the local bodies burdened with all kinds of taxation. I hope the Premier will withdraw the vote which it is proposed to take for naval defence, and not punish us in that direction. I shall certainly vote against it, and I hope every member of this House will vote against it. We are not in a position to maintain armies and large land-forces. It is simply a waste of public money, in my opinion. The real strength of this country, so far as defence is concerned, is in the Volunteers. We heard it argued a great deal during the late "scare," which was the cause of this large expenditure, that it was possible a cruiser might drop in here at any time before a declaration of war and surprise us. What is to prevent a cruiser doing the same thing now? Unless a public notification were given of a declaration of war, there would be nothing to prevent a cruiser from coming in here and doing what it liked. I voted last session in favour of a reduction of the number of members to seventy-one; but, after the action of the Commissioners in the adjustment of boundaries, I am not inclined to go quite so far. The way they subdivided and cut up the districts has placed the community at a great disadvantage. I am prepared to vote for something like eighty members; but I am not pledged in any way to vote for seventy-one. I stated this to my constituency. I voted last session in favour of seventy-one members on these grounds—and I do not think I have seen much reason to alter my opinion in that respect—namely, that there are not more than seventy-one members who take any interest in the business of the country. That is the ground which I took last session; but, owing to the action of the Commissioners in their readjustment of the electorates, and seeing that the provincial district from which I come suffered enormously by that action, I am not prepared to place such a power as this in their hands. If it had been seventy-five outside the Native members, I should not have had any objection to the proposal. I trust that the Premier is not going to pledge us to this specified number, but will accept the number seventy-five or seventy-six, as the case may be. I do not intend to vote against the second reading of the Bill; but I hope the matter will be dealt with in Committee in a fair and impartial spirit.

Mr. MARCHANT.—I intend to vote against the second reading of this Bill. The matter is one of very great importance to the district in which I live, because, so far as I can judge, it means a loss of one member to the Taranaki Provincial District. Undoubtedly, the electors in my part of the world did not consider this question during the late election, and I am not prepared to take upon myself the responsibility of voting for the second reading of a measure which will so seriously curtail their representation. At two or three places where I addressed the electors I was asked whether I would support a reduction in the number of members, and I said "No." I gave as my reason that I was undoubtedly in favour of reasonable retrenchment, and that a reduction of the honorarium would meet my view in that direction, but that to curtail the number of members from ninety-five to seventy would, I considered, so very largely extend the area of country districts that a great number of them would be very unwieldy, and that there would not be much community of interest between different parts which would then belong to the same constituency. There was no pressure put upon me. I was asked the question at the time, and I gave that answer. I now intend to stand by the attitude I then assumed. If this Bill goes through, and the country electorates are so very much enlarged, I believe the effect will be most injurious to the whole country. When speaking on the honorarium question the other night I said I thought it a mistake that this Bill had not been brought down at the same time as or before the Bill reducing the honorarium, because it appeared to me that £150 would not be sufficient to enable a poor man to run for such large electorates as are constituted under this Bill, and discharge the duties satisfactorily to a large portion of the electorate if returned. I think there is plenty of time yet to consider this question. In all probability there are two years before it can come into force, and we do not know what change may come over things before that time. At all events, I can see no pressing need for passing the Bill now.

Mr. KERR.—I wish to give the reason why I am going to vote against this Bill. I cannot support it as long as the Representation Act stands in the way that it does now. That Act rests on the population basis. To pass this Bill would simply mean to do away with numbers of outlying districts altogether, and there would be very few persons here but members from the towns, who can know very little of the country districts. If the Government were to alter that, I would vote with them. If they bring down local-government Bills—which I consider ought to accompany this Bill—I think we might reduce the number of members very much below seventy. In the Waste Lands Committee to-day there were honourable members representing every part of the colony, and there was a great difference of opinion as to the price of land. Honourable members from Otago think the land worth a certain price, and I believe the land there is much better than and will consequently fetch a higher price than the land in the North. I defy any one to pass a land-law in this country which will satisfy every part of the colony. For instance, in Auckland, if you put the price of land there at 10s., £1, or £1 10s., perhaps not fifty acres of it may be worth that in many places. In the country I come from it is exactly the same. I feel satisfied that the whole of this difficulty would be removed if we had our own local bodies, as we had at the time of the Provincial Governments. We then could tax ourselves. We could put land up for sale, and if it was worth only 2s. 6d. an acre we got that for it; and then we were able to get taxes from the owners. As it is now, in the district I come from all the available good land is bought up, and there is only the rubbish left. It is no good to the people, and, if the price is not reduced, in a few years it will not be worth a penny to the State. By introducing a proper local-government system—of which, I am sure, the present Ministry are capable—we could do with a great many fewer members than we have here now. I believe that then fifty would be quite sufficient to represent the country. But unless such a scheme is effected I do not see that we can do with any reduction at all. If you have such a reduction the outlying districts will be neglected. I may say that every time the Premier has been in office he has done our district injury. We have only got one and a half members to represent the whole place. I have to drive over three or four hundred miles to visit all my district now; and, if the number of members is reduced to seventy, that large part of the colony, which is as fine a district as any in New Zealand, will have only one member. As to reducing the Maori representation, I think that is a very wrong thing. We have a lot of Maoris in our district; and, unless it is to get sweet revenge, I cannot see what motive there can be for doing this. It is proposed to add the South Island Natives to the Western Maori District, which is already an immense district; and, if you add the South Island to the district of the honourable member for the Western Maori District, you will need to give him the whole twelve months to enable him to visit the whole of his constituents; and the people will not like that. The Native members from this Island know very well that their districts are so large that they cannot take in any more area. I am satisfied that one member or two for the City of Wellington would be quite sufficient; and then the city representatives would not be able to do so much more than the representatives for country districts. Unless you have a member to represent a country district properly, and see to the roads and bridges and one thing and another absolutely necessary for the benefit of the country, you might as well disfranchise us altogether, and let the towns represent the whole country at large. I am satisfied that until the Ministry brings in a local-government Bill to enable the local bodies to tax themselves and spend their own money we shall never have a system of government that will be suitable to this country. Then, there is the honourable member for the Buller, who has to go all the way into the Nelson District? which any of us could as well represent as he can. He cannot get there at all unless he gets there by steamer, and then it takes him four hours to get there. What does it matter if a man represents ten thousand or five thousand people, so long as they are all in one district? He then sees them all, and he can do justice to them, no matter what number there may be. The electors expect a member to go round once a year; and every third year he has to run the election—the man who can get his foot out of that is a cleverer man than I am—and you are only going to put it into the hands of a man who has capital to do it with. I am sure the district I represent will oppose this Bill. Every time the Premier has had an opportunity of doing an injury to that district he has given it his hobnailed boot. He has given it kicks already. The Minister of Justice said that if the number of members were reduced the members would be much better men; but I believe the men we have in the House now are as good as you can select from the country. And it appears to me the honourable gentleman does not know what the people want. He told us that the Maori members for the North Island would be able to represent the South Island better than the honourable member now does who knows that Island. The honourable gentleman knows nothing about it, because the Maoris in the South Island feel very keenly on this subject, and will be very displeased if you take one member away—the only member they have got. The Government have robbed these Maoris of their lands, treated them like little children, and have paid the Natives when they liked or what they liked; and they are a good deal worse off at present than ever they were before in all their lives. I want to know why the Natives cannot have the working of their own lands, for I am satisfied that the Natives in our district could work the lands with any white man in the country. If this Bill is adopted they will have no means to let the Government know their wants in any shape or form. I think the Premier is doing a very wrong thing in taking away the member from the South Island; and, if it is not for improper purposes he is doing it, I say they will think it is. I hope the Bill will not be read a second time.

Mr. Marchant

Mr. TAYLOR.—Before the discussion goes any further, if the Premier will allow me to ask him a question it might save much discussion. There are a number of honourable members who believe that the Premier is pledged to carry the reduction mentioned in the Bill. I understand that is not so; and if the Premier will give us an opportunity of fixing the number at eighty the difficulty would be got over. If it is decided to fix the number at seventy I, for one, shall oppose the Bill.

Mr. HOBBS.—It is quite amusing to hear some honourable members to-day discussing this measure as if it were a new measure,—especially the honourable member for Kumara, who must remember that last session this matter was very well discussed and fought out, and if it had not been for his own action it would now have been the law of the land. He said that the Bill was of no particular consequence to him, as, no matter how large his district was, he would be certain to come back here. If the honourable gentleman will pardon me, I say it would be a great calamity to this House. Hansard is full of his speeches, and I wish his constituents joy in reading them. I think it would have a good effect to reduce the number of members to seventy. We should have less talking in the House, and I feel sure if the number were reduced we should have more useful legislation. The honourable member for Auckland Central was, I think, hardly consistent in his speech to-night, when he spoke about the Maori members and expressed the opinion that they had not been fairly treated in this House. He knows very well that when I introduced a Bill to increase the Maori representation his Government threw out the Bill. I tell those Native members not to put their trust in princes. The honourable gentleman made remarks to-night also with reference to the reduction in the honorarium; but I say that, among the fourteen who voted against the reduction, you will find all of those who wore the stonewallers and long speakers in this House, though I do not mean to say that the whole of the fourteen were stonewallers.

Mr. SPEAKER.—Are you referring to a division which has taken place this session?

Mr. HOBBS.—Yes, this session.

Mr. SPEAKER.—Then you are wrong in doing so, as reference to what took place during the debates of the present session is not allowed.

Mr. HOBBS.—There is one point in the Bill which I hope will receive the consideration of the Government, and that is the reduction of the Maori members. I am entirely opposed to that; and when the proper time comes, in Committee, I shall move that the word "three" be struck out and "four" inserted, and that instead of seventy members we have seventy-four. I think that would be a better measure than even allowing Maoris to appear on our electoral rolls. The Maoris do not care for the European representation, but they do care for their own. I hope that when the Premier replies he will say that he is prepared to accept such a proposal as this. It would be fair to all parties—to the South Island and the North Island. It would be unfair to the South Island to deprive it of representation. There are about forty thousand Maoris, and they have four members to represent them. I shall vote for their remaining at four members. I have no other remarks to make, except that I shall support the Bill, with the hope that the present number of Maori members will be retained. We have heard the honourable member for Waimea give us a dissertation on the Land Bill, but I do not know what that has to do with the Representation Bill. I hope we shall now proceed to business, and read this Bill a second time.

Mr. STUART-MENTEATH.—Sir, I take it that the Bill now before us is part of one grand scheme of reorganization. Unfortunately, it is only a fragment of that scheme; but, if the scheme in its entirety is carried for the benefit of the colony, then this Bill will be about the most useful of the measures introduced to the House. But I hold that if this Bill passes, and the other measures do not pass, then this Bill will be a curse to the country instead of a blessing. Hitherto, since the abolition of the provinces, this House has discharged two functions—a political function and the function of a Board of Works. If this country is going to pursue the policy which it has pursued during the last ten or eleven years—the policy of taxing the whole population of the colony and distributing the moneys borrowed on the security of that taxation to particular districts—then I hold we should maintain our present number of members. The present Government have given us some indication that it is their intention to put a stop to this so-called policy of colonisation—this policy of road-making and railroad-making out of public expenditure of public money. If that is to be the completed policy of the Government, and if they will carry it out in a thorough manner, then this Bill will be of great use to the country. A great many false issues, I venture to think, have been raised in this debate. Something has been said against this Bill as not being of a democratic character. The honourable member for Kumara said it would tend to increase the importance of the property-vote; but the honourable member for Kumara cannot possibly have studied the question. He knows that persons possessing property in different districts, and being able now to reach several districts in one day, exert the strength of property. Enlarge the districts, and you make the property-vote of less force. To pass this Bill is to destroy the strength of the property-vote. Then, again, it has been said that representation will be put into the hands of the wealthy if the number of members be reduced. Why, we know that wherever wealth has exerted the greatest influence it has always been in the small constituencies; the smaller the constituencies the greater the personal influence of the individual. Enlarge the districts and you get much purer representation. Therefore it is that I shall vote for decreasing the number of members, looking upon it, as I do, as removing from the floor of this House a great many local interests which, if we are to cease our borrowing policy, would be a curse to it. I look to it also to purify the elections. But there is one great question involved in this Bill which this House will have to consider, and which, as far as I have listened to this debate, has not been mentioned by honourable members. By passing this Bill at this early stage of the present Parliament we are putting it into the power of the Government to say, "Well, gentlemen, if you do not like our policy we shall appeal to the country. You know what that means. You know that twenty-five seats in this House will not be filled again. If we go to the country after next session, you know very well that twenty-five of you will have to perpetrate the 'happy despatch,' and not coming back will cut short their parliamentary career by two years." That is a consideration to be borne in mind. No doubt, if we were writing a sentimental essay, we might despise this result of the immediate coming into force of this Bill; but we are treating this matter practically, and we know perfectly well that if the House passes the Bill it will place an enormous power in the hands of the Government. We know very well that next session this thought will be uppermost in the minds of honourable gentlemen: "The question I have to ask myself is this: Will this vote cost me my seat?" Honourable gentlemen will not acknowledge that they will entertain such a feeling, but we know that all minds are very liable to self-deception, and therefore I say the very strongest feeling of the session of 1888 will be this: "Are the Government able to apply for a dissolution, and are we going to cut short our parliamentary career by two years?" Now, I wish to see the policy of the Government as a whole carried out; but the Government, this year, have been chiefly employed—and it is not their fault that they have been so employed—in the work of destruction. They have a great work of construction to do, and it will depend very much upon the way they carry that out whether their tenure of office will be for the benefit of the colony or not. Therefore I say that, when we consider questions like these, questions involving the reorganization of the whole condition of the colony, we must not be trammelled in our judgment by the consideration which the passing of this Bill must involve. I shall vote for the second reading of this Bill because, as I have already said, I believe in the principle, coupled with the scheme of retrenchment which the Government have begun; but I should much prefer to see the Government postpone the final carrying of the measure until their completed policy is before the country next year. I think if they adopt that course they will be adopting a manly course. With the large majority they have now got, they can no doubt carry this measure this year; but I think the country will appreciate their motives, and the House will appreciate them, if they say, "We will not avail ourselves of the majority which the House has given us, but we will hold this measure over till our complete policy is brought down next session, and then say, 'Now, gentlemen, you see the whole of our policy, and we ask you to give us the power which this measure confers.'" That is my view of the matter; but, at the same time, I intend to vote for the second reading of the Bill, reserving to myself freedom of action as to future stages.

Mr. Stuart-Menteth

Colonel FRASER.—I think if there was one subject on which the electors clearly determined at last elections it was that there should be a reduction in the number of members of this House. I was so impressed with this that I myself brought in a Bill at the beginning of the session; but, in consequence of the Government determining to deal with the matter themselves, I withdrew that Bill. I think the measure ought to be persisted in to the end by the Ministry this session, and I feel quite sure they will better accomplish the passing of it now than if they postpone it. We all know that a great many of us have been returned pledged to a reduction in the number of members; and if the Government allow another year to pass over our heads some of us may have very convenient memories and forget our pledge. The Government have the position now in their own hands: let them, then, pass this measure; and I have no doubt they will do so by a very large majority. With regard to the Maori representation, I should much have preferred to see the special Maori representation done away with altogether. If that were done, and the number of members were reduced as the Government propose, the Maoris would be much more largely represented than they are now with four of their own members. The Maori population of the two Islands is about forty thousand, and I know that there are many honourable gentlemen who occupy seats in this House now who, if such a measure were carried, would be seen here no more, for the Maoris would have the power to turn the elections in their respective districts. When I think of the resolution brought forward by the honourable member for the Eastern Maori District, affirming that the Maoris and the white people should be treated as one, I feel convinced that, if that were carried, the Maoris would certainly have four members in the new Parliament. I also feel quite sure that if Maoris were to stand for several of the present white constituencies they would almost certainly be returned. That is, of course, a matter of which they are themselves the best judges; but I think I should go in that direction if I were in the position which the Government occupy at present. With regard to the reduction of the honorarium and the reduction of the number of members, it may be said that that may have the effect of returning representatives of the wealthier class to this Assembly. Possibly that may be the case; but, whether it would be so or not, there is no doubt that the country is in favour of reducing both the honorarium and the number of members at present; but whether it will have changed its views by the end of next session or not I cannot say. I hope that the Government, having a majority at their back, and knowing that this is the wish of the electors, will not shirk their duty, but will carry the Bill through to completion.

Mr. PYKE.—Sir, I was returned to this House pledged to oppose this measure in the shape in which it is now placed before us, and I think nothing worse could be done for New Zealand than to pass such a Bill as that offered to us. I do not object to a reduction in the number of members; I think it could be done with very great advantage indeed to the transaction of public business. But this Bill is a mere skeleton. As the honourable member for Te Aro said, it is but a fragment of a large policy, and it is not right for the Government to bring down that fragment until they bring down the remainder of their policy. What we want to get rid of before we reduce the number of members is what I may call the individualism of representation. So long as we have single electorates, so long as one man has to be personally responsible to a large number of people living on a large area of country, so long will this Parliament be no better than what it has been described as—a “Board of Works.” The reduction in the number of members should be dependent on a local-government measure, such as was promised us when the provinces were abolished, but which has never been given to us. When we talk of retrenchment we should begin systematically; we should begin at the root. The people look to this House for every road and bridge, and the House is hampered in its political action by honourable members making it a lever to try and get what they can for their constituents. Until a measure is brought down freeing us from that and giving us such a system of local government that the words “road” and “bridge” shall never be mentioned in this House, we shall never have effective government, we shall never have real retrenchment. No man has such a scheme more closely at heart than I have, and I would appeal to the head of the Government now, and strongly advise him not to press this measure at the present time, for many reasons: firstly, because he should first bring down a proper scheme of retrenchment and local government; and, secondly, I say this measure is premature. Why, it is possible, and probable, that in 1890 the population of this country may be sufficient to warrant the present number of members; and the Bill cannot take effect till then. We are not going to have a dissolution. Those honourable gentlemen are going to sit there for this Parliament, and possibly for longer; and I shall be very glad to see them there. But I cannot absolutely traverse my political opinions to support them in bringing down such a measure as this. It is reactionary, it is revolutionary, it is anti-progressive. Take this Bill and take with it the reduction-of-the-honorarium Bill, and I say that the two things combined will render it impossible for any man to contest an election unless he has a well-filled purse at his disposal. You will deprive the people at once of their proper representation in this House if you carry the Bill into effect. If the Government would consent to do something of this kind, even: if they would so far modify their proposal as to say that the country should be divided into twenty-eight districts, or whatever the number might be, and three representatives should be returned for each district,—I could accept it. But with individual representation contained in it I must vote against it; I cannot vote for it. It means that candidates must travel over large areas of country at great expense, and it is putting it beyond the power of an ordinary candidate to incur the expense and loss of time consequent thereupon. There has always been in my mind a feeling that the first step which should be taken by any Government coming down to this House and undertaking the onerous duties the present Government have undertaken should be to initiate a proper system of local government; and, until they do that, all these schemes of retrenchment will fail of their effect. It is not by cutting down the number of members, it is not by cutting down their own salaries, and it is not by reducing the honorarium, that any great saving will be effected. The saving will be effected when people have to pay for their own roads and bridges out of their own pockets, and when this House has nothing whatever to say to the matter. Then we shall have what we never have had yet—laws carefully considered, properly drafted, and put before this House in such a manner that they will be not what they are now, something little less than a disgrace to the Statute Book. I cannot support the Bill as it stands, and I ask the members of the Government not to push it into Committee, because, if it goes into Committee, we shall be compelled to alter it until its authors will be hardly able to recognise it.

Mr. ALLEN.—The honourable member for the Dunstan has made use of some very flowery expressions—such expressions as the “individualism of representation,” and “local government”—a term, I suppose, very dear to all of us; but I am sorry to find that the honourable gentleman has not seen in this measure at any rate some beginning of local self-government. It seems to me that, if we ever are to have local self-government, it must be by a large reduction of the number of members in this House, and a corresponding reduction in the work done here. I heard an honourable member this afternoon say that, although local self-government meant the expenditure of money by local bodies, it never seemed to bring about in this House a smaller expenditure.

Mr. TAYLOR.—I might explain that I said the taxation of local bodies—which taxation was expended on local works—does not bring about a reduction in the general expenditure of the country. That is quite a different matter.

Mr. ALLEN.—I still maintain that the honourable gentleman said it brought about no corresponding reduction here. It matters little to me whether he said they raised more money for local expenditure or not. The fact remains that, though the local expenditure is increased, the general expenditure is not decreased; and on that I found my argument that, if we are to have a decrease of expenditure here, and any attempt at local self-government, it must be by lessening the general expenditure, and by lessening the number of members who come here. The honourable member for the Dunstan has also attempted to make use of an argument which has been ably answered by the honourable member for Te Aro. He said that the enlargement of the country districts meant that only a well-filled purse could enable a man to contest a seat. Sir, there sits in this House no stronger argument to exactly the contrary than the honourable member for the Dunstan himself. The honourable member for the Dunstan travels throughout the length and breadth of his district, and it never costs him, I believe, a halfpenny. His intense popularity, his great geniality, carries him through his district without his having to put his hand in his pocket. The honourable gentleman on my right suggests, also, his attractive appearance. I was not going to mention that; but, still, that also is a factor in the case; and I venture to assure you that the honourable member for the Dunstan is met open-handed wherever he goes; he has a buggy here, and a buggy there, and this man and that places his house at his disposal. And so, I say, it will be with those who are competent to represent their districts: the farmers will find means and capabilities for carrying them through the district, and enabling them to see and learn what they want to learn. There has been, besides the argument that the Bill was in the interests of the wealthy landowners, and so on, another argument raised against the passing of the Bill. It has been asked, Why do we now pass this measure when it will be three years before there is any likelihood of its coming into effect? There are many reasons why we should do so, and I was sorry to hear the honourable member for Te Aro, who so ably answered other arguments against the Bill, arguing in this respect in favour of those who are opposing the Bill. He said it would give great power to the Government, as it would place in their hands the possibility of threatening some five-and-twenty men that they would lose their seats if they did not vote with the Government. If I read argument aright that argument may be used in a contrary direction. It seems to me that, if a man is threatened by the Government that he is going to lose his seat, he is not going to look to the Government to regain it supposing he should lose it. He has to answer to his constituents, and to nobody else; and do you think that a man going back to his constituents and saying he had been "led by the nose" by any Government would ever have a chance of winning a seat again? No, he would lose it, and lose it justly. The argument is entirely in the opposite direction, if in any direction at all. Then, what arguments are there in favour of passing this measure three years before it is actually wanted? There is this argument, and it is a very potent one: We are closer now, and every member must know we are closer now, to our electioneering pledges. There is no question about it that the longer the time we are from our electioneering pledges the less the hold will those electioneering pledges have upon many of us. I think there can be no stronger instance of it, or, at any rate, no stronger proof of the effect that close elections may have, than the fate that this measure met with last session. It passed in the first instance, and was then brought up again and defeated only by a casting-vote. Sir, I maintain that, if the last House had been true to their pledges, and true to the best interests of the colony, they would have passed this measure and made it law then; and I believe they would have done so but for the fear of losing their seats, it being close upon the election-time. Then, it has been asked, Why pass any measure three years before it is required? But can it not be seen that this is a measure affecting ourselves,—that it is not like other measures,—and that measures affecting ourselves, and which we naturally feel a great interest in, if they do become law, in many cases must be passed before they are absolutely needed? Then, again, how do we know that Parliament will last out three years? It is possible that some burning question may arise which may cause the Government, whatever Government may be upon those benches, to appeal to the country: and do we want the same trouble again that we had last session—a Commission sitting and the election pending for several months, with all the consequent expense? Surely we ought to be ready for anything of that kind whenever it may happen, with the Bill passed into law and the divisions made out, so that, if elections had to take place, there would be no need for delay. Then, I think the honourable member for St. Albans said that that side of the House—and I presume he meant that that side of the House was going to vote against the Bill—represented democracy, and that nobody else did.

Mr. Allen

Mr. W. P. REEVES.—Hear, hear.

Mr. ALLEN.—The honourable gentleman says, "Hear, hear." I may tell him that if he likes to come down to our part of the country I could show him that there are gentlemen on this side of the House who represent the democracy, and who intend to vote for this Bill. The honourable gentleman told us that upon this side of the House those supporting the Bill were capitalists and Conservatives. Who represent the capital and the power of the country? If anybody does, it is the members of the Press, and I maintain that his capital has much more influence upon this country than has mine. Then, he told us on this side of the House that we were Conservatives. Sir, it is upon those benches that the Conservatives have their seats; they will have no change, they want no change, they want no progress, but they want the ninety-five members continued. We want change, we want the Bill that is brought down to become the law of the country, for it is progress: it is liberalism, and we want liberalism; they want conservatism and the ninety-five members. Then, the honourable member also told us, in talking about the difference in the number of members between here and Victoria, that our country was vastly different in its configuration, that between the one Island and the other there lay Cook Strait, that we had a long extent of seaboard, and that it took a very great deal more to travel over this country than to travel in centralised Victoria. I admit all that. The configuration of the country is very different. But what did he base his argument upon? Did he mean that representation was to be representation of area, or was it to be representation of population? Sir, I maintain that representation, if it is to be anything, must be representation of people, and not of land. And then, if that be so, of what force is his argument? He said that in 1863 they had seventy-one members, and that in a few years it was increased to eighty-four, and that was found enough. Has the configuration of the country altered since we had seventy-one members? Has it altered since we had eighty-four; when they were found sufficient? No; it is not the area of the country that has altered, but it is the population; and the only reason why the number was raised was, not that the configuration of the country had altered, but that a few more people had come into it. And in these days we have found out that our population is not large enough to support so large a number of members. We find that in Victoria, with double our population, there are not so many members; it is not the area, but the number of their men. I admit that we have to take area into a certain amount of consideration, but that is not the main point. The main point is the number of men, and, compared with any country in the world, we are vastly overgoverned. The honourable member for Mount Ida this afternoon also tried to prove from this question of statistics that the argument was on his side of the question. He said that, because the representation per number of people varied, that was a reason why we should support our present number, because the numbers were different. The argument goes the other way also. If we stand at the bottom of the list,—if we have more members per number of men than any other country, surely we ought to stop and ask ourselves the reason. We know they differ; but why are we at the bottom of the list? And if any person answers it to his satisfaction he must come to the conclusion that we have more members than we ought to have to represent us. Then, he talked of this being a wrench. He said, "Are we going to make a violent wrench like this?" If I remember rightly, the honourable gentleman, in his electioneering speeches, advocated the most violent wrench ever thought of when he said, "Stop the borrowing policy altogether." Surely that is a wrench that is mighty in comparison with this wrench. He said, "Stop the borrowing policy." I should like to see it stopped. I admit that that policy is a bad policy, and I think it is a wrench that should be made. This is nothing compared with the other. I will now refer to the Natives in a few words. I must say I have every sympathy with the Natives; and if it be possible that the member for the Eastern Maori District can bring his motion forward, and if that motion should be acceptable to the House, then I say there is no better solution of the difficulty than by putting the white man and the dark man on the same footing. That seems to me the only natural conclusion, and if we can only come to that conclusion I believe it will be for the advantage and welfare of both races.

Mr. W. P. REEVES.—May I be allowed to make an explanation? The honourable member who has just sat down has stated that I was opposed to any reduction. Now, I took very great pains to explain, more than once, that I was very strongly in favour of a reduction to eighty-four members.

Mr. WARD.—I am not going to make a long oration on this question, but I wish to state my opinions on one or two points of the Bill before voting. We have heard the question of democracy raised in the course of this debate. Now, I am here representing a democratic constituency, and for that reason I am going to vote for the second reading of this Bill. When I was before my constituents I advocated a reduction of the members of this House to as low a number as seventy; and that met with general acceptance at the hands of my constituency. Since I came to this House I have been all the more impressed with the idea that it is desirable to reduce the number. A great deal of time may not have been altogether wasted; but, to my mind, a great deal of time has been frittered away, and I believe that if the number of members had been less so much valuable time would not have been frittered away. Besides, I recognise this: that by the reduction of the number of members—I do not care to what extent—the demands of different members from different constituencies will be proportionately decreased. I do regret that the Government have decided to reduce the number of the Native members, but particularly so as it is the member from the South Island who will have to go. When it is remembered that the Maori population is forty thousand, it does appear to me to be a wrong step. If the number is reduced, it certainly should be on the population basis. With the four members there would be one for every ten thousand of population. Upon the same basis as the European representation they are entitled to five members. How is the colony or the Government going to look after Native affairs in the South Island if the representation is taken away from the Natives? We have to keep in view old feuds between the North and South Island Natives; and, if it is intended under the Representation Act that the Natives of the South Island shall have their affairs managed by the Natives of the North Island, I venture to predict that it will act very unsatisfactorily. And, although the number of Natives who voted in the South Island at the last election was only 416, as the Minister of Justice stated, we should not take advantage of that small number to deprive them of one member. When the Bill goes into Committee I will support any amendment to increase the number to seventy-one, so that the Native race may have its old proportion of representation under the Act.

Mr. GRIMMOND.—It has been said by the honourable member for Dunedin East that this is the first of a number of Bills for local self-government. I have in vain looked to see any one of these Bills. Had I seen these I might have felt inclined to give this Bill my support. Then, he tells us that it is the solution of a Liberal problem. If it is, it is the solution of a problem backwards, because I see nothing of advancement in it; nor have I seen that any of the colonies of Australia has taken or talked of taking the step we are taking, of reducing the representation of the colony. I feel that I must protest and vote against this Bill. I did intend to give a silent vote; but I felt compelled to make some remarks upon it, and I oppose it on account of its being a retrogressive and very conservative measure. I do think that before this Bill was introduced we ought to have agreed as to the basis on which the seventy members are to be elected. The present may be a very true basis to elect ninety-five members upon; but, if you applied that same statistical arrangement to the election of a House of seventy members, it might be very unfair, and therefore that ought to be arranged. It is said that the geographical configuration of the country is not against large electorates. If the honourable gentleman who said that knew as much about some of the electorates as I do he would say a very different thing. In order to travel through the constituency I represent I have to go four or five hundred miles; and if the electorates are increased very much it will increase the difficulty of getting through them. And where there are very large districts you cannot get that community of ideas that is necessary in getting men to represent them. It has been urged that the Government are going to hand over a large portion of the work which is now done by the House to local governing bodies; but before we do that the Government ought to tell us what position those local bodies are to be in—what powers they will have, and what duties will be thrown upon them by this House. The idea mentioned by the honourable member for Te Aro is, that this would place in the hands of the Government a vast power in directing the movements of this House, because a Government which was not very strong might threaten weak-kneed opponents with a dissolution, and so get them to vote for measures which they would not otherwise support; and that ought to be a strong reason why we should not pass this Bill until another session or two passes. Then, we have had advanced the plea of economy. One honourable member said that a Parliament of seventy members would cost over £10,000 less than the present House. It is utterly impossible for a member of the Ministry, or any other member, to tell us what Parliament will cost the country. The mere fact of multiplying the honorarium by a certain number does not give the true result. If the honourable gentleman's calculation is a good one, all he has to do is to abolish Parliament altogether, and then he will arrive at a great saving. But would that be a right thing? A measure was introduced the other day to reduce the cost by something like 10 per cent. That was met by an amendment to reduce it by 25 per cent., and the political economists refused the 25 per cent. and supported the lower amount. When measures of that kind are introduced for purposes of economy, I think there is a ring of sham about them. I feel sure the introduction of this measure will mean the disfranchisement of a vast number of small outlying districts. Of course, if the policy indicated by the Minister of Defence is carried out, that when an outlying district demands a necessary work the member should be in a position to treat the request with contempt and scorn—if that were carried out it would give us that power—but it is one that we have no right to have. I hold that it is the outlying districts that ought to be nursed, and that an endeavour should be made to increase their population. We should have plenty of time to take the question of saving the cost of a few members into consideration in another session, at all events. I really do not know how any one can stand up here and make a calculation as to what a House of ninety-five or a House of seventy members would cost three years hence, and reduce that to within a thousand or two. I regard it as the babbling of an overgrown baby; I can see no reason or sense in it, and shall oppose the Bill.

Mr. Ward

Mr. LEVESTAM.—Although a great deal has been said on this Bill, I should not like the House to go to a division until I have said a few words upon it. The Minister of Education, when he addressed this House upon the subject, told us that any important reform ought to take place in the first session of a Parliament. The legislation of 1881, which dealt with this very subject, was passed in the last session of Parliament. Then he went on to tell us that this will be a Parliament of great and unequalled reform. I believe this is the Parliament of reform, such reform as the world has never seen. What are the reforms? First of all, the Government asked the House to adjourn for a fortnight to give time for them to frame a policy. The House adjourned for the fortnight, and what were the proposals that were brought forward when we again met? They were the most barren proposals ever heard. What was the next wonderful thing done? The Government proposed a vote of confidence in themselves. Surely that was a great reform. What next? The Government brought down their financial proposals, went so far with them, and then dropped them to carry their Bills. That was never done before—first of all to pass their Bills, and then discuss their financial proposals. The honourable member says, so much time has been consumed in allowing the Government to bring down all their measures. Who is responsible for that? I will not say waste of time. He guarded himself against using that word, because he knew that, if anybody was blamable for a waste of time, it must be his side of the House. What was the fortnight for? Did they bring down any policy? Their proposals were the most barren proposals possible. I am sure if those proposals had been submitted to a jury of matrons they would have said they were the most barren proposals ever brought down to this House. Then, the honourable gentleman said that, although in each of two of the colonies of Australia the number of people is double the number in this country, yet they have fewer representatives than there are here. But why did he not tell us the whole story, and say that both in New South Wales and in Victoria one-third of the population is gathered in and about one city? Out of about a million people in each colony there are some three hundred thousand in the capitals. We are told that the present Ministry represent the democratic feeling of the country.

Mr. FISHER.—Hear, hear.

Mr. LEVESTAM.—The Minister of Education says, "Hear, hear;" but I say if their democracy is the democracy of the country, I do not know what democracy is. If it is democracy to take away the power of the people to be represented how they like, then the honourable gentleman may be right; but so long as the true meaning of democracy is the government of the people by the people, then I say the present Government are most lamentably wrong. As the honourable member for the Dunstan has said, if you increase the size of the country districts it will be impossible for any but rich men to represent them. What the honourable member for Dunedin East said on that point was no answer to it. It is no answer to say that the election did not cost him one penny because his constituents paid the expenses. The honourable gentleman knows it is not right to argue from an individual case to generalities. Let him show that it is the general rule for constituencies to pay the expenses of candidates, and then there would be something in what he said. If the districts are increased to the size now proposed a very large proportion of the country electors will not know their representatives, because the time it would take to visit and address them all would be so great that none but the richest men could do it; it would be impossible for men who have to earn their living to spare the time. The honourable member for Hokitika says he has to ride four hundred miles to visit the various parts of his district; and how much further would he have to go if his district were increased in area by the operation of this Bill! The Premier told us the other day that it was the duty of a representative to address his constituents once a year; and now he wants to take away from them the power to do so. If that is democracy, I must repeat again that I do not know what democracy is. I think it is one of the greatest duties of a representative to address his constituents, and so to educate them in the politics of the day; because we know there are many people distributed over the country who neither read the papers nor hear what is going on, and the only way they can learn and be educated in the requirements of the country is by being addressed by their representatives. With such enormous districts as this Bill would create, only wealthy men would be able to contest an election, because it could not possibly be expected that the electors would pay the expenses of every candidate who might choose to come forward. The Minister of Education said that twenty-five years ago, when there was a less number of members in this House, the people were as well represented as they are now. Sir, what did those seventy people do? What became of the land? What became of the safeguards of the public-works policy? Who did away with them? It was just for these very things that the people clamoured for greater representation: they have it now, and they ought to guard it and keep it. Then the Minister of Education went on to argue from what he himself knows is a fallacy. He told us that the honourable member for Kumara says every member cost the country £500 a year; and on this he contends that, if the number of members is reduced by twenty, the country will save £10,000 a year. Is a fallacy a proper thing to argue upon? If the honourable gentleman can urge no more convincing argument than that, it would be better for him to have kept silent. Then, it has been asked, What are we taking away from the people? Sir, we are taking away from them the only power they have of making their wants and requirements heard. I do not agree with those who contend that all men should be exactly equally represented: but every man should have equal facilities to make his wants and requirements known. Can it be said that the people in the towns labour under the same difficulties in making their voice heard as the people in the country districts, who, perhaps, have no communication whatever with the Government, and never see such a person as a Minister, as none of the members of the Government ever go near them to see what the position, wants, and requirements of their districts are? I should have no objection to reducing the number of members so long as you took the representation off the towns. I have frequently expressed myself in that direction, and I told my constituents so during the election; I told them I should oppose any reduction of members unless they were taken away from the towns. It is as easy for a town representative to represent ten thousand people as five thousand. All he has to do is to hold one or two meetings, and in two or three days he can be face to face with every one of his constituents, make himself acquainted with their requirements, learn their views, and make them conversant with his own; and, if his views do not suit, the electors can get some one else. But what chance would country candidates and electors have if the districts were increased as is proposed? Even if we did agree to reduce the number of members, I could not agree to the readjustment of the representation by Commission. We have had some experience of that mode of revision now. It has always been held that community of interest should be taken into consideration; but did the Commissioners take that into consideration? No. And why not? Because it was impossible for them to do it. Certain lines were laid down, and by those lines they had to be guided. The Minister of Justice argued strongly in favour of passing the measure this session, saying it is quite possible there may be a dissolution next session over the great question of Free-trade and Protection. I say there was no question brought more prominently forward than that was during the last election. Every member in the House is pledged on one side or the other on that question. But, when a deputation waited on the Premier the other day, he told them that next session he would bring down a policy that would please both the Free-traders and the Protectionists.

Major ATKINSON.—No; I only expressed that hope.

Mr. LEVESTAM.—Well, I hope the honourable gentleman will; but I doubt it very much. But I do not believe the Premier would get a dissolution on the question of Free-trade and Protection, because, as I have said, no question was brought more fully before the people during the late election than this very question. We have been told that in the past we had very excellent Parliaments. But what was the invariable action of those good and excellent Parliaments every time the question of representation was raised? They always increased the number of members; and they did it after mature deliberation. We have been told they were excellent men, well fitted to carry on the functions of government; but, still, they invariably increased the number of members at each redistribution. Then, I ask, what reason has been adduced now for going the contrary way and reducing the number? The only reason that has been urged is the need of economy; but that will be a very poor economy, because, although a few thousand pounds will be saved in the direct cost, we may ask ourselves how much money was wasted by the smaller Houses. How many political railways were made; and who advocated them? The smaller Houses. If this Bill is passed it may be said that the outlying districts will be entirely unrepresented. We have seen in the past that the towns have sent a large number of members to this House; and, whenever any great question affecting the towns cropped up, they were always able to attain their objects by their preponderance of voting-power. We are told that nine-tenths of the Press of the colony is in favour of this measure. And, forsooth, because the Press is in favour of it, is that a reason why we should pass it?

An Hon. MEMBER.—Yes.

Mr. LEVESTAM.—Well, I will tell the honourable gentleman something else. Nine-tenths of the Press says that we have not a good Government. We have been told that some wonderful measures have been brought forward by this Government. What are those great measures? Bills to reduce the Governor's salary, the salaries of Ministers, the honours, the number of members—this miserable Representation Bill. These are the great measures which took three weeks to hatch.

An Hon. MEMBER.—The Land Bill.

Mr. LEVESTAM.—Yes; that is a measure we shall have presently. But is that a Liberal measure, which abolishes the local Land Boards? I say it is anything but a Liberal measure. I maintain that before we can reduce the representation we must have a perfect system of local government; and I maintain, further, that all the legislation of the present Government, so far, has been opposed to the principle of local government—it is all in the direction of centralisation, such as this Land Bill, which takes away all local administration in regard to waste lands, and puts the whole business in the hands of a central department. We have been told we should pass this Bill this session because it was agreed to by the last Parliament. Now, I deny that; and the honourable gentleman who made that statement told us what was not correct. The honourable member knows very well that many members voted for reduction last session hoping it would kill the Representation Bill, and when they found it did not do that they let the old number go. The honourable member for Auckland Central, who is now opposing this Bill, was one of those who voted for reduction when the last Bill was before the House. In 1881 the present Premier was a very strong advocate for increasing the number of members to the present number. He told us that the number of people had increased, and he brought forward all sorts of statistics to prove it was highly necessary for good government to increase the representation; and we have that increased representation. Now the honourable gentleman comes forward and, without any argument, tells us that the number of members must be decreased. We were told by the honourable member for Dunedin East that he belongs to the Liberal side—that he is not a Conservative like those on this side of the

Mr. Levestam

House, who want to retain the number at ninety-five. Does it follow, because we do not want to reduce the number from ninety-five, that we do not want to alter the number at all; that because we want to stick to the ninety-five we must be Conservatives? Has the honourable gentleman not a right to assume that perhaps we want more representation? I do not see that he has scored a point at all in that. In the past we had excellent Houses—so honourable gentlemen have told us—who always increased the number of members as the population increased. The population has no doubt increased largely since 1881, when the present number of ninety-five was fixed. Speaking about Liberalism, I understood the honourable member for Dunedin East to say that in his district larger sums were spent during the election than in any other part of the colony. If that is democracy and Liberalism, I do not know—

Mr. ALLEN.—By my opponent, not by me.

Mr. LEVESTAM.—I did not say in Dunedin East; but evidently the cap fits, and the honourable gentleman is welcome to wear it.

Mr. ALLEN.—You said in my district.

Mr. LEVESTAM.—Taking Dunedin, there are four members; and then there are the suburbs—such as Caversham, Roslyn, and others of which I do not know the name. There are at least eight or ten. Then, the honourable gentleman tells us that the Government would lose its power, for members would not depend upon the Government for election, but that they would appeal to those whom they represented. My honourable friend forgets that these constituencies are to be wiped out by this Bill. There are twenty-five that would lose their representatives by this Bill. That this is a measure of retrenchment I also deny, because if the number of members were reduced the honourarium would be increased. There are very few men who would come to this House to lose money. If the honourable gentleman really is in earnest, why does he not do fairly and take away the representation of Wellington altogether? Why did he increase the representation of Wellington last year? Or, at any rate, why did he not oppose its being given? The fact is that he is in a hurry to get this Bill passed because he knows perfectly well that if the country had time to consider it he would have no chance of passing it. He is trying to do the same thing now that he did in 1881. He then brought forward a measure of which nobody knew anything. In fact, the country was completely misled by the speeches of the Government. People were led to expect something very different from what was brought down; but the Government would not let their measure stand over for another session, because they knew that the people would not have accepted it. This measure is a surprise on the country, and it has not been well prepared. It says that seventy members are to be elected, but it does not say how they are to be elected, which districts were to lose representation, or whether the balance is to be taken from town or country. It simply says that the number is to be reduced by so many. I shall vote against the second reading of this Bill. It can very well stand over till next session, and if it passes its second reading I hope it will not be pushed on further.

Mr. BRUCE.—Sir, although I intend to support this measure, I cannot avoid, in the first place, giving expression to a feeling of regret that the Government have not thought that the time has arrived for giving representation to the seamen of this colony. I hold that all men have a right to a voice in our national councils, and it appears to me somewhat unfair that those of our fellow-countrymen who are precluded by their occupation from being able to exercise the franchise should not have some special provision made for their representation. Now, I do not wish to be misunderstood with reference to this; I do not say that the seamen of New Zealand have any special grievance, but I do believe that if they had representation in this Chamber it is reasonable to assume that those abuses would not grow up in our mercantile service which, in the merchant navies of Great Britain and the United States, have been nothing short of a disgrace to civilisation. I will merely say, in reference to this subject, that I hope the time will soon arrive when the claims of the men of our merchant seamen will receive consideration at the hands of this Legislature. Now, Sir, although I intend to support this measure, I quite admit the force of the arguments which have been used against it. I have always believed, rightly or wrongly, that large constituencies would presumably return members of larger mental calibre, and that those returned would thus be more independent than honourable members at present are of local jealousies and intrigues in their districts; and there is no doubt that the country generally is in favour of a reduction of the number of members. But I might point out that this measure has to be read in context with that which reduces the salary of members of this House, and there can be no question that any material increase in the size of a constituency must, to a corresponding extent, increase the cost of elections in that district, and I am quite sure that in many instances that will have a deterrent effect upon poor men coming forward to represent constituencies. So I believe that the two measures, taken together, will go in the direction of throwing the representation of this colony into the hands of the wealthy classes. Whether that is at present an evil I will not say; but that if this Bill passes we shall have fewer able men of small means coming to this House is as certain, to my mind, as a problem in mathematics. Now, I am not one of those who believe that, if the legislation of this colony were placed entirely in the hands of its wealthy classes, they would necessarily abuse that power. In point of fact, the interests of all classes in this colony are inseparably interwoven. I believe that all this cry about the wicked Toryism of the wealthy, who are supposed to have no sympathy for the poorer classes of this country, though it may serve very well as a method of galvanising ignorant voters during an election contest, is wasted on the floor of this House, where we know its real value. We hear much about democracy and Toryism, Liberalism and Conservatism, but, as a matter of fact, no man can define the lines of party as they present themselves on the floor of this House. I suppose that many of our leading men, although on opposite sides of the House, have many principles in common, and that those who are called Conservative are just as liberal as those who style themselves Liberal. I must say that this continual cry we hear in the country during election contests appears to me the merest claptrap. I am a Liberal and also a Conservative. I am sufficiently conservative to hold fast that which is good, and sufficiently liberal to vote for any measure which appears to me to be conducive to the welfare of the people of the colony. But what I wish to point out is that by these two measures we are going entirely in the direction of placing the representation in the hands of the wealthier classes; and I fear that the masses will believe that their wants, their wishes, their hopes, and their aspirations will not find sufficient expression on the floor of this House, and I believe that the result will be smouldering discontent. I believe that it is extremely desirable that the democratic masses of the colony should have full and complete representation in this House, if only for this reason: that I believe it will show them that much of what they are clamouring for is in the region of the impossible. I do not wish to be understood as desiring to introduce the question of the poor working-man in this debate. I believe that the poor working-man is better off in this colony than in any other in the world; certainly he is better off than in any other country which I have visited. I believe that the greatest enemies of the working-man are those who promise him what they know can never be fulfilled and hold out hopes which can never be realised. But, after all, this payment of members is one of the corner-stones of democracy. We have heard a great deal during a debate that has recently taken place as to how little a member can live for in Wellington, how he is only here for twelve weeks on an average, and how £150 is a handsome allowance. But, as a matter of fact, we know from experience that a member is largely occupied during the recess, that he has many heavy expenses of which the general public know nothing, and that he has to append his name to all sorts of subscription-lists, not only in his own constituency, but in other parts of the colony. There is one other matter to which I wish to draw attention before I sit down. It has been frequently said during this debate, "Give us a good system of local government and we will submit to this reduction." Now, I contend that we have good local government in this country, excellent local government. The honourable member for the Dunstan said, "Keep out of this House the words 'roads and bridges,'" and the honourable member for Kumara said something of the same sort.

Mr. Bruce

Now, as a matter of fact, the late Government passed a measure in that direction, and one which, in my opinion, entitles them to the gratitude of this colony—I allude to the Loans to Local Bodies Act. That Act provides a means whereby roads and bridges may be made without reference to this House. If that measure were carried out in its integrity there would be no need for roads or bridges to be mentioned in this House, and it should have a most purifying effect upon this Legislature. I shall vote for the second reading of this Bill; but in doing so I give expression to the hope that, when the financial position of the colony warrants them in so doing, some succeeding Parliament will increase the honorarium which we have recently reduced, if this Bill is to be carried into effect.

Mr. PARATA.—I have something to say to the House on the proposed reduction of members. What has caused confusion in my mind is this: Only during the last session of Parliament this House passed a measure confirming the number of members at ninety-five. I thought that the matter of the number of members was then fixed for some time at all events; but very few months have passed over and now this question has cropped up again in precisely the same form. I cannot understand what the arguments were in 1881 in favour of increasing the number to ninety-five and now reducing them to seventy. The reason this is being done cannot surely be that our population has decreased. Some members of the present Government were responsible in 1881 for increasing the number of representatives, and I do not understand what reasons they can now offer for reducing the number. Seeing that our population is steadily increasing, as a matter of course their wants also increase, and it is necessary for them to have increased representation. Our population is always increasing: for instance, a large number of people arrived on our shores yesterday, no less than five hundred. That number of new-comers are almost entitled to a special member to represent them. The Minister of Education stated that twenty-five or thirty years ago our government was much better managed than it is at present. I think I can prove to the contrary. I will not admit that there is any force in his argument, for this reason: At the time he spoke of our population it was very small. The members in those days did not take the trouble to go all over the country and make themselves acquainted with the wants of their districts: there was no necessity for them to do so such as there is now. This proposal to reduce the number of representatives, in face of our increasing population, causes confusion in my mind. I can only suppose it is justified on the score of retrenchment. There are two inflictions to be borne by honourable members during the present session—first, the reduction of the honorarium; and secondly, the reduction in their number. These are the two troubles which have come upon the members newly elected to this House. I wish to make this perfectly clear to the House: I did not come here to seek benefits for myself. I did not come here to ask for money, or to ask the Government or the members of this House to support me in getting money. I came here for the express purpose of obtaining justice for the Native people in the South Island—I mean with regard to their land. Had former Governments or the present Government fulfilled their promises and reduced the grievances of the Natives in the South Island, honourable members would not now see me standing here; it would have been quite unnecessary for me to come to this House. Seeing that the wrongs under which those people suffered have not been redressed, that is the reason why my predecessor was sent to this House, and why I also have come here. Why should the only representative those people have got be taken from them? I again say it is not a question of money with me. It is only to obtain justice, only to get what is right and what is due to us, that my voice is heard. The Government have already taken the whole of our land from us; they have also taken away the administration of the small reserves which were left to us. There is only one thing left to the Natives of the South Island, and that is their representative, and now it is proposed to rob them of that also. I ask both sides of the House to consider for a moment. Is such a proposal as this justice? One member of the Government has stated that it is necessary to take away one Maori member on account of the small population in the South Island. I do not think that is an argument at all. I think that the Government should consider the great size of that electorate, and the great difficulty in getting over it and attending to the interests of the people. Some honourable gentlemen have stated that it would be far better for the Maoris if the special representation were done away with so that they might be represented by Europeans. I am afraid our wants would not be attended to if such were the case, because I do not think a European member would be capable of ascertaining what our requirements are as well as ourselves. We are not all of one mind as yet, and it is well known that different races have different wants, and therefore they require different representation. Some honourable gentlemen have suggested that if we were all placed on the same footing the Maoris would have an opportunity of returning members to Parliament. I say that that would never be the case, because you would never find Europeans supporting the Maori candidates; so what chance would the Maoris have of having any representation in this House? I am simply speaking on behalf of the people of the South Island. They are quite ignorant of this proposal to take away their representative. Had the proposal to reduce the Maori representation been shadowed forth in the Speech from the Throne, the Native people in the South Island would have had time to consider it, and a communication would have been made to the House upon the subject. Although the number of members in this House has been increased on two occasions, the Maori representation has been left untouched.

It has not been increased. Seeing that the Maoris are represented under a separate Act, I cannot see why their representation should be mixed up with the European Representation Act, as at present proposed. I do not think the Maori representation should be touched at all, seeing that the European representation comes under a different Act. I am not here to plead to the Government to retain the representative for the South Island. If the Government think it better that I should go, and will give me any intimation to that effect, I will go willingly, at once. I hope it is not so, but it would appear to me, on the face of this Bill, that there is an ill-feeling towards, or an intention to do an injury to, the Maori representative of the South Island. Our troubles never seem to come alone. Coming in at the same time with this trouble there are other Bills affecting the people of the South Island, not one of which is devised for the benefit of those people. There are measures of far more importance to the Maoris of the South Island; those are kept back altogether, but this measure is brought forward. I will not detain the House much longer. I will not ask any member of this House to retain the representative of the South Island. I will not say whether he ought to be done away with or not. That matter rests with the House. It appears to me that this is the first step towards doing away with Maori representation altogether. One will be taken now and another in a short time, and this is an example of what will be done for our benefit in the future. It can only be a question of time when the Natives in the North Island will see that what I say is true.

Mr. JONES.—Sir, the speech of the honourable member for Rangitikei was a most interesting one; but I would recommend that honourable gentleman not to sacrifice his opinions at the altar of his party. There is no one to-night who has spoken in words more damaging to this Bill than those that honourable gentleman used in reference to the second reading. He very justly said that the effect of this Bill would be to largely increase the cost of contesting an election, and that it will put representation in the hands of the wealthy classes. He also says that the effect will be to introduce minds of a larger character in this House; and, to show the perplexity he is in in reference to this matter, he tells us that there will be fewer able men if we restrict the field from which to select. His natural instincts are entirely against this Bill, because he knows it is a deadly blow aimed at the liberties and privileges of the people; and it is because I think so too that I shall vote against this Bill. And no one can accuse me of inconsistency in this matter, because I think it is very well known that last session I opposed the proposal to greatly reduce the number of members. I expressed my views in this direction: that, if a reduction had to be made, and it went back to the old number of eighty-four members, I was prepared to support that and no less a number; and during the late elections, at the time when some honourable members stated that their constituencies were in favour of urging a reduction in the number of members of the House, I distinctly stated to my constituency the reasons why I supported the larger number of eighty-four; and, in my opinion, the reasons I gave justify me in adhering to that number, and I shall energetically oppose any number that goes below that. I should like to say, in reference to the number which is mentioned here, that it is a number quite incompatible with any fair division as between the two Islands, supposing it is carried. I took the opportunity of going over the figures as they now stand as between the two Islands, three-sevenths and four-sevenths, the numbers which have been carried by the Commissioners in making up the report of the list. You cannot make any use of these figures in such a way as is proposed in the Bill; some figure must be used that is divisible by seven. The Premier had very few remarks to make in introducing the Bill, but I could not help thinking that he was speaking of his own Bill with very scant courtesy by the very few remarks he did make upon it. He simply introduced the Bill, and beyond that he seemed to care nothing for it. In the few remarks he did make he gave us a comparison between the representation in this colony and in the Old World. Now, if that were carried out in proportion to the population of the United Kingdom, and carried to a logical end, I think it would prove to us that we are not entitled to more than ten members in this House at the present moment; because that is exactly what it means. He says the population in the United Kingdom, is 56,180 for every member. We have about ten times that amount, and therefore we are entitled logically to ten members. And then he tells us that in the United States it is 174,000 who sent one member; but, as was very correctly pointed out by the honourable member for Wallace, he did not give us any information whatever as to the representation of the different States. There are thirty-eight different States, and he said these States had a very large number of representatives. The Premier has not given us any information on that point. He has simply taken the number of members of Congress. And his figures in reference to Canada, are not satisfactory. He gives them as 20,888; but I think he will find that, pro rata, the figures are 17,000, and do not apply to our own case. I think what we have to consider is representation for our own people. It has also been very properly pointed out that the comparison with Victoria has nothing at all to do with us, because there they are so centralised that they are well represented with the members they have got, but here we are so scattered all over the country that, with a reduction in the number of members of this House, it would be impossible for us to have proper representation. At the present time many parts of the country districts are very imperfectly represented in this House, and, if we reduce the number of members by 25 per cent., as is here proposed, there will be many parts which will be utterly unrepresented in the House. I take it that this is not a matter of the few thousand pounds which may be saved. We have been making reductions of expenditure very largely: in fact, in my opinion, we have fully answered the expectations of our constituents. It seems to have got into the heads of some persons that reduction of members is the same as reduction of expenditure; but, as reduction of expenditure has been agreed to, I am sure the constituents will go against this reduction of members. If they only study this question for one moment they will see, from one end of the country to the other, that, as they have now obtained from this House of ninety-one members every attention in the way of reduction of expenditure, they ought now to resent any attempt to reduce their full privileges of representation. The Government are making a very great mistake. I look upon this as a retrograde and mischievous step. For what does it mean? This Chamber, as now constituted, is divided into four quarters, and it means that one quarter is to be absolutely swept away altogether. Go a step further and there will be no need for this Chamber at all, as then all the work can be transacted in the Cabinet-room. It appears to be one of the ideas prevalent in the mind of a leader in this House, whether of the Government or of the Opposition, that the smaller the House the more easily it can be managed and controlled. If the present Premier, who has a very strong party here, is so strong in a House with ninety-five members, what will he be in a House with seventy-five? He and the members of the Government will practically have the whole business of the country in their own hands, and nothing will disturb them. That is the tendency of this measure, and it is a very wrong one. It has been pointed out by some speakers, and, I think, very justly, that this question of reduction in the number of members should not be gone into until the question of the enlargement of local government had first been brought down. Then this would have been not the leading step, but the sequence. And that is where the honourable member for Dunedin East made a great mistake in his speech in speaking of this as being the first step to take in the matter of giving proper local government. It is really the sequel to that. I cannot at all understand why the Government should be so anxious to bring this question before the House in the first session of this Parliament, at a time when there are such very important matters still to come before us, and so few days to attend to them. There is the Land Bill, there is the Public Works Bill, there are the money Bills, there is the Railways Bill—any one of which great measures is quite sufficient to occupy the whole time at our disposal; and yet we have this Bill, which is really not wanted, and which is most objectionable—objectionable not only to many on this side of the House, but to many supporters of the Government—we have this brought down, and, apparently, the intention is to thrust it upon us. I cannot understand it, except on this ground: that the Government are afraid that if it does not pass this session the opinion of the country will turn quite round in reference to it, and, whereas during the last election, in some quarters, strong opinions were given in favour of a reduction in the number of members, a contrary opinion will be expressed on the subject throughout the country before very long. I cannot understand the Government pressing this measure on any other grounds, and I cannot help thinking that there is a great deal in the remarks of the honourable member for Te Aro. Whether what that honourable gentleman said proves to be the case or not remains still to be seen, but I, for one, say that whenever, next session, the Bills come down dealing with the tariff and other important matters, whatever the result may be, and whatever threats may be held over honourable members, I certainly shall vote on those measures exactly as my judgment directs me, perfectly independent of what effect this measure may have upon me in the future. Of course I shall oppose this Bill in all its stages, and I hope the ultimate result will be its rejection, because, as I said before, I think it is a retrograde and mischievous step, and a direct attack upon the privileges and rights of the people.

Mr. Jones

Mr. T. MACKENZIE.—I purpose looking at this Bill from a disinterested point of view. I think a majority of honourable members have taken an extreme view of it. We have, for instance, the Defence Minister saying that this question was forced upon the candidates at the last election. Speaking for myself—and I think I speak in common with other honourable members—I had to educate my constituents on the point of whether it was advisable to have a reduction in the number of members or not. I spoke in favour of such a measure, because I felt that it would insure the returning of a better class of men to this Parliament, and would also raise them above the petty influences of particular localities and give them freedom to exercise their votes for the benefit of New Zealand as a whole. We have the honourable member for Dunedin East saying that it is a measure calculated to assist the poor man to get a seat in Parliament in preference to the present Act: but that is absurd, for any one who recognises the work of canvassing a district and arranging the electoral returns must understand that increased size of constituencies must mean increased expense. The honourable gentleman also asks, "Why should we not pass this Bill at the present time?" My answer to that is, that this measure should not only deal with the number of representatives, but it should also deal with the amalgamation of city electorates, with the distribution of seats, and with the franchise itself. In the early part of this Parliament I was of opinion that it was almost impossible to consider a question of this magnitude this session; and had the Government been prepared only to ask us to affirm the principle of the reduction of the number of members I should be able to support them with much greater pleasure than I can do now. I would draw their attention to one particular point which does not appear to be provided for; and it is this: In the Act passed at the beginning of this year the concession made to country districts is only 18 per cent. as against the towns, and that may be said to provide sufficiently for community of interests in a House which consists of ninety-one members; but how is that community of interests to be preserved when the number is reduced to seventy-one? You run the risk of destroying that community of interests, and I hold that that is one of the main objects that should be borne in mind in adjusting the representation in this House—that is to say, that you should have as many interests as possible represented here. But what will be the effect of this measure if it is passed as it stands? It will mean this: that there will be a vast preponderating influence exercised on the part of town constituencies. In our cities we have half, or nearly half, the population of New Zealand, and this half are chiefly consumers and distributors, and they must live, and they must pass measures to enable them to live. I maintain, therefore, that they are likely to use influence in favour of matters in this House which will not be for the safety of New Zealand or for the interests of the producers in the country. For instance, there is a tendency in the towns to advance Protection as against Free-trade, and my opinion is that, under the system proposed in this Bill, we shall have a number of Protectionists returned from the towns, and the consequence will be that they will pass measures to benefit the towns at the cost of the country districts. I must ask the Government to consider the question of increasing the quota as between the country electorates and the town electorates. My own opinion is that we should have three classes of electorates. The honourable member for Nelson advanced the absurd idea that we should have all the reductions made from the towns. That is ridiculous. What we want is a proportionate reduction from the large cities. I think the members for those electorates should represent from 14,000 to 16,000 persons. Then, in the large towns—and I draw a distinction between large cities and towns, the latter numbering from 5,000 to 10,000 persons—they should have these boundaries extended so as to include 9,000 to 9,500 inhabitants. Then let the country quota be increased to 7,500, and then you would have a fair representation of the various interests of the community in Parliament—one member representing 14,000 to 16,000 in a city, one member representing 9,000 to 9,500 in a town, and one member representing 7,500 in the country districts. Now, the Hon. the Premier, in calling attention to the representation in England, said that they had one member for 56,000 of population; but he might have gone further and said that in England they have not got the hard-and-fast margin laid down in our Act of 18 per cent. difference between the towns and the country. Although 50,000 of population was the basis on which members were returned in Britain, still, we find that, in order to keep up the community of interests, even under the measure introduced by Mr. Gladstone in 1885, which added two millions to the electors, differences were made in the population of constituencies. For instance, we have in the Old Country such places as Windsor, Durham, and Newry returning a member for 15,000 of population. That is the minimum. On the other hand, we have Huddersfield, with a population of 87,000, returning only one member; Birkenhead, with 84,000, returning one member; and the maximum is reached in the case of Wednesbury which has only one member for 124,000 inhabitants. If this measure is to suit the various conditions of New Zealand—and it is far-reaching in its consequences and must not be lightly considered—it must be so adjusted that we shall maintain as far as possible community of interests in this House. Then, another important matter, which is entirely ignored in this Bill, and which is one of the reasons I have pointed out as making it almost impossible at this late period to deal with the subject thoroughly, is the question of the amalgamation of city electorates. There is not one word in this Bill which states that there is to be an amalgamation of city electorates. This is a cry which has gone up in various parts of New Zealand, and it is a necessity, and for this reason: that under the present system of divided electorates there is room for a majority of members to be returned to Parliament opposed to the interests of a majority of the electors in these constituencies. I will try to illustrate what I mean. Supposing that under the present Act they lose one member in Dunedin, and return three members, and in each of these electoral districts in Dunedin the number of electors is 1,500. We will say that the district is divided into electoral districts A, B, and C. In electorate A, 500 vote for a Protectionist and 1,000 for a Free-trader; in electorate B, 800 vote for a Protectionist and 700 for a Free-trader; and the same thing happens in electorate C. The result would be that 2,100 electors would return two Protectionists, and 2,400 would return but one Free-trader; so that a minority of the electors return a majority of the representatives. Then, the honourable member for Taranaki objects to the reduction of the number of members, because he says his particular part of New Zealand will lose a member. I consider that is one of the strongest arguments in favour of the measure, because had Taranaki in the past been represented by fewer members the probability is that the people in that part of the colony would have been subject to less taxation than they are at the present time, and the public-works expenditure of the colony would have benefited. I think that when any great measure of this kind is brought before us, involving the question of redistribution and representation, the measure should be accompanied by due provision for the fair representation of the various electoral areas in the colony. In other respects I have much pleasure in supporting the measure. I consider it is a step in the right direction, and part and parcel of the scheme the Government have brought down, and which, if carried out in keeping with their principles and on a fair and equitable basis, will be of vast benefit to New Zealand.

Mr. T. Mackenzie

Mr. ANDERSON.—I beg to support this Bill; and not only do I do so on my own accord, but at the late election I promised my constituents, if this Bill came before us, to give it my best support. I have come to the conclusion that those honourable members who have accused the Government of wasting the time of the House and of keeping them from doing the business are treating them unjustly, because I find that honourable members in opposition are getting up in their places and making very long-winded empty speeches. This is to be deplored, because the session will only be a short one, therefore we should push on with all the important Government business, and let the unimportant private business stand over until next session. Honourable members' business may be very important in their own estimation, and I dare say it is of considerable importance in some cases to their constituents, but they must remember that this session we came to legislate for the country and not for localities. In listening to the speeches I came to the conclusion that there is one thing that is unjust in this Bill, which has been alluded to. I refer to the taking-away of one Maori member. My sympathies are with the Maoris, and it must be admitted that if these people were put upon the population basis of representation they would be entitled to six seats in this House instead of four, as they have at present. And if we were to reduce the number of the House to seventy or seventy-one the Maoris would still be entitled to four members. Therefore I think it is doing a great injustice indeed to the Maori race to take one member away; and I shall make it my business, if the Bill gets into Committee, to move in the direction of retaining the four Maori members. It may be said that this Bill is virtually law, because had it not been for the unfortunate mistake made by my predecessor in this House this Bill would have been law. That unfortunate mistake, I dare say, cost the country some thousands of pounds, and I am sorry to say that my friend the late member for Bruce could not explain his action in the matter to his constituents to their satisfaction. Well, seeing that this Bill is virtually law, it is a great waste of time on the part of honourable members to stand up and make so many long speeches in regard to it. The principle of the Bill has been already affirmed, and we should pass it and go on with other business, for any alteration that may be required in the Bill can be made in Committee. I have heard honourable members get up and say that if this Bill passes some constituencies will be so large that they will be unworkable. This House is very fond of taking the Australian Colonies as examples in a great many matters, and I may say that if we follow the example of some of the Australian Colonies with regard to the size of the electorates we shall have very big ones. Some of the Queensland electorates are as big as one-half of New Zealand: and therefore that argument has very little weight. I agree with the honourable member for Te Aro when he said that the Government, in passing this measure at this early stage of the Parliament, are perhaps pushing the Bill too far forward, because there is no doubt about it the Government could hold the threat of a dissolution over the heads of members of this House; and we know what that means. However, seeing that the Bill is before the House and that we have wasted a considerable time over it, it should be pushed on notwithstanding this objection. The Government have hitherto possessed a similar power. It is the fear of getting wiped out that is troubling honourable members. I have given my reason for voting for the measure. There are plenty of honourable members who will speak and vote against this Bill; but it will be carried, although it seems to me to be brought forward rather early in the Parliament. However, if this Bill had not been brought forward and dealt with this session there would be great difficulty in doing anything with it in a future session. We had an example of that sort last Parliament, which we do not wish to see again.

Mr. BUXTON.—I am one of those who spoke on this question during the last election; and in my electioneering campaign, I said a great deal about this Bill at almost every place at which I spoke; and at that time I was in favour of the reduction of the number of members to just about the number now stated in the Bill. Since I have been in Wellington I have considerably altered my views. I am not at all surprised at that. I quite expected that I should, in some respects, alter my views from my experience here; and I am not at all ashamed to state before this House that I am intending to vote against this Bill. I am not at all ashamed of my constituents hearing of this. I told them on various occasions that it was quite likely, if they sent me to Wellington, that I should speak and vote contrary to what I stated when before them, and that if they did not approve of my action they could deal with me as they have done with their former representatives. I told them that if I altered my views in considering any matters I should hold myself at liberty to do so. I am not a blind follower of any man or men, but will speak what I think right and just to all people concerned. I did think it would be right to reduce the number of members to seventy-one. That was my statement almost everywhere; but since I have been here I find the honorarium has been reduced. I was determined that should not be done if I could help it; but, since this has been done, I think it is one reason why I should not vote in favour of this Bill. Another reason is, that I consider the country districts would be almost disfranchised if this were the case. At present there are for Christchurch and the suburbs, including Lyttelton and St. Albans, about eight members; and then if I take the district from Christchurch to Timaru—a vast area of country

—I find there are only four members. Now, if this Bill comes into force and the same gentlemen have the control and division of the districts as previously, the country districts will be almost disfranchised. I therefore think that if this Bill is passed, which I certainly hope it will not be, this House should take the division of the electoral districts under its own control. I consider that the towns should not have so many members, and that the country should have more. I cannot see at all why the country should be left with so few representatives and the towns be so numerously represented just because they have a few more people living thickly together. I do not for a moment think that the towns ought to have all the power they have. Hereford Street, Christchurch, and Princes Street, Dunedin, hold a tremendous power over the country round about, and if they have a vast number of members representing these towns they will be certainly, to a very great degree, under the power of gold, and the country districts will have to suffer. To my mind this will be a great injustice, and it is a reason why I shall vote against the Bill. Another reason why I think it is wrong to pass the Bill is this: We are at present arranging to sell the land to increase the population, and before three years are over we expect there will be, according to the present arrangements, a vast increase of population. That is hoped for, and if it comes about we shall not need to reduce the number of members. I therefore shall feel it my duty, and I think I shall have very good grounds to stand upon, when before my constituents, to explain to them my reason for voting contrary to what I told them was my idea of things when seeking election. I have listened with very great attention to many honourable members to-night; and, when I was listening to the honourable member for Mount Ida, I thought he gave a very nice, pithy, straightforward little speech. And then the Minister of Justice rose, and what did I find? He seemed to come forth with such power and dignity, as if he were really somebody at any rate, and as if he were going, with very little trouble, to confound the little member for Mount Ida; and he stepped forth on the floor of this House and shook his beard almost as if he were the king of the forest, and with great dignity he waved his hand over the audience, saying, "My little friends, you had better mind what you are about." It was almost enough to frighten us young people, such utterances of astonishment and wonder that any one should speak against this Bill. But, Sir, we are not so easily frightened, after all. We have a boldness about us, after all; and, although we have not the same power or the same authority and dignity about us as the Minister of Justice, who, to my mind, appears to hand out justice without mercy, we are still allowed to say what we think, and act upon it. I have not very much more to say on this matter, but I will stand by those who stand by the poor. There has been a great deal said about the working-classes and the poor, but ever since I have been in the House wave after wave of legislation has swept over this House which has appeared to be against the working-classes. And I maintain that it is our duty to stand by them; the working-classes are the soul and life of the land, and it is our duty to stand by them. I believe in being loyal to the Queen, loyal to the lawyer, loyal to the clergyman, and loyal to the soldier; but I believe in being loyal to the ploughman and looking after the interest of the man that toils in the field. And I intend to stand by them and stand up for their rights. I do not intend for a moment to disrate wealth and intelligence. I believe in education, and I believe in intelligence and in wealth. I know we need these and must have them. But I do oppose allowing these mighty men of power to crush the working-man. I contend that the working-man has a right to a place in this House, and we have intelligent working-men as well as gentlemen of the higher classes to assist; and if the number of members is reduced and the honorarium is reduced these men cannot be present in this House to speak for themselves. I do not think we should place them in a position which would cause them to rise with brute force and violently take from the owners that which they have; but I believe they should have these rights loyally, honourably, and justly; and therefore I shall oppose this Bill, because I believe it is against the interests of the poor and the working-classes of society, and against the interests of the colony generally.

Mr. BARRON.—The honourable gentleman seems to have a peculiar idea of what is to the interests of the poor and the working-classes. His idea of the interests of the poor and of the working-classes seems to be that a large proportion of the money they can so ill spare ought to be taken and frittered away in a costly form of representation that is altogether beyond our requirements. No one who has thought the subject over can arrive at any other conclusion than that our appliances of government are far beyond the requirements of the colony, and there is no member in this House who does not know that the cost of these appliances in the matter of representation comes out of the pockets of the masses of the people. There have been many contradictory arguments used to-night against this Bill. Honourable gentlemen rose one after another in opposition to this Bill, and each one disposed of many of the arguments of his predecessors, and also of some of the arguments he himself had used against the Bill as he went along. But all have been disposed of in a very sensible remark that fell from the honourable member for Christchurch North, who said that he recognised the measure was justified by the voice of the constituencies. That, Sir, is the whole strength of the position which the Government takes up in introducing this Bill and asking the House to pass it. It is to give effect to the decision of the constituencies. Their demand has been clearly expressed during the election; and the certainty of that will be shown by the numbers in the lobbies when the House goes to a division. The honourable member who has just sat down is one who was convinced that the demand was a reasonable one when he was before his constituents, and he acknowledged its reasonableness and said he would vote for it. He has now changed his mind in the House. Not that I say that that is a wrong thing. Sometimes a desire on the part of honourable gentlemen to be consistent outweighs their sense of what really is the right thing for them to do. Sometimes they are deterred from doing the right thing from the fear of being considered inconsistent. Therefore I do not say he is to blame for promising to do one thing and now doing another. But, in considering what the constituencies demanded, and what this House is prepared to give effect to, it is something for us to consider how much the promise of the honourable gentleman weighed with his constituents on this particular question when they returned him over his opponent.

Mr. BUXTON.—Perhaps the honourable member will allow me to explain. I said the reason why I should support the reduction of members was that I thought the honorarium should be increased to £300 if the number of members was reduced. If the number is reduced the honorarium should be raised to £300. This has been reduced, and I am not inconsistent in voting against this Bill.

Mr. BARRON.—The honourable gentleman wants to take out of one pocket of the people with one hand and to take out of the other pocket with the other. The honourable member for the Eastern Maori District raised one objection to the Bill—that is, that we should not disturb the special representation which the Natives now enjoy, unless it is with the desire to break down the lines of demarcation between the European and the Maori, and place all on an equal footing. I believe we should break them down, and, if the honourable gentleman moves as he has intimated, this Parliament probably will break down the last line of demarcation between the two races, so that we shall be merged politically into one people, having the same laws applying to all our affairs. One honourable member accused the Premier of inconsistency, because when he was a member of a former Government he increased the number of members. We ought to be very glad to see the Premier is not deterred by the certainty of being accused by members of inconsistency in this and other matters from doing what he now sees to be his duty; but I am sure the country will not desire to charge him with inconsistency, and will consider the benefits he is conferring on it now rather than the disadvantages they laboured under under the former administration. One honourable member says that the comparison with Canada and France is very unfair as applied to a rising young colony like this, whose circumstances are altogether different from those of other countries. The circumstances of Canada or of France may be scarcely on all fours with the circumstances of New Zealand. But again I would venture to point out that in Victoria they have got a Legislative Assembly containing eighty-six members and a population of under a million. The Cape of Good Hope has a population of over one million, and there they have a House of only seventy-four. If we reduced the number to a larger extent than is now proposed we should still be represented to a greater extent than Victoria or the Cape of Good Hope. Then, the same honourable gentleman accuses this side of the House of being the representatives of the property-classes. Well, Sir, to me it is a very amusing claim that some honourable gentlemen who are opposed to the Government so frequently seem to feel called upon to set up—that of being the only true democrats, the only representatives of the people in the House. Party lines have been, unfortunately, for some years not very clearly defined; but I think, if any side of the House is to set up a claim to be considered as acting in the interests of the people of this colony, it is this side of the House that might set up a very much fairer claim than the other side in that respect. The legislation that has been initiated and placed on the Statute Book this session has been more in the interests of democracy, and will go further in the direction of relieving the masses of the people of burdens placed upon them by their representatives in the past, than anything that has been done in Parliament for the last three or four years. But I may go further and say that the legislation of the past three or four years has been to a very great extent pernicious, and certainly against the interests of the people of this colony. The same honourable gentleman said that this Administration was supported by the absentees. In that respect he reminded me of the Irish gentleman who said that absentees were the curse of Ireland, and, that in fact, that unfortunate country was swarming with them. Perhaps, however, this administration may manage to do what its predecessors did not try to do, and make the statement good by taxing these absentees. Then, we have been told by one honourable gentleman that we have no time for reflection; that this measure is hurriedly brought before us, and that we are asked to pass it without due consideration. Why, Sir, the question was raised at least two sessions ago; the question was embodied in a Bill again last session; the House took no inconsiderable time to debate it; the House divided upon it, and the number—seventy—only escaped becoming the law of the land by the casting-vote of the Chairman; and I am reminded that the casting-vote of the Chairman might not have been necessary had one honourable gentleman remained true to the pledges to his constituents and to members of this House. Had that honourable gentleman not been guilty of a mistake in going into the wrong lobby we should have reduced the number last session, and probably that honourable gentleman would have had the honour of having again a seat in this House. The honourable member for New Plymouth said the effect of this Bill, if passed, would be to increase the evils of log-rolling and coalition Government. Honourable members who sat in the last Parliament must have been exceedingly amused at that argument being raised as an objection to the Bill. If there were any two things which characterized the last Parliament more than others, it was the tendency to log-rolling and the evils of coalition Government. I hope we have minimised the tendency to log-rolling in this Parliament, and that we shall have no more of the pernicious system of coalition Government, which is subversive of all good government on true party lines. The main objection of the honourable member for Mount Ida to the Bill seemed to be that it is effecting what should be a gradual reform by a wrench, and suddenly. Well, there is a proverb that if you have a thorn in your foot it is of no use to change your boots—you must pluck out the thorn. Now, the people of New Zealand have a thorn in their foot, and that thorn is extravagance in the cost of government; and it is of no use to do anything else but pluck it out. To many it is to some extent natural to take a personal rather than a general view of this question. Of course it would be unfair to impute motives to honourable gentlemen; but one cannot help thinking of the reasons which may influence honourable members in either supporting or opposing this Bill when one notices during the debate that just those honourable members who might have been expected to oppose the Bill are those who do oppose it—those honourable gentlemen who unfortunately are in the position of feeling that, if the Bill passes, some local disadvantage is likely to arise to their constituency, or some personal disadvantage to themselves. They forget that, though the constituencies may be enlarged, the electors will still be represented. But I hope that honourable members generally are above personal considerations. We very naturally consider that, in the selection of ourselves, the choice of the best and fittest has been made, but we cannot help noticing that in many cases some of the oldest and most useful public men, men who were able, experienced, and valuable members of the last Parliament, have been replaced by other, younger, and probably quite as useful men. We very naturally take a personal view of the matter, and think our own individual services are absolutely necessary to the good government of the country; yet we may be forced to the conclusion that other persons may surpass us in the estimation of our constituents, and that they may enjoy the honour which we now enjoy, of a seat in this House, and that they may be superior to ourselves and more useful to the country. Sir, I hope this Bill will pass in its present form. I see very little objection to it even in detail. I am sorry to hear many honourable gentlemen say they hope if the second reading is carried it will then be set aside and be heard no more of this session. For my own part, I hope the Government will be in earnest in trying to push it through and put it on the Statute Book this session; and if it is put there I am sure it will do more to raise the Parliament and the Government in the estimation of the people of the colony than anything which has been done for many years.

Mr. Buxton

Mr. O'CALLAGHAN.—I do not wonder at the honourable member for Caversham having complained of the fact of party lines in this House not being very distinctly drawn. I should think that every time he looks at the back of the Premier's head he must be struck with the fact very strongly; and every time he stands up to address the House he must remind the House very strongly of the days when, on the opposite side of the House, he used to denounce the Premier and all his doings in the very strongest language. I think it only fair to the party I now act with to draw this fact out. Now, a great deal has been said to-night in comparing this colony with other portions of the British Empire, including Canada and England, and with France. I think that is a most unjust comparison. New Zealand has a vast work of colonisation to do which the other countries which have been named have done, or, at all events, have not all to do, and their position is not at all like that of this country. No proper comparison can be made except by comparing New Zealand with such countries as Queensland, South Australia, and Tasmania. This fact struck me during the evening, and I compared the representation with the population of those countries and what it would be here if this Bill were passed as it stands. And the figures are these, the proportion to each member being closely approximate:—

Colony.	Number of Members.	Average Population to each Member.
Queensland ..	39	5,600
South Australia ..	52	6,000
Tasmania ..	36	3,700
New Zealand ..	67	8,900

The figures as to New Zealand are assuming that this Bill passes and refers only to the European members and population. I think here we have a right to look forward to the population being enormously increased within a short space of time. When the country is developed, as I hope we shall see it very soon, we shall find a great increase of population—when the enormous mineral resources of the country are more fully developed, when the large tracts of land now waste are settled, and the equally large tracts now held by owners in large blocks, and which we hope to see soon subdivided—when all this is done the country will be capable of carrying an enormously increased population as compared with the present population. Considering the varied interests of the different parts of New Zealand, and the enormous length to which it extends, we have not too many members in this House. Now, I am rather in a puzzle to know what to do in connection with voting on this Bill. I am in favour of a reduction to about eighty to eighty-four members; but I find the Government are inclined to stick to the drastic reduction to seventy, or, rather, sixty-seven, Europeans. Now, this, I consider, is too large a reduction, and certainly such as the colony does not require, and such as the constituencies did not demand at the last election. If my electorate were made larger than it is now it would take about four months to contest an election in it, and it would take a very long purse indeed to face the expenditure in connection with a contest. At the last election I had to address twenty-eight different meetings, and I was on the road from week's end to week's end, and I can say I prayed earnestly for the end of the election. If the electorate were made larger it would be almost impossible for a single man to contest it in anything like a satisfactory manner. If the Government will consent to a moderate reduction to from eighty to eighty-four I shall be content to support the second reading of the Bill; but if they insist on the full reduction proposed in the Bill I shall feel compelled to vote against the second reading.

Mr. Barron

Mr. BUCHANAN.—I had not intended to speak on the question now before the House, but the reference made to the honourable member for Caversham by the last speaker has brought me to my feet. He has thought fit to refer to the position hitherto occupied by that honourable member, and has twitted that honourable gentleman with having deserted what he calls "his own particular side." The honourable member for Lincoln seems to forget the position that he himself occupied on becoming a member of this House at the election of 1881. Do we not know that he was a strong supporter of the present Premier in those days, and supported him during nearly the whole of that Parliament? I therefore think that, whatever other members of the House might feel with regard to the honourable member for Caversham, the honourable member for Lincoln is about the last man in this House who should have referred to him. Now as to the reference made to Queensland, South Australia, and Tasmania. The honourable gentleman quoted the number of members in the Parliaments of each of those colonies, and cited them as arguments for the rejection of this Bill. Why, he could not have cited an argument more strongly in favour of the Bill. We will take Queensland, for instance. He states that they have only one member for each 6,000 of the population, and he also referred to the distance that he himself had to travel to contest an election; but I am quite sure that, if the honourable gentleman would take the average area of the Queensland constituencies, he would find that for every one mile that he would have to travel to contest an election in Canterbury he would have to travel ten miles in contesting an average Queensland electorate. The same must also be said as to the electorates in South Australia. The only point the honourable member appeared to make was as regards Tasmania, and there the population is so small as compared with the other colonies that the case hardly applies. I think, myself, this question has been sufficiently debated, both last session in this House and before the constituencies, and I think we need not discuss it further. I, for one, support the measure with pleasure, and strongly hold that now is the proper session in which to decide it. We should recollect the enormous expense and delay that were caused at the last election owing to the Representation Bill not being passed at the proper time.

Mr. TURNBULL.—I am one of those who have been for some time of the opinion that the number of members of this House could with very great advantage be reduced; and I must say that I have not heard one single argument during this debate which would lead me to alter my opinion. But I shall find myself obliged to vote against this Bill; and I will plainly tell honourable members the reason why. Though I hold that the number of members should be reduced even below what is proposed here, and have supported the honourable member for Caversham when he has proposed that the number should be reduced to fifty and then sixty, I really think this is a most inopportune time for introducing a Bill of this kind. The Premier has told us that we are losing, in the shape of retrenchment, £500 every day that the financial proposals of the Government are not considered; and yet here we are spending our time upon a Bill which, probably, before the time comes for putting it into operation, probably three years, may not be required at all! It may be that the population will have increased to such an extent that the ten or twelve thousand of population required for a quota would be made up, even supposing the number of constituencies were left at ninety-one. At any rate, if the Bill goes into Committee—and I have no doubt it will do so, from the determination of the Premier—it will take two or three nights to put it through. Now, have we that time to spare at present? The Minister of Education has told us that if the Bill is not passed this session its chance of passing will be prejudiced, because there will be always difficulties in the way of passing a measure of this kind. I have before now pointed out to members of this House that there is great necessity for amending the Standing Orders, and I thought that amendment in that direction would be one of the first measures which the present Government would bring down, because there is no doubt that as the Standing Orders are at present framed there is a difficulty in the way not only of such a Bill as this, but of all Bills. No doubt the Premier will say that I have been a sinner in this direction myself. I admit it; but, at the same time, I am bound to point out that it is quite time these Standing Orders should be altered, so that no factious opposition should be possible under them. For the reasons I have given, I do not see my way to vote for this Bill on this occasion; but I wish it to be clearly understood that I am in favour of reducing the number of members to the lowest limit possible.

Major STEWARD.—I have only a few words to say in regard to this matter. When the question of reducing the number of members was before this House in the last Parliament I voted for the motion of the honourable member for Moeraki—who now represents Wai-hemo—to reduce the number of members to seventy-one; and, Sir, my conduct in the matter was entirely approved of by the constituents I then had the honour to represent, and still have the honour to represent. Therefore I feel bound to vote with the Government for the second reading of this Bill. But one is not a little, I was going to say amused, but also surprised to see the attitude taken up by the honourable member for Caversham. It is not so very long ago since I regularly worked heartily with the honourable gentleman in endeavouring to do all we possibly could to defeat the objects of the honourable member who is now at the head of the Government. It is a matter of great surprise to me to see the facility with which he has executed a complete bouleversement, and now gives an entire and thorough support to the honourable gentleman in whatsoever he chooses to do.

Mr. BARRON.—No; only in the good he does.

Major STEWARD.—I thought that the reason the honourable gentleman gave for the change in his opinions was that the Premier had recently greatly improved.

Mr. BARRON.—Hear, hear.

Major STEWARD.—I am exceedingly glad to hear it; but we know that the enthusiasm of converts is proverbial, and the honourable member for Caversham is no exception to the rule. He seems to say that the measures of the present Government are more liberal measures, as I understand him, than any measures brought before the House for some years past. If the reduction of the Governor's salary, the reduction of Ministers' salaries, the reduction of the honorarium, and the general retrenchment so frequently spoken of are the measures that he refers to, then I have to tell him that those are measures that the whole country has resolved upon, independent of parties, and that they would have been brought forward by any party which had come into power. Therefore he cannot claim credit to the Government for having brought forward measures in response to the general wish of the country. Although I have said that I intend to vote for the second reading of the Bill, I cannot help saying that I think it is to be regretted that the measure should have been brought forward during the present exceptional session. It has been shown to be an exceptional session by the fact that all facilities to private members have been taken away at an early period, without any complaint on their part, in view of the exigencies of the case. We have begun Monday sittings early, and in every way we have assented to the utmost despatch being shown in respect to public business that had to be transacted. Have we not some large questions of public interest which the Government are pledged to carry through during this present session? We have to give effect to the general policy of retrenchment, and the reduction of the estimates by a large amount. We have also the question of the revision of the land policy, a Bill for dealing with which is under the consideration of a Committee of this House. We have also the question of the reorganization of our railway service, a Bill in connection with which has passed its second reading, and is now down for committal. Seeing that we have only about fourteen days before Christmas for the consideration of all these important measures, I am surprised that the honourable gentleman at the head of the Government should have brought down a Bill such as this, which must of necessity take not less than two or three days for second reading, committal, and third reading. As a justification for this Bill being brought forward at this particular time, the honourable member for Dunedin East has advanced the most extraordinary argument that there is a better chance of carrying the Bill at this session than at next, which will be only four months hence, because honourable members cannot be trusted to remember their pledges for a period of six months. What justification is there for making such a charge? I think honourable members have clearly shown that they are determined to fulfil their pledges in this matter.

Mr. ALLEN.—One honourable gentleman has forgotten them already.

Major STEWARD.—Quite possibly; but one swallow does not make a summer, although sometimes a single sheep infects a flock. I decline to form my judgment on one individual instance. Speaking generally, I say that the House—and the division will show it—will, in the main, fulfil their pledges to their constituents; and that by a large majority a reasonable reduction in the number of members of this House will be carried. If this could just as well be carried next session—that is, next April or May—as it can be carried now—and I contend that it could—I do submit there is no justification for Ministers, who are pleading the want of time for pressing important matters on with great urgency, in bringing down at the same time this Bill, which must of necessity bring almost every honourable member to his feet. The Government must take their share of blame for this matter if they find, by-and-by, that they have to drop proposals of importance. Let them hold this side of the House blameless of having delayed them in that way. If they had brought this Bill down for second reading with an announcement that they did not intend taking it farther than the second reading, but, to fulfil their pledges to the country, that they intended to carry out the reform, and would go on with the Bill next session, and that in the meantime the country could think about it, they would, in my opinion, have done wisely and well. As it is, we have it before us that this Bill is to be pressed through all its stages in this House, and possibly it will come down to us with amendments from the Legislative Council, and, at any rate, it will take us another two or three days. Although I shall vote for the second reading of this Bill, I regret that Ministers have not thought fit to postpone the time to pass it into law until the next session, which must take place in about April next. Those are my distinct views on the subject. I hope yet that the Premier, when he replies, will make an announcement that he will be satisfied, if he carries the second reading by a good substantial majority, to rest at that stage and proceed further with the measure next session.

Major Steward

Mr. FISH.—I shall be glad if the House will permit me to withdraw my amendment.

Leave refused.

Mr. GOLDIE.—I do not intend to take up the time of the House in a lengthy speech to-night; but one cannot help dealing with some of the arguments which have been used by honourable members. I was surprised and amused at the statement made by the honourable member for Rangitika, who told us that he was not a blind follower of any man. It appears to me that he is not a blind follower of himself, for he travelled all round the compass, changed his tactics, and now is going to vote against his own conviction.

Mr. BUXTON.—The honourable member has made the greatest mistake.

Mr. GOLDIE.—The honourable member for the Dunstan told us that he came here pledged to oppose this Bill. As far as I am concerned I am pledged the other way. Most of the members from Auckland are pledged to reduce the number to fifty. I shall be only too happy in Committee to move in that direction, though, if it is carried, I may be sacrificing myself in doing so. I think that fifty members are quite sufficient, and we have had abundant evidence of that since we have come to this House. A certain number of honourable members have been doing all the talking, and the others have been debarred from taking part in the debates owing to the long speeches of those honourable gentlemen. If there were only fifty members, every one might have a chance of speaking. It has been said that it would be unwise to pass this Bill unless we are prepared to amalgamate the city electorates. I am opposed to that. Those of us who had to do with elections in cities with single electorates during the late elections know that it took us all our time to get our rolls pure, for it is a very hard matter to keep persons from personating. If you amalgamate the city electorates it will be a sheer impossibility to keep the rolls pure. As long as I am in this House I shall oppose the amalgamation of the city electorates, which would mean, I think, making it an impossibility to get honesty in elections. We have been told by the honourable member for Hokitika that in none of the other colonies have they attempted to reduce the number of members. I do not know that any of the other colonies have made the mistake that we have made here in having so many members in proportion to our population. In Queensland they have fifty-nine members; population, 333,000. That means 5,644 people to every member; and there are 11,330 miles of territory to each member. Many members complain of the distances which will have to be travelled if the number of mem-bars is reduced here; but in New Zealand we shall simply have one member to every 1,485 miles, as against 11,390 miles in Queensland. In Victoria there are 11,533 people for every member; and there are 17,378 miles for each member in South Australia. So that in the other colonies they have not made the mistake that we have made here. Their representation is much smaller in proportion, except in the case of New South Wales; so that they have no need to make a retrograde step, as we are compelled to do in consequence of our folly. The honourable member for Te Aro told us that it would be an unwise thing to pass this Bill now, because it would put into the hands of the Government a power—namely, the power of a dissolution—which they might use next session on the revision of the tariff if defeated. It appears to me that, if the Government do not force this Bill through now, they will have a whip equally effective, because those who are pledged to support the measure and do not exercise their power in that direction dare not go back to their constituents. It has been said that the Bill ought to be put off this session because there are more important matters to deal with. The people are watching intently to see how far the pledges of members are being carried out. If you let this question stand over for one or two years, possibly the electors may forget the pledges made to them, and we shall be allowed, very likely, to betray our trust without meeting with that rebuke which otherwise we should meet if we did not fulfil our pledges. I think we should pass this Bill at once, and thus prove to the people that we are carrying out that which we are pledged to carry out. We are told that by reducing the number of members it will lead to a great deal more log-rolling than has taken place in the past. It appears to me that the result would be just the other way, because the fewer the members with whom to do log-rolling the less log-rolling there will be. Decrease the number of members, and the fewer logs there will be to roll.

An Hon. MEMBER.—What about the country districts?

Mr. GOLDIE.—They are always rolling logs. In the towns there are no logs to roll—all the roads are made by the Corporation. The greater part of the log-rolling is done by the country members. If you reduce the number of members you will reduce the quantity of log-rolling.

An Hon. MEMBER.—The Auckland members.

Mr. GOLDIE.—They do not do any log-rolling at all. It is necessary for us to carry out the pledges we have made. I wish to carry out the pledge I made, and I shall reserve to myself the right of moving that the number be reduced to fifty. I hope the Government will force through this Bill this session: then the rolls can be thoroughly prepared, and the country will thus be saved great expense.

Mr. R. THOMPSON.—I hope the Government will press the Bill through as soon as possible. No measure was more fully debated throughout the country districts than the Bill now before the House, and, as far as I know, the feeling of the people from one end of the colony to the other is that the number of members should be largely reduced. So far as I am personally concerned, I am not pledged in any way; but I shall certainly support the Bill, and I trust nothing will induce the Government to postpone the passing of this measure until next session. We know perfectly well the trouble and confusion which the alteration of the electorates made this year, and we know the very imperfect manner in which the work was done. We also know the trouble there was in compiling the new electoral rolls; and I think it is very important for the interests of the country, if we are to pass a measure of this kind at all, that it should be done this session, so that there may be ample time to alter the electorates and prepare the rolls. I trust that nothing will persuade the Government to withdraw this Bill.

Mr. CADMAN.—I have listened with amazement to the tenor of the speeches which have been made to-night. Fully three-fourths of the speakers have done everything but debate the Bill, and I, for one, am getting sick and tired of hearing so much twaddle talked in this House from time to time about democracy. My experience of the loud-mouthed democrat is that when he has made a long speech he never does anything more. My experience of the electors of this colony is that they think a yard of road of more value than a mile of speech. No one would think it possible that so many men calling themselves sensible businessmen, the chosen of the country, would talk the utter nonsense that we have heard this session. There is no doubt that the country has demanded that we should reduce the number of members of this House; and we are here to carry that out. The question, to my mind, is, Is this Bill of such vital importance that it requires immediate attention? We have had no reasons given us from the Government benches showing that it is of such vital importance. I hope that the Premier in his reply will endeavour to give us some reason. To my mind, if we have any time to spare for legislation outside retrenchment, that time ought to be given to trying to solve the problem of giving assistance to local industries. This is a matter that the country is crying out bitterly for, and I think it would be more to the credit of the Government if they invited us to deal with that question, rather than take up the time of the House this session on this Bill. However, the question is now before us, and the Government tell us that they intend to pass the Bill. I, for one, am pledged to reduction of the number of members, and I shall support the Bill. With respect to the Maori representation, there seems to be a consensus of opinion that the Natives should be put on the same footing as Europeans, and when the Bill is in Committee I intend to move for the repeal of the Maori Representation Act of 1867 and the Continuance Act of 1876. It appears to me that if that were carried the Government next session could consider the question of putting the Maoris on the same footing with regard to electoral rights as Europeans.

Mr. BLAKE.—I wish to say a few words as to my desire to affirm the principle of a reduction of the number of representatives of the country. I, like other honourable members, have promised to vote for a reduction in the representation. I also promised to do my best for various other things which were supposed to be of much more consequence; and, as I said on a former occasion, I thought the Representation Bill was being forced upon us before it was necessary, when we had so many large questions to deal with this session. However, I have no objection to the reduction; but I do hope that, when the reductions are made, the towns will have a full representation, for the simple reason that I think that is the only chance we shall have of carrying the tariff in favour of local industries, and for that reason, when the Bill is in Committee, I shall vote for the towns to have full representation. I do not think that the reduction of members to seventy or any other number would do the country much more harm than the ninety-five have in times that are passed. We certainly have brought the country to a terrible pass by having a larger number than seventy members. I have not much further to say, except that I shall vote for the second reading of this Bill; but, like so many honourable gentlemen who have spoken to-night, I shall certainly not press for so small a number as sixty-seven, if the Bill goes into Committee, because that is generally below the number in favour of which the opinion of the country was expressed. I shall vote for the second reading to affirm the principle; but in Committee, like others, I reserve the right to alter the Bill.

Mr. BEETHAM.—I did not hear the remarks of the Premier in introducing the Bill; but I gather, from what I heard from the honourable member for Wallace, that he alluded to the position of America. The honourable member for Wallace seemed to consider that New Zealand is a nation entirely by itself. I am only anxious that it should be so, and eventually, I trust, it will be so. But, as I understand the matter, it appears that we are merely a province of a nation at the present time; so that I think the analogy he drew was not at all warranted in this case. As far as I could gather during my travels in America, it takes five hundred thousand inhabitants to make a State, though I may be wrong in this respect. The honourable member for Avon drew attention to the town districts, and I shall make a few remarks about the country districts. If this Bill goes through in its present form without a certain increase in the proportion of the number of members for the country districts, then, possibly, I might vote against it. I do not say I shall, but it will be the duty of those who represent the country districts to carefully consider the Bill when it goes into Committee. I was rather amused at an old politician like the honourable member for Waimate wondering at the Government bringing down a measure of this character at this period of the session. I think that the matter is very plain. Seeing the very remarkable unanimity that has been shown in dealing with the policy Bills of the Government, I think this is the very time to bring it down. We are carrying all their measures almost unanimously, and we are quite ready to do so in the present case, and I hope we shall carry it by a large majority. But I trust the Premier will allow the country districts to have a larger margin than is at present proposed in the Bill. I support the second reading.

Mr. Cadman

Mr. R. H. J. REEVES.—My intention is to support the second reading of the Bill. I have always been a consistent supporter of a reduction of members. In 1881 the honourable gentleman who has brought this Bill forward brought in a Bill to increase the number of members, but of course every one is allowed to alter the representation of the country according to its circumstances. But I would suggest to the honourable member in charge of the Bill that he should accept a second reading in this case, and allow the Bill to be committed on another occasion. I do not think it will be desirable to have the Bill coming into force until after the next census is taken. If the Bill is brought into operation before that time very considerable injustice will be done to many parts of the country. On the west coast of the Middle Island the population is very much increasing, and the electors of the West Coast have a voting-power very much in excess of that of any other part of New Zealand. I think the honourable member for Greymouth has about three thousand electors on his roll, and the number on my roll is about two thousand five hundred. Under any circumstances, it is desirable this Bill should not come into force until the next census shall have been taken in 1890,—or the Government might hurry it on a little to determine the redistribution of seats. A good deal has been said with regard to Victoria and New South Wales and other colonies in respect to their representation. We will take Victoria as the guiding-star, as it were, for the whole of the colonies. I say, without hesitation, that that is the most intelligent and best-governed colony in the whole of the Australasian group, without exception. We find they have only eighty-six members in the Legislative Assembly. We must bear in mind that in Victoria the large centres are not nearly so highly represented as the centres in New Zealand. Melbourne has a population of three hundred thousand, but they have not so many members to represent them in the Assembly as the Town of Wellington; it certainly has not got any more. I think in taking into consideration this very momentous question the Government should look at it from a very broad view. I think the representation of the towns should be very much curtailed, and the representation extended in the outlying districts. Honourable gentlemen may say that the expense of elections will be increased in the event of an enlargement of their districts. No doubt it will be. I myself speak feelingly.

In my district I have got twenty-one polling-places, and, although I was not opposed at my election, I attended some thirty to thirty-five meetings; and some honourable members may have had more. I think it should be taken into serious consideration—the possibility of curtailing the representation of towns and increasing that of the country. I do not know that I have anything more to say on this Bill, further than that I shall vote for the second reading. As I said before, I have always been a consistent advocate of a reduction of members in Parliament. In fact, on the occasion of the passing of the Representation Bill of 1881 I dare say the Premier will remember I warned him that the time would come when he would advocate the reduction of members in this House. I certainly think that seventy is, in the present circumstances of the colony, quite enough, and I shall vote for the Bill.

Motion for the adjournment of the House negatived.

Mr. SEDDON.—As a number of members wish to take the issue on the main question, I ask permission to withdraw my amendment.

Leave refused.

Mr. MOSS.—I was in hope that the amendment would be withdrawn, but I cannot, myself, go to a division on this question without expressing my views upon it. I have been very sorry to see, during this session, that these questions, which appear to me of exceeding gravity, have been discussed simply as if they were financial questions. I feel very certain that the financial aspect is a mere bagatelle as compared with the constitutional aspect in which such questions present themselves to me; for on the passing or rejection of Bills of this kind depend the future progress and liberty of the country. I have heard honourable members during this debate frequently refer to the condition of the old Parliament. I have heard it said that it was a much better Parliament twenty years ago—that the members were superior and the work was better done, and done at much less expense to the country. Sir, I, who know something of the history of Parliament, will venture to give that an emphatic denial. The old Parliament for some time was a kind of club, giving pensions to whom it liked, having gentlemen taken out of the public offices—employed there as secretaries and clerks—and putting them in the Upper House to make them Prime Ministers and Ministers of State; having members taken out of this House and made Resident Magistrates, and Under-Secretaries, and Commissioners of Bankruptcy. That was constantly done under the old régime. We have got rid of all that under the present régime, and, in doing that, I think we have made a great step in advance. It seems to me a very serious thing that we should now attempt lightly to interfere with the structure we have raised. Reference has been made to the great Parliament, the English Parliament. But will anybody suppose that the great mass of the people would be in the position they occupy in England if they had possessed a Parliament organized and constituted as this Parliament has been? Would the great mass of the people in England have been allowed to remain uneducated for so many generations, and in so many ways entirely neglected? Could that have occurred under a paid Parliament? I lately read a sermon, and, although the time is getting very late, will venture to quote from it. It is a sermon preached by the Rev. Stopford Brooke at the Bloomsbury Chapel on the 22nd December, 1883, and is one that is well worth reading. Here is what the preacher says:—

“No words, as you have heard of late, can exaggerate that which lies behind the stately edifice of our wealth and pride. Here, close at hand to this chapel, there are dens where decent folk live nine in a cellar scarcely larger than six of the pews in this church, for which they pay 5s. a week. It is the picture of thousands of rooms dwelt in all over this city, the filth and vermin and nameless horrors of which deepen year after miserable year; and every improvement made in this town for the sake of the greater comfort and pleasure of the upper classes, without previous provision for housing those whose dens are pulled down, increases this overcrowding, and raises the rent on those whose life is already crushed out of them by overwork, and whose wages for this overwork are starvation-wages; for work is almost as much overcrowded as the dwellings. There are thousands who cannot get any work at all, and whose lives are spent in daily despair; and while their souls are eaten away by this vulture their bodies are burnt up with famine. Famine is common in this town, and especially the famine of children; and the fact speaks well for the brutality of the first city in the world.”

The gentleman who spoke those words is one whom we ought all to honour for speaking in his place in such outspoken terms; and when I hear people speak lightly of the great mass of the people, and deride those who think that one of the greatest objects of Parliament should be to preserve them in the good position they now occupy, I think of this sermon. It is constantly said that persons talk too much of being the friends of the working-man: but that sneering style only comes from those who wish to rule selfishly. All they aim at is to see the mass of the people kept as humble as possible, and not to have the voice in this Parliament on behalf of themselves, their families and friends, to which they are entitled, and which they have in the past so well used. We have in this colony at the present time the great mass of the people certainly in a condition to which the words I have read are not applicable. Ought we not to be proud of that, and do our utmost to keep them in that position? And what engine is so powerful to affect their position for all time as this Parliament? Their whole future welfare depends on that. The rich can take care of themselves; they do not care how many members are here, or how they are paid, or whether they are paid at all; but, if this Parliament is to be kept in sympathy with the people, you cannot achieve that without proper payment of members and adequate representation of the people. These are the two great aims to keep before us, and they can only be obtained by a full representation of the whole people. Surely, in presence of that consideration, the small amount of saving which might be effected sinks into insignificance and is not worth consideration. We have been asked by the honourable member for Rangitikei what is the difference between Democracy and Conservatism, and told that he did not think any one could explain it. Well, I will try and explain the difference. Democracy recognises the man first; Conservatism thinks of the property first, and of the man as subsidiary to property. Democracy aims at an entire divorce between society and politics; Conservatism would like to see those who, by their wealth or other cause, rule in society, rule also in politics. There is the difference; and there are honourable members who sincerely defend their own side, and each should credit the other for sincerity. I believe that democracy, and government by democracy, is the natural life of this colony.

Mr. BRUCE.—Will the honourable gentleman allow me to explain? My remarks applied to the terms as they are used in this House.

Mr. MOSS.—Well, I can only say that when I use the term "democrat" that is the sense in which I use it. I believe the honourable member for Rangitikei, from his large sympathies, is a democrat at heart, although in very bad company at present. Then, Sir, speaking of the constitution of this Parliament, surely there is one great and important point that should not be overlooked. Surely we ought not to forget, in our political arrangements, that this country, of all countries in the world, with the exception, perhaps, of Italy and Japan, is the one that has no great centre. Is this place the centre of the colony? Is the Press of this place the metropolitan Press? Is this place the commercial centre of the colony? Is it fitted in any way, commercially, socially, or politically, to be the centre of New Zealand? The answer to be given to these questions indicates a very good reason for our not following blindly the example of other countries, but for marking out for ourselves a course suitable for the country and for the people. All this has been considered in the past, and, although the ideas to which I am now giving expression may be fresh to the new members, they are well known to the old members of the House. Sir, we have built up this structure of the Parliament of New Zealand with great difficulty, and I should like to see it touched with reverent hands, as the foundation on which rests the life of the people of this country. This is a subject on which one might be tempted to speak very strongly. The hour is late, and I will not do so, although my feelings are so strong with regard to it that sometimes I feel a difficulty in repressing myself. Now, on the 13th August, 1881, very irreverent hands were laid on this Parliament, in the same way as now: without due consideration. Then the number of members was increased, and the whole representation of the country altered. I admit it was high time to make some alteration, for the representation was most unequal. On that occasion, when the number of members was increased from eighty-four to ninety-five, I opposed the increase. I have just been looking up Hansard to see what I said, and this is it:—

Mr. Moss

"Instead of increasing the number of members of this House, we ought to have had the measures for local government which we were to have had at the early part of the session, but of which we hear nothing now. If those measures had been brought down properly framed, and carried in accordance with the wishes of the people, I am quite certain this House, being relieved of all local matters, and having nothing but broad principles of legislation to deal with, need not have held more than forty-five members, instead of ninety-five."

I also took the opportunity of saying—and it is very apt to the present occasion,—

"If we go on increasing the number of members in this House, and increasing the enormous departments in connection with it, we shall waste the resources of the country, and we shall not be able to find funds for local government."

Six years have passed since, and I feel now that I was justified in using those expressions. Then, with regard to the financial view of the question, let me state that at that time the colony was in a great crisis, and great steps were to be taken to settle its finances; and so it has been in every Parliament of which I have been a member. In 1879 the same tactics were resorted to as now. A financial panic was created throughout the country. It lowered our stocks then in the same way as a panic is now lowering them in London—a panic got up for special party purposes, just as it is now. In 1879, when the country was in this similar panic, this is what was said by the honourable gentleman now the Premier of the colony: "We are, I hope, about to take a new departure in finance, the proposals of the Government, if given effect to, insuring in the future a state of equilibrium between expenditure and income." That was eight years ago. At the same time the honourable gentleman said,—

"The country will be satisfied with no temporary expedients, and will submit to no makeshifts, but will insist on our finance being placed on a well-defined, solid, and lasting foundation."

The exact words, almost, in which we are addressed to-day. Now, once more, the finances are to be put on a lasting and firm foundation. Once more the honourable gentleman's supporters congratulate him on an honest attempt to grapple with the present difficulty. Who has not heard all that before? It has been repeated so often, and there is such utter absurdity in it, that I have scarcely patience to listen. Those who have gone through the fire know that panics have been created, and that political changes have been sought and effected under cover of that panic. Then, another and most important failure in the administration in which the honourable gentleman has taken a prominent part for many years is the substitution of a system of local government for that which was so recklessly and wantonly destroyed. Instead of being an advance, it was from that date that our real troubles began. I ventured to say years ago in this House that we were making a very great mistake,—that we should be in greater difficulties than ever,—because we were laying the foundation for a political crisis to complicate the financial crisis sure, from our borrowing policy, to come. On the 4th August, 1876, the system of local government which had existed previously for a quarter of a century, and which certainly needed reform, was recklessly and unwisely destroyed instead of being reformed. On that occasion we were told that we should have, instead, a great triumph. There was to be a form of local government that would give to the country all the works it required without the necessity of parliamentary intervention. Those were the exact words of the promise on which the policy was accomplished. We have gone on for eleven years since that, and millions of money have been borrowed to bolster up and keep successive Governments in their places, without facing this great question and so bringing the colony into a healthy condition. I shall vote for the second reading of the Bill. I do not see how I could consistently vote against it, as I have always maintained that the number of members should be reduced, and have opposed the increase which was previously made. But I hold that, with this Bill, there should have come down to us a measure of local government that would have made the reduction of the number of members still larger. We are told that the question of local government is one of insurmountable difficulty. I venture to say that in a week I could bring down a measure which, at all events, would set honourable members thinking; and that is all that any honourable member can aspire to. I would undertake to say that I could do that in half a week, and that, as the result of that thought, we should have something better than the present system. We have had the experience of five-and-twenty years, and we know all the defects of the old system. What difficulty, then, could there be in building up a new one on somewhat the same lines? We might have the great South Island managing its own affairs without constantly coming to this House. What difficulty could there be in framing a similar system for the North Island? It might be necessary to divide it into two or more parts; but what possible difficulty could there be in doing it? And now, when we have run the whole of our resources nearly dry, some such change is, I feel, inevitable. With the whole power of the country centralised in this Assembly, it is scarcely safe to reduce its numbers; it is scarcely safe to do anything that may reduce it to the old condition of a fashionable club, in which it existed for so many years in the early days of the colony. It is scarcely safe to make the reduction of the number and the reduction of the pay go together without some measure of decentralisation at the same time. We should be careful lest we revert to the old times, of which we hear so much, when it was with the greatest difficulty that a candidate could be got to stand for the House. We know that on one occasion people were glad to pick up one gentleman as he rode past the polling-booth on horseback; and another gentleman, who has stood in the highest position in the country, was absolutely elected by his proposer and seconder, not another person being present. That was the condition of affairs in the old times, and that is a condition that surely honourable members would not like to see us reduced to again. I regard the reduction of the number of members without accompanying measures of local government with much doubt. If we could reorganize in the different parts of the country strong local governing powers, that would keep this House in check; if we could effect this great reform, with those local powers of government so organized that they should elect the members of another place, who would then be the guardians of local interests, the guardians of the liberties of the people, instead of being merely, as now, the nominees of the honourable gentlemen who sit upon those benches, their position would be higher, much higher, than it is, and one of great influence and respect throughout New Zealand. That is a vision which sometimes comes across my mind. I see powerful local Governments depending entirely upon themselves, managing their own railways, receiving their own revenues, and coming no longer as beggars for the crumbs that may fall from the General Government table. I see these local bodies electing to another place the honourable gentlemen who would then be the guardians of their interests and of the interests of the people. I see, in fact, the Government organized on a democratic basis; and I see this House full of life and energy, a democratic Parliament representing the whole people, and not a fashionable club, as it must be if this reactionary policy which is being pursued is carried out to the full extent. Therefore, while I shall vote for the second reading of this Bill, yet, when the motion is made that you, Sir, leave the chair for the purpose of going into Committee on the Bill, I shall be prepared to support an amendment that we proceed no further with this Bill until the Government has taken the sting out of it, the danger out of it, by bringing down some measure for establishing an effective and simple system of local self-government in the country. That is the amendment I should like to see properly moved, and I believe it would receive a very large support in this House. It would prevent the Bill from going any further than the second reading, thus affirming the principle of reduction, but giving with it the local government without which it may prove a serious danger, and seriously affect the power and, in that sense, the rights and liberties of the people.

Mr. TAIWHANGA.—I cannot make out why the honourable gentleman wishes to abolish the Maori members. But, if they want to abolish the Maoris, they do not want to abolish their land; they want to pass an Act to deal with their lands. I am willing that the Maoris shall be turned out of the House provided the Government will agree to pass my Bills. If my Bills become law—my Maori Land Bill and my Bill to repeal all the Native Land Court Acts, and give us the management of our own lands—I am willing that the Maoris should leave this House. I think we are old enough now to look after ourselves independently of the white people. I should like to see fair-play between the two races. If they do not want any of us in the House we are quite willing to have a Council of our own. I say that the Maoris should be allowed to administer their own affairs. I think I have the majority of the Maori people at my back when I say we do not want to “chum” with the English at all, because we have no chance even in any Court of law, and we have no chance in this House here. Here we are four Maori members against ninety-one Englishmen. If ninety-one oxen pull against four oxen, what are the four oxen to do? Of course, whatever we say it is of no good, because there are only four of us; for, of course, ninety-one can beat four.

Mr. GUINNESS.—I think that at this late hour of the night, the Premier having obtained the expression of the opinion of a large number of honourable members, he ought to be satisfied without carrying the Bill any further. The reason that has been given why the Bill should be read a second time at this sitting is, that honourable members are not likely to keep their pledge if the matter is left over to another session. I move the adjournment of the debate, so that it can come up again this session. I hope the motion will be agreed to. I have always opposed the reduction of members, and I think there are plenty of Bills on the Order Paper of much greater importance than this, Bills that can be given practical effect to, and which will be of benefit; while, if we pass this one, it will be of no benefit to any one for the next two or three years. I fail to see why the time of the House, which is very limited indeed, is being taken up in trying to place on the Statute Book a measure which is bound to meet with the strongest opposition, and which it will take several days to pass, if it is passed at all. I say, for these reasons, the Premier ought to be satisfied now, having had the expression of opinion of a large majority of the House clearly in favour of the principle of the measure, to consent to the adjournment of the debate. I move, That the debate be now adjourned; and I hope the Premier will consent.

Major ATKINSON.—Of course the Government is powerless in the hands of honourable gentlemen if they mean to be rebellious; but I shall ask my friends to see the Bill through before we rise, and I need say no more than that I cannot consent, under the circumstances, to any adjournment.

Mr. FISH.—Then the honourable gentleman really means to tell this House that he intends to check anything in the shape of free debate. I am one of those members of the House who have not spoken on this Bill, and he tells us that he intends to keep us here until he passes the measure. If that is his intention, he will not gain anything by it, because another debate will be raised on the committal of the Bill. The honourable gentleman is clever, and sometimes too clever, and no doubt he will find himself so in this instance. He desires to save time, and has taken on this occasion, as he has done on every occasion, an opportunity of prolonging the debate, and inciting honourable gentlemen to an opposition that would not otherwise occur. He is said to be a tactician; but, in my opinion, he is about the worst tactician to guide a Bill safely through the House that I have ever seen. I understand that we are not at liberty to discuss the main question. Honourable members will be aware that in moving the adjournment of the House to-night I fell into a mistake, not knowing that I could not debate the question. I thought I might be able to speak on the adjournment; but I shall take an opportunity to raise a debate again on the committal of the Bill, and I think the honourable gentleman will find that his very clever tactics will not be successful. The honourable gentleman prevented the amendment moved by the honourable member for Kumara from being withdrawn, with the idea and view of burking debate. I, for one, am not going to be burked by the honourable gentleman, and he will find that he has made a great mistake in adopting the tactics he has adopted on this occasion.

Mr. TAYLOR.—I must object to the tone of the honourable gentleman. Until I am satisfied of the contrary, I have no reason to believe that the Premier of the colony, when he makes a statement, will not stick to it. I cannot understand the language of the honourable member for Dunedin South. I am prepared to deal honestly and fairly with the Premier, or any other honourable member, until I find him breaking his word. I have nothing to do with tactics. I do trust, seeing the second reading of the Bill is to be carried, that that will be allowed to be done, in order that we may get through the business, and I trust that there will be no more unnecessary bandying about or disputing the words of the Premier, until I am satisfied that he is not speaking the truth.

Mr. SEDDON.—The position of affairs is somewhat unique. I stated some time ago that I desired to withdraw the amendment, because of the feeling generally amongst honourable members that the second reading of the Bill should take place; and a number of honourable members who believed that several alterations should be made in the Bill did not feel justified in voting for any amendment that would postpone the second reading of the Bill. It was on those grounds that I asked leave to withdraw the amendment. The Premier, of course, refused to allow that to be withdrawn, and for this reason: He feared, and has just ground to fear, that an amendment dealing with the question of local government in preference to passing the Representation Bill this session would be brought forward; and, having been warned of that, he suddenly became afraid, and, having the opinion of the House on that point, he refused to allow the amendment to be withdrawn. Now he refuses to allow the debate to be adjourned. I scarcely think it is fair. There is a reason given for the change of front by the honourable member for Sydenham which I disagree with. It is this: The honourable gentleman has been carrying on negotiations between the Premier and himself relative to the number of members. I have been given to understand that there have been some negotiations between the Premier and the honourable member for Sydenham, and that the Premier has stated that the Government—

Major ATKINSON.—I made no statement.

An Hon. MEMBER.—Intimated.

Major ATKINSON.—Nor intimated.

Mr. SEDDON.—I do not know what term to apply, but the honourable member for Sydenham is under the impression that the Government will not object to increasing the number to eighty.

Major ATKINSON.—He has not got anything of that from me.

Mr. SEDDON.—Seeing that a meeting of the Cabinet was suddenly called, I take it for granted that there has been a change of front since the debate has been going on. Perhaps the Cabinet has not come to a conclusion, and the Premier is not ready to give the direct answer that the honourable gentleman wants. If that is the answer—

Major ATKINSON.—There has been no Cabinet meeting.

Mr. SEDDON.—Of course I take the honourable gentleman's assurance.

An Hon. MEMBER.—A caucus.

Mr. SEDDON.—My honourable friend says there has been a caucus. I have no doubt the Premier has consulted with his colleagues on the point raised by the honourable member for Sydenham.

Major ATKINSON.—Not with one of them.

Mr. SEDDON.—The honourable gentleman ought to have done so, because the honourable member for Sydenham is very anxious to get a direct answer. He is dissatisfied, because he was led to believe, rightly or wrongly, that the Government is not going to stand by the Bill.

Mr. TAYLOR.—I rise to order.

Mr. SEDDON.—The honourable member for Sydenham sometimes plays the part of the funny man of the House, and he is somewhat jealous of that rôle being taken from him. He told the House clearly just now that he expected an explanation from the Premier. I took down his words. He did not believe in the debate being adjourned, because the Premier was going to make some explanation. What is that explanation?

Mr. TAYLOR.—If you will give way and not waste time the Premier will tell you.

Mr. SEDDON.—The honourable gentleman is very anxious about this explanation; but other honourable members may not be. Whatever those negotiations have led up to, he is satisfied with the answer that is to come. If it was against his wish, he would be among those supporting the motion for adjournment. Why I wish the adjournment of the debate is that the following amendment may have fair consideration. If the Premier had allowed me to withdraw my first amendment, I should have proposed the one which I intend to move, and we could have had the issue on the second reading of the Bill; but now there is nothing else for it but to deal with it when the motion to go into Committee comes on. It means a second debate, which will probably take up a greater time than if this amendment were put at once. I will read the amendment: That it is inadvisable that the Representation Bill proceed further than its second reading until the establishment of some simple form of local self-government shall have rendered dependence on Parliament for local works unnecessary. It was to move this that I asked for the adjournment of the debate; and, if the Premier had allowed my first amendment to be withdrawn, this could have been put without debate. These are my reasons.

Mr. T. THOMPSON.—I should be very sorry to think that the statement is correct—namely, that the Government is not prepared to stick by this Bill. I feel confident there is a general desire on the part of the constituencies that there should be such a reduction in the number of members as indicated in the Bill. I trust the Government will not agree to the adjournment, but will press the Bill on.

Dr. FITCHETT.—I desire to say the same. I see no reason or force in the motion for adjournment. It is manifest that the country has spoken with no uncertain sound for reduction, and it is also manifest that a majority in the House are determined to have it. I would say, also, that, putting it on the low grounds of party judgment, if on no others, it is inadvisable for those moving the amendment to press the matter. Let us take the second reading.

Motion for adjournment of the debate negatived.

Mr. Seddon's amendment negatived.

Bill read a second time.

The House adjourned at half-past twelve o'clock a.m.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

Tuesday, 6th December, 1887.

First Readings—Third Reading—Governor's Salary and Allowances Bill—Municipal Corporations Bill.

The Hon. the SPEAKER took the chair at half-past two o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Native Land Administration Act Repeal Bill, Native Land Court Bill, Maori Real Estate

Management Bill, Ministers' Salaries and Allowances Bill, Parliamentary Honorarium and Privileges Bill.

THIRD READING.

Oamaru Harbour Board Loan Bill.

GOVERNOR'S SALARY AND ALLOWANCES BILL.

On the question, That this Bill be read a first time,

The Hon. Mr. BUCKLEY said,—Before you put that question, Sir, I think I should be wanting in my duty to the Council if I were not to call attention to what appears to me to be an omission in reference to this Bill, although, probably, I may be out of order in referring to Bills which have just come from the other branch of the Legislature. It will be within the recollection of this Council that, on a former occasion, Bills of this character which came from another branch of the Legislature were laid aside because certain provisions of the law had not been complied with. We had the authority, on that occasion, of a gentleman who is probably inferior to no other member of the legal profession in the colony, whose views on a former occasion I will take the opportunity of explaining to the Council. It was on the occasion of the third reading of the Government Loans to Local Bodies Bill. Then the Hon. Sir Frederick Whitaker, to whom I refer, pointed out that the provisions of the Constitution Act had not been complied with, and moved that the Bill be laid aside. You, Sir, held that it was a motion which ought not to have been put by you, and you laid the Bill aside. Honourable members will perhaps pardon me for referring to the very strong language used by my honourable and learned friend on the third reading of that Bill. It had gone through the Council, almost; it had gone through its second reading, and had undergone a severe test in Committee. On the third reading of the Bill my honourable friend said, as reported in Hansard of 1886,—

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—I must refer the honourable member to Standing Order 161, which is very clear on this point:—

“At the first and second reading of such Bill, the title only shall be read by the Clerk. The questions, ‘That this Bill be now read the first time,’ and ‘That this Bill be printed,’ are to be decided without amendment or debate.”

The Hon. Mr. BUCKLEY.—You will pardon me, Sir, but it is not for the purposes of debate that I make these remarks. Notwithstanding that Standing Order, I shall still call the attention of the Council to what appears to me to be an irregular proceeding.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—Then the honourable member is speaking to a point of order.

The Hon. Mr. BUCKLEY.—I am speaking to a point of order.

An Hon. MEMBER.—Then, why did you not say so?

The Hon. Mr. BUCKLEY.—Any one might have noticed, from the nature of my remarks, that I was referring to what is simply a point of order. I think it is the duty of every member of this Council to point out what he considers an irregularity, and an infringement of the Constitution Act, such as that to which I wish to call attention. The Bill I refer to came up by message from the other branch of the Legislature; and I was about to point out that the language used on that occasion will fully express what was then done.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—Was it on the first reading or on the third reading?

The Hon. Mr. BUCKLEY.—It was on the third reading. But it does not make a bit of difference whether it was on the first or the second or the third reading. The honourable gentleman then said,—

“There is another portion of the subject which appears to me also of very considerable moment, and that is, that this Bill has come down from the House of Representatives, but I cannot find anything on record which shows that these appropriations have been recommended by the Governor. Now, our Constitution Act is very explicit on that subject. It is prohibitory on the Legislative Council or the House of Representatives to pass any Bill where there is an appropriation of money which has not been recommended in the first instance by the Governor.”

Then, he refers to the 54th clause of the Constitution Act, to which I will merely call attention. My honourable friend also referred to a case which occurred in Adelaide, pointing out the section of the Constitution Act of South Australia. The Speaker of the Legislative Council there ruled that it was a motion that could not be put. On that occasion the Hon. the Speaker said,—

“I am of opinion, under the 40th clause of the Constitution Act, that this Council cannot proceed with this Bill, as it does not come with a certificate to the effect that it has been recommended to the House of Assembly by His Excellency the Governor.”

I apprehend that we have no such certificate in this case. I do not know what took place in another branch of the Legislature, but my honourable friend referred to the fact that it was essentially necessary that the Bill should be laid aside; and the Hon. the Speaker said, “Perhaps the best procedure is that I should lay the Bill aside. I may say that really I could not myself put the question. I lay the Bill aside.” I would point out to you, Sir, and the Council that this is exactly a similar case—it is, in fact, a much stronger case than that to which I have referred in connection with the Government Loans to Local Bodies Bill; and I ask your ruling, Sir, as to whether the Bill should go further.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—The case has been put very clearly. The ordinary rule is, that in the case of the imposition of taxation the Crown has to recommend. But these careful guards are dispensed with where the question of the Bill concerns not the imposition of fresh taxation, but the alleviation of taxation which exists. In such cases—that is, where there is to be a relief to the country—these precautionary measures are dispensed with. On page 633 of the last edition of May's Parliamentary Practice it is said, "It must always be borne in mind that the House can entertain any motion for diminishing a tax or charge upon the people, and Bills are frequently brought in for that purpose without the formality of a Committee;" and, as I think this Bill is to relieve the burdens of the people, it can be proceeded with.

Bill read a first time.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS BILL.

ADJOURNED DEBATE.

The Hon. Mr. BUCKLEY said he moved the adjournment of the second reading of this Bill because he was under the impression that the Bill had not been sufficiently considered by those bodies which it purported to affect. Probably honourable members would pardon him if he went back a little to the history of Municipal Corporations. So far as he was able to remember, the first Municipal Corporations Act was passed in 1867. Prior to that, in 1865, there had been an Act passed in the Provincial Council of Otago affecting one of the very questions referred to in this Bill. He recollected the Act of 1867, because he had the privilege, he believed, of being the first person ever elected under that Act; and one point which made the matter so fresh on his memory was this: that one of the principal questions which were then agitating the Borough of Wellington was that the Mayor should be elected by the people, and not in the manner in which he was then elected. Under the Act of 1867 the Mayor was elected by the Council: in 1875 the Act was altered, and the burgesses had the right to elect their Mayor in the same manner as the Provincial Ordinances of Otago provided. That remained the law until 1876, when the past Acts were repealed, and the provision with reference to the election of Mayors of boroughs was left in the same manner as had been provided in the Provincial Ordinances of Otago in 1865. The whole of the Acts affecting municipalities were consolidated in 1886, and that Act repealed, he thought, fifteen Acts of the General Assembly, and about forty ordinances; and there, again, it was decided that the Mayor should be elected by the burgesses. That being the state of the law since 1876, he was at a loss to understand why the honourable gentleman who introduced this Bill should have given no explanation of the change, except that a Municipal Conference recently held in Wellington recommended that a change of the nature of that proposed in this Bill should take place. He had not heard from persons interested in the matter that such a change was desirable; in fact, he believed that the very opposite was the general opinion, and that the people preferred to have the election of the Mayor in their own hands, rather than that the election should be made by the members of the Councils. These Councils would probably, in time, see that every single member of the Council was elected in turn Mayor of the city. He thought it was a pity that, at this time in the history of the colony, when everything was done by the voice of the people, Parliament should deprive the people of the privileges which they enjoyed, and relegate to the Councils the duty which was cast upon the citizens as a whole. There were some very serious objections to this Bill which he proposed to refer to. If honourable members would look at subsection (11) of clause 2 they would find a matter which he thought his honourable friend had not explained, and which required some explanation before Parliament gave it the force of law. It was this: "The Council may, in anticipation of the ordinary revenue of the general account, from time to time borrow money from the bank by way of overdraft." As a rule, the overdraft was in the bank; but it was now proposed that, when a Municipal Corporation was unable to pay its overdraft, it might borrow money to pay that overdraft. That was the simplest way of keeping accounts he had ever heard of. It was exactly in the same position as a man who owed another man money and borrowed the money from the lender in order to pay the money that was due. There must be something in that which required explanation. As long as he (Mr. Buckley) remembered, the Council had invariably set its face against retrospective legislation. If honourable gentlemen would look at the 3rd section of the Bill they would find a piece of retrospective legislation, as he thought nobody would deny:—

"Every Borough Council shall have, and shall be deemed to have had, from the date of the commencement of the said Act, authority to apply any part of the borough funds for the under-mentioned purposes, that is to say,—"

"(1.) In payment to the Clerk of each Licensing Committee within the borough of such sum as the Council shall from time to time think fit; and in defraying the necessary law expenses incurred by any such Licensing Committee in connection with the administration of 'The Licensing Act, 1881;' or

"(2.) In payment of the cost of preparing and passing through Parliament any Bill affecting the interests or property of the borough, or Corporation, or Council, or burgesses, or inhabitants thereof."

Subsection (3) was one which his honourable friend had given no explanation of, and it was a provision which he was quite sure the Council would not in any seriousness allow to become law. The subsection was as follows:—

"(3.) In payment of the actual travelling and hotel expenses of the Mayor or any Councillors who may be deputed by the Council to attend at the seat of Government on any Minister of the Crown or on Parliament on any business affecting the interests of the borough."

He thought if that provision were allowed to remain there would be a very large influx of population to Wellington from time to time. Subsection (4) gave power to Councils to give aid to public libraries, et cetera. He would now call the attention of the Council to the 4th clause. Here, again, he must say, the Hon. Mr. Stevens had given the Council no explanation of the clause. The honourable gentleman told the Council that, with the exception of the first provision to which he referred, the Bill was merely a machinery Bill, or that most of the clauses were machinery clauses, and required no explanation. Subsection (1) of clause 4 referred to the retiring-allowances to be paid to any officers of the Corporation, and stated that those allowances were to date from the commencement of "the said Act"—namely, 1886. The ratepayers were to be burdened with retiring-allowances to be given to old officers of the Corporation. He was not one of those to prevent an old officer getting any retiring-allowance which he was entitled to; but the council had objected to giving pensions in future, and it seemed strange that in the Municipal Corporations Bill they should introduce any such legislation as this. He would call the attention of the Council to clause 6: not that he would object to validating the debenture referred to, but he thought it was a wrong place in which to put such a provision. He thought it should be inserted in some Bill having reference to the Borough of Oamaru. Probably that was a Committee amendment, which might be easily arranged for. There was another piece of special legislation with regard to private streets, and he wished particularly to call the attention of the Council to what appeared to him to be a local Bill, and that was clause 8, with reference to streets on Scinde Island, Napier. The rest of the Bill appeared very desirable to be enacted; but he thought the Council would do very wisely, having had the Bill before them, seeing the late period of the session, and seeing that there was hardly a possibility of an election of a Mayor taking place before next session, if they refused to allow this Bill to go any further. He did not wish to oppose anything that was good in the Bill, but he thought his honourable friend would consult the best interests of the boroughs if he took that course. He would only say further that he would vote against the Bill, but he would not make any motion in regard to it.

The Hon. Dr. POLLEN said he entirely agreed with the views expressed by several honourable members in the Council as to the inexpediency of the change proposed to be made in the manner of electing Mayors of boroughs; and he was confirmed in that view by his recollection of what occurred before the last change was effected. His honourable friend opposite had told the Council that the Act of 1867 provided that the Mayor should be chosen by the Municipal Councils. Between that time and 1875 it was observed that individual Municipal Councils were constantly endeavouring, by Bills introduced in the House of Representatives, to effect a change in that direction. None of the municipalities were more persistent in that object than Christchurch. In 1875 a Bill was introduced by the Hon. Mr. E. Richardson, who was a member of the Ministry of which he (Dr. Pollen) was also a member, providing that the proposed change should be made with respect to the Borough of Christchurch. In view of the very wide expression of opinion which was known to have been made with respect to the advisability of the change, it was determined by the Government that the operation of the law should be made general; and in 1875 he (Dr. Pollen), being then a member of the Ministry, introduced a general Bill in the Council. He did not know what was the status of the Convention which had recently been sitting in Wellington representing the municipalities of the colony. He did not know whether they were delegates of the municipal bodies themselves, or whether they appeared as representatives of the ratepayers of the cities. He was quite sure, looking at past experience, that the views of the Councils themselves on the particular point under consideration differed from the views of the ratepayers generally. In the absence of any more complete information than the Council had on the subject, it would not be prudent to make such a change now as they were invited to make. There were concessions to what he called democratic principles which were not to be retraced; this was the power of electing executive officers, which, whether it was good or bad in principle, would not be readily yielded up by those who had been enabled to exercise it. He was not sure that it would be desirable, as a matter of administration, that this should be altered at present. He was not sure that it was not desirable that in the different Municipal Councils not a section of the ratepayers but the whole of them should be represented—that not purely local interests but the interests of the municipality as a whole should have a voice in the determination of questions affecting the municipality as a whole. He looked on an elected Mayor as representing the whole of the ratepayers and the general interests of the city; that, in fact, he served the purpose of what one might call a "second Chamber." It was a check upon hasty legislation; it was to be hoped that it was also a check upon the growth of jobbery and corruption, which was not an uncommon excrescence upon local bodies of that kind. He hoped, therefore, if the Bill was allowed to go into Committee, that that portion of it, at least, would not be allowed to become law. As for the rest of the Bill, he thought it desirable that some of the changes should be made; and he thought that some of the objections to the changes proposed were Committee objections that could very well be disposed of.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE agreed with the Hon. Mr. Buckley and the Hon. Dr. Pollen that it was scarcely expedient during the present session to proceed with such an important alteration as was proposed in the first part of the Bill. He thought that if honourable members took the matter up seriously they would find that it would lead to great discussions in both Houses of Parliament, and perhaps the fate of the Bill itself would be jeopardised. There were doubtless some provisions in the measure which it was desirable should be passed, but he doubted the desirability of the change proposed to be made in the mode of election of Mayors. He remembered the circumstances preceding the establishment of the last change. He noticed that at that time there was a good deal of dissatisfaction in the working of the Corporations, and that there were such things as Corporation rings known. Persons were well aware that unless they were acting with a certain municipal ring it was impossible to get anything they desired advanced; while if they were acting in concert with that ring everything was made smooth for them. The discontent with that state of things was very wide indeed, and it was expressed in the Legislative Council by the Hon. Mr. Holmes; and, unless his memory misled him, it was at that honourable gentleman's suggestion that the Bill was made general in its operation, so as to apply to all the municipalities in the colony. The result of that change was to put down, at any rate, these municipal rings. They had heard no more of these rings since that change was established. He did not know that there had not been some counterbalancing disadvantages. He was rather inclined to think the fact had been that persons, recognising that the highest civil honour was no longer in the gift of the Corporation, did not offer themselves for election as Municipal Councillors, and therefore one effect was to lower the status of Municipal Councils. But, on the whole, the two bodies had, as had been indicated by the Hon. Dr. Pollen, acted more or less as a check on each other—the Corporation watched the Mayor and the Mayor watched the Corporation; and it was almost impossible, he thought, for anything like the system which had prevailed prior to the change to be again established. One thing was clear, that the matter had been brought forward rather suddenly; and no evil could possibly arise from its being held over for public consideration until next session of Parliament. He was inclined to think that there was a public feeling in favour of the alteration, otherwise it could scarcely have been recommended by the last Municipal Conference. The change was supported by Mayors who were themselves elected by the burgesses. If the change had not been approved of by the burgesses generally, he thought that the Mayors who had generally supported the alteration now proposed would scarcely be found advocating the change. With regard to the other matters in the Bill, there were several deserving of a good deal of consideration. However, they were all matters of detail, and he would reserve his views in regard to them until the Bill was in Committee. He thought, however, it was very desirable, as regarded the first portion of the Bill, that the honourable gentleman should not press that on. He thought it was the general desire of the Council that it should not be proceeded with this session. He would keep his own action free in the matter, for he was very doubtful what course it would be best to adopt under the circumstances, and he would like further time to mature his views.

Hon. Mr. Buckley

The Hon. Mr. MANTELL thought that the honourable gentlemen who had spoken had not adverted sufficiently to the highly-retrospective proposals contained in clauses 3, 4, 5, 6, and in subsection (2) of clause 7. Subsection (3) proposed to condone a variety of irregularities, perhaps wisely, but members of the Council had no time to ascertain whether wisely or not; and therefore he thought they ought not to entertain the proposal. Clause 4 was another section which proposed that its provisions should be deemed to have been in force since the commencement of "the said Act," which was the previous Act. Subsection (5) authorised the payment of unauthorised expenses in respect to the Jubilee expenditure. Subsection (6) was intended to whitewash the Borough of Oamaru, apparently, to a certain extent; and then, again, this objectionable phrase occurred: "It is now hereby declared that the above-dated debenture shall be deemed to be and to have been valid from the date of the issue thereof." That phrase constantly occurred throughout these clauses. Section 7 provided something with regard to streets which he really had not had time to look into. It provided that the streets referred to therein should be deemed to have been lawfully made. Section 8, as had been already stated, was really a local Bill, with regard to which the Council ought to have more particular information. The attention of the people affected by this clause ought to be called to it by its appearing in the form of a local Bill, with the necessary notices. He thought if the Bill were taken from clause 9—he was speaking on hurriedly glancing through it—it might be of such a nature that it might be well to proceed with it; as for the other clauses, they were all more or less objectionable. As to the proposed alteration in the mode of election of Mayors, he distinctly remembered the state of affairs which the change was intended to put an end to. He had hoped it was put an end to. There might be those who wished to recur to that state of affairs, and it was in their interests Parliament was asked to make the alteration; but in the interests of the public and the ratepayers the Council ought to keep the law as it stood.

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS said the Hon. Mr. Buckley was mistaken in supposing that he had described the greater portion of this Bill as mere machinery. That portion of the Bill to which he referred as mere machinery related to the audit clauses. He was quite aware that there would be more or less difference of opinion in regard to the method of electing the Mayors of boroughs. The remarks which had been made by his honourable friend Dr. Pollen in regard to the Conference, and his doubting the status of those who attended the Conference, were, he thought, not to be accepted. He believed that the views expressed were growing views in the country. The present system was not adopted in the county system. It was peculiar altogether to the election of Mayors of boroughs. He believed that, if the time was not altogether ripe for the acceptance of the proposed change, it would not be very long before it met with general acceptance. Without spending too much time in arguing the question, he would simply say that he looked upon many elections as a very great evil. The country was, so to speak, smothered in elections. Here was one which, he thought, was no protection whatever to the public, as was supposed in some quarters, which entailed considerable expense, which disturbed the public mind, and took people away from their employment. He was not aware whether it was generally known that in these elections they failed to comply with the principles which regulated the election of members of the House of Representatives. In elections of members of the House of Representatives there were certain safeguards which were utterly uncomplished with in the election of Mayors. The mayoral elections were governed by the Regulation of Local Elections Act, which was certainly far less stringent than the system of elections that prevailed for the representative Chamber of Parliament. Of course he was quite aware that that might be cured, if it were thought desirable, by applying similar safeguards to the municipal elections. He did not propose to take any action in the way of moving that the clause be struck out when the Bill was in Committee. He would far rather leave the matter for the Council to decide for itself. There were some criticisms on other clauses of the Bill. The Hon. Mr. Buckley had attacked clause 3, and he had pointed out, as other honourable members also had pointed out, that it authorised certain payments which were not allowed by the Auditor. The matter was very trifling, and he would have explained it in moving the second reading of the Bill, but did not wish to take up the time of the Council in doing so. In reference to subsection (1) of clause 3, although it was necessary to appoint a Returning Officer to conduct the proceedings in connection with the election of a Licensing Committee, and the whole of the revenue went to the Corporations, it was not in the power of the Auditor to allow any fee to be paid; and it must be clear to every one that such a state of things was not fair, or satisfactory in any way. These payments had been made, and it was desirable to obtain for the past year the power to authorise the payments, and to authorise them for the future. He could hardly conceive it possible that any objection could be offered to such a reasonable provision as that those who received the whole of the revenue should be asked to pay the necessary expenses in connection with the administration of the Licensing Act. Then, subsection (2) of clause 3 was not objected to; so that he need not refer to it. In regard to subsection (3) of this clause, which provided for the payment of the travelling and hotel expenses of Mayors and Councillors attending in Wellington, while Parliament was sitting, on business affecting the interests of their boroughs, he thought the idea that there would be a crowd of Councillors in Wellington, and that the expenses would be great, was imaginary. He had been in Wellington during many sessions, but had never seen the immense crowds which it was supposed would invade the city on such an occasion. At the same time it was a reasonable thing that Councillors whose services might be of value in the preparation or conduct of any Bill before Parliament should be free of any expense, and they should be reimbursed. The same remarks would apply to the objections which had been raised to clause 4, which provided for retiring-allowances and the relief of sufferers by accidents. It would be a harsh thing to refuse to grant such retiring-allowances, or a compassionate allowance to the widow or family of any officer who died while in the service of a Corporation. These allowances would be a recognition of their services, and would possibly preserve their families from penury. He hoped the Council would not take any harsh view, but would agree to this provision. With regard to the 6th clause, which validated the Oamaru Corporation debenture for £5,000, it had been said they were whitewashing the Oamaru Corporation; but he would point out that the clause was simply to cure a technical defect. With respect to clause 8, which contained special provisions as to streets on Scinde Island, in Napier, he would explain the circumstances of that in Committee, when he had no doubt the Council would be satisfied that it was a reasonable clause. These were mainly all the objections which had been raised to the Bill. He trusted the Hon. Mr. Buckley would not continue in his opinion that this Bill should be abandoned this session. It contained powers in regard to electric lighting which, he ventured to think, would be a very great boon to the colony, and of great assistance to boroughs. He might say that the provisions in reference to audit and the keeping of accounts were indispensable if the audit was to be satisfactory, and this would only be in accordance with the often-expressed views of honourable gentlemen at other times. He hoped honourable gentlemen would allow him to take this Bill into Committee, and they would see what honourable members had to say about the clauses on their merits.

Hon. Mr. Stevens

Bill read a second time.

The Council adjourned at ten minutes to four o'clock p.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Tuesday, 6th December, 1887.

Mr. BROWN—Military Training-schools—Borough Council Endowments—Chinese—Hokitika Harbour-works—Market Railway-tickets—Adjourning—Order of Business—Representation Bill.

MR. SPEAKER took the chair at half-past two o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MR. BROWN.

MR. PYKE—in moving, That leave of absence be granted to Mr. Brown for the remainder of the session, on urgent private business—said that Mr. Brown had been prevented from coming out in consequence of the illness of his mother, and would have been here by the last steamer but for that circumstance.

Major ATKINSON.—Sir, I have no wish directly to oppose this motion, but it does seem to me that the House should have had some fuller information given by the honourable gentleman asking for this leave. It is a very extraordinary thing for a member to absent himself for a whole session from his duties in this House. I doubt, myself, whether it is not the duty of the House, under these circumstances, to leave it to the constituency to determine whether they desire to have a member who absents himself for that period, for some private business—although, in this case, of a semi-private nature, but still private business; whether we are justified in taking away the right of constituencies, which is, as given by the Standing Orders, that, if a member neglects his duties for the whole session, the member shall forfeit his seat.

An Hon. MEMBER.—Two sessions.

Major ATKINSON.—No, one session.

An Hon. MEMBER.—He was not here last session either.

Major ATKINSON.—He was not here last session either: but that does not make any difference. I say it is a matter for consideration whether we are justified in depriving the constituency of their right to reconsider their decision. I am not prepared to advise the House under all the circumstances, but I think we should not allow such a matter to pass by in silence without, at any rate, having it on record that the matter had been brought under the notice of the House.

Sir J. VOGEL.—I rise to a point of order. I wish to raise the question as to whether it is competent to put this question at all. Earlier in the session, you may recollect, Sir, I referred the matter to you, and you told me that in your opinion it was not competent to give a member leave of absence until he had been sworn in and had taken his seat. It is a very important question, and one which we should not be hurriedly rushed to a conclusion about. I may point out that instances of difficulty might occur if we passed a resolution of this kind, which would be contrary to previous practice elsewhere. The most recent case in the Imperial Parliament is that of Mr. Bradlaugh, who was not allowed during the whole Parliament to take his seat or be sworn in; yet it was never considered necessary to ask for leave of absence for him. Similarly, the late Baron Rothschild was not allowed, for two Parliaments, to take his seat; and there have been other cases of the same kind. It appears to me that until a member has been sworn in and has taken his seat it is not right to give him leave of absence, for he has not come before us as a member. That was your opinion, Sir, earlier in the session, and had it been otherwise I should have moved for leave of absence, if it had been necessary, for Mr. Brown, but you informed me that it was not necessary to ask for leave. I submit that, on that account, the motion should not be put.

Mr. SPEAKER.—My impression at first was that Mr. Brown was not a member until he had been sworn in; but Mr. Brown wrote to me a few weeks ago, and I have looked at the matter more closely since, and it appears to me that the Constitution Act does really recognise any one in Mr. Brown's position as a member, because this is the language used in the Constitution Act in reference to swearing in a member: "No member of the said Legislative Council or House of Representatives shall be permitted to sit or vote therein until he shall have taken and subscribed the oath." From this I infer that Mr. Brown is entitled to all the privileges of a member except those of sitting and voting. I say, then, that on looking more closely into the law it appears to me that it does recognise any one declared duly elected as a member, even though he has not taken the oath; and, bearing that in mind, and knowing the honourable gentleman had been declared duly elected, I thought, when I was consulted yesterday by the honourable member for the Dunstan on the subject, that he would be in order in making this motion for granting leave of absence, especially as I feel sure Mr. Brown's non-attendance here during the session will inevitably forfeit his seat unless the House grants him leave of absence. As regards the case of Baron Rothschild, who was for some ten years a member of the House of Commons without taking the oaths, he was so far recognised as a member that he was appointed a member of a Committee for drawing up reasons for disagreeing with the Lords' amendments to the Oaths Bill, and was one of the Managers at a Conference on the subject. I might be allowed to read a few lines from Mr. Brown's letter to me, showing that he was very earnestly desirous of being here. Writing on the 7th October, he says,—

"I had arranged to leave here by the last Frisco mail; my passage was taken out and my luggage on board the steamer at Liverpool, when I received word that my mother was seriously ill. She is eighty-seven years old, and, as I had not seen her for thirty-six years until I arrived here in April last, and may never see her again, I thought it my duty to remain till next Frisco mail. . . . As you are aware, I have been re-elected for Tuapeka, and I am very anxious to be present to take my seat before the session is over. If I cannot arrive in time my position, I hope, will in nowise be affected. My election received my approval; and I would be in Wellington before the arrival of this letter except for the reasons stated."

Sir J. VOGEL.—I must say, with all respect and deference to you, Sir, that the clause you have read does not, in my opinion, so alter the great principle which is at stake that we should hurriedly arrive at a conclusion; and I should like, Sir, if you have no objection, to move the adjournment of the debate, so that you might give the matter further consideration. The word "member" is used somewhat loosely in that clause. It is clear that under it a member has no right to exercise his functions until he has been sworn in and has taken his seat. If we assume the power of giving or refusing leave of absence before a member has been sworn in, we virtually treat him as a member, and we may stop ourselves in the future, in a possible contingency that might arise, from preventing a member taking his seat, even though he had not been sworn in. It appears to me that the use of the word "member" is perhaps rather loose. It might be "the member designate," or "the member elected by a constituency;" but until he has taken the oath and his seat he is not subject to the rules as to being granted or refused leave of absence. If we have the right to give or refuse leave to a member who has not been sworn in and taken his seat, we should be in a very false position if an occasion arose for taking exception to a member being sworn in, because we should be put in this difficulty: that, while we refused to allow him to be sworn in and to take his seat as a member, he would be obliged to ask for leave as though he were a member: we might therefore refuse to let him take the oath and his seat, and yet refuse him leave of absence if it were asked for. That is a very important question, in view of possible contingencies which may arise in the future. It may be that exception might be taken to allowing a gentleman who was an atheist to be sworn and take his seat, and thus we should be assuming the right both of refusing to let him take his seat and of refusing him leave to be absent from it—that is, if we declare now that we have the right to give or refuse leave to a gentleman elected who has not taken the oath and his seat. My recollection does not carry me back to all the phases of the Bradlaugh case, but I know the argument was—and I think it was sustained by the law-courts—that Mr. Bradlaugh was not a member until he had been sworn in; and I do not consider Mr. Brown is a member until he has taken the oath and his seat. If, Sir, you would not object, I should be glad if you would take time to further consider the matter.

Mr. SPEAKER.—If the House has any doubt on the subject, it might be better, perhaps, to take the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown on the point.

Sir J. VOGEL.—Sir, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. PYKE.—Any one elected to the House is a member. The other day, Sir, you, I believe, were elected Speaker before you had been sworn in.

Mr. SPEAKER.—No; I was sworn in before my election. In England the Speaker is elected before the oaths are administered; but here the oath is first administered, and then the Speaker is elected.

Mr. PYKE.—I was not present on that occasion, but I was so informed. The wording of the Constitution Act is very clear and distinct: "No member of the House of Representatives shall be allowed to take his seat until he has taken the oath of allegiance." There can be no two interpretations of that. I do not think any hair-splitting lawyer would hold that it can mean anything but that a man is a member from his election.

Sir J. Vogel

The assembling of the House is another thing, and his taking the oath of allegiance is simply a preliminary to his taking part in the proceedings. It does not affect his position as a member. I am not sufficiently cognisant now of the Bradlaugh case; but there was some trouble about the oath there, and consequently he could not sit or vote. But he was, nevertheless, a member, and no other member was elected in his place. If he had not been a member there would have been a vacancy. With regard to the present matter, I certainly did not apprehend that any difficulty would arise, and I did not think it was incumbent on me to make a long speech in moving the motion, and consequently the reproach of the Premier was undeserved. These motions are usually passed sub silentio: but, since this one has been challenged, I may say this: The people of Tuapeka knew perfectly well when electing him that Mr. Brown possibly might not return in time to take his seat here this session; and they knew, also, that, although his business in England was of a semi-private nature, yet it was certainly of a character tending to largely enhance the prosperity of the district. A great compliment was paid to Mr. Brown in his being elected when he was actually out of the country. Though he had many enemies opposing him they were not able to prevent his election again as a representative in this House. I would remind the House, also, that, next to yourself, Sir, Mr. Brown is the oldest continuous member of the House; and I do think the House would not be doing Mr. Brown justice or itself honour if it refused to grant the leave required by the honourable gentleman, seeing that it is absolutely and positively an act of filial duty which has prevented him from attending the House this session.

Sir J. VOGEL.—I need not say that I should be strongly averse from taking any action that might be to the prejudice of Mr. Brown. I am of opinion that it would not make the slightest difference to him if leave were not asked for, or I should have taken action before to obtain leave for him.

Mr. PYKE.—It will make a great deal of difference, for, if he is not granted leave, his seat will be vacant. A member of the Council absent two years without leave, or a member of the House absent one year without leave, loses his seat. That would put the honourable gentleman and the country to the expense of a second election. I think no objection should be made to granting leave, and I trust the opposition will now be withdrawn, and that there will be no more discussion on the matter.

Sir J. VOGEL.—If the honourable gentleman is right, that the seat would be vacated if leave were not granted, I ask leave to withdraw my motion for adjournment.

Motion for adjournment, by leave, withdrawn.

Sir G. GREY.—I wish to know, if honourable gentlemen are not members until they have been sworn in, as it is argued, under what authority do they draw their travelling-expenses for coming here, before they have been sworn in?

Major ATKINSON.—Speaking to the point of order, I have no doubt at all myself that Mr. Brown is a member under the Constitution Act. That is perfectly clear, to my mind. There can be no doubt the matter is one of considerable importance, and perhaps it would be advisable, if you, Sir, have any doubt, to adjourn the subject before coming to a decision. To my mind, it is quite clear that Mr. Brown is a member, though he has not taken the oath; and, so far as I am concerned, after hearing his letter, I shall not oppose the motion any longer.

Motion agreed to.

MILITARY TRAINING-SCHOOLS.

On the motion of Mr. WARD, it was ordered, That there be laid on the table a return showing the annual cost of the Military Training-school at Wellington; the number of officers in Wellington who have availed themselves of its use; and also the number of officers outside of Wellington who have undergone a course of training at it.

BOROUGH COUNCIL ENDOWMENTS.

On the motion of Mr. GUINNESS, it was ordered, That there be laid on the table a return showing the names of all Borough Councils to which land endowments have been granted; such return to show the area of land granted to each Borough Council, and whether granted by the General Government or Provincial Government, and when, and the present rental value of each reserve.

CHINESE.

On the motion of Mr. SEDDON, it was ordered, That a return be laid before this House showing—(1) The number of Chinese that have arrived in the colony from the 31st March, 1886, up to the 30th November, 1887, and who have paid the poll-tax; (2) the number of Chinese that have arrived in the colony during the above period and who have claimed exemption from paying the poll-tax on account of their being the holders of exemption and naturalisation certificates; (3) the total number of exemption certificates issued to Chinese in the colony under "The Chinese Immigrants Act, 1881;" (4) the total number of Chinese in the colony to whom naturalisation certificates have been issued; (5) the number of Chinese returned as being in the colony, and particularly in the City of Wellington, when the last census was taken.

HOKITIKA HARBOUR-WORKS.

On the motion of Mr. GRIMMOND, it was ordered, That there be laid before this House a return showing—(1) The amount actually required to complete the Hokitika harbour-works to a point at which Sir John Coode estimated the depth of water on the bar would reach 16ft. at high water; (2) the depth of water on the Hokitika bar for the last four years, specifying the number of days in each year on which the depth of water has been under 7ft., under 10ft., and over 12ft. respectively; (3) the tonnage of goods actually landed on the Hokitika wharf each year for the past four years.

MARKET RAILWAY-TICKETS.

On the motion of Mr. O'CALLAGHAN, it was ordered, That there be laid on the table a return of the number of Wednesday market railway-tickets which have been issued on the Hurunui-Bluff section since the inauguration of the system, showing the increase that has taken place by comparison with the number issued at the same stations during a similar period previous to the system being adopted.

ADJOURNMENT.

Major ATKINSON.—I propose to ask the House to excuse Ministers from answering questions to-day. There is a long string of them, and to answer them would occupy pretty well the whole of the afternoon. I also wish to propose, That the House, at its rising, do adjourn until eleven o'clock to-morrow morning, for the purpose of enabling the Government to answer questions only, and that Committees to have leave to sit while the House is sitting for that purpose. I should be glad if the House would prefer to have the questions answered in writing instead of their being answered to-morrow; but the House might have thought that it was making an innovation of too startling a character to do that at once. So I will move the motion that I have spoken of, and, if there is a general expression of opinion from the House that the questions should be answered in writing, I will withdraw the motion, and questions shall be answered to-morrow in writing.

Mr. TURNBULL.—It is my intention to move the adjournment of the House, because I consider that this is a question of great importance indeed. We must remember that to-morrow morning a great many members of the House will be engaged in Committee, and that it will be almost impossible for honourable members to be here to hear the questions answered. I do not know what the custom in other countries is in relation to this matter, but that questions should be answered in writing seems to me an extraordinary proposal, and one which I hope this House will seriously think of before it allows it. But I should have moved the adjournment of the House under any circumstances, because I have placed on the Order Paper a question of considerable importance to the whole colony. The question, which appears on the Order Paper, is as follows:—

"Whether, having in view the large amount of real and personal property held by absentees—nearly one-tenth of the whole taxable property of New Zealand—he will make such provision in the Property-tax Bill about to be submitted, or by other means, as that absentees shall be made to contribute a proportionate share of the burdens of the colony?"

This appears to me to be one of the most important questions that could be brought before the House, and I feel that I am warranted in moving the adjournment of the House in order to bring it forward this afternoon. I am aware of the great difficulty which would present itself to the Colonial Treasurer or to any other persons in this House who might attempt at the present time to meet such a difficulty as that which is raised in this question. But it is a matter which must be considered. It involves not only a question of absentecism, but other bodies, and affects loan companies and other institutions which are drawing a large amount of the wealth of this colony away from our shores and returning to us very little indeed. I am not going to draw any deductions from the facts that I am about to mention, but I simply call the attention of the House to the fact that there are 1,140 people holding one-tenth of the whole of the taxable real and personal property in the colony, or one-twentieth of the whole of the real and personal property of the colony, and that these persons are resident in England, and only contribute £37,000 a year to the whole cost of the government of the colony. As honourable members are aware, we raise £4,000,000 annually for the purpose of paying our interest and the cost of government; and the people who hold this large amount of the property in the colony pay only a hundredth part of that taxation which we have to find. That is a fact to which I wish to call the attention of the House and of the country. This is very clearly brought out by a return laid on the table of the House at my instance. And I felt aggrieved, when the return was laid on the table of the House, at a remark made by the Premier. He produced it before the House, and said, "This return cost £18;" and many of my friends said I had done a wrong thing in ordering so expensive a return, and that I should be called upon to pay for it myself. The Premier, when I complained of his making that remark, said that nothing unusual had been done—that it was customary to place the cost of a return on its face. I am aware that it was on my motion that it was ordered to be printed on all papers laid before the House; but I see that there are a good many papers presented to Parliament on which there is nothing said about their cost, and I do not know why this return should have been singled out for notice in that way. However, whatever the cost, it was very important that the information contained in that report should be laid on the table; and I shall take another step in this matter, by endeavouring to get another return showing of what the personal property possessed by these persons consists. I have shown that these absentees possess one-twentieth of the property of the colony, though they only contribute one-hundredth part of the taxation; and to me it seems most unfair to the classes resident in the community that this should be permitted to continue. To put the matter in another way. I call attention to another fact, and simply as a fact: We have raised £34,000,000 by way of loans, which have been expended largely in improving the value of real property, and have helped very materially to enrich those who possess this personal property. Yet the whole of the taxation paid by these people, who own so large a share of the real and personal property, only equals the interest on three-quarters of a million of money, the residents in the colony being left to pay the interest on all the other money borrowed. I think honourable gentlemen will find that my figures are correct. Every million we borrow costs us £50,000.

Mr. Turnbull

An Hon. MEMBER.—No; £40,000.

Mr. TURNBULL.—If you look at the earlier loans you will find that they cost £50,000. However, we will say that they pay interest on one million, and that the people resident in the colony bear the burden of the remainder of the indebtedness. My object is not to make any deductions, but simply to place these facts—these extraordinary facts—before the House and the country. I am quite aware of the great difficulty which will beset the Colonial Treasurer or any other person who attempts to grapple with this question. It is a question very difficult to be solved satisfactorily; but we have here some plain figures which will help us to come to a fair conclusion on the matter. There is also another important fact, which I shall endeavour to get at by another return—that is, a return showing the character of the personal property which these persons hold. I believe it will be found that much of that personal property consists of sheep. I shall endeavour to find out that, if I have to pay for the return myself. If what I believe is correct, then we know that the whole of the wealth arising from that personal property, all the wool, all the mutton, goes straight away from the colony—and there is no return at all in the shape of merchandise or interchangeable commodities; nothing that benefits the merchant, the storekeeper, or the labourer. The wealth that should be accumulating in the colony, and by means of which alone we can hope to lift ourselves out of our difficulties, is being drawn away from us; and, with the exception of what it pays through the property-tax, it contributes nothing to the taxation of the country. It contributes nothing to the cost of defence, which is pre-eminently a charge which should be borne by property. Then, again, this withdrawal of wealth means that to that extent there remain unused the railways and the other works that we have constructed. Not only is it that those who are absent do not use them, but they draw away wealth which if left here would employ our railways. We are just now about to enter upon a severe course of retrenchment. Of course it is our duty to retrench wherever we can; but I hold that it is our duty also, and a most important duty at this time, to see that every portion of the community pays its fair share of the expenses of governing the country, before proceeding to the extreme measures in the way of retrenchment which we are now proceeding to. There is one question mixed up with this which I do not wish to mention by any means in an offensive manner, but which ought to be mentioned. I myself have great doubt whether the Government that is now on those benches will care to or be able to deal with this question. It is a Government who, though they may not be aware of it, are placed on those benches by the large monetary institutions of the country and other interests of that kind, whose wishes they must carry out. It may be that the Government are not doing this intentionally, but they will find that the moment that they deviate from those interests some others will be called upon to take their places. One important member of the Ministry is more largely interested in these absentee questions than perhaps any other man in the colony. I allude to the honourable gentleman who comes from Canterbury. Now, Canterbury is at the present time in a most deplorable condition. Canterbury has to find one million to pay the interest on its private debt. I believe that the private debt will be found, when the next returns of the Land Transfer Department are laid on the table, to be £12,000,000 sterling. We cannot expect a Ministry constituted as this one is at present to labour strenuously to place upon the property of absentees the burdens that should be placed upon them. I have said so, because I hold that the chief representative of these absentee proprietors is a member of the present Cabinet.

Hon. MEMBERS.—Name.

Mr. TURNBULL.—I refer to the Hon. Mr. Stevens, of the Legislative Council. I say that he is the representative of the largest absentee proprietors, so that I can scarcely hope that a gentleman occupying such a position as he does will allow such a measure as I have indicated to be brought forward. The condition of the colony is getting most deplorable. If you look at the large amount of property held by absentee proprietors, if you look at the loan companies, holding property to the value of four millions, and if you look at private property mortgaged to the extent of nearly sixty millions, you will see the difficulties of the country. In fact, so far as the people of this country are concerned, the country is leased from absentee proprietors in the shape of land companies, mortgagees, loan companies, and banks;—in fact, the condition of many of the people of this country is worse than that of those who occupy the land in Egypt. The fellahs who occupy the soil in Egypt are in a preferable condition to many of the people of this country. I say that the people here are mortgaged up to their eyes; their life is one continuous struggle, and there is no hope for them so long as their life may be described as being—

Leased like a tenement or pelted farm.

As I have said, when the Property-tax Bill comes before us, if the Colonial Treasurer does not propose any motion on the subject, I shall certainly move an amendment on it; but by no amendment which you can put on the property-tax can you reach these individuals so as to get the amount they should in fairness contribute towards the burdens of this country. To do that, the property-tax would have to be 5d. in the pound. I know the question is a difficult one, and that if the Colonial Treasurer had the ability of a Leone Levi or a Mulhall he could not solve it; but it is one that will be forced upon this country and upon this House, and it must be dealt with; and until it is dealt with there is not the slightest hope of a return of prosperity to this country. We may retrench; and what does retrenchment mean? It means misery. The Colonial Treasurer has told us that he means to retrench to the extent of £57,000 a month. I say the country cannot stand it. It is not money saved from going out of the colony; but it simply means that people who are employed, whether in offices or on the public works, or wherever they may be, will be discharged to such an extent as to effect that saving. I admit the difficulties of this matter, and that if the Colonial Treasurer sets himself honestly and determinedly to accomplish it he will do so; but, unless he takes steps to make these absentees bear a fair share of the taxation of the colony, there will be no return of prosperity. These people should contribute £200,000, instead of what they are contributing—£37,000; and the consequence is that we have to retrench to the extent of £163,000. That, broadly, is how the matter stands at the present time. I shall not move the adjournment of the House, because I can speak on the question the Premier has submitted; but I should have been sorry to have lost the opportunity of bringing this subject before the House and the country as soon as possible; and I see that at the present moment there is no desire to put this paper forward. There have been papers of less importance ordered to be printed and circulated, but this paper has not made an appearance, and the sooner it does make its appearance and public attention is called to it the sooner we may hope to have the existing state of affairs improved.

Mr. O'CONNOR.—I shall move, as an amendment to the Premier's motion, That the questions on the Order Paper be replied to by the Government in writing. My reason for doing so, in the first place, is: If this adjournment is allowed, there is an understanding that honourable members shall attend to Committee-work, and it inevitably follows that, if they attend to the Committee-work, they will be absent from the meeting of the House, when, perhaps, something of importance will occur that they require to deal with; and it is also necessary that the Minister should be here for the merely formal answering of questions. Then comes this difficulty: that, if the House orders that questions may be dealt with in this way, there may not be a quorum of the House to hear the answers. I consider it is better, if the House desires to facilitate the progress of the session, which I believe is very desirable, that we should come to an understanding that the business shall be gone on with in a reasonable way; and for that reason I move the amendment, and I think I have given sufficiently strong reasons to lead the House to its adoption. In many cases it will be necessary for us, if we want to attend to the duties of this House, to neglect duties elsewhere; and I think it is a wrong thing for the House to put honourable members in such a position as that.

Sir J. VOGEL.—As an amendment is before the House, I should like to ask you, Sir, as a point of order, is it competent to alter the whole practice and constitution of the House, by providing that the House and Committees should sit at the same time?

Mr. SPEAKER.—There is nothing before us about the sitting of Committees at the same time as the House.

Sir J. VOGEL.—I want to ask you, Sir, and I trust I am not out of my privilege in asking, how far it may be the case—I do not wish to put the thing offensively, but, to take an extreme case, how far a Government, with a large majority at its back, can, without notice, alter the whole practice and system of parliamentary government, and stipulate that the House shall meet at eleven o'clock, allow questions to be answered in writing, and go on with the business after half-past twelve o'clock; in fact, alter the rule and the whole practice of Parliament, perhaps, in a more radical manner even than by a system of clôture of a severe character. It may be that it is permissible, but I had a strong impression that the privileges of debate, and the freedom of the minority, were much more strongly guarded than would be the case if it is competent to the Government to take the course of so radically and completely altering the whole course of parliamentary procedure. This seems to me to be fifty times more stringent than the clôture. That we should have before us a resolution of this kind, without notice, and such a resolution as we have heard given notice of to-day, seems to be a departure from well-known rules. If such a resolution were carried, I need scarcely point out to you that the whole procedure of Parliament is entirely changed.

Mr. SPEAKER.—It seems to me there is no proposal to change any procedure of Parliament in this proposition, beyond this: that it is proposed that the replies to questions should be given in writing instead of orally. To that extent it is an innovation, but I would not rule that it was not within the power of the House to come to that decision. I presume you could not take any objection to the motion that the House, at its rising, adjourn till to-morrow for the purpose of giving replies to the questions on the Order Paper.

Sir J. VOGEL.—The honourable gentleman accompanied it with an intimation that he should be allowed, at the same time, to call on new business after half-past twelve o'clock at night. At any rate, the House should know what is before it. First of all, as to the unwisdom of the thing. I should think the honourable gentleman at the head of the Government would need no further proof of that than that the very fact of his giving this notice has brought the honourable member for Timaru to consider the important question of taxing absentees. As a matter of opinion, it seems to me that questions are made a sort of vent to enable discussions to be very much contracted; and, in my opinion, if any impediment were put in the way of answering questions—as has frequently been done this session, though I have not remarked upon it,—if such restrictions are put upon the asking of questions, nine times out of ten those questions will become subjects of debate in the House, instead of being dealt with in the much easier manner of replying to questions. The unwisdom of the course proposed to be taken is, however, a matter for the Government; and probably the head of the Government may say that he does not want my counsel, and that he is the best judge of what course he shall take. But what I ask honourable members to consider is this: What position should we be in if we accede to the plan the honourable member now unfolds before us? We should meet at eleven o'clock to consider questions, for I do not for a moment suppose that the House would sanction so large a departure from all prescribed rule in this country, or in any other country, as to shut out from honourable members the right of asking questions. It is true the honourable member for Westport says they may ask the questions in writing; but, if an honourable member does not choose to enter into a correspondence with the Government—because that is what it means, is he to be shut out from the power of putting questions verbally? That would be such an innovation that I do not believe, whatever the power of the honourable gentleman is, he would carry a majority with him on such a proposal.

Mr. O'CONOR.—Will the honourable gentleman allow me to explain? My motion does not deal with any questions excepting those now on the Order Paper; those are what I propose to deal with.

Sir J. VOGEL.—The honourable member for the Buller is very anxious not to throw any obstacle in the way of the Government. I saw a statement in one of the southern papers the other day—I do not know whether it is true or not—that, if the honourable gentleman were about to propose a certain thing, the utterance of a “No” from certain quarters of the House would cause him to sit down immediately; and the honourable gentleman, having given his faithful support to the Government this session, and thinking it was too much to ask that the House should be sitting and the Committees carrying on their work at the same time, has proposed, as the next best plan, that honourable members should enter into correspondence as to the questions they wish to put.

Mr. O'CONOR.—Nothing of the kind.

Sir J. VOGEL.—I do not suppose for a moment that the House would adopt such a system. It would put some honourable members in a very unpleasant position, and it would very much depend on the temper in which the members of the Government rose in the morning as to whether their answers would be satisfactory or not. The members of the Government are only men, and the amount of work which the honourable member at the head of the Government proposes that they should take upon themselves would incapacitate them for dealing properly with the questions put to them. Let us see what it is we are asked to agree to. The House is to meet at eleven o'clock in the morning for Ministers to answer questions; but that does not prevent any question being brought forward, and we all know that there are ways and forms by which any question can be brought on; and this is to be done while honourable members are attending on Committees, or are neglecting their duty in that respect. That is to begin at eleven o'clock in the morning; and then it is proposed to take up new business after half-past twelve at night. We know that there are Legislatures where obstruction is of common occurrence, and where it has been necessary to introduce a clôture of the most drastic character; but such a proposal as this has never been made in those Assemblies. Even in the House of Commons, I believe, the half-past-twelve rule has always been maintained, no matter what inducement there may have been in the way of hastening on business. In fact, if this proposition is to be carried out, you will require another qualification in honourable members. They will need an athletic qualification, because they have not the physique to enable them to commence business at eleven o'clock in the morning, and then to go on and take up new business at half-past twelve at night. I am not at all wishing to throw any obstacle in the way of the honourable member closing the session early. I have given notice of a clause to be added to the Railways Bill which, if adopted, will, I think, enable the honourable gentleman to get that Bill through with much greater celerity than would be the case if the House thought it was taking an irrevocable step; and I have given notice of that clause with the express purpose of allowing that Bill to pass through, if the House wishes it, though I do not think that is a prudent course. I put it to the House, Is the Government taking the course we should expect of it if it wished an early termination of the session, giving due time for consideration of the measures we have to deal with? We have been told over and over again in the Financial Statement and otherwise that retrenchment was the most important of the measures that it was necessary to deal with this session; but now we see, day after day, other Bills put at the head of the Order Paper. I think we should have been told to-day what course the Government intended to pursue for the remainder of the session, and we could then see how we could help them in their plans; but if the Government, with the majority they have at their back, are going to force the business through, and leave honourable members under the disability of not being able to suggest amendments, or even to discuss the measures, it will be placing those honourable members who are not in the majority in an exceedingly unfavourable position. We have to consider the whole of the estimates, and under ordinary circumstances that alone takes a fortnight. Then, there are the measures which are already passing through the House; and we understand that the session is to come to a conclusion in seventeen days, or even less; but I tell the honourable gentleman that he will not facilitate business by attempting to prevent honourable members from having the privilege of even asking questions. This side of the House has shown every desire to facilitate the progress of business, but I would point out that we have still very important business before us. There are the measures dealing with retrenchment to be considered; there must be a discussion on the Education Act; the San Francisco service will have to be considered, for it terminates next year; there must be another discussion on the Land Bill, unless the Government put a stop to it; the Native Land Bill must also come under discussion; and, besides that, if the Government intend to press the Representation Bill, there must be considerable delay, because, although honourable members have agreed to the second reading, they have expressed a great many opinions as to the form in which the measure should pass, for there is not only the question of the number of members involved, but there is also the question of whether, if it is thought desirable that such a change should be made in the divisions of the country, that change should be left to the Commission appointed under the last Act, or whether the House itself should not take the matter in hand. Again, there is the question whether it would not be advisable to leave the change to stand over till next session, so that opportunities may be afforded to the districts interested to make objections before we meet next. I might go through the other Bills in the same way. I am sure that suspending the Standing Order as to not taking new business after half-past twelve o'clock, and punishing honourable members for asking questions by compelling them to meet at eleven o'clock in the morning, will not shorten the session. I put it to the Government not to do anything of the kind, but to leave it to honourable members to shorten the session as much as possible, and not to try and force them by such a resolution as this.

Mr. O'Conor

Mr. O'CONOR.—I must ask permission of the House to make a personal explanation in reference to a remark which the honourable member who has just sat down made with regard to myself. He said that I was under the influence of a portion of this House with regard to my action; and I wish to deny that, and say that he is the last man in this House who should cast such an imputation on me, because he has himself acted the part of a tempter to me in the library of this building, and he knows how I dealt with him on that occasion, when he was in a position to make a large offer to me. The House will therefore know how to accept such a statement from that honourable gentleman.

Hon. MEMBERS.—What was it? What was the offer?

Mr. O'CONOR.—I will tell the House what took place between the honourable gentleman and myself in the library of this House. The honourable gentleman knows perfectly well that I could not be influenced by him. I may state that I was in this House when the question of turning out the Fox-Vogel Ministry was being discussed, and Sir Julius Vogel came to me and solicited my vote. I told him I could not give it him; and then he said to me, "What do you want?" I told him, "I want to turn out your Government;" and then he pressed me in every way. I could have got anything I asked for at the time, if I had been more pliant: other honourable members who were so got their rewards.

Sir J. VOGEL.—I think it shows very bad taste on the part of the honourable gentleman to make accusations of that kind about things which occurred fourteen or fifteen years ago. If I made an improper offer to the honourable member, then how is it that he has been on such friendly terms with me all these years? As to my recollecting a conversation which took place fourteen or fifteen years ago, I confess I cannot do it; but I would ask, is it not a strange thing that, if I made such improper offers to the honourable member, he has been on friendly terms with me ever since? To the best of my belief there is not the smallest foundation for the statement.

Mr. O'CONOR.—I can prove it.

Sir J. VOGEL.—The honourable member's memory is entirely at fault.

Sir G. GREY.—I think this is about the most formidable coalition that this House has ever witnessed. Three members are certainly united together with one common object, and that object is to delay the business of the House, to put off the financial question, and to keep us all debating in this ridiculous manner. We have heard it denied from each side of the House that there is any coalition between these gentlemen; but I would ask the House whether it is not clear that they are acting in union. The sooner we put an end to this the better. I think we should stop it at once.

Mr. W. P. REEVES.—I would like to ask the Premier whether answering the questions in writing would involve the answers being printed on the Order Paper.

Major ATKINSON.—That is what I understand.

Mr. FISH.—I trust the House will not agree to the answers being given in writing. We have taken up an hour and a half in discussing this question, and in that time all the questions on the Order Paper could have been answered, and if the honourable member at the head of the Government had gone on in the ordinary course we should not have had all this delay. And why does the honourable gentleman want this course to be pursued? Simply that he may force through the House in two weeks measures which ought properly to take two months to discuss. We are also told by the honourable gentleman to-day that he means to ask the House to do away with the rule which prevents new business being taken after half-past twelve at night. What does that mean? It means this, if the honourable gentleman's ideas are carried out: We shall meet here at eleven, and sit until four or five next morning. The honourable gentleman knows as well as possible that it is not possible for members of the House to give that time to the business of the country and to do it properly. But it is exactly what he wants. He knows perfectly well that the House will be wearied out. Honourable members will be unable to stand the strain put upon them, and the Premier will have an empty House, and will carry through what he likes and how he likes. Is that proper legislation? Are we to be put to this serious trial in order to pass measures which there is no necessity for passing at all this session? I trust honourable members will guard their own privileges better than that. Some honourable members say, "Go on, and do not debate; do not say a word." If this goes on, all our privileges will be taken away one by one, until there are none left. We shall not be worthy the name of representatives if we allow this to be done,—if, because the Premier says he wants to do such-and-such a thing, forsooth we must accept it. I shall not do it. I do not care if the honourable gentleman has a majority of thirty at his back. If I were in a minority of ten, I shall use the privileges of this House to object to usages of the most pernicious and dangerous character. Reference has been made to the wasting of time; but I say that all the waste of time that has taken place has been caused by the want of tact, the want of ability, on the part of the Premier to see what are the wishes of the House. We shall be told that this is the work of the Opposition. That is what the honourable gentleman has always said in the past, and that is what he will say again.

Mr. O'Conor

Mr. ALLEN.—I think the remarks of the last speaker have made some disclosures to us. This discussion has not arisen at all on the Premier's motion, and the honourable gentleman ought to have known it. The discussion has arisen on the motion proposed by the honourable member for the Buller.—(No.)—I say it has, and nobody can deny it—upon that, and nothing else.

Mr. FISH.—The Premier suggested that the answers to questions should be given in writing, and thereupon the honourable member for the Buller moved his amendment.

Mr. ALLEN.—That is not exactly what took place. The honourable member for the Buller moved his amendment, and the Premier said that, if it was the wish of the House, he was prepared to accept it. I maintain that the whole of this discussion has been nothing but a splitting of straws; and I am astonished that men of ability and position, who should set an example to younger members of this House, upon a day like this, when we want all the time at our disposal to discuss measures of great importance, should come here and deliberately waste the time of the House. There is no great constitutional question before us at all. We are simply asked to come here on one single morning in order that questions may be answered, and an amendment to that is proposed that they may be answered, just for that once, in writing. And for that reason honourable members get up and raise great constitutional questions. The whole thing is absurd, and I am disgusted with it.

Mr. BUCHANAN.—The honourable member for Dunedin South has stated that so long as he is a member of this House, although there was a majority of thirty against him, he would use his privileges as a member of the House. If he did not, instead of using his privileges, abuse them, I think the discussions in this House would be got over in very much quicker time. I say the Premier, as far as I can see, has not been answerable for this discussion, and I hope we shall get to the business without any further debate.

Mr. KERR.—My opinion of the affair altogether is that the Premier does not wish to do any business at all. He has brought down Bills, particularly the Representation Bill, which are not wanted and cannot be wanted for two or three years at all events. Why does he not bring down Bills he wants to get passed, so that we may pass them and get back to our homes? The honourable member for Dunedin East says he is disgusted with this discussion; but my belief is that the Premier brings these questions down on purpose to raise these discussions and kill time. There is no necessity at all for this Representation Bill. The honourable member for the Buller has been in a great rage at what was said by the honourable member for Christchurch North. He was very indignant at that honourable gentleman saying that the honourable member for the Buller was a man who would sell his vote, and that the honourable member for Christchurch North had offered to buy it. I have known the honourable member for the Buller many years, and always thought he was ready to sell his vote.

Hon. MEMBERS.—Order, order.

Mr. O'CONOR.—I consider the honourable member ought not to be allowed to use language of that sort.

Mr. SPEAKER.—I must ask the honourable member for Motueka to withdraw that expression, which was a very improper one to make use of.

Mr. KERR.—I did not mean it. I meant to say that everybody said he always sold his vote. I never believed it myself, Sir.

Mr. O'CONOR.—I think, coming from the honourable gentleman, the weight of the imputation may not be worth much, but still I object to language of that kind being used by any member of this House.

Mr. SPEAKER.—I think the honourable member at first put it in such a way that it was most insulting, and that he is bound to withdraw it fully and unequivocally.

Mr. KERR.—I will withdraw anything. I have often taken the honourable gentleman's part when I heard honourable members say behind his back what they would not say to his face. I did not mean it in an offensive manner. I mentioned the matter to his face to give him an opportunity of contradicting it.

But I most certainly think, and the House must think, that the Premier is to blame on this occasion. If he really wants to get through the necessary business, let him bring down the measures it is necessary to pass, and we shall be ready to proceed with their consideration. But I cannot and do not believe for one moment that he wishes to get on with the business until his own time comes, and then he will get on with it properly. I object to this morning sitting. The same thing will happen as in former days. We shall begin at half-past two, and keep at it until half-past two the next day.

Mr. PERCEVAL.—The question before the House is one of considerable importance, and I think the time has not been wasted in discussing it. I confess I have been extremely irritated during the session by the multiplicity of questions, and no one would be more pleased than I to see them expunged from the Order Paper altogether. While this discussion has been going on I have been looking through the Standing Orders, and I fail to see how the questions come to be printed daily on the Order Paper. In my opinion that is the reason why these questions are so numerous. Standing Orders provide for the answering of questions in the order of business under Rule 71. Now, I take it that it is a mere matter of courtesy to give answers to the questions. The Standing Orders do not require that written notice shall be given of questions, and I intend that, if Ministers answered the questions as they were put, it would be a great saving of time; and, if a Minister could not give an answer to a question, what he should do is this: He should not put it on the Order Paper, but ask the honourable member to repeat his question from his place in the House next day, and then he would give the answer. It seems to me to be altogether contrary to the spirit of the Standing Orders for the Order Paper to be cumbered with these questions. I hope the Government, during the recess, will take this matter of questions into their consideration, because I am one of those who are prepared to admit that a great amount of time is wasted in the answering of these questions. Not more than one-tenth of these questions relate to matters of public interest; they relate generally to some local matters that only affect the district represented by the honourable member who asks the question. But I think it would be a dangerous innovation to allow the motion which is before the House to pass. It would appear to me to be much better for the Government to refuse to answer questions altogether than to bring us here at eleven o'clock to-morrow. I know that if we come here at eleven o'clock to-morrow it means the thin end of the wedge, and that we shall go on meeting at eleven o'clock day after day. I wish to protest against this. I am quite sure that honourable members cannot give proper attention to public business if they are exhausted by sitting through the whole twenty-four hours; because that is what it would mean.

Captain, RUSSELL.—I do not agree with my honourable friend. If he had gone a little further in the Standing Orders he would have seen what seems to me to be the key of the situation. On many occasions I cannot say I have been irritated at the number of questions on the Order Paper, but rather at the license which has been allowed to honourable members to debate questions which have been put on the Order Paper. The 73rd section of the Standing Orders distinctly lays it down that there shall be no debatable matter brought forward in putting a question. I do not wish, Sir, that what I say may be in any possible way construed into a reflection on you; but I think there is scarcely a question put, nowadays, into the explanation of which debatable matter is not introduced; and Ministers also very frequently put debatable matter into their answers. I think that is the root of the evil. I think, if the questions were asked without a number of remarks being added to them, the whole of a day's questions could be got through in about a quarter of an hour—that is, if the answers to them were also given concisely. But almost every one who asks a question feels it incumbent on him to make a speech about it; and almost every day also we see the adjournment of the House moved on some question, and frequently several hours spent in debating the motion for adjournment. That, as I say, is, I think, the root of the evil. If in asking and answering questions the Standing Orders were literally adhered to, I am sure that a long list of questions could be got through in a very few minutes every day.

Major STEWARD.—The last speaker has exactly hit the blot. This difficulty is growing year by year. I have been for some sessions a member of the Standing Orders Committee, which has frequently sent down suggestions for effecting a remedy; and I believe another report is now under consideration by the Committee, and will be presented towards the end of the session, that report also pointing to the need of change in this respect, in the interest of public business. I believe in no other Legislature is the question-difficulty felt so much as here, or so much time taken on questions. In the Imperial Parliament questions are put simply in the words which appear on the Order Paper—no explanation whatever is allowed—and concise replies are given by the Ministers. In other Legislatures the practice is similar: the question is put without comment or explanation, and the Minister rises and makes his reply. It is the long explanations on questions, and the motions for adjournment moved during questions, that cause such a great waste of time. I believe, also, that in no other Legislature are there such facilities for wasting time by motions for adjournment as here. In the House of Commons it is necessary for forty members to rise in their places to signify their approval before a motion for adjournment is allowed to be moved. I think the abuse of the privilege—if privilege it is—of allowing any honourable member to move the adjournment might be well curtailed by prescribing that a fair proportion of the House—say, ten members—should be required to rise in support of a motion for adjournment before it should be entertained. If the Standing Orders were amended in that direction it would in no way infringe the freedom of debate or lessen honourable members' privileges, while it would prevent what is now a frequent and great waste of public time.

Amendment negatived.

Major ATKINSON.—I merely wish to say, in reply, that I was very much surprised at the speech of the honourable member for Christchurch North, especially after the promise he gave the Government that he would facilitate business, and after the action which he took yesterday afternoon, which certainly did expedite business, and for which I was obliged to the honourable gentleman. No great innovation is proposed by the Government, and no members' privileges are invaded by their proposition. It is simply a question of time. A portion of the House seems determined to spend one or two hours every day in having questions answered, and in discussions on them; and I venture to think that the majority of honourable members regard that as pure waste of time. It seems there is no way out of the difficulty except the one that the Government propose—at great inconvenience to themselves. But, in order to meet the desires of the House, they propose that we should sit an extra two hours. That is the whole front of our offending. We have asked for sufficient time to do the work the House has apparently determined shall be done. I might have moved that the House should meet for ordinary business at eleven o'clock to-morrow; but I thought it desirable that we should try whether we could not do it this way, and to see whether that would really save our time or not. No doubt, if we are to get on with our business, we must take the necessary time for it, or we must refuse honourable members the power of wasting our time. Now one word with regard to what fell from the honourable member for Motueka. He asks, "Does the Premier mean the Government Bills to pass, and why does he not come down with the business the Government intend to pass?" Sir, the Government do mean their measures to pass, and they ask the House to pass them, and to take the necessary time to pass them. We are not trifling with the House, like some honourable members on the other side of the House—though not the honourable member for Christchurch North, who has given us considerable assistance until this afternoon. But certain honourable gentlemen of his party seem determined that the House shall not get on with the business, but shall listen to their interminable talk. That, I say, seems to be the object of certain honourable gentlemen; and the only answer the House can give is to say that it must sit a longer time,—that it must sit as long as may be necessary to do the Government business. I know of no other way in which we can get the business done. The Government have no intention—and we want the House to understand that distinctly—of forcing measures through, and no intention of wearying honourable members out; but we have this intention: of asking the House to insist, notwithstanding the talk of those honourable gentlemen to whom I have referred, that the work the country has sent us to do shall be done, and that those measures now before the House, and which those honourable members are simply stonewalling by this process, though they admit the country has demanded them, shall be passed. I am certain the House will insist on passing those measures before it rises, whatever time it may take. The only way we can counteract the scenes we witness here sitting after sitting is by taking power to sit an unlimited time. I should not have said this to-day if the matter had not been raised; but I may say now that, if necessary—and I trust it will not be necessary—I shall move that the House meet at eleven o'clock every morning till the end of the session.

Captain Russell

Motion agreed to.

Major ATKINSON.—Sir, it has always been usual, when the House meets in the morning for a special purpose, to allow Select Committees to sit at the same time. I move, That Select Committees have leave to sit to-morrow forenoon during the sitting of the House. That is no innovation whatever on the customs of the House.

Mr. LEVESTAM.—What will become of the questions of those honourable members who attend Committees?

Major ATKINSON.—They can get other honourable members to ask for them, or they may be able to leave their Committees. They must exercise their discretion.

Sir J. VOGEL.—Sir, I am aware that it has been the custom for some years, in the last day or two of the session, if the House met in the morning, to allow Committees to sit at the same time; but I cannot help thinking that to allow it at this stage of the session—especially as this course is avowedly taken to silence honourable members—is not desirable. I quite agree with the Premier as to the grievance of which he complains, and I think some remedy could be adopted. I have seen in the House of Commons pages and pages of questions put and answered in a few minutes, each question on the Order Paper being asked by the honourable member merely rising in his place, and the answer being read by the Minister. As to questions occupying too much of the time of the House, I quite agree with the honourable gentleman at the head of the Government that it is a grievance; but, Sir, I must say a word in reply to the severe remarks of the honourable gentleman on some honourable members sitting on this side of the House. I believe it is the case that there are some honourable members who speak at some length, and I believe it is the case that these honourable members, though they do speak at some length, speak very well too; and I have heard other honourable members complain of their speaking on this ground: that it leaves no points for other honourable members to deal with, that there is nothing else left for any one to say. I do not believe that these honourable gentlemen speak for the sake of wasting time, but it is because they consider they have something to say which they have a right to say, and which they wish to say and wish to see recorded in Hansard. No doubt Hansard is a very fruitful means of prolonging the session and prolonging debates. I think it is only right to say, in the strongest manner I possibly can, that I think the honourable gentleman at the head of the Government does the honourable gentlemen to whom he has referred an injustice in supposing that they speak for the purpose of wasting time. The honourable gentleman can have no reason for saying that, and his experience must enable him to see that there are members and members, and that some honourable members rarely speak, while there are other honourable members who think it incumbent on them to express their opinions more often, as different subjects arise. I do not think it right, because honourable members speak without any desire of wasting time, but simply because they have a right to do so and desire to exercise it, that he should fasten on them the stigma of "obstruction."

Mr. W. P. REEVES.—I think the remarks of the Premier somewhat unfair, though not a little astute. The honourable gentleman spoke of certain members on this side of the House without specifying who they are, and said they are guilty of the practice referred to. Now, if the honourable gentleman had picked out any of us and charged us with the obstruction and waste of time, I consider he might have been justified, for I think there has been a certain amount of obstruction and waste of time; but I know this: that the large majority of members on this side of the House regret and dislike that quite as much as members on the other side of the House. But I do think it unfair that a loose charge of obstruction should be made against this side of the House generally, because the vast majority of members on this side are quite as anxious to get the business through as any member on the other side can be, and we have regretted certain scenes which have taken place in the House during the last few weeks. I think I am quite justified in rising to say so much; and, now that I am speaking, I will say that I do hope we shall not see—I will not say the obstructive but—the dilatory proceedings which have marked one or two debates recently.

Motion agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Sir J. VOGEL.—Before the orders of the day are called on, may I ask the honourable gentleman whether he intends to make the statement which he promised to make yesterday?

Major ATKINSON.—I intended to make a statement; but I am afraid, after what took place yesterday, and the threats that were made use of, that I am not in a position to do so to-day. I should like to wait until I see what progress is made with the consideration of the Representation Bill to-day. It will depend on that what we shall be able to do.

Mr. SEDDON.—Will the honourable gentleman mention the threats which he refers to?

Major ATKINSON.—No; I have nothing more to say now.

REPRESENTATION BILL.

On the question, That this Bill be considered in Committee,

Mr. WHYTE said,—I did not speak on the second reading of this Bill yesterday, because it seemed to me that everything conceivable and a great deal of what, to a well-regulated mind, was inconceivable had already been said. Nor do I intend to deliver what may be called a speech now; but I should like to take this opportunity of drawing attention to an amendment of which I have given notice for consideration when this Bill gets into Committee, as to the percentage of advantage that should be allowed to the country districts as compared with the towns. I supported the second reading of this Bill by my voice yesterday; and I intend to support it, because I recognise that the country has declared in favour of it. So far as my own district is concerned I fancy that the manner in which a reduction of members would affect it was somewhat lost sight of during the election, owing to the number of much larger questions which were being considered; but I believe that, if it had been put to the people in my district fairly and distinctly what the effect would be in that neighbourhood, they would perhaps have thought differently upon it. At any rate, it is quite clear to me that if this Bill be passed in its present shape, it will very prejudicially affect the country districts. Perhaps the reason why this did not come home to me more clearly before this was, that I have been lucky enough, for many past years, to have no opposition, so that I did not know what a contest really meant in a large country district. However, this time I had an opportunity of judging; and when I say that in my district, which is by no means as large as many others, the contest necessitated my holding something like twenty meetings at different places on different evenings, honourable members will appreciate what a contest in a large and scattered district means. I think, moreover, that the Bill will have a prejudicial effect in this way: that diverse interests will be crowded together into one electorate—that interests which are separated by natural boundaries, such as watersheds and other impassable barriers, will have to be thrown into one electorate. There is also a danger, it appears to me, that if the districts are made much larger it must result in men being chosen more upon their physical qualities than upon their mental ones. The fight will not improbably be decided in favour of the man who can travel most, can face the weather best, and address the greatest number of meetings in the various little centres. For these reasons, amongst many others which I need not now detail, I have to-day given notice of my intention to move to alter the percentage in favour of the country districts—which is at present about 18 per cent.—to 25 per cent. I must say, however, that, after the many expressions of opinion that I have heard from many honourable members, I am astonished at my own moderation in proposing to fix the percentage so low as 25 per cent. I would also remind honourable members from the towns that this 25 per cent. is not really 25 per cent., because it has first to be added to the nominal population of the colony, and then the quota has to be arrived at, so that the real advantage does not at the outside exceed 20 per cent. I just say this in explanation of the intimation that I have given, for I think it is as well to say it now as later on.

Mr. FISH.—I dare say that I shall be accused of obstruction and of a desire to delay the business of this House in venturing to say a few words upon this measure. I am sorry, Sir, speaking generally, that honourable members should have the fear placed before them that if they speak upon certain measures they will be called by certain leading members of this House "obstructionists." I trust that will not happen again, and that I shall not be considered in any way an obstructionist for making a few remarks upon the Bill before the House. It appears to me that this Bill is one of the most important we have had before us this session, and, in fact, that it is one of the most important the House can discuss in any session. When we deal with the representation of the country it surely must be a subject which ought to insure deep thought, and all who have thought upon it and have the ability to speak upon it, I believe, should venture to say what they think about the measure. In listening to the various speeches, which I have done very attentively, I could not help being struck with the very great difference in the ideas that different honourable members have expressed during the course of the debate, and the peculiarity of the ideas which have induced some of them to decide to vote in the direction they are going to vote. For example, the honourable member for Auckland West tells us that he supports the Bill because he thinks fifty members are sufficient to represent the country. Well, I think it is about thirty years since this House of Representatives contained only fifty members; and the honourable gentleman's idea of progress is that we should go back to the state of things which existed thirty years ago. Then, he says that in the present House of ninety-five members a few members do all the talking, and yet he thinks that if there were a less number of members the talking would be decreased. Well, I do not know that that would happen; but I do venture to say this: that the talking would be very great indeed if my honourable friend desired to talk and could not find an opportunity for putting in his word. Then, the honourable member for Caversham says that the House is too large because, with a population of at least four hundred thousand more, Victoria has only eighty-six members. I do not admit the analogy between this colony and Victoria. Victoria is a closely-settled and compact colony, its area is not nearly so large as that of New Zealand, and its configuration is entirely different. Therefore, whilst eighty-six members might be quite sufficient for that colony, we should require ninety-five to make us equally well represented. Then, again, why did not the honourable gentleman refer to South Australia, Queensland, and New South Wales? I believe the representation in New South Wales is 150, and it has about the same population as Victoria; and that shows that the different colonies gauge their requirements in the matter of representation according to local considerations. I take it that that is the reason why New South Wales has a larger representative power than Victoria. Now, the honourable member for Clutha gave as one reason why he should support this Bill that it would be the means of returning a better class of men. The honourable gentleman made that assertion, and it is one that, like many assertions, is easily made, but very difficult of proof. It is an astonishing thing that honourable members seem to forget that in making statements of that kind they are really, as a matter of fact, casting a slur upon their own ability. We find from time to time that the honourable gentlemen who use expressions from which it may be inferred they believe that the possession of wealth indicates superior abilities are generally those who have worked their way up from a very humble origin, and that they entirely forget, when they have become the possessors of means, the place from which they rose. I do not know why it should be that they should so often give utterance to these conservative ideas. I would ask the honourable member for Clutha if he thinks that of necessity brains attach to wealth, or if he thinks that because a man has wealth he has better brain-power than a man who is poorer has. If he cannot prove that, I think his argument falls to the ground. Then, the honourable gentleman was very strong upon the undue preponderance of city influence, and said that this Bill would give the cities undue power. At the narrow-mindedness he displayed I was very much surprised, and I was sorry to see that he endeavoured to excite a feeling of jealousy between town and country. I take it that in the towns there can be no feeling of antagonism regarding the country. The interests are identical, and if one is not successful and prosperous it is impossible for the other to be so. Why any honourable gentleman should seek to raise a feeling of discord as between town and country constituencies is more than I can imagine. The honourable gentleman said he would increase the quota largely with regard to cities; and I have no doubt there will be a determined attempt on the part of some country members to increase the quota; but I think the proposal is most unfair, and I can only say that I shall resist any such attempt to the very utmost of my power, and I have no doubt that in that I shall be aided by the whole of the city representatives, and by a large number of those who represent country districts who are not in favour of this narrow-minded idea that the cities should be unduly handicapped. Our representation is upon the basis of population, and, if that be a sound basis to go upon, it is unfair to handicap the towns as against the country. At any rate, it is unfair to do so to any great extent, though I do not myself object to a reasonable handicap; but, if it goes beyond that, I think it is most unfair, and we should be losing sight of the basis of our representation altogether. The honourable gentleman was kind enough also to give us a great deal of advice about the amalgamation of the city electorates. I see no reason at all why the city electorates should be amalgamated. I see no reason why the residents in the city should be treated differently from the residents in the country districts; and, whilst the representation is as it is, I think the electorates of the city should remain as they are. There are two or three reasons for that. In the first place, any one who has contested a city electorate must know that there will be an increase in the cost of contesting an election if the electorates are amalgamated. I believe the cost would be three or four times more than that of contesting a single electorate. Then, I think it would be detrimental to the interests of the country in this way: that any man who was very popular could run the whole of the members of his party in for the city: such a man, for instance, as the honourable member for Auckland Central, or Sir Robert Stout, or any other leading man. If the city electorates were amalgamated, such men, no doubt, would carry the whole of the seats; and I do not think, so far as the country is concerned, that that would be a good thing. The honourable member for Rangitikei, to whom it is generally a great pleasure to listen, certainly, to my mind, gave utterance to some of the greatest inconsistencies that I have heard given utterance to during the debate. Really I cannot understand what that honourable gentleman's political principles are. He said that the larger constituencies would return men of larger mental calibre.

Mr. BRUCE.—I might explain that what I said was that larger constituencies would presumably return men of larger mental calibre.

Mr. FISH.—That is what I understood the honourable gentleman to say, and I cannot see how he can make it consistent with what he said shortly afterwards. He said that only wealthy men could contest the larger constituencies. Consequently the wealthy men must be the men of higher mental calibre. Then, he said, taking the Honorary Reduction Bill and this Bill together, it must throw the representation of the country into the hands of the wealthy. I agree that if these proposals are carried the representation will be thrown into the hands of the wealthy. But I am not at all prepared to admit that, if that did happen, the mental calibre of the House as a whole would be improved; because, whilst in Great Britain you are always certain to get a large amount of education allied with wealth, and you have men representing very old families who are wealthy men, our experience tells us that in this colony the wealthy.

men are men who have little or no education, and whose ideas are often very cramped and distorted, and men who certainly would not be better able to represent the people than nine out of ten of the honourable gentlemen who occupy seats in this House at present. That the result of passing the Bill will be to render the cost of contesting, at any rate, the country seats so large that only men of considerable wealth will be able to become candidates is beyond a shadow of a doubt; and for that reason I oppose the reduction of the number of members to the extent proposed. If the honourable gentleman says that these two things will occur if this Bill is carried, why does he support it? He tells us that he does not believe in representation being thrown into the hands of the wealthy, and that to increase the area of the districts and to reduce the honorarium will have that effect; and yet, in spite of his own opinion, he supports the Bill. The honourable member, to my mind, is quite inconsistent. Many of his views I would go a long way in supporting; but I cannot, having regard to the effect he has pointed out, support the Bill as it at present stands. Then he went on to say that it was not right to suppose that a wealthy man had no sympathy with his poorer fellow-colonists. I do not deny that they have a great deal of sympathy with their poorer fellow-colonists, but I believe it is that sort of sympathy which makes a poor man throw a bone to a hungry dog as he passes by. The country was represented in years gone by by men who had large landed properties and considerable wealth; and it goes without saying that, when the country was so represented, the legislation took the form of measures calculated to conserve wealth rather than to relieve the condition of the poorer classes. The arguments of the honourable gentleman would show that he is a Liberal, but the vote he is about to give and the conclusion he has come to show that he is a Conservative. The honourable member for Te Aro made, to my mind, the very strongest speech against the passing of this Bill at the present time. The honourable member said if this measure passes before good local-government Bills are introduced and made law it will be a curse to the country. Now, I am strongly of opinion that the honourable gentleman was right in what he was saying; but does he not know that there is not the slightest chance of any local-government measures being passed this session? And in all probability they will not be passed next session. Does he not know that the honourable gentleman at the head of the Government has been an utter failure with regard to local government? Does he not know that the honourable gentleman took years and years to incubate a local-government scheme which only stood the test of public opinion two years, when it had to be repealed? The honourable member can have no hope of any satisfactory measure of local government emanating from the Premier. Well, the honourable member for Te Aro gave another strong reason why the Bill should not pass at the present time when he said that, if the Government got this Bill passed they would have the means of preventing any adverse vote being passed upon them during this Parliament, because they would always have the power of a dissolution in their hands. They could say to the members of this Parliament, "We defy you to pass an adverse vote;" because I have no doubt there would be a large number of honourable members influenced by the fact that some five-and-twenty of them, at any rate, would not be returned to the House; and honourable members are naturally unwilling to cut short their own parliamentary existence. Therefore I think that the honourable gentleman gave two of the strongest reasons against the passing of this Bill at the present time that could be urged; and yet, while he appeared to hold these opinions strongly and firmly, the honourable gentleman said, "I will vote for the second reading of this Bill." The honourable member for the Bay of Islands said that he was strongly in favour of an increase in the representation of the Maoris. I am not at all surprised at the honourable gentleman's saying that. I believe he is sincere, because he has, unfortunately for the country, from time to time had a considerable influence with the Maori members, and I believe their votes have been influenced adversely to the true interests of the country through the honourable gentleman speaking their language. One of the strongest objections I have to the Maori representation in this House is that European members speaking their language have an advantage over those who cannot speak it in influencing Maori votes, because they are likely to be led by any such honourable member who is designing enough to influence them. The Minister of Education said that if this Bill were not passed this session it would not be passed this Parliament. I cannot see the force of that reasoning. Does the honourable member mean to say that if we do not pass a Bill in the first session we shall not pass it at all? I do not believe that; and I hold that, in so far as this session is concerned, there is not the smallest necessity for passing this Bill; and the Government are only jeopardising the passing of their other measures by forcing this on. The honourable gentleman also said that tactics were being resorted to to delay business. I can only affirm that, so far as I am concerned, I have resorted to no such tactics, nor shall I do so; nor have I seen other honourable members adopt such tactics. But I do object to honourable members being accused of wasting time when they are fairly and properly discussing such an important measure as one dealing with the representation of the people. The fact is, as I stated before this afternoon when speaking on another subject, that the Government are wanting to do in a fortnight work that, if properly done, would take two months. That is the whole secret of this indecent attempt on the part of the Government to shorten debate and curtail the liberty of speech of honourable members. This House is expected to prorogue in a fortnight, and I hope that expectation will be realised; but what do the Government propose to carry through in that fortnight? A Representation Bill, a Government Railways Bill, a Land Bill—any one of which, I take leave to say, in any other Parliament in Australasia would take at least a fortnight or three weeks to debate. Then, there are the Public Works Statement, the loan proposals, and the District Railways Bill—unless, indeed, the Government are going to drop that Bill, so as to oblige some honourable members who are their supporters. There is also the Otago Central Railway Bill, involving an expenditure of nearly a million of money; and, besides that, there are eighteen other Government Bills on the Order Paper, all of more or less importance; as well as some local Bills which will require to be passed. I say that is too great a mass of work to try to force through in a fortnight, and that the Government are doing an injury to the people of the country by forcing such hasty legislation upon them. It is nonsense to tell me that any member of this House, with even the best intentions, and bringing the greatest amount of intelligence to bear on the subjects to be discussed, can do justice to those measures in the limited time at our disposal. The Government would have been much wiser if they had postponed all measures which were not absolutely necessary until next session, and have matured them in the recess; and then we should have proper legislation, while this session could have been given up entirely to the consideration of the financial and public-works proposals of the Government, as well as the question of Protection. I wish to explain, in conclusion, my own position with regard to this Bill. I am pledged to support a reduction in the number of members, but I cannot, under any circumstances, support so large a reduction as is proposed in this Bill. If the Government will accept eighty-four I shall be found voting for that reduction; but, apart from that, my mind is somewhat changed with regard to the representation of the people since I addressed my constituents; and I would much prefer to have an opportunity of arguing the matter with them, and laying before them the reasons why I have changed my views. I would not ask for that if there was an immediate and imperative necessity to pass this Bill; but I do not think there is, and it would only be fair to allow all honourable members an opportunity of ascertaining the wishes of their constituents on this very important change. The honourable member for Kumara accused the Premier of inconsistency. I am astonished that the honourable gentleman should think it necessary to do that, because every member of this House who has watched the legislation of the Premier for the last nine years must know that it has been one huge mass of inconsistency. His legislation does not last. A Bill is passed to-day and stands perhaps for two years, and then has to be repealed. He has utterly failed to grasp the question of a proper system of local government, and we have never even had an attempt at local legislation, except that which was made by the late Government. We have been promised, in the Financial Statement, a repeal of the Crown and Native Lands Rating Act; but I have seen no Bill of that kind brought down. Does the honourable gentleman mean to drop that portion of his policy?

Mr. Fish

Mr. FISHER.—The Bill is before the House now.

Mr. FISH.—Well, I have not seen it; and I am glad the Government are not going to drop that portion of their policy, at all events. The proposed legislation of this Government this session has been of a most reactionary character. Every Bill they introduce has something of the character of what the free-thinkers in this colony and elsewhere do: it tears down something that is good, and puts nothing in its place that is worth the name. Everything is altered that has been done for years past, and the alterations made will be, in many respects, most disastrous to the prosperity of the country. Some years ago we heard of the problem of poverty which the honourable member was going to bring forward: that grand national insurance scheme which was to make everybody prosperous. Surely there could be no better time for bringing forward this scheme—which has been lying in the inner chambers of the honourable gentleman's brain for the last few years—than the present; and yet we hear nothing of it. With regard to the figures quoted by the Premier as to the number of persons represented by each member in foreign countries, those figures, if they prove anything, prove that each country grants representation to the people according to their local wants. There is such a large discrepancy between the numbers of persons represented in those countries as to show that each country makes its representation according to the wants of the population. I have said that I am pledged to my constituents to support a reduction in the number of members; but, as this Bill is not necessary to be passed this session, and as the reduction is far more than I can agree to, I shall oppose the Bill.

Mr. TAIPUA.—Sir, I have something further to say before the House goes into Committee on this Bill. I want to explain why I object to the proposal to tack on the South Island to a portion of the North Island. The great objection to that proposal is that the district will be so enormous that it will be impossible for any one member to go all over it. No Native who has to represent a portion of the North Island will have time at his disposal or ability to cross Cook Strait and inquire into the requirements and wishes of the people of the South Island. The district which I represent is sufficiently large already. It extends from Tauranga to Auckland, and down the West Coast to Wellington. Any member who represents that district properly ought to be a man of great wealth, a man like our present Governor, a man who has abundant money to spare. The Native members, being poor men, like myself, would be utterly unable to do justice to that large district. I look upon this as one of the main objections to the Bill. Another matter which has occurred to me is this: When the special Maori Representation Act was passed and the number fixed at four, the number of European members of this House was very much smaller. But the European representation has constantly been increased, while the Maori members have remained the same in number. Now, the Government advance as a reason for reducing the number of representatives the financial condition of the colony and the want of money. Speaking to the policy of retrenchment, I cordially supported the proposal of the Government to reduce the honorarium; I willingly consented to a reduction of the money; but the proposal to reduce the number of Native representatives has given me very great pain and sorrow. If the object of the Government in taking away one Maori representative be also on the score of economy, then I ask the Government to make a further reduction in the honorarium paid to Native members instead. But I am inclined to think that it is not on the score of economy that the Government propose to take away one of the Maori members. I will explain to the House what I consider to be the real reason. I think it is because all our lands have passed away, and are now held under Crown grant. If all the lands in the South Island still remained in the hands of the Natives, there would be no proposal then by the Government to do away with the South Island Native member. Seeing it is because all the lands in the South Island are placed under the management of the Public Trustee that the Government now propose to do away with one of the Native members, I hope the Government will not consider the small number of Natives who live in the South Island. They should rather bear in mind the magnitude of the claims, the grievances, and the troubles of the Natives of that Island. Do not let the Government consider the small number of Natives living there, but rather let them consider the objections to making one of the North Island representatives have to go down south to represent the Natives there. The district will be much too large for one member to represent. If this proposal is carried, the Natives in the South Island will be without representation. They will not be sufficiently numerous to elect any man they think fit, but the Natives in my district will elect the representative. Rather than that one of our members should be taken away, I say it would be better to do away with the power some of the Natives now enjoy to vote for Europeans. It would be better for those of us who are able to do so to cease to vote for Europeans and to content ourselves with power to vote for Native members only. If the Premier does not see his way to accept that compromise, he had better tell the Native members at once that they are not wanted in this House; and they will leave. That would be better than to take one member away now, another in a year's time, and so on. I beg to assure members of this House that this proposal gives me a great deal of trouble and regret. The honourable member for the Thames, speaking last night, said he thought it would be far better if Maoris and Europeans were all placed on one footing. In my opinion that cannot be at present. One objection to that state of things is, that no European would be found supporting the candidature of a Maori. On the other hand, if only Europeans are returned to this House, they will not understand the Maori modes of thought or Maori grievances, and the Maoris would therefore, practically speaking, be unrepresented. Any Maoris having a grievance which they wish to bring before the European representatives of their district will not be able to tell those Europeans what their wishes are. They will have to go and hunt up an interpreter and pay him something for communicating their wishes. That is one objection I have to urge against the Maoris being represented by Europeans. Another objection is that the Maoris will always be outnumbered. Their numbers will be so small in proportion to the votes given by the Europeans that they will be outvoted in every way, as at present in County Councils and Highway Boards. Hitherto we have not been able to elect any of our own race to be members of these bodies, because they are always outvoted by Europeans in the district. Another reason why we shall not be represented if this is allowed is this: The number of Europeans in our district is steadily increasing, and we shall continue to be in an ever-decreasing minority. I have to express my thanks to those honourable members from the South Island who are supporting us in our endeavour to retain our representation in this House.

Dr. FITCHETT.—I did not speak on the second reading of this Bill, but I should like to say one or two words now before the Bill goes into Committee. I listened to the arguments on both sides, and it struck me that both those for and those against the Bill are somewhat conjectural and inconclusive. One argument advanced in favour of the reduction is based on a comparison of the numbers here with the numbers elsewhere. Those honourable gentlemen who say that, because the United States has only one member to every hundred thousand inhabitants, therefore we are excessively represented in having one to every six thousand, forget the particularly effective system of State and local government that exists in that part of the world, a system that renders representation in Washington, to a very great extent, unnecessary, or, rather, enables the United States Legislature to make its work national, and not local. So, also, in Victoria a very effective form of county government exists, which relieves the House of a great deal of local business. Therefore I do not think that much argument in favour of the Bill can be drawn from that. On the other hand it is urged against the Bill that the rights of democracy will be invaded, and that the expenses of elections will be very largely increased. This declaration about the rights of democracy and about infringing the privileges of the people strikes me as being somewhat flatulent. Colonial democracy is of too sturdy a growth to be endangered by the reduction contemplated in this Bill, nor will the expense be so very materially increased. There is nothing to show that the present number of members is the fittest that can be conceived: there is no sacred number. One honourable member complained that under the present system a man has to travel twenty-four hours in a steamer. I fail to see that democracy is endangered or the expense ruinously increased if a man under the new system has to travel thirty hours. Then, there is this, which is really at the root of the whole matter: We are threshing out straw the whole time. This measure was exhaustively discussed in the last Parliament, and it is nothing but threshing out straw to discuss it again now. I do not think a single vote has been affected by all that has been said on this measure, or would be affected if the discussion were prolonged for hours. In this case we are rather following than attempting to lead public opinion. It is public opinion which has led to the introduction of this Bill, and it is public opinion that insists on its being passed. I think, moreover, that the cause of complaint which has been so much referred to this afternoon is an argument in favour of this Bill. It is written that in the multitude of counsellors there is wisdom. That might have been so in the time of King Solomon, but in these latter days I am disposed to think that in the multitude of members there is talk. During the short time I have been in the House my experience is that the talk is in inverse ratio to the work. I do not accuse those honourable gentlemen who talk most of talking for the mere sake of talking; but I do say this: that, from the very necessity of the case, the more members there are the more talk there must be. We hear one honourable member make a remark, and that incites another to say something else, and so it goes on. One little word dropped early in the sitting causes a long discussion—one thing leading on to another indefinitely. A whole afternoon may be wasted through a mere casual remark dropped by the Premier or some other honourable gentleman, and it is wasted in such a way that no one can be blamed for it. I do not think any individual members are to blame for the great waste or, rather, I will say, consumption of time this session. It is just a case of there being so much inflammable material in little heaps: a spark lights the first, and then one lights the other till the whole House is in a blaze, and it takes a day to put it out. Here is a House of men with divergent opinions and a trick of expressing them, and one honourable member by speaking provokes another to speak, until the discussion has gone right round. By lessening the talking-power we shall increase the working-power. Sir, this Bill should be passed, because the people are determined it shall be passed; but I think the Premier would do well to take the most effective means to ascertain whether the opinion of the people in favour of this measure is an opinion formed on mature judgment or on a mere passing caprice. If it be a mere passing caprice we should not proceed further; but, if they are deliberately determined to have it, the Bill should become law. There is a great difference between reduction in prospect and reduction in practice. I would suggest to the Premier this course: that the Bill be passed through Committee, and that then the Commissioners should set to work to organize the districts under the Bill. In this way we should all have an opportunity, during the recess, of going to our constituents with a map of the rearranged districts in our hands, and we could then ascertain if the actual operation of the Bill met with the approval of the people or not. If it does, we can pass the third reading of the Bill, and it will come into operation; but, if not, we can, next session, negative the third reading, let the thing drop, and no harm will be done. I trust the Premier will consider seriously the wisdom of the step I suggest. No one can be injured by it, but a great injury may possibly be prevented by it. Whether the Bill will be beneficial in its operation or not is largely a matter of conjecture. For my own part I favour it; but we are not able to speak from experience, and therefore we may possibly be acting unwisely in passing it at once. A little time for further reflection, and some experience, may show us the unwisdom. Passing from the Bill as a whole, I wish to say that in Committee I shall endeavour to get inserted a clause—which I hope the Government will assist in getting carried—to amalgamate the city constituencies. I do not think there is much in the arguments of the honourable member for Dunedin South against that proposal. It seems absurd that the mere width of a street should create a division in an electorate where there is perfect community of interests. In such cases I do not see why the country should be put to the increased trouble and expense that a multiplicity of electorates causes, and I therefore trust the House will agree to amalgamate the city electorates. I know that in Dunedin the feeling in favour of it is very strong, and I believe it is so in the other cities. I trust the Government will not oppose it. One word, before I sit down, as to the proposals of this Bill specially affecting the Maoris. I sympathize very much with what the Native members have said in protesting against the abolition of the South Island Native electorate. It has been suggested that the Natives could vote for European representatives: but that would simply mean their elimination as far as having any voice or influence in this House is concerned. The Maoris are a separate race from us, with distinct institutions of their own, with distinct modes of thought, with distinct interests; and if they are not represented here by themselves they will not be represented at all. I trust the House will not countenance the insidious proposal to put the Maoris and the Europeans on the same footing, because that would be an ingenious method of eliminating the Maori race—the taking-away of their political power, and the taking-away of their lands, and their having to be maintained by the State as paupers. I strongly protest against the taking-away of the South Island Native seat. There is no sympathy and no community of interest between the South Island Natives and those in the North Island. I believe there is more diversity between the North Island Maoris and those in the South than there is between the Maoris and the Europeans. If the Maoris in the South are not represented here by a member of their own they will not be represented at all, and therefore they will be disfranchised. I trust the House will agree with the contention of the Maori members that the Natives should be allowed to retain their present number of representatives. They want them; there is no one to help them here unless they are here to help themselves. They have powerful enemies in this House and out of it. The Maoris should certainly have their present full quantum of members to take care of their rights; their little influence and power in Parliament should not be lessened, for in their own interest they want it all.

Mr. Taipua

Mr. PARATA.—Before the Bill goes into Committee, I have something further to say. I am altogether opposed to the present measure. It reminds me of this: of a man being sentenced to be hanged, and before the day fixed for execution some one comes and takes him to where the rope is suspended and tells him to put his head through the noose and strangle himself. The noose being prepared to strangle twenty-five members of this House, it is proposed to include one of the Maori members in that number. This proposal is to put a premature end to a number of members in this House. The Bill is not to come into force for three years, and therefore it puts an end to those honourable members three years before their time. It will have the effect of disheartening those honourable members who know that their political career is to be cut short in three years' time, and will deter them from doing their best for their constituents. I will now speak as to the manner in which the measure affects the Native people. It is proposed, at the end of three years, to take away the Maori representative of the South Island, and afterwards there can only be three Maori members in this House. The honourable member for the Western Maori District has already clearly explained to the House that it would be absolutely impossible for him or any person representing that district to go to the South Island and do justice to the Natives there. If the proposal to take away the member for the South Island Natives were carried, I should earnestly pray that the House would strike out the South Island altogether, and leave the Natives there without any representation. The Maoris in that district will then ask the Government to return to them the management of their lands, and that no Commissioners or Europeans of any kind should be appointed to administer their affairs; they will insist that the management of their lands shall be returned to them, and no longer be left in the hands of the Public Trustee. There is a Bill before the House now which proposes to give a great deal of power to that officer, and I shall consider it my duty to oppose that measure, because it is not just to the Natives. Sir, I had intended when the Bill went into Committee to move certain amendments, but I have just been informed of a fair proposal, by way of compromise, which has been suggested, and it will not be necessary for me to detain the House much longer with my remarks. I may say this, however: that, so far as the good of the Maoris is concerned, the Maoris derive no very great benefit from having representatives sitting in this House. The main thing, however, is this: that they should have some one to represent them in the House. It is true that, if the Maori members of this House support one side, complaint will be made that that is so. It is true that the Native members have been in the habit of voting on one side; but the reason for their doing so has been this: They have been led to believe that the measures for which they voted in block were for the benefit of their people, and that induced them to vote in that manner. But the fact of their having done so has often been used as an argument against their being in this House. But, as I have already stated, the four Maori members cannot do much for the benefit of the Natives in this House, because they are outnumbered by the ninety-one European representatives. If it be proposed to take away one Native member for the sake of saving £150, I think that is a very small saving to be considered. Very large sums of public money are wasted and spent in other directions which are not likely to prove so beneficial to the colony. This is the reason why I think the Maori Representation Act should not be interfered with for the sake of so small a saving. Seeing that the Maoris are represented by a separate Act, I do not think that Act should be repealed. As, however, the honourable gentleman in charge of the Bill has made an alteration, I have nothing further to say on this matter.

Dr. Fitchett

Mr. SEDDON.—Sir, the concluding remarks of the last speaker point clearly to some arrangement having been come to as between the Government and the Natives; and I will leave it to the Premier, under the circumstances, whether it would not be right that, whatever compromise has been promised to them, the House should be taken into his confidence; and I trust that when the honourable gentleman at the head of the Government is replying he will give the House the explanation which, I think, in justice should be given.

Major ATKINSON.—I will do so.

Mr. SEDDON.—I must say this, Sir: It is to be regretted somewhat that arrangements of that nature should be made as between members of the House and the Government when a Bill has been debated, when others have debated it the same as I have, and have taken objection to that particular part of the Bill. I think any compromise or arrangement that is made should be made on the floor of the House, after the matter has been considered by the Government, when the head of the Government should tell the whole House, and not any private member who is specially interested in the arrangement. I believe other concessions have been asked for; and, if the Premier had only consulted honourable members and met them in a fair and impartial manner in regard to the objections made by myself and others to the Bill as it now stands, a great deal of time could have been saved, and would have been saved. The honourable gentleman at the head of the Government must be aware that there are specific objections, and it is not the Bill as a whole that many object to. There are specific grounds on which honourable members object, which were pointed out by them during the debate yesterday. The position in which I saw this Bill to-day was at the head of the Order Paper, and that proved to me conclusively that the Premier had laid—if I may use the term—a trap; that he was desirous of entrapping members on this side of the House. He wanted it to be said, if we walked into this trap, that we were guilty of obstruction and wanted to delay business; and he wanted to make capital of what he was doing in the eyes of the country. But I say this: I will fight if fighting is necessary, and I will speak when I think that to speak may be of good service; but I will not wilfully and blindly walk into a trap, which I believe this to be. What other reasons could there be for the Premier to have placed this Bill at the head of the Order Paper to-day? We have several measures of equal importance—I believe, of greater importance—that we passed some weeks ago, to be considered in Committee. Two or three of them were passed at the end of last week, and we have seen nothing more of them; I find they are below the others on the Order Paper. We last week passed the Government Railways Bill, and I find it is the second order of the day for to-day. Why was not that put at the head of the Order Paper? Why should the House not go into Committee on that Bill if it was not, as I have said, that the Premier desired to provoke us, as it were, to hostility by bringing up the Representation Bill to the top of the Order Paper? The matter is, to my mind, of too much importance to be treated in this manner. What I may say upon the Bill, so far as its further progress is concerned, will be in the direction of criticizing it in a fair and impartial way, and not with a view of provoking hostility from the Government or those who are acting with the Government, but with a view to letting the people in the Colony of New Zealand know that by the passing of this measure they are being deprived of their just rights, and that, if it be passed, and the reduction of members as mentioned in the Bill become law, a large portion of New Zealand will be without its representation. I say without representation;—and a serious wrong is being done. Another thing which struck me as rather peculiar was the form of the motion moved by the Premier. I believe the motion now before the Chair—and you will correct me, Sir, if I am wrong—is that the House go into Committee “presently” on this Bill. Now, there is a taunt in that phrase “to go into Committee presently.” That means that, if we carried the motion without debate, the next three orders would be attended by the same motion, that they should be committed “presently.” I ask, is it reasonable, or treating the subject with that importance which it demands, that the Premier should move that motion, and ask the House to consider any other Bill in Committee this evening? Surely, in the case of a Bill of so much importance, considering the amendments which have been given notice of, it would have been quite sufficient for the Premier had he simply moved the question that the House do go into Committee on the Bill. But it was made “presently” to taunt. It was done with that view by the Premier, and he wished still further to provoke hostility. I have said I will not be provoked into obstruction as far as this Bill is concerned, but I shall debate it on its merits, and say what I have to say fearlessly; and with a view of profiting the country I may, at this stage of my remarks, notify that I intend to move as an amendment to the motion of the Premier the following: “That it is inadvisable that the Representation Bill proceed further than its second reading until the establishment of some suitable form of local self-government shall have rendered dependence on Parliament for local works unnecessary.” Had I moved a direct motion that the further consideration of this Bill should be postponed, the Premier might have taken objection to an amendment of that kind, and have made the consideration of this question a party question. The rule of party would be that they must vote with the Government; but, Sir, in moving this amendment, I would point out that we simply say that at this stage of public business, at this stage of the session, and considering that there are other measures of greater importance to be brought forward, it would be well if this Bill should go no further than its second reading. But we do more than that. By proposing this amendment we put before the country and before the Government the fact that, in the opinion of this House, a question of essential importance to be now considered is that of local self-government. I take it to be of far greater importance to deal with that question than to pass legislation which is not required to have effect for three years to come. What is required at the present time is that we should apply ourselves to the serious consideration of the financial affairs of New Zealand. We know that a wrong exists, and it is our right and duty to apply a remedy; but I believe that to pass this measure would be more iniquitous and a greater wrong to the colony than was the abolition of the provinces in 1875. Underlying this Bill there is a far greater principle than there was underlying our legislation at the time of abolition; but we are just met on similar grounds in reference to the passing of this measure to those we were met with when the provinces were abolished. We were told that in place of the Provincial Councils the Government would provide local self-government of a more satisfactory and less costly character. The Premier was then a member of a Ministry that told the House that the time had arrived when there should never be heard in this House the name of a road or a bridge. But since the abolition of the provinces it has been nothing but roads and bridges in this House. It has been a question of constantly raising money and diverting it from legitimate purposes to political purposes; and that has been the curse of New Zealand. So it will be if we pass this measure in its present form. If passed it will have just as bad an effect as the abolition of the provinces. A return laid on the table the other day showed the administrative cost of local government throughout New Zealand; and what does it prove? If any honourable gentleman would take the trouble to read it he would see there is an amount with respect to local-government expenditure which would be quite sufficient, if saved, to make the deficiency that exists in the colonial finances at the present time. Local government we have none. The local government that we have has a tendency to increase in cost. Instead of decreasing the number of local bodies we are increasing them. Every little centre is crying out for decentralisation in order that it may have its own little local body, thus creating extra cost of administration. The number of local bodies is constantly increasing, and the number of members is constantly increasing. We have Land, Education, Road, River, Harbour, and Charitable-aid Boards, County Councils, School Committees, and so on—why, their name is legion. That is all running away with the public money. There is no tendency at all to stop this sort of thing. We had the Roads and Bridges Construction Act, and I would say to the Premier that that measure was a most useful measure, and if it had been carried out it would have met the requirements of the colonists in the sparsely-settled districts; but it was abused.

Major ATKINSON.—You supported a Government whose cardinal point it was to repeal that Act.

Mr. SEDDON.—The Premier does me an injustice, because I was one of those who voted against the repeal of that measure, and I may tell the Premier that I went so far as to say that if the then Government pushed on that repealing measure, and another measure which was introduced by them in the same direction, I would sever my connection with the party. I am not saying anything I cannot prove. I regarded that measure as the most perfect that has been introduced, so far as local-government works are concerned, since the abolition of the provinces. But the last shred of what was given to the country at the time of passing that measure has now gone. Then we had the introduction of the Local Bodies' Finance and Powers Bill, and we had the Local Bodies' Loans Bill and the Government Loans to Local Bodies Bill; and then we were to have the local finance placed on a satisfactory footing by subsidies. We find now that these subsidies are withdrawn, a reduction to the extent of one-half is made, and I suppose that the whole of the measures dealing with local self-government will be swept away; and we are to have nothing in their place. But we have this Bill, and if it is carried we shall take from the people the last opportunity they have of getting their local wants attended to. I cannot be a party to legislation in this direction, particularly when I remember that the people themselves are not aware of what is going on. I say that advisedly. What knowledge have they in the remoter parts of the colony that the number of the members of this House is to be reduced to seventy? What knowledge have they of the proposal, which has been given notice of to-day, that the number shall be reduced to fifty? Are we to be parties to legislation of that kind, when the people do not know of what is proposed? Why, there is hardly a member of this House who knows what the effect will be. There is no provision in the Bill for the readjustment of the electoral boundaries. Surely that point requires consideration. There is nothing here to provide that there shall be a census taken before the Act is put into operation. If the Bill comes into operation as proposed, it will come into force just a year before there will be a census. A great injustice was done to some parts of the colony in having the representation as it is now fixed on the last census. There are many parts of the colony that were entitled to more representation than they have under the Act of last session. That is a point that should have engaged the attention of the Government before they brought this Bill in. It is not too late yet for the Government to consider the points that I have just raised. Then, there is the question, raised by the member for Waikato, What quota are the country districts to have so as to equalise them with the towns? That is a most important point. I put it to the country members and to the town members: is that question to be reopened? We know what the quota in the case of town and country districts now is, but we do not know what may occur if this Bill gets into Committee. If the country members are strong, it may be altered as is proposed by the honourable member; if the town members are the stronger, the quota in force at the present time may be reduced. The Bill, so far as it goes, is silent upon that point; and I ask, is it fair that, having settled this matter last session, it should now be reopened? I think that the Government should give us a decided intimation as to the course that they intend to pursue. Will they support the proposal of the honourable member for Waikato? Being a Government supporter, I dare say that there are a good many men on that side who will assist him; but then, again, the Government have a large town representation behind them who may object to this proposal, and it may be that we who live in the country districts shall find that we have lost the quota that we have at the present time. It is on account of this uncertainty that I say a serious wrong may be done to the people, and I say that it is wrong to throw a Bill down on the floor of this House and raise again feelings of jealousy and ill-feeling that can only demoralise the House, and especially, I say, it is wrong to do it at a time when there is no necessity for it. Three years hence would be plenty of time to deal with it. There is no necessity to deal with it now, just at the commencement of a new Parliament. Seeing that there are measures of far greater importance awaiting our consideration, it would be well for all parties if this matter had been let alone for the present. Then, as this matter has been brought before us, I would say that there is another question which should be dealt with. In the mining districts—and the Minister of Justice will bear me out in this—we have a far greater percentage of adult population than is seen in any other part of the colony. The electoral rolls for the mining constituencies prove conclusively that it is so. If you want further proof take the elections; take the number of votes that were polled at the contested elections in the mining districts, and you will find that they showed much heavier polling than in any of the other districts of the colony. That shows that we have a large adult male population. Then, we have a greater population of producers; and that is a matter that ought to weigh with the House. They are producers and they are large consumers, and they have not, and will not have under the provisions of this Bill, that amount of representation which they are fairly entitled to. I mean to move, when this Bill goes into Committee, in the direction of giving them fairer representation. I am, however, prepared to accept the position as it now is; but, if we are forced to go on with this Bill, I will do what I consider is right to the people who sent me here, by endeavouring to secure, so far as I am able, that in the mining districts the population necessary to secure a member shall be less than in other parts of the colony; and, Sir, I simply claim that on account of their having a greater male population and a greater number of producers and consumers. Now, then, as to the division that was made by the Commissioners. Did that give satisfaction? Was it carried out as it was intended when the Representation Act was passed last session? I will undertake to say that there is not a single member of the House who was here previously who will admit that the alteration of the boundaries of his electorate has not disturbed that confidence and good feeling that should exist between the representative and those whom he represents. I do not think there is one member who can say that he was satisfied with the divisions that were made. Then, again, I would ask, has the law been given effect to as it was intended to be by the Legislature? Has there, in the electoral districts, been community of interest, and have the natural boundaries, taking into consideration the geographical features of the country, been dealt with in a manner satisfactory to the House or the colony? I say, unhesitatingly, no. Why, there is one member here who told us that there were three centres within his electorate; that each differed so much from the others that neither one nor the other put up a candidate, and that, owing to disunion, owing to the want of community of interest as between the three sections, they allowed an outsider to walk into the House without a contest. Is that representation on a fair basis? What did the Minister of Justice tell us yesterday? Is he satisfied with the electoral boundaries of the districts in Otago? Clearly not. He told us that the division had been made without community of interest having been studied, and I think he said that, as the law stood, it was impossible to have the boundaries made so as to include community of interest. If this applies when we have one representative to every 6,000 of population, how much more will it apply when we have one representative to every 9,000 of population? This contention is unanswerable, and there should be clearly proved to the House and the colony the absolute necessity for the wrench that you intend to give, before it is given. There have been no arguments given why we should do what is intended to be done by the passing of this measure. I say, again, that the electors and the candidates should come face to face. There is nothing like the public platform, the friendly meeting that takes place, and the mutual interchange of confidence or of opinion during an election; and I say that if you carry the measure before us and reduce the number of members to seventy it is impossible that the candidates and electors can come face to face. In that case, what is the inevitable result? The result is this: that the Press of the colony will wield a tremendous power during elections, because those who do not meet the candidate must and do read, and will be biased and swayed by what they read. The Premier, I believe, knows full well that the passing of this measure will have that effect, and, at the present moment, he and those who are with him have the Press of the colony supporting them. The Premier knows the power that the Press wields, and that that power will be used to the benefit of himself and his party; hence he does not even wish that honourable members should meet their constituents. He told us the other day that it was the duty of honourable members to see their constituents at least once every year; but I say he is blowing hot and cold, because he is making it next to impossible for a member or even a candidate to see the whole of his electors. I said that the Press had great power for good or evil. I do not wish to cavil with the Press of New Zealand. I have said on the floor of this House and elsewhere that New Zealand might well be proud of its Press; but I do say this: that, owing to the depression which has existed, the Press has taken a too gloomy view of the situation, and, biased by that view, I think they have in this case recommended a reduction of members, and have impressed upon their readers that which, in the long-run, will prove injurious to the colony. I do not say, and I will not have it said, that the Press is corrupt; but I do say that the Press at the present time in the colony is swayed, and, in some instances, influenced, by those whom I may term the importers—those interested in land transactions, and those interested in financial institutions. I do believe that they have had greater weight with the Press than have the people generally; and, feeling that, and that more power will be given to the Press by the passing of this measure, I would ask that the Press should have an opportunity of reflecting what the full effect of this measure will be if it becomes law. I know several cases where some of the leading journals, that during and shortly after the elections advocated the reduction of the number of members, have since that time altered their opinions. If time is given and fair attention is paid to the retrenchment that is necessary, and to placing the finances of the colony in a sound position, I will undertake to say that the Press will see that it is inadvisable, under the existing circumstances, to have the reduction in the number of members that is mentioned in this measure. As I said, the Press had great power during the elections, and I believe that that power was used in some instances to the detriment of the people of the colony; but for this I do not blame the Press to the same extent as I blame those partisans who very skilfully and adroitly threw dust into the eyes of the people, and especially into the eyes of the working-men and of the middle-classes of this colony. In some instances we found the working-men voting with those who represented the wealthy financial institutions and the landed interests and the absentees, to secure the return of particular candidates. What was the bond of union? Was it in the interest of the working-men, was it in the interest of trade or of local industries, that they were working together? No; the artisans were simply being used. Why, Sir, in one election in Wellington a gentleman in a very good position here said to me, "I went, in the interests of one of the candidates, to the committee to see how it was formed. I took two or three with me. We had a look into the room; it was quite enough for us—too much working-man, We left them and formed an outside committee and worked with them. They did not know it, but we jointly returned our man." And Wellington is not the only place where the same thing was done. Then, I ask the question, what was the reason for it? The reason was this: that they desired to secure the return to this House of members pledged to support that which, to my mind, is contrary to the welfare of the colony. And, Sir, they have succeeded. First of all, they had the power of the Press with them. Then, dust was thrown into the eyes of the bulk of the people, and of the working-classes in particular, and we have now the result of this wrong-doing. We have Bill after Bill brought on the floor of this House, the tendencies of which, and the effect of which, will do a wrong for all time. I hold that we have had ten years of fair, good, honest, solid work done in the interests of the people; and now, at one session, before even the Press or the House has had time to reflect, and before the people are awakened to the fact, Bill after Bill, measure after measure, is to be put through this House without fair consideration being given to them; and if we attempt to give them fair consideration or to debate them we are told that we are guilty of obstruction. No argument has been used on the other side at all. There is nothing but the "hob-nailed boot:" "It must go through: I have a majority. How dare you obstruct! How dare you speak your mind! Be silent, Sir!" And there is a subservient majority who, without rhyme or reason, without themselves being able to give a reason for the action they take, are voting by fifty at a time for the passing of these measures. I undertake to say that if time were given for reflection, and if members of this House were to go back to their constituents, and were asked at meetings of their constituents to give the reasons for some of their votes, they would not be in a position to do so; and they would come back to the House next session and be only too glad to undo that which they are doing now; and, instead of saying that those who wish fairly to debate these measures are obstructionists, I believe they would tender to us their sincere thanks for having pointed out the wrong that was being done. Shall I give a further proof of how things were worked at the last elections? There was what was known as the Financial Reform Association. I saw one of the schedules of questions submitted to each candidate by that association; and I saw the name of the candidate signed to it with answers "Yes" or "No," as the case might be, or an expression of doubt where there was a doubt involved, although I am bound to say that, in the instance I saw, the answers were very straightforward. And what was the meaning of that? It meant that that association was composed of importers; of those who represent the absentee interests in this colony; of those who have filched from the people the land of the colony.

Mr. Seddon

Mr. Seddon

Mr. MONK.—In what part of the colony?

Mr. SEDDON.—In Auckland.

Mr. MONK.—Then it is not true.

Mr. SEDDON.—Sir, I have had an expression used to me on the floor of this House which ought not to have been used, and I ask that it may be withdrawn.

Mr. SPEAKER.—The honourable member who used that expression is not at liberty to apply such a remark to another honourable member, and it must be withdrawn.

Mr. MONK.—I did not apply it to the honourable member, but I used it because he was not acquainted with this association, and I am.

Mr. SEDDON.—An honourable gentleman on my right says that it is true. I do not apply these words to the honourable gentleman offensively, but I believe it to be true, absolutely true, because in other parts of the colony we know individual members of this association, and I know that the institutions I have referred to were chiefly represented on it. The fact is that the Premier of the colony has now in his Cabinet-room a list of every candidate's answers to that schedule, and he has nothing to do but to turn to their speeches and to those answers, and they are bound and gagged by the pledges they have given. It is an absolute minority, representing an enormous power, and that power has been used to return certain members; and, as they have given those pledges hastily, they have been trapped, and that power is used in passing this and other measures to the detriment of the bulk of the people; and we are asked to be silent, and to sit down tamely and let this be done without protesting against it. My nature will not allow me to do that. I say that any honourable member who sits in this House after obtaining his seat in that way is failing in his duty to himself as an honest man in being bound by pledges so extracted. I say the questions submitted in that paper are degrading, and I, as a public man, believe that there are a great majority in this House who refused, under circumstances of such a nature, to answer the queries put by that association. Why did not that association send its representatives on to the public platform to put these questions? Because they did not dare to do so; because they knew that the working-men, the bulk of the people, would have known the moving spirit behind, and that any candidate who had received such support or given such answers as were given in that schedule would be at the bottom of the poll on the election-day. Therefore there are circumstances connected with the position in which the House is placed to-night to have the right to be publicly stated; and I state them not with a view of obstruction, but with a view to ask honourable members to reason the thing to themselves before they commit the colony to the certain detriment to be caused by this measure. Yesterday, again, we had a spectacle in this House—one such as I have never seen before, and hope I shall never see again—of a gentleman who, from his years and from the respect he has had in this colony, I should have thought would not have been guilty of doing such a thing—going round the House before the debate had commenced ten minutes with a card in his hand, and asking, "Will you vote for this Bill or not?" And members who had given these answers to the questions put by the Financial Reform Association said, "Yes; I am pledged to it. I do not care about its passing this session; but I am pledged to it." Had it not been for the honourable member for Dunedin East drawing attention to that fact I believe that every member in the House would have been canvassed, and then he would have been doubly bound—by what he had replied to the Reform Association, and also by the consent extracted from him by the Government. Then, what is the position the Government take up? "We care not what arguments you use, or whether you approve or do not of the passing of this measure. We have a majority to pass it. We have got the second reading, and we will see it through in spite of all reason."

If that is the way in which we are to legislate, I ask, of what material is this House made? If members are to vote under circumstances of that kind, the sooner we have an appeal to the people again the better it will be for the colony. But I think honourable members will yet listen to reason, and will not, at the wish of the Government, and of those interests to which I have referred, allow this Bill to go further than the second reading. But it appears to me that no time is to be given to us. Why is this Bill to be committed to-day, when we only passed its second reading this morning? Can the Government show us another case of a Bill of such importance being attempted to be hurried through in such a way as this Bill has been hurried? I say, unhesitatingly, that there is not another instance of the kind in the history of the colony. Sir, the Minister of Education yesterday took exception to some remarks which I had made on this question. The honourable gentleman said there was no force in the arguments I used, and that they were fallacious, and, I think, he kept the House for half an hour in endeavouring to refute one or two arguments I had used. One of the arguments adduced by him was this: that the Representation Act of last session, under which the last election was held, was not fairly the opinion of the last Parliament. He went even further than that, and told the House that last Parliament had decided that the number of members should be reduced to seventy-one. Well, I was somewhat astonished at such an assertion being made when there is the statute, there is the number of members fixed by the Act of last session at ninety-five, and there is the absolute fact that ninety-five members are sitting here. How then can the honourable member say that the will of last Parliament was that the number of members should be reduced to seventy-one, when ninety-five members have been returned to the House? I say the will of the last Parliament was that there should be ninety-five members; and it was said of the last Parliament that it was one of the best that the country had had for years. When it has been decided by a majority that the number should not be reduced, why should we now, without the people knowing anything about it, endeavour to reduce the number? Then, again, the Minister of Education was inconsistent, for, if he considers that seventy-one is the right number, why does he not give full effect to his views by asking that this measure shall have effect on its passing? Why should the number of members remain for the next three years at twenty-five more than is required for the good of the country, at a cost which will not be recouped to the country by the services they render here? The argument was so glaringly inconsistent that I was astonished at the honourable member using it. Being in a minority, and having entered my protest against the passing of the measure, I am always willing to admit that a majority should rule; and if a majority say that number shall be altered I shall be prepared to take my chance in the country if an appeal is made to it; and then, whatever result is arrived at, I shall be satisfied. But I am not satisfied to legislate three years ahead. We are told by the Minister of Education, "If you do not pass the Bill this session, it will never go through this Parliament." Is not that trifling with the question? Is not that a species of argument which we should at once repel? I at once say that, to my mind, nothing was ever said to honourable members in this House, who think and act for themselves, that was so much to their detriment as the assertion of the Minister of Education under that head. It must be one of two things: either he was afraid that, on reflection, the House would decide to retain its present number; or else he was afraid that, unless this Bill were passed, it would be detrimental to himself and his colleagues. First as to reflection. When the country knows what is being done—and the passing of the second reading will be an indication on that score—honourable members will come back next session with a knowledge of the will of the people; and then let those honourable gentlemen bring down this Bill as one of their first measures and insist upon its being passed, and I, for one, shall be prepared to give it fair consideration. But if that is not what is required—if it is, as pointed out by the honourable member for Te Aro, that it is simply to be a whip held over the heads of members of the House, to be used with no sparing hand by the Premier, in place of the "hobnailed boot"—why should we allow this to be done? Why should the Government be allowed to say to the House, if they want to pass some special measure of their own, that the House will have to agree to it? Depend upon it, this is what will be done: The Government will tell the House that it is entitled to a dissolution, because this Parliament was brought into existence by Sir Robert Stout and the late Government, and the present Government can constitutionally ask for a dissolution. And, Sir, if that dissolution is granted, well, these twenty-five members cannot come back. The usual rule is that thirty out of the ninety members retire from the effect of public opinion, and then it means there are only the six members of the Government and fourteen returned of the old members, and they can work a new party just at their own sweet will. Why is this wanted? I say that the secret of it is this: that the head of the present Government, and one who is with him of the late continuous party that misgoverned New Zealand for seventeen long years, come day, go day, in the Ministry or out, the same continuous party ruled New Zealand for seventeen years, and that was when there was a small number of members in this House. Since there has been a larger number we have had, and, I believe, in the interests of the colony, more frequent changes of Government, and we have had Governments amenable to reason, Governments amenable to honourable members in this House; and I believe the legislation has been better and more beneficial to the country since the number has been increased. I believe, myself, that the passing of this measure and the reduction of members would give such a power to the Government of the day that they would hold office as long as they liked, and that the country would suffer. I cannot efface from my memory what occurred in 1879, when we know that for a period of fourteen or fifteen days a no-confidence motion was kept down on the Order Paper, never allowed to come up, until an arrangement was made by four members of this House, signed, sealed, and delivered. The wording of it was as nice a little compact, I think, as ever was drawn. Certain conditions were stated, and these honourable members at that time said, "In consideration of the above being given effect to and being carried out by the Government, we bind ourselves to vote for and support them for the rest of the Parliament." Well, Sir, you get seventy-one members or seventy members: that means sixty-six members exclusive of the Native representation. You have six Ministers; and those who support them, in order to be in a majority, would be about thirty at least. What power would four or five men not have again if anything was required? Why, those members would dominate, and the Government would have to give way or leave the benches. I believe they would give way and remain on the benches. Now, what did that compact cost the country? It cost the country a quarter of a million of money. How far would that go in paying the twenty members we have had since? How far would the money go that has been lost to the country by full effect not being given to the Public Works Act? What number of members was there when the House passed the District Railways Bill originally, where lines were constructed through different parts of the colony simply to enhance private lands?—and then we find the colony has had to purchase them, but never had any profit given to us or given to the people in the shape of a return from the increased value given to the land through which these railways passed. I could go back for the last twenty years and point out Bill after Bill, by taking the Statute Book of the colony, that whilst there was a lesser number of members, and they were paid a smaller amount, the legislation was in the interest and for the benefit of particular sections in the colony, and to the detriment of the people generally. Now, I take the periods since 1881, since we have had an increased number of members, and I say that our legislation has been such that the colony has progressed. The condition of the working-class in New Zealand has considerably improved; but if we go back twenty years, to the old days of 1865, the time we are asked, the time we had seventy members, to the days when there were few members, there is no honourable member but will admit that the most serious wrong ever the colony laboured under was done during those years. What is this question as regards some of the Bills before us now? What is the meaning of that Railway Boards Bill? It means this: that the Government wish to bring down wages in this country. You talk to Cabinet Ministers and their supporters; they will tell you this very plainly and decisively: that labour is too high in New Zealand. That is the objection aimed at by the Financial Reform Association and the wire-pullers behind the scenes. If the colony hands over the railways to this Board without it having been distinctly provided that Parliament should have some control over the wages-men, every man's wages will be brought down; and, if you bring down Government wages, that reacts on those who are employing labour privately. The whole of this legislation is intended for no other purpose. Sir, as one desiring to do justice to the bulk of the people, as one wishing that wealth should have its fair due, and that capital and labour should work together in harmony for the profit of both, I say, let us remain as we are. I believe there is no real reason for complaint; that this depression will go away like the mist from a mountain-top. It only requires to retrench in a fair and equitable way. Readjust taxation so as to put a fair proportion on those who are able to bear it, and not, as I believe we shall have, too great a burden placed on the shoulders of the working-class, and too little on the shoulders of the wealthy people who are best able to bear most. We have all to face that yet. It would have been better for the Government, instead of taking time up with this measure, if it had endeavoured to balance the finance, if it had increased the property-tax a little more and rearranged the tariff. I believe that would have been better for all concerned. The fact of having grappled this financial question with a bold and determined hand would have raised our bonds in London instead of their coming down as they have been doing for the last two months. The Minister of Education quoted Westgarth on this point; but it is six weeks old. I take the telegrams and private telegrams, and I say that our bonds are gradually coming down. I believe we shall see them down to 90. If they had increased the property-tax and the Customs and had equalised taxation properly, I believe our securities would have risen. We have a tariff which was created by the Government, the same as in 1879. The Premier then told us we were on the verge of ruin; that had it not been for the Bank of England being called into requisition we should have had to repudiate. He said publicly, and I believe privately, that we must bring things down to a lower level before we begin to reconstruct. I do not believe in bringing down at all. It is bearing down enough when we have men working at 4s. 6d. a day, out of which they find it impossible, on account of wet days, to send any money to their wives and families, and these have to apply for relief to the Charitable Aid Boards. What more bringing-down than that do we require? I say let us rise, and let us equalise the finances. Let us do a little in the way of public works. If New Zealand were being run by a private company, that company would never, under existing circumstances, endeavour to do what the Government of to-day are doing, and what this Legislature is insisting on being done. Works must be found. A revision of the tariff should take place so as to encourage local industries. We should not attempt to cripple one of the chief items of export, which we do by the present railway-tariff. Though there is a deficiency in the working of the railway-lines, now is not the time, when the product of the soil is so low, to have this Railway Board, and to increase our tariffs. And now, when there is a glut of labour, is not the time to reduce labour. I say things have gone low enough, in all truth, to have our securities at 90, and I believe they are still falling, and no attempt is made to equalise our finances. This House is asked to spend two days in discussing a measure which is not to have effect for three years. That proves clearly the insincerity of the Government and those who support them. With regard to the question of Maori representation, I understand that the Premier has given a promise that it shall not be decreased, and that the South Island shall have the same representation they have had for years. If that is the compromise that has been effected, it is a compromise in the interests of right and justice. The Natives in the South Island have at all times been our best friends. There are but a few now remaining of that noble race. Of all things they prize most, it is the fact that they have representation in this Chamber, and to take that away from them must cause heartburnings, and must make them feel their position far more keenly than they have felt it hitherto. The west coast of the Middle Island, I think the most wealthy part of New Zealand, was given over to the colony for a paltry £600.—(No.)—The State records prove it. Lands were reserved for them. We have had cases in the House, which I regret should have occurred, where we find the Ministry of the day, and that under a protest from the South Island representative, where one Wanganui block of 100,000 acres in extent was sold to a Government supporter—I question if some of the Government themselves were not interested in the transaction—it was sold, I say, for 2s. 6d. an acre.

Mr. Seddon

An Hon. MEMBER.—Two shillings.

Mr. SEDDON.—I thought it was 2s. 6d. That block of land was in the London market this last year, and I saw an absolute refusal of £20,000. There are other reserves still in the South Island belonging to the Native race, and if they lose their representation they may lose the balance of these reserves. We have heard of the Native troubles in the past, where the Natives, sooner than suffer the wrong the white people of this colony were doing to them, with the sword fought for their rights. Serious bloodshed and disaster occurred, and from that time to this it has entailed upon the people of New Zealand a very heavy penalty. We have to pay at the present time for eleven millions of money expended upon Native wars. We have that recurring penalty year after year. Now, Sir, when the Native race desire to work in harmony with us, when they come here to help us not only to legislate for the Natives but to assist in legislating for the white people, now we are to commence a further disturbance and further uneasiness. We know the question of dealing with Native lands has to be reviewed this session, and before we commence to review that legislation the first thing the Natives are met with is that one of their members must go. That is dictation—intimidation of such a character that I, for one, resent. I will ask the Government, seeing that the Maori member for the South Island is an opponent and has been a consistent opponent to the Government, I ask the Government, is it a manly or fair way of fighting to say, whilst they are going to deal with those lands, "There shall be a rod hanging over your head all the time—your seat may be cut away by a Bill passed and forced upon you"? I am positive the Government have never given that consideration to this vast question which it is entitled to, or it would never have attempted to take away this Maori representation. The only one benefit that I can see at the present time which has occurred through debating this question is the fact that the Government, I understand, now have gone back on their proposal to reduce the Maori representation; and shall it be said hereafter that debating a question, and giving reasons why a thing should not be done, has no effect, when an effect has been so apparent in this case, the force of argument and the reasons given by honourable members having caused the Government to give way on that material point of the Bill? Having given way in that respect, I hope they will give way in others, and that this measure will not go further than its second reading. If the Government insist, by the majority they have, on carrying it further, I shall simply protest; and from time to time, when I think amendments are necessary in the interests of the colony, I shall move those amendments. But, in conclusion, I wish the Government and honourable members who have listened to me to be made aware of this fact: that I am not obstructing the passing of this measure. I say that the contention that it should be passed in the first session of the new Parliament is fallacious; and I say that every Representation Act that has been passed has been passed in the last session of an expiring Parliament. The Acts of 1881 and 1887 are the most recent instances. Yet now the Minister of Education, in the face of these facts, says that a Representation Bill should pass in the first session of a new Parliament, and when members have not had time for reflection. That is asking and advising the House to do a serious wrong, and I shall not be a party to it; and with a view of protesting, and with the view of urging that the question of local self-government should be dealt with and made a more prominent feature in the Government programme, I move this amendment: That it is inadvisable that the Representation Bill proceed further than its second reading until the establishment of some suitable form of local self-government shall have rendered dependence on Parliament for local works unnecessary.

Mr. PERCEVAL.—I second the amendment. I rise because I do not like to give a silent vote on this measure, and I will endeavour to give my reasons in as few words as possible, for I think the debate has been continued long enough. I am reluctant to oppose this Bill, because the Government regard it as one of their retrenchment proposals. I see, in the Financial Statement, considerable stress was laid upon the passing of this measure. The Government say that this session they propose to reduce the number of members to seventy, and that next session they will submit a Bill to the House altering the mode of election and making other necessary reforms of the electoral laws. And that is my first reason for opposing this Bill—because I regard it as fragmentary legislation. It seems to me to be beginning at the wrong end to bring down a fragment of such an important set of proposals as this is; and, if we are to judge from this Bill as to how the mode of election is to be altered, we must come to the conclusion that the mode of election is to be made as retrogressive as this Bill is, and the Government may propose to bring down some measure to take away the residential qualification. It seems to me that it would only be consistent with what the Government are now doing to take away what is generally known as manhood suffrage. I therefore think that to vote on a Bill such as we have before us is to vote in the dark, and I certainly shall not do so. I fail to see how the Government should lay such stress upon this measure as being likely to bring about retrenchment, as the retrenchment cannot take effect for three years. I have been astounded at some of the statements made during this debate. We have heard Ministers say from their places that the principal saving to be effected by this Bill will not be in the honorarium which it will save, but in the reduction of the demands made on the public chest. Well, that seems to me to be admitting a most lamentable state of corruption, and, if that reason exists, we ought to go still further and reduce the number to fifty, and even go further still and say we will not have a Parliament at all, but that the Premier shall be a dictator. To admit such a state of corruption as that is most lamentable, and I begin to ask myself if I am carrying out my duty to my constituents, because I have yet made no request; and I hope I shall not have to do so. I am astounded to hear Ministers give an argument in favour of this Bill that it will tend to stop what is termed "log-rolling." Now, I confess that if I had to vote on such a measure as this on the eve of a general election I should be quite content to vote for a reasonable reduction in the number of members, but probably not so large a reduction as is proposed here. I would certainly support a reasonable reduction; and I will. But I have a twofold reason for opposing this Bill now, or, rather, I ask myself two questions in regard to it. The first is, Are the numbers to be reduced? and the second is, Are we to deal with the question now? I oppose it because I think it is entirely unnecessary to deal with the question now. In three years' time the circumstances of the colony may, and I hope they will, have altered very considerably. I hope that by that time we shall have passed through this period of depression, that things will be more prosperous, and that the population of the colony will have considerably increased. I hope that then we shall have our mining industries developed, that we shall have a protective tariff in operation, and that we shall be experiencing the benefits of those changes. To do this now is, as I have said, entirely unnecessary. We might very well put the question off; and I think the argument is quite untenable that this measure stands a less chance of passing in three years' time than it has now. I have heard some honourable members say that we should pass this measure now while our election-pledges are green; but that seems to me to be one of the most lamentable confessions we could make, and I, for one, should certainly be very sorry to make it. Now, I wish to call attention to a matter which has just been touched on once or twice in discussing this measure, but upon which very little stress has been laid, so far. I can see that an attempt is going to be made to give more power to the country districts; I can see that an attack is going to be made on the town representation. Now, I have asked myself why that is; and I wish to call the attention of those honourable members who have been returned pledged to support local industries to this point: I cannot help thinking that this is an astute attempt to prevent the carrying-out of a protective policy. Speaking generally, it is correct to say that the country districts are opposed to any increase in the protective duties. There are notable exceptions to this, and I think, if the matter were put before them in its proper light, the country districts would see it would be to their advantage to have a protective tariff. We shall probably hear more of that next session when the matter is debated; but I feel assured that the country districts themselves are awakening to the fact that a protective tariff will benefit them equally with the artisans in our towns. Now, the Premier, next session, is going to tackle this question of the tariff, and he has told us that he hopes to be able to bring down proposals which will satisfy both the Free-traders and the Protectionists in this House. Sir, that is a very delusive hope; he will never be able to do it. I believe that the Premier is earnest in his desire to encourage local industries; but I defy him to bring down a tariff which will satisfy those of us who have been returned pledged to a protective tariff and the supporters he has behind him at the present time. Why, do we not see that the bulk of his supporters are the Free-trade party in this House? and how is he going to frame a tariff acceptable to the Protectionist section of the House, unless he throws over his Free-trade supporters and allies himself with the Protectionist section of the House? I cannot help thinking that the country members see that now is their opportunity, and that, if they can get a preponderance of power they will be able, in the event of an appeal to the country, to checkmate this policy of Protection. I invite all those members who are pledged to a policy of Protection to think over that. We have already had notice given of an amendment in the direction I have indicated—that is to say, for reducing the town representation—and that seems to me a very important thing, and quite sufficient, to my mind, to justify any honourable member, whatever his election-pledges may have been, in opposing this measure, because there is something underneath it. I made no election-pledge on this point. We have been told in the course of this debate that the country, from one end to the other, has demanded this. Now, the people in my district take as lively an interest in political questions as those in any part of New Zealand, and I think it is a somewhat remarkable fact, if there is such a general demand, that, in a large centre like Christchurch, I should never have been asked the question whether I was in favour of reducing the number of members. Probably, if I had been asked, I should have said Yes; and I think, if the present is the proper time to deal with the question, that we ought to reduce the number of members; but I say that the time to deal with this question has not arrived, and there is no necessity to deal with it now, and that this Bill, if passed, will remain a dead-letter on the Statute Book, and before the expiration of this Parliament we shall pass another Bill increasing the number of members. That is my firm conviction. It seems to me that there is very great force in the remarks which have been made on the question of local government. The two questions are most closely allied. If we are going to revert to a system of local self-government, then seventy members are too many; we can do with fifty. The two questions are so closely allied that we cannot deal with one without the other. Then, we have various other questions which all hinge upon this. We have the amalgamation of city electorates. We have the various changes which may or will be proposed in the electoral laws generally; and this is a mere fragment of a very important class of legislation; and it is unfair to deal with the question until we have the whole of the Government proposals before us. These are my reasons for opposing the Bill.

Mr. Seddon

Mr. BRUCE.—I have no wish to prolong this discussion; but I desire to say a few words in reference to some strictures which have been passed on the remarks I made last night. I have been accused of inconsistency in supporting a measure against which I myself urged some objections. Perhaps it would be as well that no member should support a measure that had any flaw, at least from his point of view, and he might not then be accused of inconsistency. But what I wish to point out is this: that the two measures of which I spoke went together in a wrong direction, and that one of them was only excusable as a temporary measure in the existing embarrassed financial position of the colony; and it was with the hope—and I gave expression to that hope—that that measure would be at some future time repealed that I gave the other my support. I still hold, notwithstanding the remarks which have been made during this debate, that the larger constituencies will presumably return larger men to the House—that is, if all were given an opportunity of contesting the seats. That, taken in connection with my contention last night, perfectly justifies the attitude I have taken up. If it were not that I recognise that this is an undesirable occasion for doing so, I should like to follow the honourable member for Kumara in what he said to-night. I have listened with great interest to his remarks. They have been a repetition of arguments which have been so repeatedly used on the floor of this House, particularly that in reference to the Government attempting to lower the wages of the working-men of this country. The honourable member asserted that the Government introduced their railway measure mainly for the purpose of reducing the wages of the working-men of this colony. How could the honourable member lend himself to such a statement? What are wages? How ought we to pay our working-men on these railways? We should give them the market value of their labour, I presume. If, for argument's sake, we engaged these men ten years ago, when wages were, say, 10s. a day, and if labour is only worth 5s. a day now, should we not reduce them? Or, conversely, if ten years ago we engaged these men at 5s. a day, and wages are now 10s. a day, should we not raise them to that level? I do not wish to go into the argument any further, because I recognise that the time is inopportune; but I will certainly do so if opportunity offers before the close of the session.

Mr. TAYLOR.—Since I last spoke on this question quite a new phase has been put upon this measure, so far as I am able to judge, by strong supporters of the Government. One honourable gentleman, who is a very strong supporter of the Government, indicated last night that, unless a large increase to the percentage were allowed to country districts, he should feel it his duty to vote against the third reading of the Bill. When this measure was first before the House I voted against the principle of the Bill, because I believe that population should be the basis, and the only basis, of representation. Seeing that these honourable members are desirous of having a larger percentage,—I presume to represent sheep or land,—I certainly shall vote against it; and I trust that those honourable gentlemen who represent the city constituencies—and I know there are a great number of them—will not countenance any increase of the percentage. I presume the Premier is aware of the fact. Whether this is going to be a party question or not we have not had the slightest indication. If the Premier had stated what he promised to state—namely, the course he intended to take with reference to this measure—he would have saved much of this talk. If the measure is to go into Committee, and is to be dealt with fairly by both sides of the House, I am prepared to take my chance with it whichever way it goes; but I certainly am not going to vote for its going into Committee if the amendments proposed by prominent supporters of the Government are to be carried. I am tired of listening to such talk as we have heard in reference to this matter; but, seeing that honourable members who are supporting the Government go quite contrary to the principles I advocate, I felt it necessary to say a few words.

Mr. Bruce

Sir J. VOGEL.—It appears that the longer honourable gentlemen discuss this Bill the more difficult it is to come to a decision. Every fresh speaker raises new points. We have now the question of town and country; before we had Free-trade and Protection; then we had the question of local government; and if we go on much longer we may have every question that ever comes before the House brought up in connection with this Bill, and not improperly so, because, as this Bill deals with the question of the representation of the people, every question that comes before Parliament is very properly amenable to the discussion. But it occurs to me that it would be better for us not to discuss this measure much longer, but to come to some practical conclusion as to how we can arrive at a decision about it. It is very evident, from what has been said on both sides of the House, that there are many honourable members who disapprove of the Bill. There are other honourable members who feel themselves bound to support it because of promises given to constituents; and there are others who really approve of a large reduction of members. It appears to me that it is desirable to get to as quick a conclusion as possible about going into Committee, in order that we may decide the questions which have to be considered when we get into Committee, if we are to go into Committee. The first question that has to be decided is this: Shall the Bill be proceeded with this session? There are many honourable members who think there is no urgency for the Bill. As was stated by the honourable member for Kumara, it is not an urgent measure. There are other measures of very great urgency to be considered during the session, and it would be better to turn our attention to them. There are other honourable members who think that, the principle having been asserted by the second reading, it would be well to leave the country to consider the question during the recess. I take it that the amendment moved by the honourable member for Kumara tests the question of whether we are to go on with the Bill or not; and, as I think that there are more important questions to be dealt with, I shall vote for the amendment of the honourable gentleman. Of course, the honourable gentleman raises, in his amendment, the question of local government, as to the nature of which many honourable members will have some doubt. That a more extended system of local government, or one, rather, I should say, more independent of Parliament, is desirable I think no one doubts. But it is not only a question of local government. There are other questions which, when decided, no doubt will make it not necessary that there should be so large a House as there is at present. I quite admit the logical reasoning of the honourable gentleman's amendment. It is very evident that if we had a more complete system of local government it would not be necessary to have local interests so represented in detail as is done in a large House. Therefore I am not quarrelling with the logic of the amendment; but still I cannot help thinking that a simple vote, Yes or No, as to whether you should leave the chair would obtain a larger number of votes in the direction the honourable gentleman desires. However, I suppose the question is settled as to whether the Bill is to be proceeded with. If the honourable member's amendment is carried, there is an end of the matter this session. If it is not carried, then I think the question should be come to, and, I must say, I think with as little delay as possible. I do not think there is much necessity for discussion. The question should be come to. As to the amendment which the honourable member for St. Albans, I understand, intends to move, that the number should be eighty-four instead of seventy, I think that question should be decided. There is another question which I consider more important than all the others, and it is that which I wish to direct the attention of the House to, and to ask the view of the Government upon. As the Bill is now drawn out, there is a very peculiar feature in it. Instead of allowing the Commissioners to immediately make the change in the electoral districts, they are not to do so until they are directed by the Governor or the Government to do so. Why that has been put in I am at a loss to understand. What I ask, and what I ask most emphatically, is that we should change that provision, and, instead of saying "when directed by the Governor, and within such time as he shall determine," we should substitute the word "forthwith." And, Sir, I feel certain that if we do that the result will be this: that the House and the country will know what will be the absolute effect of the measure; whereas now we are only groping in the dark and are not certain what its effect will be. If honourable members had known what would be the result of the labours of the Commissioners it is very doubtful if the Act which we passed early this year would have been passed at all: in other words, the result of the division of the electorates has not been satisfactory to the country. Why is that? It may be partly owing to the inherent defects of the Act, or it might be that the working of the Act suffered because, on account of saving time, the provision was suspended for allowing objections to be received to the divisions proposed to be made before they were finally decided. If we put in the word "forthwith," the Commissioners will have to make the divisions immediately, and would have to consider objections before finally deciding them; and next session we shall have an opportunity of reviewing the possible defects of the measure, and what would be the proposed division of the country under the new method; and then, if the House does not approve and the country does not approve of it, it will be open to revision. It will be a more practical course to follow, if this Act passes; although it is of very little matter whether it does pass, from that point of view. But it means that the divisions are to take place at once, so that we may be able to tell whether the result of the Bill is likely to be one of a satisfactory character. If it is decided to go into Committee, the Bill should go into Committee as soon as possible, and we should take a vote on the amendment of the honourable member for Kumara; and if that is lost we should take a vote on the question of the number of members, as to whether it shall be eighty-four or seventy-one, and whether we shall insert the word "forthwith," so as not to allow the Government to choose when the Commissioners shall or shall not make the change. Perhaps the honourable gentleman will tell me whether he objects to the proposal I suggest, to the change being made at once, so that the House may judge of its practical effects next session.

Major ATKINSON.—Yes; I probably shall. I was going to say a few words when the honourable gentleman had finished speaking. I shall probably object to that.

Sir J. VOGEL.—Then, of course, it makes the matter more serious. This is not supposed to be a question on which the Government will urge their followers to support them, as in the case of a party matter. It will be a question for the Committee, not for the whole House. The House will see that the hesitation to allow the districts to be divided at once after the Bill passes is an indication of a doubt on the part of the Government whether the House will be satisfied with the measure if it is put into effect, and I can see no other interpretation that can be given to the hesitation to have the division made at once. It must be recollected that these divisions take place after every census. There will be no new census before Parliament expires by the effluxion of time, supposing it lives out its full term; and there can be no objection to the division being made at once, except the doubts as to the expediency of this division. I think we should soon take a division in this Chamber on the amendment of the honourable member for Kumara, and then on the question of numbers; and, in the event of the division of electorates being made immediately, the country will understand what this Bill really effects. I do not think there are half a dozen members of the House who have the same opinion of the full effect of the Bill supposing it becomes an Act.

Dr. HODGKINSON.—Supposing the amendment of the honourable member for Kumara is carried, I wish to know in what position we shall stand. I suppose it will not be taken as a no-confidence motion. I hope the Premier will say whether I am correct in that interpretation of the position. It is not my intention to vote against the Government on any question of that kind. This is not a matter affecting the administration of the Government, I should think.

Major ATKINSON.—I will presently explain the position. The whole nature of it has been changed by the sudden change of the leader of the Opposition. That has entirely changed what he told us he was going to do yesterday, and has altered my standing altogether.

Dr. HODGKINSON.—If I support the amendment of the honourable member for Kumara, I wish it to be understood that it will not be with the object of defeating the Bill. I can see quite plainly that his motives and intentions are very different from mine. And the honourable member has spoken at very great length on this subject, and where he has said one word in favour of local government he has said a hundred words in favour of killing the Bill. I am not, however, going to be trapped in that way. At the same time, this is not a Ministerial question; and I vote for this amendment in order to get an expression of the opinion of this House as to the necessity of some measure for the reform of local self-government and decentralisation being brought forward; and if I support the amendment I wish it to be understood that it would be from an entirely friendly motive, and not from any motive to kill the Bill or to embarrass the Ministers. I wish the Bill to go through; but, still, I do contend that concurrently with this Representation Bill there ought to have been some measure of local self-government with decentralisation. And if the Premier could even give us any assurance that during the recess the Government will consider some scheme for the reform of local self-government, that would induce me to vote against the amendment. But, unless he does that, I shall feel that it is better to give the Ministry an impetus, something in the direction of urging them forward. I need not take up the time of the House now in urging the question of local government. I would only repeat that I consider the measure introduced by the Government would be incomplete unless they have, as a complement, a measure for the reform of local government, and decentralisation. This reform can be effected in various ways. This question of local government affects their measure in various ways. For instance, in the Land Bill we have inserted a clause of a most radical tendency, abolishing Land Boards, which, I think, is a very objectionable step to take. If we had a reform of local government all the functions of the members of the Land Boards could be imposed on the local bodies. The same in the case of Education Boards and Charitable Aid Boards. I think I have said enough now to justify the course which I shall take, and my desire is not to play into the hands of the Opposition or to affect the position of the Ministry, but to obtain an expression of opinion from the House as to whether it is in favour of a reform of local government. I think I must vote for the amendment, unless the Premier gives us an assurance that this question will be considered during the recess. I think, however, that the amendment goes too far. It says that this Bill shall be delayed until the establishment of some form of local government. I think that is asking too much. I should be quite satisfied that it should be till some measures for the reform of local self-government are submitted to the House, or with even a promise that it would be done next session; and I would not vote for this amendment if the Government could give that assurance. It therefore rests with the Premier to say whether he will give any such promise.

Mr. O'CONOR.—I intend to support the Bill. I may say I advocated this measure during the last Parliament, and I believe it could be proved that it was owing to an unfortunate misunderstanding that it was not carried. I think this reduction of members would be a wise thing; and I think, too, that the present proposal to reduce the number of members of this House seems, on the part of the Government, to be part of a plan, which commences at the head, for the purpose of working down the system of retrenchment, and bringing the expenditure of the colony within its means throughout. We have already dealt with the Governor, we have dealt with Ministers, and with the honorarium of honourable members, and now we are proceeding to deal with the reduction of members in this House. I was a member of a House of seventy members, and I know perfectly well, as far as the democratic element goes, that that House passed the democratic measures which the colony enjoys at the present time. I refer to manhood suffrage and the ballot. It is absurd to say, no matter to what size you reduce the House, no matter what number you may reduce it to, that the feeling of the country will not rule the House. It appears to me that, if you reduce the House, you are not taking away the powers of the people. But it does occur to me that, unless in this measure some provision is contained to keep up the balance between the outlying districts and the towns, an injustice will be done to the outlying districts. I think that, if the quota is to be increased from 6,000 to 9,000, then it will be necessary to increase the percentage that is given to the outlying districts; and that is a proposal which I think the Government will accept. There is another matter that has been referred to in regard to the census. It did appear to me last year, and I expressed myself in that direction to the House, to be an unjust thing to decide the representation on the basis of population upon an incorrect census; and, when we took that as the basis of representation on the last occasion, it should be remembered the census had not been taken for some time previously. If this Bill is passed it will be four or five years after the census was taken when the Act will come into operation, at the expiration of this Parliament. And it appears to me that the prosperous parts of this country will be very badly treated if we take that census as the basis of representation. Some of these will have doubled their population, and will receive no consideration whatever on that account. The Commissioners appear to me to be bound, under the Acts as they are at present, to deal with the colony as upon the last census. That will be a very great injustice to the people of the country; and I think that some allowance ought to be made in that respect. It ought to be provided that the census shall be taken previous to a dissolution on the basis now proposed. Well, Sir, I think that before I sit down I must explain why I have endeavoured, during the whole of this session, to keep my seat as much as possible, and not to occupy the time of the House by joining in debates. I have seen around me a great number of distinguished young members desirous of giving to the country at the earliest opportunity the benefit of their views. I did not object to that. And I saw also some of the older members of the House, who were as wearisome as ever in the length of their speeches; and, knowing that this was to be a short session, in fact that it was necessarily to be a short session, and that a great deal of work would have to be done, I thought the best way I could serve the country was by refraining from talking to my constituents through Hansard. But I am compelled to talk upon this subject; and I am also compelled to say a word or two on another subject. The position I have taken up this session seems to give offence to old friends of mine, and the honourable member for Christchurch North chooses to misunderstand the relation in which I stand with regard to him, and is evidently chagrined at my action. I desire to say this: that I supported the late Government in the late Parliament; but I came back to this House altogether unpledged. If the late Premier had remained at the head of the Government I should probably have been found supporting him now, notwithstanding other objections that I entertained in regard to his Government. But I would ask those honourable gentlemen who worked with me during the last Parliament to say whether I have for a second in the slightest way given in my adhesion to the Opposition during the present session. Have I ever attended any of their caucuses or meetings? Have I ever behaved as though I identified myself as one of them? I defy them to say that I have given them any reason for supposing that I was going to act with them during the present session in opposition to the Government. Now, my position is this: I desire to support the present Government until they have fairly brought their proposals before the country; and if other honourable gentlemen were actuated by the same feeling we should have less of that obstruction, less of that stonewalling, which seems to have been indulged in from the very opening of these doors up to the present time. So far as this Bill is concerned, I am not going to be led away by any herrings drawn across the scent by an Opposition which, on one plea and another, is trying to defeat the proposals of the Government. I say that any time is opportunity for doing that which is a good and desirable thing to do, and I look upon it that one of the greatest blots upon the expenditure of this country is the expenditure which is incurred in connection with this Legislature. In a report of a Select Committee—which I had the honour to sign as Chairman—a session or two ago, that was pointed out; and I am glad indeed that the present Government have taken this matter in hand, and are endeavouring to clean out what I consider to be an Augean stable. For that reason I support the Government on this occasion; and for a similar reason I shall be found supporting them on other occasions when I think they are making proper proposals to this House, without declaring myself as a strong partisan on one side or the other. I ask the Opposition to consider that a person may possibly be actuated by proper motives, although he may not submit to be coerced by the abuse of some persons who descend to that kind of thing; and I prefer to be one of those who are not influenced by the vilification received at the hands of these people through their papers. I desire, as far as I can, to express my views upon every Bill brought up for the consideration of this House; but, if we all did that, it would be impossible to carry on the legislation of this country, and therefore it must not be considered that, because an honourable member is silent, he is not just as well able and just as desirous to express his views as others who are constantly occupying the time of the House. I do hope that, whatever hours may be decided upon for the procedure of the House, we shall endeavour to push on the measures that are brought down for our consideration by the Government in such a manner that they may have reasonable consideration; for I know perfectly well that if we do not do this now, if we persist in obstructing and wasting time as we have been doing, we shall have to pass them with indecent haste before the session is over.

Sir G. GREY.—I should not rise to speak to-night had it not been for the remarks which have been made upon subjects perhaps only remotely connected with the present question—remarks which I ought not to let pass in silence, as I do not concur in them. Amongst other questions which have been raised is one which we, as representatives of the people, can largely influence—that is, the question of the rate of wages. Now, we have heard it remarked that the rate of wages must fall, that it must do so necessarily, and that, if a short period of time ago wages were 10s. a day, and now wages are only 5s. a day, well and good; such must be the case. It is easy for us to say that, we who are above want and are not dependent for our daily bread upon our daily work; but such a fall in the rate of wages as that must absolutely be the difference between comfort and want. It is a very different question to those who have to undergo that change from what it is to those who only speculate upon what ought to take place. I say honourable gentlemen do not sufficiently reflect upon the nature of this country—New Zealand. It lies remote from all the world. It is not like England and Ireland, situated near together, and situated near to countries of Europe, where Irish labourers reduced to poverty can go for the harvest in England to earn high wages, or for hop-picking, or other employment, from time to time. It is not even like Australia, the various colonies of which are close together, with great differences of climate, with great differences of occupation—some agricultural, some pastoral, and some manufacturing—where labourers can pass from one to the other to obtain varied employment. This is like a small estate separated from all others, in which the master may dictate almost the rate of wages that he pleases. Now, we are the masters of this country, and we can make the rate of wages what we like. And there is yet another thing to be considered, that we are remote from the observation of other people. In Australia each colony watches what the other does. They are close together; only an imaginary line separates them; and that prevents them from doing wrong. None of them could carry some improper, oppressive measure in a determined way, because of the public opinion that would be brought to bear against them from the other colonies. Now, we are free from that kind of observation. And, in the same way, we have no one great city with a large population, in which public opinion is created. Very bad things might be done in this Assembly, and very little would be known of what we do in other cities of the colony. There is no public opinion in Wellington to check us in wrong-doing to other parts of the colony—to prevent us from doing acts which we ought not to do. All these circumstances tend to gradually place the labourers in a very bad position in this colony—I say in a worse, a very much worse position than they are in in any other country. Now, I say that this question of wages depends greatly upon our legislation. If honourable gentlemen doubt that, let me take the simple subject of taxation. You put on a property-tax, a tax upon improvements. You compel men who are carrying on improvements which will only yield them a profit after a very considerable period of time to pay taxation; and that taxation induces them to stop improvements. They discharge labourers, and that tends to overstock the labour-market and to bring the rate of wages down. Then, again, in another way you gradually reduce the rate of wages. You create an enormous public debt. You agree to carry on public works which give, I may say, enormous value to the property of a few individuals at the cost of the whole community. What is the result? Having created that debt, a large amount has to be sent out of the colony to pay the interest on that debt. Who has to furnish that money? Why, it means that every labourer in the colony—The Premier cares little about these things, and makes a disturbance at the time the debate is going on, to prevent a person speaking. It is embarrassing; but these matters are of little importance to him. There is a certain line of policy that he is determined to carry out at all risk, and it is of little use to bring forward arguments. I was saying that the only way in which our debt can be discharged is by the labourers of the colony giving up so many days' labour in every year without receiving any remuneration whatever for those days of labour. The greater you make the debt the greater is the number of days in each year on which they are required to give up their labour, and the more are they and their families impoverished. You cannot get out of that. It is the labourers and their work, and what they produce, that pays the debt. I say, therefore, that we ought to be very careful what steps we take, especially as regards our land, lest we increase our debt. Now, if you look up the lands of the country year after year, so that the people cannot get on them, it is quite certain that you reduce the outlets for labour and lower the rate of wages; you reduce the number of persons who cultivate and improve the country and make homes for themselves, and who employ labour, and you bring the rate of wages down. I contend that every one of your laws and regulations in reference to land for many years past has had that effect. What can be more cruel than those laws which prevented the land from being opened in sufficient quantities when men were anxious to settle on farms—when they were compelled to pay prices for deferred-payment land, for instance, which beggared themselves and their families, and have reduced the demand for labour in this country? Now, in every one of these respects you have borne against the interests of labour; and now, during the last few days, during this session, you have performed an act of greater cruelty than I have ever known the Legislature to perform before. You have taken from the labouring population of this country two and a half million acres of land, and other proposals are now being considered which will make the total land to be taken, I believe, nearly five million acres, and you have handed over that extent of land to what I might call foreign companies, persons residing out of this country; and you have told them that you will give them that land, which you have taken from the labouring population of the country—who are the principal landowners of the country—in order to enable them to borrow money to employ the labourers of New Zealand; but in return for so employing them they are to become the masters of the land, and I say—I am disturbed, but I must do my best to continue speaking. I am interfering with the business of the honourable member for the Bay of Islands, who is seeking to obtain a great kauri-forest to make a railway; and it is not desirable that he should be interfered with—

Mr. HOBBS.—I should like to know if the honourable member is speaking to the question.

Mr. SPEAKER.—Am I to understand that the honourable gentleman is speaking to a point of order?

Mr. HOBBS.—Yes. The point of order is this: The honourable gentleman accuses me of obtaining a vast kauri-forest—

Mr. SPEAKER.—That is not a point of order.

Sir G. Grey

Sir G. GREY.—I was complaining of disturbance. I was not aware that stating facts was a breach of order. Certainly what I was saying cannot be very palatable to those honourable gentlemen who desire to obtain land under the circumstances which I am speaking of. I wished simply to point out this, Sir: that these lands were being taken from the people of the country to enable a foreign population to raise on the land, by the sale of the land, the means of constructing a railroad in this country, upon which the labouring population is to be employed to make the road, and to give great value to the lands taken from them and their children; and the lands which they make valuable for a mere pittance for daily labour are to be handed over for ever to those persons, and to be lost to the labourers and their children for all time. Some honourable gentleman laughs at that, but it is a melancholy truth, and, if he is hard-hearted enough to laugh at what is really a very sad thing, that is for him to consider, but no human being will deter me from stating what is a terrible fact. I say this: that, if the Government meant well to the people of this country, they could have formed the labourers themselves into this body to sell the land for the purposes of employing labour upon it, and they could have employed themselves, and have entered into possession of the great part of the land afterwards. But there was no care taken to do that—it is all to go from them; and will anybody say that by doing that we must not greatly bring down the rate of labour? It must cut off hope from men—hope in every direction. If I were to trace out all these circumstances into their detail, I could make out entirely that we, this Parliament, are the masters of the community, and that we fix the rate of labour; and I agree entirely with the honourable gentleman who was attacked for having said what he said—namely, that this Railway Bill of the Government—which is to hand over to three Commissioners, who may be all taken from other countries, the complete management of the railways—may have the effect of very greatly indeed reducing the price of labour throughout this country. He was perfectly right in saying that. Why, to raise the price of travelling is to prevent the labourer from seeking employment in distant places, and to render it impossible for him to travel for any great distance. If you keep up the rate for travelling, the man cannot go into the country for any distance to work for a week, and return to his family on Saturday night, and pass Sunday with them, returning to his work on Monday; he must, in order to support his family, seek for labour close to the town, and in that way labour is concentrated too much on one spot. Throughout I could show that the whole tendency of legislation this session has gone in the direction of which I speak. Now, upon this very question of the Midland Railway, let us reflect on what has been done. I had no conception, at least until the other day, that the meaning of the thing was this: that enormous runs were to be secured in perpetuity to persons who had already held them at a low rental for nearly twenty-eight years. I could hardly conceive that that was to be done when I heard that such was the case. What has happened? For a period of twenty-seven or twenty-eight years certain gentlemen have shut up all the pastoral lands in that part of the country. By those who have considered the subject it is admitted that they have so spotted these runs that, although they are nominally left open to purchase at the price of £2 per acre, it was impossible, almost, for any person to purchase them, because the richer parts were taken up, rendering the adjoining lands almost valueless. Well, now, the effect of that being continued for a long series of years was to shut out from occupation these vast tracts of land, which are now to be handed over in perpetuity to individuals who have so long withheld them from the public by their influence in the Legislature and in Government offices. That must have reduced the demand for labour throughout the entire country, and it must have forced the Government, to a great extent, to do that which they had to do—to contract debts to employ the people upon public works, and to concentrate people about the towns or other places where the public works were being constructed, instead of their being distributed throughout the country. They could form no homes for their families upon small farms, and could not get into the country; and so they became accustomed to a peculiar kind of labour: and I think the present positions of misery which a great many of them occupy are greatly to be attributed to that cause. And you have now an opportunity this session of giving them an opening throughout the country. I appeal to members in this House whether measures were not brought forward for consideration that would have thrown open country lands for population, and probably have induced them to go out and settle in the country. And, then, I ask whether the whole thing was not so managed that not one of those measures which I have proposed has been allowed to come forward to be discussed—to be heard; but they have all been hidden from the country under a mere mass of rubbish, which is what I will call the many Bills that have been placed upon the table, and which have covered everything else. Under this rubbish-heap are hidden what I believe would have been real treasures to the people of New Zealand, if they had been allowed to avail themselves of them. But they have never even been permitted to be discussed in this House, and the country is now ignorant of the things proposed for their advantage. And yet we are told that we are to be hurried on in this same course. Day after day has been taken from private members; and now all the spare time, the time that we have for thinking and for determining what course to pursue by reasoning upon the measures submitted for our consideration—every one of those opportunities is to be taken from us; and now, in a few days, we are to be compelled by a triumphant majority—I do not know by what term to call them, but a majority against whom it is vain to contend—who do not reason,—I have not heard advanced any argument at all in support of the course they are pursuing,—we are to be compelled to pass a mass of Acts which many of us think hostile to the welfare of the country—which are to rob the public of vast tracts of land. One honourable member has stated that this is all part of one policy—a policy of retrenchment. We began with the salary of the Governor. That was a great thought on the part of the Ministry, a grand conception: the Governor's salary might be reduced. They soared to that height. And then they took away part of the honorarium of honourable members; and then—well, I hardly know what next. And now the number of members is to be reduced. But the sum-total of the whole thing is that these are mere blinds. The Governor is to be still left far too high a salary for what his actual requirements will be. The honorarium is retained to the members, and a fine title is given for what is simply payment of members; but it must not be called that, because that homely term would proclaim the whole position and the real merits of the thing. Some alteration is made in that, and now a trifling alteration is to be made in the number of members. And how has that been brought about? Why, the Government were pressed; the four Native members were in rebellion because they thought they were badly treated. And so they were; but they were treated in exactly the same way as others. You will find, if you take one member from four, that it is about the same thing as if you take twenty members from the whole of the European members of this House; but it was easier to compound by giving back the one member to the Natives than to restore the twenty to the others; and so those wise persons who regulate these things go to the Natives and say, "You shall have your one member;" and I believe the person they addressed themselves to was the very gentleman who was to have lost his seat, the honourable member for the Middle Island; and he, good-naturedly and unwisely, fell into the trap, and left those men who were fighting by his side to aid him—left them and placed the Government in a position of security with regard to this measure. Very well. Now, what is to be the next thing? How is that to meet the retrenchment that is to be absolutely made? Who are to bear the main mass of this retrenchment? I say, those who can least afford it. First it is to fall upon the Civil servants. Who is to defend their rights? We are to be sent away—we who could watch and do something to see that justice was being done; and in the hands of one man is to be left the power of dealing with all their interests. I ask, is that right? Ought not we to have had this brought forward at a proper time, when we could fairly consider these things? Then, again, I warn the people of New Zealand not to be led astray; not to think that the Governor is to pay the great deficiency that is to take place—that it will all come from his salary. Trifling indeed will that aid be. On every home in New Zealand will the burden come. There is no family that will not suffer; and I believe that exactly as you descend in the scale of income so will the suffering fall with greater and greater weight; and those who are the least able to support it will be those who will feel it most and suffer in the greatest degree. I think that yet this House ought to right itself. We have the power, in reference to these Bills, still to a certain extent to dictate to the Government, and to say we will not be hurried, we will carefully consider every measure; and I should be inclined to join any members who said this: "We will not go a step further until the financial proposals are brought down. We will not permit dust to be thrown in our eyes." The Premier, sitting there, knows that in his heart he has deliberately, and upon a plan, kept these financial measures back from our consideration. He knows in his heart that he could, if he pleased, at an earlier period than this, have brought them forward, and have afforded us an opportunity of fully discussing them, and of taking care that the burdens of these great reductions fell fairly and justly upon all; and we, in not insisting upon that, and leaving all power in his hands, and leaving him to do this, are truly responsible. Whatever unction we may lay to our souls, we are responsible for the miseries which are about to fall upon New Zealand if we allow this to continue, and do not insist upon having our rights conferred upon us of fighting for our fellow-men—because we are allowed now no such power, we have no such right. The Premier has taken it all from us by the manner in which he has conducted the business. He has killed our Bills, which might have done such good. He has not attempted to crush down that improper interference to prevent Bills coming on. I say that upon the mere question of throwing open the profession of the law to the whole country, at a time of difficulty like this, it was his duty to the House to pronounce his decided opinion that it should be discussed, and not to allow two or three men to prevent that discussion. He should have said, "I have the power to preserve the rights of the House; I am the leader of the House, and will exercise that power;" but he did not do it. In the same way, I say that the measures for the assistance of the deferred-payment settlers and the village settlers ought not to have been allowed to be crushed out of sight and to die unknown, as they have been. What will the poor people who would have been benefited know of what would have been done for them? They will know nothing, and for months to come they will still have to go on struggling with a misery of which they might have been relieved. They are not allowed now to have their minds set at rest, but they must fight on as best they can with the misery which oppresses them. How is it possible for the country to prosper when its inhabitants are allowed in multitudes to struggle on in that way when, in a few minutes, they might have been relieved if the Premier would have allowed these meaasures to be considered? I believe the House would have adopted them unanimously; and then, in three or four days, a message of peace could have gone throughout New Zealand which would have put new hope and new energy into the people. But we are not allowed to do that. Every one who gets up apologizes for speaking, and explains why he says anything and delays for a few minutes the going into Committee on a Bill which is not necessary now. The very time we have spent in this useless debate might have passed all the Bills of which I have spoken, and yet it is not allowed to be done. And why? What crime have the people of New Zealand themselves committed that they should be shut out from these benefits, those whom the honourable gentleman has so much injured?—for he really is the cause of the mass of these misfortunes. Pity might now have come to his heart, and he might have aided in doing all these things, for such a chance was never before presented. The House was ready to consider all these measures, and the country was anxious to receive them. Why did he not, with a powerful party at his back, allow these things to be done? I believe that it was greatly in consequence of some of us having opposed that Midland Railway, which was to bring about such great injustice, and which was not of half the consequence of those measures of which I have spoken. I say again that, if we had been an Australian Colony, situated, say, as Victoria is, with South Australia on one side and New South Wales on the other, with eyes watching all its movements, no Government would have dared to carry out such measures as those which this Government has forced upon the House. That, Sir, is my firm opinion. But we have no such allies around us here. The whole thing rests with ourselves; removed from observation, removed from sympathy, these things can be done, and are left unknown to the rest of the world. Now, with regard to this measure itself, I say also this: that by hurrying it on in the manner we are doing we are acting unfairly to the whole population of the country, because, with a proper measure of local self-government, a General Assembly of fifty members would be amply sufficient. This Parliament could easily be reduced to that number, and the members could receive a rate of pay which would place them in such a position that they could devote their whole time to the affairs of the colony, as members of Parliament do in other countries, and not come here in a hurried manner from their pursuits for a few months. By bringing in such a measure the honourable member could at once reduce both Houses of this Assembly, and could consider fairly the position of the Legislative Council, and deal with them in a much fairer manner than we have done in the Bill which we have passed. All that could be accomplished. But no; that is not to be done. This Bill, and nothing else, with a majority at his back, will he have. And how then? I firmly believe that no man will be more sorry than the honourable member himself. But I also believe it was the carrying of that Midland Railway Bill and another measure or two of the same kind, and the hopes held out of other measures of the same sort, which have gained the majority that has accomplished all that has been done this session. In that I may be wrong, and I shall be sorry if I am; but I must say that it is my firm and settled conviction that such is the case: and it will bring future misery on the people of New Zealand—a wrong which must injure them for many, many years to come, in fact from which they will never recover, but which will plunge their children into poverty and make serfs of many of them, because we are shutting up an area of country half as large as Wales, and giving it to a few persons who have occupied and will continue to occupy it as runs, and let no people go on it. That is to say, sheep are to prosper and to be taken care of, while the people are to have no care taken of them. And, then, these persons, to whom unjustly such great advantages are given, are to derive large incomes from that source, and to spend them in England, in the same manner as do those 1,100 absentees who were dragged to light by the honourable member for Timaru, who own more than one-tenth of the real and personal property of New Zealand, and draw vast amounts from it to spend in England. That is how wages fall; that is how pauperism spreads wider and wider in New Zealand. And can it be otherwise? Ireland was never subjected to such a state of absenteeism. No other nation that I know of has undergone similar calamities in so short a space of time. And is no effort to be made to reverse these things? Are not even the people who live out of New Zealand, and draw immense incomes from it, to be compelled to pay the same taxation as we pay on the same sums of money, just as all other nations similarly circumstanced enforce taxation? Why are we to pay to persons not resident in New Zealand the full amount of interest upon our bonds, and not only that, but pay the cost of sending that interest to them out of our own pockets? Are they not to pay the same taxation on the bonds which is paid by persons resident in New Zealand? And yet there sits a gentleman who, by merely standing up to-night or at any other time, could relieve the people of a burden of £143,000 a year—a burden that they have gone on paying annually until upwards of a million has been paid since I first struggled to prevent this being done; and an additional annual interest on that million has been added on to us, because we have never had the means of paying this out of our own funds, and have had to borrow money for it. And yet there has been no voice raised in this House to prevent that. Well, I suppose it is still to be the same thing; and with this measure before us to-night we shall sit discussing it, apparently with the hope of coming to some conclusion of a different kind on it from that which was originally suggested to us by the Government; and yet we are here with a certainty that all our efforts are breath wasted in the air, and will accomplish nothing; although I think that there are members whose hearts agree with every word I have said here to-night—and I firmly believe this is the case—and yet they will vote in an opposite direction. Well, we must submit. It is a hard life to struggle against these things—to know, with the great majority of the people, that the things stated are truths, and these things ought not to be allowed to exist; and yet, knowing that, to have to sit down with the consciousness that it is of no use struggling against it, and that nothing but submission—a sorrowful submission—is that which is left to one and all of us as long as a tyrannical majority rules this House.

Sir G. Grey

Major ATKINSON.—What a comfort it must be to the House to know that at any rate there is still left one righteous man amongst us who will save us from the wrath to come! Talk, talk, talk, founded on the most egregious vanity ever seen in a public man, is the part which the honourable gentleman plays in this House. Sir, one would not think from his speech to-night that he has never raised a finger to aid the poor man, never devised a single scheme for his benefit. We know that, from the time he was Governor down to the time when he ceased to be Premier, he has done nothing but talk, talk, talk. He never raised a finger by any useful piece of legislation to serve the colony and the working-man, whom he has used as a stalking-horse to attain power; he has never made an effort to devise any useful measure to raise the working-man out of any difficulty he may have been in. To hear him talk you would think he never had any power in the land. Why, he laid the foundation of the big estates which are now the trouble in Canterbury, and he avowed his intention—that his object was that there should be a landed aristocracy in New Zealand. It was the honourable gentleman himself who gave out that as his intention; and I state that on the authority of Sir Frederick Weld, as stated by the honourable member for Auckland Central to that gentleman himself. He said, "We must have a landed aristocracy;" and he brought down the value of land in Canterbury to 10s. an acre, and a landed aristocracy was then founded. And yet to hear him to-night one would think that he was a friend of the working-man. Yes, Sir, in talk; but in nothing else. Then, he talked about local government. Look at his action when Superintendent. What was it? Living on the public-works money of the province, and sending out a telegram that the fleet was going to bombard Auckland. That was done by the honourable gentleman. All old members know what I submitted to from time to time in this House. They also remember the Piako Swamp and other matters. The honourable gentleman has forgotten it now, and has taken to the Midland Railway in the same style. And, then, when he came into power, with all this power, what did he do for the working-man? What did he do for local institutions? Did he raise a finger for the working-man or for local institutions? No.

Sir G. Grey

Where are the measures? Are they on the Statute Book? No; we know that he did absolutely nothing but talk.

Mr. SEDDON.—Land-tax.

Major ATKINSON.—Yes; you had the land-tax, and you are going to have a great deal more. Where were the bondholders then? Were they taxed? No; they were not. He put on a land-tax, and threatened to make it 4d.; but the House, I am thankful to say, stepped in and said, "No, we will not allow men to buy land, and put it on mortgage, and escape;" and accordingly the House taxed the mortgagees. Was the honourable gentleman taxing the mortgagees? No; oh no! Sir, I shall not impute motives, although the honourable gentleman imputes motives to every one who is against him. And then, the insinuation that the majority of the House which is carrying these measures is caused through this Midland Railway Company! I say it is a disgrace to any member to make such a reflection on this House. It is a disgrace, I say; and the honourable gentleman ought to be ashamed of himself for doing it. But, Sir, there is one righteous man in this House who is going to save us. I venture to say some other character will be given to the honourable gentleman than that of the righteous man when the history of the country comes to be written. I do not care to say more about the honourable gentleman now. I may have occasion to do it. I say he did his best to place me in my present position. He knows my history. He urged me to take this position. Why does he now oppose me? Because I did not fall down on my knees and worship the honourable gentleman; because I dared to have an opinion of my own, and to do my duty to the country and to this House. Sir, the whole thing is utterly contemptible. The country will be saved by the Law Practitioners Bill! Only think of that! The country is longing and begging for it! And, then, there is another most crude, imperfect, and very unworkable Bill called the Land for Settlements Bill. The honourable gentleman tells me that it has cost him years of thought. Anybody who reads that Bill and knows anything about the settlement of land knows that it is an utterly unworkable measure.

Mr. SEDDON.—What about tenant rights?

Major ATKINSON.—I will come to tenant rights, if you want to deal with them. It is not measures the honourable gentleman wants on the Statute Book. What he wants to do is to gain a position by saying what he is going to do in the future; and, immediately a practical man comes forward to do something, the honourable gentleman accuses him of taking his measures. And his vanity was so great that he was quite indignant when the Government proposed to take up and deal with one of his measures. He said, "This is just like the Government! they are going to take my measures from me and get the credit for them." A patriot would only be too delighted to get his measures passed, no matter who was instrumental in passing them. But that is not what the honourable gentleman wants. What he wants is to do it himself and get the credit for it. But to talk about saving the country by such measures as these is simply ridiculous, nothing more and nothing less; and nothing but the egregious vanity with which the honourable gentleman is eaten up could have led him to make such a statement. This House must have laughed, as the country will laugh, when they heard the honourable gentleman pathetically appealing to them to carry such measures as these, and saying that the Government measures are all trash. Why did he not carry his measures when he was Premier? The answer will be clear to every one: they are not desired to be carried, they are only wanted to be talked about. An old Maori once described the honourable gentleman in this way: There is a duck called the whio—I think a mountain duck; and its habit is this: It flies very rapidly, and wherever there is a little rough water you will see it suddenly dive in. The old Maori said the honourable gentleman was just like the whio—he always liked to be in troubled waters. He no sooner takes pains to get the Government in office than he immediately commences obstruction in every form and shape, simply because I did not bow down and worship him in the servile way he has all his life liked to see people worship him. Now I come to the Bill; I have done with the honourable gentleman for the present. And now, Sir, the position of the Bill is somewhat changed by the extraordinary statement of the honourable gentleman opposite. Last night he told us that he was not going to oppose the Bill going into Committee, and hoped the Government would allow it fair consideration in Committee. I assented to that.

Sir J. VOGEL.—I was not in the House at all last night. I stated in the afternoon that I should not oppose the second reading. Neither did I, and I did my best to stop the opposition on the second reading.

Major ATKINSON.—Then came the amendment of the honourable member for Kumara, and I found that the honourable gentleman was only trifling with me. Of course, when a gentleman in the position of leader of the Opposition tells the leader of the House that he is not going to oppose the second reading of the Bill, it goes as a matter of course that he is willing to get it into Committee, and then deal with it in a reasonable way. If he had not meant that, he ought to have told us that he was going to take the first opportunity of backing the amendment which the honourable member announced his intention to move.

Sir J. VOGEL.—Will the honourable gentleman excuse my interrupting him? I said I advised the honourable gentleman to take the second reading as a principle, but not to push the Bill further. I am not certain if I used these words. Let me tell him I am no party to this amendment, but I said I should vote for it. I did not lead the honourable gentleman to suppose that I had induced it to be brought forward.

Major ATKINSON.—I was assured in the lobby, before coming to this House, on what appeared to be excellent authority, that the Opposition were not going to support the amendment—that they were going into Committee. An honourable gentleman asked me if I would agree to a particular clause, and I said I could not tell him. I am taken absolutely by surprise by the statement of the honourable gentleman to-night. I am not going to complain. Fortunately, I have kept my powder dry up to the present occasion, and I am happy to say I am in a position to resist whatever course the honourable gentleman takes. When an understanding of that kind is made, it is not fair parliamentary tactics suddenly to turn round and say that he will support such a resolution as that of the honourable member for Kumara. When he does that he takes upon himself the responsibility of all the obstruction that the honourable gentleman has given to this Bill. I will say nothing against anything in the shape of fair discussion; but two long speeches of an hour each have been made, reiterating all the stale arguments, nothing new, and the only object of which can be to delay the passage of the Bill. We know very well that the honourable gentleman does not care for local government. That was only a catch-vote to catch innocent supporters of the Government, like the honourable member for Wallace. But the utter innocence of the honourable gentlemen secures them from being caught in that way. The honourable gentleman said he was not going to be caught in a trap, and I have no doubt that before I have done the honourable gentleman will make up his mind clearly to vote for the Government. This has put it into a rather unfortunate position. I am very sorry the leader of the Opposition has taken this position, because it makes it much harder for the Government to leave it very free in Committee. My desire would be to so leave it that we might vote very freely; but I want the House distinctly to understand that this is one of the policy Bills of the Government, and the Government are going to do their best to carry it this session. I want the House to understand that distinctly. And I say the leader of the Opposition now, by taking up the motion of the honourable gentleman, has put the Government in a very awkward position. We shall be told by the honourable member for Kumara, whatever amendments are carried, "Oh, yes; I did all this; I forced the hand of the Government." Well, the Government are not going to be put in that position. I was willing and anxious to meet him in every fair way, but I will not be driven into a corner by the honourable member for Kumara; and I am quite sure the House will back me in that. I want to say a word or two about local self-government. That has nothing whatever to do with this. If the work of the House remained exactly as it is, seventy members are plenty to do our work. I say that distinctly. That is my opinion; and this matter has only been put forward as a trap, nothing more or less. But I say this with regard to local government: that I am as strongly in favour of local self-government as any man in this House—a great deal stronger than the honourable member for Wallace, though he does not know it; and I say no man has done more for local government than I have done.—(No.)—That is only an opinion. Then, I want to say, further, that I will give this matter my careful consideration during the recess. If I can see any way of dealing more satisfactorily with the subject than now I shall, next session, bring forward a proposal to deal with it. But I say that those gentlemen who are always talking of local government, always declaring that we have not dealt with it, and what they could do in the way of local government—I say it is their duty to make suggestions on the subject. And now, Sir, every honourable gentleman who thinks he has a gift to propound schemes for local government, I ask him to submit his schemes; and, if from these suggestions I think I can devise a good measure, I shall approach them with every intention of doing so. I shall give them my careful consideration, and, if I find it practicable to suggest a scheme of better and more effective local government, then I shall be warranted, and shall be prepared, to bring down a measure next session. I do not know whether the honourable member or any other honourable gentleman wants anything more than that. But I am serious when I invite every one who thinks he has a gift to propound a scheme of local government to let me have his suggestions, and I will endeavour to give effect to them if I think them worthy of adoption. There is not a single member who talks about local government that I have not been to personally and said, "Give me your scheme on paper. We want an effective system of local government." But I have never had a single suggestion from one of those honourable gentlemen. The party who were going to give us this perfect system of local government were put into office and kept there for three years to do it; and then they went out, and all they had done was to slightly amend the Counties Act—"only that, and nothing more." We were told by the late Premier—who was very great on this subject—that the Government were placed in office to do it, and they were going to do it; and the late Treasurer announced at Christchurch that he was to devise the financial part of the new system, and the Premier was to devise the other parts—there was a fair division of labour, and they were to do it between them. And, Sir, we know what came of it.

Mr. SEDDON.—What about the charitable-aid system?

Major ATKINSON.—Nothing more ridiculous than the Government's own proposals on this subject was ever proposed in New Zealand, and now the Act has to come up to be altered session after session. That was simply nothing more or less than a device of the late Treasurer to throw the burden on the localities. That was all that was; there was nothing in that. However, I do not propose to go more fully into that subject now. I believe the late Government's proposals on the subject were entirely on wrong lines.

Major Atkinson

Mr. SEDDON.—You have not proposed to repeal it.

Major ATKINSON.—No; but I have proposed a number of other measures which the honourable gentleman does not like, and which he is obstructing; and next session I shall have a lot more that he will not like.

Mr. SEDDON.—You will be on this side of the House then.

Major ATKINSON.—Then, if I am, I shall do my duty, and not obstruct. Now, Sir, this Bill is part of our general scheme for reducing the cost of the machinery of government of this country. It is part of the scheme, and as such we treat it as a Government measure. As I have just said, I shall be glad to meet in Committee any reasonable amendments; but I shall have to be very much stiffer in the back, after the very extraordinary conduct of the Opposition. What the Government wish to see done by the Bill is this—and we do not care for anything else: We wish to see the number of members fixed, upon which we can found our complete system of representation next session. I should very much like to have dealt with the whole question this session—the electoral rolls, the question of whether electorates shall be single or shall return three or four members—whether the town constituencies are to be amalgamated or not. All these questions I should like to have had considered this session, if we had had time. But we had not time, and therefore what I want to say for the Government is that, if by passing this measure we simply fix the number of members of the House, upon that the Government can base their proposals next session; because, I take it, we are all agreed that our whole system requires reform—that the methods of registration, of election, and everything else require alteration. We are all agreed that it is entirely unsatisfactory now; and there can be no doubt that the personation and roll-stuffing during the last election would have been disgraceful to any country. I say the whole thing has to be revised next session; and I therefore do hope that my friends will abstain from attempting to make this Bill do more than fix the number of members, and that all such questions as fixing the proportion between town and country representation and joining the electorates will be left over to be dealt with next session. I venture to think it would be only waste of time to attempt to do it now, when all we want to do is to fix a basis on which to form our representation system. As to the question of Maori representation, I want to say this: The Government, in bringing down this Bill, went on the principle of reducing the Maori representation in the same proportion as they proposed to reduce the European representation. There is nothing unreasonable or unfair in that. Now, at the present time, the Maoris have a double right in representation. They have the right to vote for their own Native members, and they have the right to appear on our electoral rolls and vote for European representatives. They have this double right, although they do not pay rates and taxes which Europeans pay. They do not pay the property-tax, nor rates if their property is five miles from a road. Now, I have found since this Bill was introduced that the Maoris are quite willing to give up the right to vote in our elections if they are allowed to retain their four members. That seems to me quite reasonable. I am of opinion that it would not be at all wise to bring the Natives and the Europeans into one electorate at the present time. That, I think, would have a very bad effect on both races. As soon as English is the ordinary language of the Maori, then, I think, he may be put in the same electorate as the European, and I shall be very glad when that time arrives. At present he is only approachable through persons who have learnt the Maori language, who are but few; and it is very undesirable that the Natives should be put into the hands of a few persons, to be led practically by what they are told; for they have no access, practically, to our newspapers, or any of our general sources of information. Therefore it does seem to me wise that we should give the Maoris fair representation by their own race, and I think four members would be fair representation, and I think the Natives should be taken off our rolls. Therefore in Committee I shall propose that the number of Maori members be left at four; and next session, in our Bills then, we shall propose that Maori names be not allowed to appear on our electoral rolls. I understand that will be acceptable to the Maori representatives, and that is the history of what the honourable member for Kumara was pleased to call the negotiations that he says have taken place. I consented to it, without saying a word to one of the Native members. It embodies what has been my opinion for a long time; and I was informed, just before the House met this evening, that the Maoris would accept that as fair and reasonable, and the Ministry will be very glad to take that course. Sir, I think I have said enough to show that, in the opinion of the Government, this is one of the most important of their measures, and it is part of their scheme. I am strongly impressed—whether other honourable members are or not—with the necessity for reducing the number of members of this House, if we are to have true economy throughout the country. All this talk about the people not being properly represented is just simply talk; they will be as fully represented if this Bill is passed as they are now. And the reason why I cannot accede to the proposal of the honourable member for Christchurch North, that the Commissioners shall divide the country into the new districts during the coming recess, is this: that it would be putting us to a needless expense, and it would be doing no good at all. If we fix the number of members now as a basis, and then decide our electoral system generally next session, then, I think, it will be our duty to have the country divided into districts as soon as possible—that is, if we determine to leave the power still in the hands of Commissioners, instead of its being resumed by this House. But I think that question, too, will have to be considered next session. I do not say that we shall propose to revise the new system, but I do say that we shall want to reconsider the question next session. Then, with regard to the census, the honourable member for Christchurch North made a great point of that, and so did the honourable member for Kumara; and I agree with them. I say it is an important point; and I say it will be our duty next session to make some provision for that. But that is the law at the present time—a law brought in by the honourable gentleman opposite, and supported by the honourable member for Kumara. It is all very well for that honourable gentleman to tell us that he voted against the late Government when their measures were bad; but he never did that when it was a question of keeping the Government in or putting them out. When that was in issue he always took care to vote with the Government, no matter how bad their measures were; and therefore the honourable gentleman is partly responsible for every one of their bad measures, because we know that the only way to stop bad measures is to put the Government out; and, as the honourable member helped to keep the late Government in, he must take his share of the blame for all their bad measures. I say the census is a very important point, and we must make some provision for it; but, if we are to go on a population basis, it is quite clear to my mind that any new House must be elected soon after a census. That seems to me to follow as a matter of course. I cannot say what the Government proposal in that respect will be; but I am very much impressed with the necessity of having a census as shortly as possible before an election—before the districts are fixed. I am sorry to have troubled the House at this length. I had not intended to speak on this occasion, but meant to give up my right to reply. I have refrained from talking throughout simply on account of the large amount of talk which some honourable members will give us on any subject. I, like many others, have sat perfectly still, even though I have desired to address the House, because of the undue time taken up in the obstruction of the Bill. I hope the House will distinctly understand—I do not say it in any way as a threat—that this is a Government Bill, and it is the intention of the Government to get it through; and the Government would have been prepared to give much more latitude in Committee if the honourable gentlemen opposite had not taken the extraordinary course they have taken. But I will go as far as this, because I am very anxious not to have any misunderstanding in the matter: If the honourable gentleman is really sincere in what he says, that he has been under a misapprehension, I am quite willing, if the honourable gentleman chooses to withdraw his proposal, to let the Bill go into Committee and discuss it as we should have done before; but, if his amendment goes to a division, then the position of the Government will be different from what it would be if we had gone on with the committal in the usual way, as we were prepared to do.

Mr. FISH.—It was with very great regret, Sir, that I heard the Premier attack, in the violent and undignified manner in which he did, the honourable member for Auckland Central. I think that is a regret which must be shared by nine-tenths of the members of this House. The honourable gentleman's position in this House, the position he has held in the country, the age of the honourable gentleman, ought to have protected him, I think, from so savage an assault as the Premier thought it to be his duty to inflict upon him. It came, I think, with particularly bad grace from the Premier to indulge in such a terrible tirade of abuse against the honourable gentleman. It was most undignified on his part.

Mr. SPEAKER.—I must hold that the honourable member is using too strong language towards the honourable member for Egmont.

Mr. FISH.—I was going to observe that it was most undignified on the part of the Premier to use such words as "disgraceful conduct," "he ought to be ashamed of himself," and "base." I do not think I have used such strong words as those. Those were the words which the Premier used towards the honourable member for Auckland Central; and I think the use of those words on the part of the leader of the House—a gentleman who is supposed to conduct the House with propriety, and to set an example to other members, and especially to new members—I think, looking at the position of the honourable gentleman, it was really very undignified, to use no stronger term, on his part to have used the words to which I have referred. It was in particularly bad taste, I think, too, for the honourable member to have used those words to the honourable member for Auckland Central, considering the fact that that honourable gentleman occupies the position, with regard to the Premier, of being a king-maker, that is to say—and I am justified, I think, in saying it—that the honourable gentleman was the means by which the honourable member for Egmont has resumed the position of Premier of this country. Does it not strike the members of this House, and would it not strike the public at large, as being somewhat passing strange that the honourable gentleman should say to the honourable member for Auckland Central that in all his life he had done nothing for the good of this country, that he was practically a marplot, that he had never done anything for the country, and was eaten up by vanity and self-conceit, and that he was useless to this House and the country? If the Premier is correct now in his estimate of the character of the honourable member for Auckland Central, he must have been aware of it long ago; and, if so, is it not strange that he should have offered that honourable gentleman, as I believe he did—I speak subject to correction—any position in the present Ministry, even if it had been the Premiership, which the member for Auckland Central might have thought fit to accept? How does the honourable gentleman reconcile his statement tonight with the fact that he has offered these things to the honourable member for Auckland Central so recently? The Premier has told the House and the honourable member for Auckland Central that one of his Bills, which he thinks is essential to the well-being of this country, and that it should be passed into law—the Land for Settlements Bill—is a perfectly unworkable and impracticable measure. If I mistake not, the Premier said a few nights ago that this measure was a much better measure than that introduced by the late Government. Strange inconsistency here, again! Then, did he not, in the course of some debate in this House this session, or, at any rate, did he not publicly state that the honourable member for Auckland Central would have been an excellent individual to have sent Home to induce a suitable class of settlers to come to this country? Was he doing his duty to the country in making a statement of that kind? Was it right or just that a man who is so eaten up with vanity or conceit as to make himself useless for all good purposes to the country—was it right to say that that gentleman was a fitting man to go Home to induce immigrants to come to this country? I am credibly informed that the honourable gentleman has said so. I shall not detain the House very much longer upon this point; but I do say that the language in which the Premier attacked the honourable member for Auckland Central was unjust, undignified, and improper, more particularly as coming from a gentleman occupying the position in the country that the Premier does, and to a gentleman who has occupied and does occupy the position of the honourable member for Auckland Central. The Premier looks upon the honourable gentleman now with contempt. He says all these things of him; and why? Not because the honourable member for Auckland Central expects that the Government, in a servile manner, should do what he suggested or wanted them to do, but because he finds that the honourable member for Auckland Central is not prepared to swallow the noxious doses dignified by the name of Bills which the Premier has brought down to this House this session. Is it because the honourable member for Auckland Central chooses to stigmatize those Bills as improper, not good for the well-being of this country, and because he has chosen to censure those Bills freely, and because he sees that the Premier and the Government are endeavouring to force measures upon an unwilling House and country in a premature manner;—is it because he has chosen to criticize these measures, and has expressed his dissatisfaction with them, that the honourable gentleman finds all these faults in the honourable member for Auckland Central? Sir, I contend that the honourable gentleman would not have been doing his duty, although he helped to put the Hon. the Premier in the position he occupies, unless he had freely criticized the measures brought before this House. The Premier has used the language he has to the honourable gentleman on account of the fearless expression of his opinions upon these matters, and because he endeavours to protect the country from these measures being so hurriedly passed through the House as the Government is desirous to see. The honourable gentleman has said—and it shows part of the honourable gentleman's nature, a nature which, I venture to say, is perhaps the most repellent and pugnacious that is possessed by almost any one in the country, a nature so repugnant and repellent as to utterly unfit the honourable gentleman for the responsible position of leader of this House—

Major Atkinson

Mr. MARCHANT.—I rise to a point of order. I do not think it is quite within order for the honourable gentleman to refer to the Premier of the colony as possessing a nature the most repellent and repugnant of any in the colony.

Mr. SPEAKER.—I think the language is in its general tone too strong to be used. Such words must be personally offensive to the honourable gentleman referred to; and that is the test of unparliamentary language. I do not take exception merely to the word "pugnacious."

Mr. FISH.—I am surely entitled to stigmatize the honourable gentleman's manner as of such a pugnacious character as to raise the ire of members of this House. It is not the occurrence of to-day or yesterday; but, whenever the honourable gentleman's feathers are ruffled at all, he at once assumes a language and appearance—if I am not out of order in saying so—which is of a politically-ferocious character. In point of fact, the manner of the honourable gentleman is even worse than his matter, and he does endeavour to inspire in the members of this House a positive fear, which he uses without scruple in order to check the freedom of debate. It is notorious that the honourable gentleman is always assuming that position and that manner, and it is upon that account that so much friction arises from time to time. The honourable gentleman told us a short time ago that this measure shall not be considered in Committee in a fair and proper way. He has declared that he will make it a party measure. He will make a Bill for the representation of the people—a Bill which will, for good or evil, interfere with the rights of the people—he has made this a party measure, and has called his followers to his back, and he will force this measure down our throats, to the detriment of our health and to the injury of our strength; and he will make it the law of the country. By expressions such as these, and by the attempt to force things in this way, he will raise up equally strong and determined wills against his own. We should be forgetting our duty to the House and the country if we were to allow ourselves to be influenced by the use of such language as this. By the endeavour, as I say, to impede and obstruct the expression of opinions by members of this House which they think it necessary and desirable to give in the interests of their constituents, he will raise up equally determined and pugnacious opposition to himself; and I leave the honourable gentleman to say how far that will be for the good of the country. The honourable gentleman must not be surprised if his own conduct and language should tend to raise up this most undesirable feeling. I am more than sorry that the honourable gentleman himself should be the cause of so many scenes of this kind in the House. I could not refrain from expressing my intense indignation at the unwarrantable attack, as I take it, which the honourable gentleman made upon the honourable member for Auckland Central; and as long as I am here I shall not allow an attack of that kind to pass by without raising my humble voice in protest against it; and I do not think I should be doing my duty unless I had taken the course which I have taken on this occasion.

Major STEWARD.—I rise to move the adjournment of the House, in order that the honourable gentleman at the head of the Opposition may make a statement, which he would not otherwise have an opportunity of doing.

Sir J. VOGEL.—The honourable gentleman has been kind enough to enable me to make a few remarks in consequence of the extraordinary speech which has fallen from the honourable member at the head of the Government. And, Sir, he impugned my conduct in supporting the amendment of the honourable member for Kumara; but if the Premier had not been led by the very strong feeling that he exhibited this evening he must have understood clearly from the remarks that I made that I was no party to the amendment which the honourable member for Kumara was moving. As to my not being at liberty to oppose the Bill going further than the second reading, I think that the honourable gentleman misunderstood my remarks yesterday, because I stated that, although I could not support the Bill, I would not oppose it, and that I thought the honourable member should be content with the second reading. Indeed, I used all the influence I had yesterday to prevent a division against the second reading. I also indicated in my remarks that I thought the honourable member for Kumara would better serve his purpose by allowing the vote to be taken on the question of your leaving the chair; and if that had been done no political significance would have attached to it. It would simply have been an indication on the part of the House that they do not desire to proceed further with the measure during the present session. The Premier said he would have been prepared to receive amendments in Committee, but would not now, because, if he did, the honourable member for Kumara would gain a victory. But I would point out to him that such an excuse does not hold water. Surely, if we go into Committee on the Bill it will mean a victory to the Government, because, to get into Committee, they must defeat the amendment of the honourable member for Kumara. It seems to me that the honourable gentleman's remarks were inconsistent, and that he was manufacturing the reason for refusing to allow us to consider those amendments in Committee, which, I have pointed out, we ought to have the fullest opportunity of dealing with. Later on the honourable gentleman gave us an explanation, to which I shall refer before concluding my remarks. But, Sir, I cannot allow it to be said that I have acted in this matter otherwise than fairly to the honourable member—indeed, I may say, in a friendly spirit. Now, I wish to say a few words upon the unprecedented violence of the attack made by the head of the Government upon the honourable member for Auckland Central; I may do so without introducing into the matter any personal significance, for it is well known that the honourable member for Auckland Central is in the habit of attacking me in the House; and it is also known to honourable members that I uniformly abstain from replying to those attacks, feeling as I do that something more than ordinary respect attaches to an honourable member who has played so large a part in the history of the colony. But that the honourable member for Egmont should presume to speak in the terms of bitter contempt in which he indulged towards a member, a veteran politician, who, as compared with himself, Sir, is as a father to a child, appears to me to be not only a display of want of taste on his own part as an individual member, but, as leader of the House, an insult to every one in it; and I am much mistaken if there was a member who listened to that violent attack, that impassioned attack, in which he exhibited such bitter hatred, who did not feel ashamed that the House should be led by a member who had so little control not only over his passions, but also over his expressions of thought. To say that the honourable member for Auckland Central has had no influence over the history of the colony is absurd. Does the honourable member for Egmont think that, in the time to come, or in the present time, or in the past, there is anything to compare between his position in the colony and the position of the honourable member for Auckland Central? If the honourable member lived a hundred years he would not impress upon the history of the colony anything like so indelible a mark as the honourable member for Auckland Central has done. To the labours of the honourable member for Auckland Central is owing the fact that the people of the colony take a very large interest in public affairs, an interest which a few years ago was quite unknown. I have not disguised, as regards my own part in public affairs in former times, that I looked on the colony as a machine for colonising and enabling persons anxious to settle to lead prosperous careers; and I cannot help thinking it was for the material interests of the colony to advance its settlement, as has been done to an extraordinary extent. Since I have been back in the colony it has struck me as nothing less than remarkable the feeling on the part of the people of the colony to build up a distinct and individual nationality. For many years I hoped the time would come when the whole of the British dominions would be federated, so that the colonies would not be called on to exercise independent functions. But I confess late events have dimmed my hopes of federation. That being the case, I cannot view with indifference the fact that the people of New Zealand are taking upon themselves a knowledge and responsibility which may fit them in the future to become a separate State of a large and independent character. This, I say, is owing to the efforts of the honourable member for Auckland Central. While I was away from the colony I was not unwatchful of what took place. Honourable members will bear me out in saying that when the honourable member for Auckland Central advocated, as he did, views of an extremely democratic character, it became the habit of other leaders who swayed the government of the country to try and persuade the colonists that they held more democratic opinions. The honourable member at the head of the Government is an example. After he had succeeded the honourable member for Auckland Central, he tried to persuade the country that he held strong views in the way of giving greater liberties and privileges to the people than the honourable member whom he succeeded. Sir, what the honourable member for Egmont says about the Ministry over which the honourable member for Auckland Central presided is, in my opinion, not fair. I watched the progress of that Government, and, though I am free to confess that it adopted a very bold policy, I have never concealed my opinion that, when the present Premier and his friends succeeded to power, had they not refused to proceed with that policy the condition of the colony at the present time would have been very different. They succeeded to power at a time when there was a large financial difficulty. But why was there that financial difficulty? It was because, when the Grey Government came down in 1877 or 1878, I am not certain which, and asked for a loan of three or four millions, the honourable member for Egmont's party were sufficiently strong to prevent them from obtaining the money required. Consequently a deficiency grew up; and when the honourable member for Egmont came into power he reaped the results of his own work in finding that the colony was in this position: that it had spent so large a sum of money in advance of obtaining the necessary means by loan that he was forced to enter the English money-market for a loan for an amount then unknown among colonial loans. Had the loan asked for in 1877 or 1878 been granted, the subsequent difficulty, when the old Government succeeded to power, would not have taken place. The English money-market knew the exact position of the colony, and knew it would be absolutely necessary to float that enormous loan; and they took it on very onerous terms, and with the requirement that for three years there should be an abstention from further borrowing on the London market. At the time when the Grey Government ceased to exist and the Atkinson

Sir J. Vogel

Government came into power there was—and I am speaking advisedly—a feeling at Home in favour of settling in this colony; and I believe that if this feeling had continued we should have had the most valuable settlers New Zealand could have had. Emigrants, who afterwards went to Manitoba, were prepared to come out to New Zealand, but were deterred from doing so when they read the opinions of the Atkinson Government upon the condition and prospects of the colony. That was the time when the farmers of England were looking out for a home, and were turning their attention to New Zealand, which was the home that would have been chosen had it not been for the way in which the then Government ran down the resources and prospects of the colony, in order to throw discredit on the Government they had succeeded. Sir, this is a matter of history. I was at Home at the time, and I knew what was taking place. I knew that at that time I could have gone on sending shipload after shipload of farmers, with capital, and knowledge, and everything that would have made them valuable colonists; but they were prevented from coming owing to the accounts given of the condition of the colony by the then Government. Now, there is another matter I should like to say a few words about, and that is as regards the attack made by the Premier on the honourable member in connection with the establishment of provinces. Sir, it was with great regret that I, who had known and felt the valuable work which the Provincial Governments had done, felt myself compelled, owing to the exhausted finances of the provinces, to move that the provinces of the North Island should be suspended. I take my full share of the responsibility in connection with the more general measure subsequently introduced by my colleagues during my absence. But I need not disguise my opinion as to the value of the work done by the provinces, and I say, had it not been for the system which enabled the various parts of New Zealand to progress, we should at this stage be twenty years behind the position to which the colony has now attained. If it had been colonised from one point—Auckland—the flourishing Provinces of Canterbury and Otago would have been little better than large sheep-walks to-day. The plan adopted gave to all parts of New Zealand the opportunity of progression and self-government, and in the then state of the colony it would have been impossible for one centre to have made the extraordinary progress that New Zealand has made through the industry and ability of the settlers who have made it their home and colonised it. But, Sir, I should like to ask the honourable gentleman this question: If he has such a bitter and contemptuous feeling towards the honourable member for Auckland Central, how could he have reconciled it with his self-respect to adopt the attitude he did, and accept the patronage of that honourable gentleman? How can he reconcile to himself the language he has used towards the honourable member for Auckland Central this night with the fact that he was willing to follow the honourable gentleman if he would become Premier, to be a member of his Government—how could he reconcile his conduct towards the honourable gentleman a few weeks ago with the views he has expressed of him this evening? And, moreover, how can he reconcile himself to speak in the bitter terms he has employed of the Land for Settlements Bill of the honourable gentleman, when during the election he expressly stated that it was a better Bill than the Bill of my honourable colleague, and a Bill which he saw no objection to being passed? How he could approve of a Bill during the election to which he has used such language as that we have heard from him to-night I leave to him to explain. I can only say this: that unless the honourable member is prepared to come down with an ample apology for what he has said to-night he must rest under the stigma of having come into office with the assistance of the honourable member for Auckland Central by expressing sentiments which led the honourable gentleman to suppose that he held towards him feelings of a very different character from those which he really held—in other words, that he was prepared to do anything in the way of securing support and countenance from the honourable gentleman in order to obtain office, although he held such poor opinions of the lifelong efforts of the honourable gentleman. I think that every member of the House must regret the exhibition we have seen this evening. And now, before I conclude, I should like to say a few words upon the new light thrown upon the measure that we are now discussing. It is true that in the Financial Statement the honourable gentleman used these words:—

“I may here take the opportunity of informing the Committee of some proposals of the Government, which, as involving economy, are properly mentioned here, but which are of considerable political importance—namely, that the Government intend this session to introduce a Bill to reduce the number of members of the House of Representatives to seventy, inclusive of the Maori representatives; though this change cannot take effect until the end of the present Parliament; and next session they will submit a Bill to the House altering the mode of election, with other necessary reforms of the electoral laws.”

Taking these words in the fullest significance of which they are capable, I think that the honourable gentleman at the head of the Government has not acted fairly in bringing down the present measure without stating that it was the mere forerunner of the political changes of which the honourable gentleman has to-night told us. He has told us that next session we may be asked to do away with single electorates, that he may ask us to do away with the Bill passed last session, and to make other changes of a radical nature—altering, indeed, the whole of our electoral system. I think I may, without giving too large a significance to the words he has used this evening, ask if it was right of the honourable gentleman to move this Bill without any remarks in explanation, and without acquainting us with the fact that it was merely the commencement of large and important changes. Why, the Bill itself goes in an exactly opposite direction to that which we are led to expect by the language of the honourable gentleman this evening; for does not this Bill refer expressly to the Commissioners appointed by the Act of last session? Does it not say that they are to do this work? And if it was in the mind of the honourable gentleman to abolish these Commissioners, I ask, was he treating the House fairly in withholding that information until it was drawn from him in a moment of passion? Honourable members will conclude with me, I think, that the Bill before us now has a totally different signification from what we understood it to have before. We are now told that it is the beginning of vast changes of which we have no adequate knowledge, and as to which he leaves us to make such deductions as we may be pleased to draw. All we know is, that there is to be an attempt to introduce a system under which minorities will be represented, and that there are to be changes in every department of our representative system; and surely we have at least a right to know, before we enter upon these changes, something of the broad principles upon which the honourable gentleman intends to proceed. I think that the House is not being treated fairly in the matter, and that, if this Bill is really to be the commencement of a new system, we should have a larger knowledge of the changes of which it is intended to be the forerunner. Whilst yesterday I said I should offer no opposition to the second reading of the Bill, now that I know that the Bill is merely a part of a policy of the extent of which, or, indeed, of the nature of which, I am ignorant I feel myself justified in supporting any amendment that goes in the direction of stopping the further progress of the Bill. Then, lastly, let me say this: that the explanation which the honourable gentleman has given of the reason why he was going to make provision for four Maori members instead of three, as proposed by the Bill as brought down, is a lame and halting one. I understand he intends to keep the Maori representation as it now stands, whilst he proposes to reduce the European representation by 25 per cent. And he says he does so because he is going to take away from the Maoris the privilege they now possess of voting as ordinary electors, and which, in my opinion, is the best and highest inducement to come under our laws and civilisation which could possibly be offered to them—the best inducement to them to place themselves upon an equal footing with Europeans in the way of obtaining votes in the ordinary manner. At the commencement of the session an honourable gentleman representing a Native constituency gave notice of a motion which honourable gentlemen admired in the extreme, whether or not they thought the time had arrived for giving effect to it; and the object of that motion was that we should place the Maori race upon a footing of equality with and under equal laws and responsibilities to Europeans. Am I to be told that that honourable gentleman would, for the sake of obtaining an additional representative in the House, forego the privilege which the Maoris now possess of becoming entitled to vote on registering themselves, the same as Europeans? If the Native members are inclined to do that they are making a great mistake, and I cannot believe that the bargain which the honourable gentleman has explained to us this evening is one which the Maori members have concurred in. I am sorry that I should have troubled the House at such length, but I think the course taken by the Premier amply justifies my having spoken on this occasion.

Sir J. Vogel

Mr. W. P. REEVES.—Just half a dozen sentences. I am one of those who supported this Bill upon the second reading, and am in favour of its going into Committee at once; and, though I am opposed to certain of its provisions, I do not wish to inflict upon the House a réchauffé of what I said on the motion for the second reading; but I wish to refer to some remarks which fell from the honourable member for the Buller. The honourable gentleman attempted to make, this evening, a sort of explanation of his conduct during this session,—of his conduct towards the party of which he was not long ago a member.

Mr. O'CONNOR.—Never.

Mr. W. P. REEVES.—I shall not trouble the House by wasting words over the honourable gentleman and his explanation. I shall not take up the time of honourable gentlemen by going into such a business. The House knows what it knows, and the Committee can take the honourable member's explanation for what it is worth. But the honourable gentleman made a personal reference to me. He complained of the treatment he had received, of the abuse which had been levelled at him by an individual, and of the vilification he had received from a newspaper controlled by that individual. It is perfectly well known that that remark was levelled at my head; and I will only say this: that, if the honourable member for the Buller fancies that anything he can say here or anywhere else, or that anything he can do anywhere, is going to gag any newspaper and prevent any man worth his salt from speaking the truth regarding him, he makes one of the greatest mistakes that even he ever made in all his life.

Sir G. GREY.—Sir, I am very sorry that I should have been the cause of so much disturbance; but I wish to make a few observations on what has taken place. I trust you will pardon me for remarks I wish to make with every possible deference; but I feel it due to the honourable member who first spoke in my defence—entirely without any knowledge on my part that he was going to do so—to say that I confess it was with feelings of great pain and concern that I heard you interrupt him from the chair and speak to him with regard to the strength of the language he was using, especially when I remember the violent language that had been used towards myself, which drew no protection for myself from the Chair, and which language called for remark on the part of the honourable gentleman I speak of. I feel certain that when you peruse the Hansard report of what has taken place you will regret having spoken to the honourable gentleman and interrupted him in the manner in which you did. I say this with all deference; but I feel it necessary to say it, in justice to the honourable member for Dunedin South. Now, I think it quite unnecessary to make any remarks upon anything of a merely personal nature that was said in reference to myself. I have lived so long that I care little for anything of that kind; and I feel very often that things which may be said may be in some respects deserved, and that it does no harm, when you so often hear praise of yourself, to hear contrary language used from time to time with regard to yourself in your own presence. I think that perhaps that is a useful discipline for any man to undergo. I myself offer no objection to it. It does not hurt me, and it may be that it does me good. But I cannot help feeling sorry when an individual goes wrong, and uses language which, if it injures himself, does not injure me. So far as an individual has a right to use that language he does me good. When he is wrong he injures himself more than he injures me. I now wish to remark upon one or two things which have been said of my public acts. First, it was said that I was the cause of the gigantic mistakes which have arisen in Canterbury; to which I answer that it is really an entire mistake. What prevailed in Canterbury was this: There was a law in force that no lands could be bought for less than £3 an acre, and, of this £3, £1 was to be paid to an association of persons belonging to a particular religious body, to be used for the support of the Church of England and the establishment of bishoprics. And these Canterbury gentlemen were not satisfied with having obtained that right over a million acres, but procured an Act of Parliament to be passed in England, which enabled the Secretary of State to extend that rule to every part of New Zealand by writing under his hand executed in the Colonial Office; so that the whole of New Zealand lay at the mercy of a party in the Church of England, the High Church party, and purchasers might be compelled, in time, to pay £1 per acre extra for every acre bought in any part of New Zealand, which pound was to go to the support of the Established Church of England. I felt it my duty to resist what I thought was a great abuse, and which abuse was even being pressed upon the country in language that shocked me, because, to justify the course they were taking, this language was used: that it was worth while for all persons of every Christian denomination, for Mussulmans, Jews, heretics, and infidels, to pay £1 an acre additional for land, because the appointment of bishops to the colony added to the respectability of it, which would raise the price of the land and give fortunes to the people in that way. Well,

Sir, I felt it my duty to stand against that, for it was repugnant to Christianity. I was fortunate enough to be able to defeat that intention. The Act of Parliament, I believe, still remains upon the Statute Book, and I sometimes think of bringing in a Bill to repeal it; but there it is, law as far as New Zealand is concerned. The object of that law was also this: It was the avowed intention of the persons who passed it to prevent labourers from becoming landholders. They thought that, by raising the price of land, they would defer the time at which labourers could lay by the means to free themselves from daily toil and become the owners of land; and it appeared to me desirable and proper that land should be reduced to a cheap rate, at which every man might hope easily to acquire it; and my belief was that that system would have been protected, as it was intended should be done, by the imposition of a land-tax. I found lately, the other day, a public paper of mine upon that subject which was printed in 1854, showing what the intention then was; and, if they had done that, I believe it would have been the most beneficial land system that has ever been introduced into any colony, and that it would have been almost in advance of public opinion at the present moment with regard to a land-tax, preventing the acquisition of large properties. But I had to leave the country before the General Assembly met, and was unable to bring in that measure myself, and it was brought in by no other Government, and it was in consequence of that omission to impose a land-tax that any evils that were perpetrated in Canterbury took place. But the system itself worked well, even without the land-tax. It continued in operation in Otago until I returned a second time as Governor, and it was continued in the Province of Auckland for a long period of time, and with perfect success. I think, therefore, I may say upon that subject that it was selfish maladministration in Canterbury which then produced evil, and that the attacks that have been made against me have arisen from a misunderstanding. Now, the next thing I come to is this: It is said that I intended to set up a landed aristocracy; and that particular statement rests upon an alleged conversation with Sir Frederick Weld. The details of that conversation are not given, and whether what he may have said is rightly repeated I do not know; but, Sir, I would have everybody to remember this: that people's ideas of what is a large landed estate are very different. That I might have used words in conversation, carelessly, which would have produced an impression upon the hearer's mind in consonance with his own wishes and his own desires, and that he might consider that what I said gave some assistance to those views that he himself held, and were spoken in support of them, is quite possible, while I might have meant a totally different state of things. It is known to everybody that I might have acquired land in cities, in villages, and in the country everywhere here, and might, I suppose, have realised a very large fortune indeed; I suppose I might have been as rich as any man living almost, if I had done that in the early days of the colony: but I never did it, because it was obnoxious to me to take a step of the kind. I thought it wrong to use official power, or knowledge acquired from position or knowledge, or power in an office, to benefit myself. The acquisition of land was never any object in my life, and, my own desires being so simple as they were, I might have used expressions, in reference to landed property, which those who desired to acquire a large extent of lands might have interpreted in a totally different sense from what I meant. But I ask any one to look at my actions. Has any single action that I ever took shown any intention on my part to set up an aristocracy of the kind spoken of? Look at what I did in the Wairarapa: did I set up an aristocracy there, or small farmers? Look at the pensioners' villages: what did I do there? Look at what I did in South Africa: what did I do there? In every case my efforts were directed to the establishment of people upon small farms, and to dividing, as far as possible, the land equally between the whole population. It will be found that my first act, when I had power, was to limit the extent which any runholder might acquire for his farmstead. That was extended by the Superintendents, or through their requiring the thing to be done, subsequently; but I had fixed limits of a most moderate kind. I simply ask any one, when he hears again that language used with regard to myself which has been used this day, to try to find any single act that was ever performed by me to show that I had any intention of that kind. I am sure they cannot find any such act, either in reference to myself or in reference to others. Now, so far I have disposed of the attacks that I think I ought to answer. With regard to any other attacks of a personal kind, if I deserved them, well and good, let me bear them; if I did not deserve them, they will make no great impression upon anybody. I was very sorry to hear the Premier say one thing. He said, "I shall be much stiffer in what I do with regard to alterations in the present Bill than I should have been, in consequence of the conduct of the Opposition." Now, I say, Sir, that he has no right to punish the Colony of New Zealand in consequence of anything that may be done by the Opposition in this House. These, were words of passion, and I have no doubt he will not carry them out, and I think it is very unfortunate that he gave the example of making use of any expression of the kind. Then, I should like to speak upon what was said with regard to the Natives. I think that he had no business to make any exception or alteration in an Act of this kind to get votes. What he admits he did was this: that whilst the Bill was under our consideration he came to an arrangement with the Natives by which they are to have the fourth member left, and are to forego the privilege of voting for European members. The honourable member for Christchurch North referred to that in a very admirable manner, but he did not point out what I believe to be the great blot. He spoke only of its effect upon the Natives—its deteriorating effect upon them; but I say that a constitutional alteration of that kind ought not to be made by a private arrangement in a Bill which was already before the House. If he intended to follow a course of that kind it should have been intimated to us from the first, and not have been taken to obtain votes. I say it was an unworthy proceeding. I do not call it a concession; I call it misleading the Native race, and I think that the Premier was not justified in making the alteration in the manner in which he stated he did. Then I say, again, that the thing is a mistake. He distinctly stated that the policy he was pursuing with regard to the Natives in this matter was this: that he thought it undesirable to grant the Maoris the same privileges as Europeans, because they could not speak English; and until English began to become their common language he did not think they ought to enter into privileges of the kind. If that policy had been adopted, what would have become of the Canadians? Why, one part of the population of Canada can speak nothing but French, and another can speak nothing but English, but there meet in one common Chamber persons speaking those two languages. Where would their privileges, their liberties have been if, in a population of that character, they had adopted the rule the Premier intends to follow? Then, take the inhabitants of South Africa. They meet in a House in which the Dutch and the English are about equally divided. Many of the Dutch do not understand a word of English, and many of the English do not understand a word of Dutch; but they all meet upon common ground in one Assembly, and from their joint wisdom result measures of a most beneficial character. So should the same take place between the Maoris and ourselves. I say if that is the policy of the present Government they are pursuing a wrong policy, and one which will be disastrous to the country, and which it is unworthy of this House, I think, to adopt. I wished to make these few remarks. I am sorry to have been the cause of so much trouble to the House to-night; but I felt it right to defend myself from the accusations I have spoken of. As to the personal accusations, I treat them with the indifference which I feel they deserve.

Sir G. Grey

Mr. SEDDON.—I think there is no other member of this House who has more reason to complain than the member for Kumara has. In the fit of temper that the Premier has indulged in I have been spoken of in most disrespectful terms. I have been accused by the Premier of an attempt to drive him into a corner; and, notwithstanding the language he applied to the honourable member for Auckland Central has been more violent than that which he applied towards me, still I say this: that he owes me, and every member in this House, an abject apology, not only for the remarks he has made, but for his demeanour in this House. I,

Sir, from the bottom of my heart, pity him; I pity him, considering the position that he holds, for making such an exhibition of himself as he has done, instead of setting a good example to this House. I say that he is to be pitied, and that I can well afford to pity him. Sir, how would he, in the position he holds, like me to say this: "Your actions are disgraceful; they are from base motives, and you should be ashamed of yourself"? If language of that nature, and under existing circumstances, is applied to honourable members as it was applied to the honourable member for Auckland Central, where is it to end? I believe that you, Sir, did not hear the words "base," and "base motives," or you would have asserted your position in the chair, and, recognising no difference in the position of honourable members in this House, would have called on the Premier to withdraw them. There is nothing so provocative as language of that sort. So far as anything I have done or said in connection with this matter, all I have to say is this: that I believe God defends the right, and we are fighting for the rights of the people, whilst the Premier and his followers are trying to take away those rights. The debate which has sprung up has had this effect, at all events: that the Premier of New Zealand has got up and had to admit, "I am not going to be driven into a corner by the honourable member for Kumara." And, when he said that, he looked across at me as though I were not made of the same flesh and blood as himself, and represented a constituency different from all others. Why should he refer to any member of this House in such undignified terms, and say, "I will not be driven into a corner by him"? He is doing wrong, and he knows, and those who are fighting for the right know, that the right will prevail. And what has this debate disclosed? It has disclosed that the honourable gentleman is going to do away with single electorates, that he is going to amalgamate electorates and introduce Hare's system, or some system of which we know nothing. He has been driven to disclose that. It was the force of the arguments of the honourable member for Auckland Central which caused the Premier for a moment to act honestly; and in a fit of passion he has been led to let us have an insight into his policy which we had not before. I will not say to him that it arises from base motives. No, Sir; I represent a community who would not be pleased were I to use such language to the Premier of the colony or to any member of this House—such unbecoming language as has been used to myself and Sir George Grey; but I will say this: that, for motives best known to himself, which are in the interests of his party and in the interests of those he represents, the Premier wishes to destroy the liberties which the people possess, and it is for us to struggle to maintain those liberties. I do not wish to draw comparisons, but I feel that I am sent here to do what is right and just. I came to New Zealand a Lancashire lad, with only one friend in the colony to assist me. I did not come here having the assistance of friends in either branch of the Legislature or in other positions of power. But the honourable gentleman has had all and every one of those advantages. I may say that it is not necessary for my existence that I should hold office or receive pay from the colony. When we have exhibitions of this kind, when honourable members are debating that which they think is in the interests of the country, and when the Government turn all questions, however trivial, into party questions, I should infer that if the honourable gentleman should leave the Government benches his living would be gone. Surely things are not so bad that he cannot exist without office. If that is so, I pity him; for I can always make a living in this country, and earn the respect of the people with whom I am associated. I have done it before, and am ready to do it again, and, no matter what language the honourable gentleman may apply to me, I shall do what is right and just, and fearlessly go on in the straight path. No doubt I have made mistakes—what man in public life has not?—but I have always endeavoured to do what is right and just. Perhaps my reward may be the same as that given to the honourable member for Auckland Central. When, Sir, I heard the Premier stand up in his place and tell us that the people of New Zealand have received no benefit from the honourable member for Auckland Central, and when I know the honourable member himself knows that the very Constitution under which we are working, and which is the freest perhaps that has ever been given to any country, was framed and fought for by the honourable member for Auckland Central, and from that Constitution all the liberty we possess has sprung, and then to be told that he has done nothing, that he is a vain, useless old man, who has never been of any use to the country, made my blood boil, and I said to myself, "I cannot allow that to pass unchallenged." Sir, in 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882, 1883, and 1884 the honourable member for Auckland Central dragged the Hall Government and all the party at his chariot-wheels. Act after Act was placed on the Statute Book; and who forced them to place those Acts there? The honourable member for Auckland Central. Who forced the Government to pass the Triennial Parliaments Bill? The honourable member for Auckland Central. Who gave us manhood suffrage? The honourable member for Auckland Central. Who gave us the present electoral laws? The honourable member for Auckland Central. Who reduced the property-vote? The honourable member for Auckland Central. He has left his mark on all those measures, not because he was in power, but because he was in the position which he still occupies. If a wrong was being done he strove to right it, and if a right was demanded by the people he was its advocate. And who placed the Premier on those benches? Does not the Premier make the admission that he offered the position he holds himself to the honourable member for Auckland Central?

At the time he offered him that position did he tell him that in his heart he believed he was a vain and useless old man? I hope that when he gets the Hansard proof of what he said this evening he will come down to the House and say that he has erased those expressions from it, so that it may not be handed down to posterity that the Premier of this colony, who should weigh full well every word he utters, could have used such expressions and made accusations which could not be substantiated. I should like to see those words erased, for, if there was anything disgraceful, it was in the words used by the Premier, of which he ought to be ashamed, as he ought to be also of the exhibition he has made of himself before us this evening. Sir, let us draw a veil over that as far as possible. But what does all this arise from? Is it an exceptional thing that in dealing with such an important question as the representation of the country we should have taken some eight or nine hours in discussing it? When the Premier says that he is going to change the whole electoral system of the country, is it to be said for a moment that that is too long a time to take in discussing the question, or that it should cause the exhibition of temper which the Premier of the colony has shown to-night? I say that, from what the Premier has now told the House, not a word too much has been said on this measure. I feel, and have felt throughout, that underneath this Bill, simple as it appears before us, there was underlying something which would be detrimental to the interests of the country, and that until we had a clear and full explanation of what the Government proposed in regard to it we had no right to allow it to go one step further. I tell the Premier there has been no consultation between me and the leader of the Opposition. So far as the Opposition are concerned, I am not working with them in this matter; they have deserted me. I disagree in toto with the action of the Opposition in regard to this question, for I consider that in regard to this and other large questions which have been brought before the House the Opposition have not performed their constitutional functions, because those measures should have been fully discussed and some concerted action taken with regard to them. But, as I say, there is no concerted action with regard to this matter, and I have only been actuated by what I consider to be my duty to the people of the country. I have done my best to understand the several measures which have been placed before us, and have taken individual action on them. I care not what the opinion of any honourable member may be. If I believe a thing is wrong I think I am only doing my duty if I tell the House how I consider it is wrong, and if I vote to satisfy myself and my constituents I consider that I have done all that is necessary. I have to satisfy those who have sent me here, and, when I have done that, I have done my duty. I am not here to please the Premier or the Government, or even those on this side of the House; it is not for them to say when I shall speak or what I shall do or say. I am responsible alone to those who sent me here, and if I feel satisfied with the action I have taken I am indifferent to the contempt or sneers that may be hurled at me; and as long as I am doing my duty to the colony I shall certainly not swerve from my path for anything the Premier may say. I have already danced two or three times on the political coffin of the honourable gentleman, and if he goes on as he has done to-night it will not be long before I have an opportunity of dancing another jig: a little more rope is all that is required, then political suicide; and the undertaker will very soon be here. It is not such action as he has displayed to-night, attacking, as he did, the honourable member for Auckland Central, and then again, when the leader of the Opposition began to speak, walking away, and not even leaving a member of the Government to listen to what the leader of the Opposition had to say, that will take him through this Parliament with the members who are now in this House; and if he thinks so he will find himself very much mistaken. We believe in fair-play, and fair fighting, and decorous conduct. Conduct of that kind will not tend to raise the honourable gentleman in the eyes of his own supporters or in the eyes of members on this side of the House; and if he adopts that course towards us we are bound to retaliate, and in the end the honourable gentleman will not profit. I like to see party warfare carried on in a fair and manly way. I have always been accustomed to that through life. I do not believe in hitting below the belt, and the Premier has done it to-night. We do not intend to do the same. We do not agree with the Bill, and I have proposed an amendment to the Bill as a protest because nothing is done in the shape of local government, and an intimation that this Bill should not go further than the second reading this session. I am sure the Government will carry the motion for the commitment of the Bill; but as a number of amendments have been given notice of, I will ask the Government to allow them to be placed on the Order Paper, and not attempt to force the Bill further after carrying the motion to commit.

Mr. Seddon

Mr. MOSS.—I said all I wished on the Bill itself last night, but wound up by hoping that an amendment to the effect that the Bill should not proceed further until some measure of local government had been brought down, would be moved on the motion that you, Sir, should leave the chair. I regarded that as a very proper course to take. I said I should vote for such a motion if some other honourable gentleman would bring it down. I had written such an amendment, and had shown it to the honourable member for Auckland Central. I had a hope—I had no ground, I am bound to say, to warrant the hope, but I had entertained a hope that, knowing how strongly the honourable gentleman felt on the question of local government, he would bring it down. The honourable gentleman has not thought fit to propose the amendment, but it has been taken up by the honourable member for Kumara. It has been traversed by the Government, who declare that they will regard it as a motion of confidence or no-confidence.—(No.)—The leader of the Government distinctly said so. I shall be very glad indeed to hear it now denied. I think it a wrong course. I do not think that the freedom of honourable members should be interfered with in this case. The Premier is not doing justice to himself or to the House. The question ought to have been decided on its merits; but, as this is not to be done, it places me in a position that I feel bound to explain. There were two honourable gentlemen who figured prominently before the country during the elections—the one, the gentleman who is now Premier; and the other, the gentleman who is now leader of the Opposition. The honourable gentleman who is Premier had the misfortune to be the bête noire of the South, and the present leader of the Opposition was the bête noire of the North. I did not sympathize with the feeling, or think it right to ostracize any single member in this way. As far as the leader of the Opposition was concerned, that honourable gentleman will do me the justice of saying that, during the twenty-five years I have known him, it has never been my good fortune to be on the same side of the House with him. We were always opposed in political ideas, though personally I hope we have the best feeling towards each other. I wish now to avoid any step likely to restore the leader of the Opposition to power at the present moment. As the question has become one of want of confidence, and as the honourable member for Auckland Central did not see fit to propose the amendment, I shall not be in a position to support it, coming from the honourable gentleman who is undoubtedly the lieutenant of the leader of the Opposition, and who very ably fills that position. I should like to make one remark on what fell from the Premier. He particularly addressed the honourable member for Wallace, and urged him to remember that local government existed already, that he had established it; and in the very next breath he begged that honourable gentleman and any others to make suggestions that would help him to establish it. He said, "What I want is a system of local government." That is exactly what he does want, and until he finds it I am certain all his measures will be futile in restoring peace and economic government to the country. The honourable gentleman has let another cat out of the bag in a most extraordinary way. He says that this is part of a scheme. If the scheme includes the proposal to establish a limited Legislative Council we shall have a perfect reaction, and the honourable gentlemen who are assisting the Premier to bring about this reaction certainly have professed principles very different in the past. The honourable member for Auckland Central was made largely the means of bringing into power the present Government and those who are supporting them. The honourable gentleman's great influence and power was largely used in influencing the elections in favour of those who are now supporting the Premier. Especially was it used by the Minister for Public Works in Auckland, who stated that he, and those with him, were working with the able assistance of the honourable member for Auckland Central; and I found that the cry was one of the most formidable difficulties I had to combat in my own election. I am extremely sorry to see this reaction following the great advance made in Liberalism and democratic progress during the last few years. Some of the Liberal measures we formerly carried are now endangered, and, in some degree, by the action of those who assisted in passing them. There are now behind the Premier honourable members who have figured as Liberals and democrats of a more extreme character than myself. The scheme of which this is a part is a scheme only fit to culminate in a limited Legislative Council. I heartily hope that things will take a better turn, and that this House will not allow itself to be used in undoing by sideways what it took so many years of hard fighting to perfect. Only let the Premier feel that he has a majority—and they will excuse me for saying a blind and obdurate majority—and there is no one so bold. I know that of old. But let that majority dwindle, and we shall hear no more of this stifling of free debate by making Government questions of important measures of every kind, although they do not affect the power of the Government to administer the affairs of the colony. For the reasons I have stated I shall vote against the amendment of the honourable member for Kumara.

Mr. BARRON.—The honourable member for Christchurch North said, very properly, that probably there is not a member of this House who will not be ashamed of the exhibition we have witnessed to-night. The services of that honourable gentleman and of many other veterans in politics have, no doubt, been very dear to this country; but I put it to them, are they not rather exacting a little more than the value of those services from the country by delaying the public business on all conceivable occasions for the purpose of exhuming old musty references to the buried past, when we should be rather proceeding in an orderly and decent way with the present business? Such irrelevant reminiscences and autobiographical self-laudations may be very interesting to the veterans who have indulged in them and to the other opponents of the Bill, but it may not be too much to say that they are neither interesting nor profitable to the country, and it is evident that other members of this House would rather be spared inflections of the kind that have been placed on them to-night, and would very much rather proceed in a proper and businesslike way with the Bill which is now under consideration. If honourable gentlemen would choose some other time and place for the purpose of reciprocating compliments and endeavouring to outvie each other in quoting forgotten passages from ancient history it surely would greatly facilitate public business. Let us hope that the House is now prepared to proceed with the business in hand, and that we may be spared further exhibitions such as the honourable member for Christchurch North has so justly condemned.

Mr. O'CONOR.—It is unpleasant to have to refer to the tactics of parties when those tactics are not what can be called of a respectable kind. I have been subjected to a considerable amount of annoyance because certain persons thought I should follow the honourable member for Christchurch North in this Parliament, and have been disappointed. It has been said by the honourable member for St. Albans that I belong to the party he belongs to. But he is new in the House, and takes a great deal on himself, and dictates to older members as to what party they should belong to. I have never given in my adhesion to that party, and they have no right to claim my support in any way; and if that honourable gentleman does correspond with the Lyttelton Times he will do better to keep his own influence to defend his own actions. Let him explain why there is such a difference between his hustings speeches and the speeches he has made in this House. Let him explain how he changes his opinions as to dealing with the Upper House, which he said to his constituents he would reduce by a half, and also reduce their honorarium. I am now quoting from the paper he knows something about, and in that paper, I expect written by himself, his speech to his constituents was described as having enthralled his audience. That was his own description of his own speech. As I differ from him, I have no doubt he will describe me as something very bad indeed, and will hold me up to ridicule. But I must tell him that honourable members in this House have not a right to retail lobby-gossip, and they have no right to use their position as editors or proprietors of newspapers in order to coerce honourable members to vote contrary to their convictions. The honourable member for St. Albans has said that he will not be bullied by anybody. Does he forget that he tried to drive the poor constable out of his living at St. Albans? He had great sympathy with the members of the Upper House; but what was his sympathy with the poor policeman and his family at St. Albans, whom he thus persecuted by his position here! He need not take upon himself to lecture members of this House. Let him take care and use discreetly the vote which has been intrusted to him for the first time, and not be so fond of indulging in his newspaper paragraphs. Whether it pleases the honourable member or anybody else, I know what my duty is to the people of the country and myself. I say distinctly to the honourable gentlemen on the same side of the House as the honourable member for St. Albans and to the leader of the Opposition that he has no claim whatever on my support, and that I never tendered it.

Mr. SEDDON.—Yes.

Mr. O'CONOR.—The honourable gentleman who now interrupts certainly, in the first instance, seemed to think that he controlled my vote; and he has addressed me in a most impertinent style this session. Sometimes I had to tell him that I would draw the Speaker's attention to it.

Mr. Barron

Mr. SPEAKER.—I think the honourable member should withdraw the word "impertinent."

Mr. O'CONOR.—I used it in a parliamentary sense. I defy any honourable member to say that upon any occasion, either publicly or privately, I placed myself as a follower of the honourable member for Christchurch North—Sir Julius Vogel. No man can say it, and no man has a right to contradict me in that. I say distinctly that is the case. While I was supporting Sir Robert Stout during the last Parliament I expressly declared at the time my condemnation of his alliance with the honourable gentleman. I said that on the very first occasion; and it was known by those honourable members in my confidence why I was supporting the late Government notwithstanding that alliance. I know the party in the House to which I do belong, and I regret very much that some members of the other party in this House should have taken action which I can have no sympathy with. I do not agree with honourable members who find fault with one proposal after another, simply because those proposals are not brought forward by their particular party. They say, if a proposal is brought forward by their opponents instead of by themselves, that it is an outrage on the people, and will do an enormous wrong to the country. The very proposal which if brought forward by themselves they would advocate and support they now condemn in the strongest and most unfair way. Sir, I think it is a most scandalous and pernicious thing to have the time of the House wasted purely for the purpose of party obstruction. These are party tactics of such a nature as will, if continued, make this House a by-word in the country. We sit here for months; and what have we to show for it? A Hansard filled with long and empty speeches, consisting largely of personal abuse from one side to the other—long, dreary speeches, repeated over and over again from Parliament to Parliament—wearisome platitudes that we have all grown heartily tired of listening to years ago. Sir, I say we shall have to face the condemnation of the people of the country if we allow this to go on. I wish certain honourable gentlemen would mend their own actions and not endeavour so unfairly to influence the action of others. Every one in this House is supposed to have a conscience of his own and a mind to direct his own action, and, certainly, as the honourable member for Kumara said just now, every one is answerable to his constituents for what he does, and also to take his share of the responsibility for the action of the party which he supports. I think honourable members, and especially young members, should learn to tolerate independent action of one another; and members whose action is such as I have stated in regard to the honourable member for St. Albans have done what they have no right to do.

Mr. W. P. REEVES.—May I be allowed to say, in personal explanation, that it is quite contrary to the fact that I ever advocated the reduction of the number of the Upper House by half? I did advocate a large reduction in their honorarium.

Mr. SEDDON.—May I also be allowed to say, in personal explanation, that I interjected a "Yes" when the honourable member for the Buller was speaking not at all to offend the honourable member, but to express my dissent from what the honourable member was saying? I will recall to the honourable gentleman an occasion when, I being present in the whip's room on a Sunday evening, in the second session of 1884, he asked the honourable member for Christchurch North to peruse a pamphlet he had written on the Westport Harbour. The honourable member for Christchurch North went into the financial phase of that question, showing how the same would require to be altered before it could be effectively worked on a sound and proper basis. That was after the first Stout-Vogel Government had been defeated, and after the vote had been taken defeating the succeeding Atkinson Government. The whole question of the Westport Harbour was gone into by the honourable member for Christchurch North, who proved to the honourable member for the Buller that what he suggested was workable and should be done; and I wish to say that the language used by the honourable member for the Buller then differs somewhat from what he uses now. That is why I ejaculated "Yes."

Mr. O'CONOR.—I think the honourable gentleman, who has taken upon himself to repeat a private conversation, ought to repeat the whole of it. I absolutely deny that any conversation has taken place in which I pledged myself to support the honourable member for Christchurch North, either then or since; and I think the honourable member for Christchurch North, whom I have known for thirty years, has too much honour to say it is so.

Mr. CARROLL.—I do not intend to detain the House, but I rise simply for the purpose of saying that the Government made no compact with the four Maori members: at any rate, so far as I am concerned, that has not been the case. Neither do I think that the action taken by the Government in that portion of the Bill relating to the Maoris was taken with the object of catching votes, because, although we in this House are only four in number, I think we are quite able to take care of our own affairs. I think that will be made quite manifest to the House as we go on. However, I do not altogether approve of what fell from the Premier this evening in regard to Native affairs. I do not think he has placed the position of the Natives fairly before this House: that is to say, I do not think he is altogether alive to the great disadvantages which they labour under, and his statements this evening were not altogether to the point. First of all, the Natives are to be deemed as born subjects of Her Majesty—that is, according to the Native Rights Act passed in 1865; but under present circumstances they do not enjoy all the rights and privileges the European subjects of Her Majesty do. The Premier says that they do not pay rates or taxes. Well, I venture to say that they do—that their lands pay. County rates are charged on Maori lands in many cases, and, although they do not pay the rates directly, in some cases the Government pay them, and make it a charge on the land under the Crown and Native Lands Rating Act. Not only that, notwithstanding that they are paying these rates, they are not allowed any voice whatever in the local bodies. They are not represented in the County Councils. There is not a County Council in the whole country where you will find a Native representing. Although they pay rates they are not placed on the electoral rolls as ratepayers. The Maori can only vote in European elections when he has qualified himself by holding a freehold of land in severalty to the value of £25. Without that he cannot exercise any vote whatever in any European election. When you come to consider the difference between the European and the Maori on that score, I think the House will admit that the Maori is somewhat at an unfair disadvantage. Take the Europeans, for instance. They come into this colony, and, after being here twelve months, or six months in any district, they are entitled to vote under the residential qualification; while the Maoris, who live here, who were born in the country, and who may be said to be the children of the soil, are not at all entitled to vote on that qualification. That is totally unfair, especially when we know that throughout New Zealand there is a large floating European population who have a voice in the elections of the country, a very powerful voice too, and who exercise it only too freely. I am one of those who consider that the time has arrived when all distinctions between the two races should be swept away—that all unnecessary distinctions should, wherever practicable, be obliterated, and that we should legislate in that direction. I may be wrong, but that is my opinion at the present time. I look at it in this way: If you admit us to have a voice in this Legislature, why not admit us to be on the same footing as yourselves in the control of our own affairs and the affairs of the country? What is the position now outside this chamber? We Maoris have not the control of our own property; it is managed for us by the Government. I myself consider that I am capable of managing my own property, but, under the law of the country at the present time, I am not allowed to do so. Is that fair? I say it is not. There are all these things to be considered; but I do not think there is time to go into the subject this session. I thought this session was to be a very short one, and that is why I did not proceed with my resolutions; and I am very glad the Premier has thought fit to defer this part of the question until next session. Still, I think he will deal with it more definitely by amending the Maori Representation Act in the direction I ask. I do not believe in a retrograde step such as is proposed in doing away with the dual vote. We do not want concessions. We want only what is right. If we are entitled to four members, let us have four; if we are entitled to more than four, give us more than four; if we are entitled to no more than three, we do not ask for more than three. All we want is what is just. And I hope that when anything affecting the Native people comes up in this House for discussion all party considerations and all party prejudices will be set aside, and that both sides of the House will enter into the discussion free of bias and with the desire of doing what is necessary, and what will be beneficial not only to the Natives, but to both races and to the colony generally.

Mr. SEDDON.—I have been requested by a number of honourable members to withdraw my amendment, so that we may fairly test the main question on the proposal to go into Committee. I therefore, without any idea of any other amendment being proposed, ask leave to withdraw my amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

The House divided on the question, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair."

AYES, 43.

Allen	Hobbs	Russell
Anderson	Hodgkinson	Seymour
Atkinson	Jackson	Steward, W. J.
Barron	Lawry	Stewart, W. D.
Beetham	Mackenzie, T.	Taipua
Bruce	McGregor	Tanner
Buchanan	McKenzie, J.	Thompson, R.
Dodson	Mitchelson	Valentine
Fergus	Monk	Ward
Fisher	Newman	Whyte
Fitchett	Peacock	Withy.
Goldie	Pearson
Graham	Rhodes	Tellers.
Hamlin	Richardson, G.	Fraser
Hislop	Ross	O'Connor.

NOES, 21.

Duncan	Kelly	Parata
Feldwick	Kerr	Perceval
Fish	Levestam	Taylor
Fitzherbert	Loughrey	Vogel.
Grimmond	Macarthur	Tellers.
Guinness	Moss	Marchant
Jones	O'Callaghan	Seddon.
Joyce

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Cadman	Moat
Cowan	Turnbull
Fulton	Samuel
Hall	Ballance
Izard	Richardson, E.
Mills	Walker
Ormond	Pyke
Thompson, T.	Buxton
Wilson.	Lance.

Majority for, 22.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Carroll

IN COMMITTEE.

Clause 2.—House of Representatives to consist of seventy members, whereof three to be Maoris.

Mr. MOSS moved, That the words in the first line, "expiration by effluxion of time," be struck out, and the words "thirty-first day of December, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight," be inserted in lieu thereof.

The Committee divided on the question, "That the words be retained."

AYES, 63.

Anderson	Jackson	Perceval
Atkinson	Joyce	Reeves, W. P.
Beetham	Kerr	Rhodes
Blake	Lawry	Richardson, G.
Bruce	Levestam	Ross
Buchanan	Loughrey	Russell
Carroll	Macarthur	Seymour.
Dodson	Mackenzie, M.	Smith
Duncan	Mackenzie, T.	Steward, W. J.
Feldwick	Marchant	Stewart, W. D.
Fergus	McGregor	S. Menteath
Fisher	McKenzie, J.	Tanner
Fish	Mitchelson	Thompson, R.
Fitchett	Moat	Valentine
Fitzherbert	Monk	Ward
Goldie	Newman	Whyte
Graham	O'Callaghan	Wilson
Grimmond	O'Connor	Withy.
Guinness	Parata	Tellers.
Hislop	Peacock	Allen
Hobbs	Pearson	Barron.
Hodgkinson

NOES, 5.

Grey	Tellers.
Kelly	Fraser
Taylor.	Moss.

Majority for, 58.

Amendment negatived.

"On the expiration by effluxion of time or other sooner determination of the present General Assembly, the number of members to be thereafter elected," &c.

Mr. STUART-MENTEATH moved, That the words, "or other sooner determination," be struck out, with the view of inserting the word "only."

The Committee divided on the question, "That the words be retained."

AYES, 36.

Allen	Hobbs	Ross
Anderson	Hodgkinson	Seymour
Atkinson	Jackson	Steward, W. J.
Beetham	Lawry	Taipua
Bruce	Mackenzie, T.	Tanner
Buchanan	McGregor	Thompson, R.
Dodson	McKenzie, J.	Valentine
Fergus	Mitchelson	Whyte
Fisher	Monk	Withy.
Fitchett	Pearson	Tellers.
Goldie	Rhodes	Barron
Graham	Richardson, G.	Peacock.
Hislop

NOES, 30.

Blake	Feldwick	Fitzherbert
Duncan	Fish	Fraser

Grey	Macarthur	Seddon
Grimmond	Marchant	Smith
Guinness	Moat	Stewart, W. D.
Jones	Newman	Taylor
Joyce	O'Callaghan	Ward.
Kelly	Parata	Tellers.
Kerr	Reeves, R. H. J.	Mackenzie, M.
Levestam	Reeves, W. P.	S.-Menteath.
Loughrey

Majority for, 6.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. W. D. STEWART moved to insert the words, "not earlier than the eighth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine," after the word "determination."

The Committee divided on the question, "That the words be inserted."

AYES, 36.

Blake	Kerr	Seddon
Duncan	Levestam	Smith
Feldwick	Loughrey	Stewart, W. J.
Fish	Mackenzie, M.	Stewart, D. W.
Fitzherbert	Marchant	S.-Menteath
Fraser	McKenzie, J.	Taipua
Grey	Moat	Taylor
Grimmond	Newman	Valentine
Guinness	O'Callaghan	Ward.
Hodgkinson	Parata	Tellers.
Jones	Reeves, W. P.	Fitchett
Joyce	Ross	Reeves, R. H. J.
Kelly

NOES, 31.

Allen	Goldie	Rhodes
Anderson	Graham	Richardson, G.
Atkinson	Hislop	Seymour
Barron	Hobbs	Tanner
Beetham	Jackson	Thompson, R.
Bruce	Lawry	Whyte
Buchanan	Macarthur	Withy.
Carroll	Mackenzie, T.
Dodson	Mitchelson	Tellers.
Fergus	Monk	McGregor
Fisher	Peacock	Pearson.

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Cadman	Moat
Cowan	Turnbull
Fulton	Samuel
Hall	Ballance
Izard	Richardson, E.
Mills	Walker
O'Connor	Vogel
Russell	Perceval
Thompson, T.	Buxton
Wilson.	Lance.

Majority for, 5.

Amendment agreed to.

Progress reported.

The House adjourned at twenty minutes to three o'clock a.m.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

Wednesday, 7th December, 1887.

Second Readings—Parliamentary Honorary and Privileges Bill—North Dunedin Cemetery Extension Bill—Native Bills—Native Land Administration Act Repeal Bill—Maori Real Estate Management Bill.

The Hon. the SPEAKER took the chair at half-past two o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SECOND READINGS.

Sounds County Hospital Representation Bill, Napier Harbour Board Amendment and Endowment Improvement Bill, Akaroa Borough Council Reserves Vesting and Reclamation Bill, Native Land Court Bill.

PARLIAMENTARY HONORARIUM AND PRIVILEGES BILL.

The Hon. Dr. POLLEN.—At a distant time there was a Parliament from which, for reasons best known to the lieges, lawyers were rigidly excluded. That Parliament came to be known by the classical nickname of "Parliamentum Indoctum"—"the Know-nothing Parliament." In these days of ours, however, we have so large an infusion of the legal element that we are not at all in any danger of being called by that term—"the Know-nothing Parliament." But I think that if we do not do very much more than we are invited to do at present we may be distinguished in the future by the nickname of "the Screw Parliament." Economy is highly to be commended as a domestic as well as a public virtue, provided it be systematic economy and wise economy. If it be not systematic economy and wise economy, there is a danger—on the public side, at any rate—that small savings in one direction may be made to excuse or justify extravagance in another. What, I want to ask, has brought us into our present financial straits? Is it because we have paid a moderate and reasonable salary to Her Majesty's representatives in this colony? Is it because we have paid such salaries as were not too much to Ministers who have charge of the public business of the colony? We have been paying them less every year for years past than is received by the responsible officers of any banking corporation doing a reasonable amount of business in the colony. Is it because we have provided for the payment of members of the Legislature? Are all these three sources of expenditure sufficient to account for the financial distress in which we find ourselves now? They make a mere drop in the bucket of our responsibilities. We have come to these financial straits for these reasons: that we have been making railways beyond the necessities of the colony; that we have been spending millions on railways which have been described by the term "political railways," and which deserve no other character. When we have made our railways we have been authorising the expenditure of enormous sums of money—hundreds of thousands of pounds—for the purpose of constructing artificial harbours to deprive these railways of the traffic they were intended to carry. We have been every year wasting tens of thousands of pounds upon goldfields for the purchase of parliamentary support: only because it was necessary to purchase parliamentary support would any legislative body in the world have consented to the waste and extravagance which, since the discovery of gold, has been going on, is going on, and, I fear, will go on. We have been spending every year tens of thousands of pounds in what is called opening up land for settlement, and we have no settlers. Not only have we no settlers, but we are doing, apparently, everything in our power to prevent settlers from coming here and to drive away those who are here. That is what we have been doing. We have been changing every year our land-laws, so that no man who leaves England to-day can be sure that when he arrives in the colony he will find the same land-laws existing which existed when he left England. More than all, while we have been doing these things it will have been patent to every man who gave the subject one hour's serious consideration that, having incurred all this expenditure to prepare the colony for settlement, it was our duty also to import settlers to occupy the lands. We have done nothing of the sort. A craven fear of trade-unions and of the professional unemployed has prevented us from doing what was a manifest duty—prevented us from turning even a rill of the enormous stream of money that was going to waste into a channel so profitable and useful as assisting immigration and settling the land. It is not by small savings that we can recover ourselves in this way. We may save cheese-parings and candle-ends in the kitchen, but we shall not keep the Official Assignee from the door if we have riot and waste in the hall; and we have had nothing but riot and waste in the hall in times past. We shall do very little now by small savings unless, as I have before said in this Council, our whole fiscal system is altered, and we return to economy systematic and wise. We are directly invited by the Bill now before us to set an example of what ought to be done in the way of retrenchment. I venture to say that there is no member of this Council who will not willingly make a sacrifice when it is required by the colony; but I hope there are few members of this Council who do not feel that an indignity is put upon the Council by the different treatment which is proposed by the Bill which is before the Council to-day. This treatment is invidious, and it is wholly unjustifiable. The Act of 1884 bears this title: "An Act to provide for reimbursing Members of the General Assembly their Expenses in Attendance on Parliament." What are the expenses of members in connection with their attendance on Parliament? Every man who lives at a distance from this place is obliged to give every year three or four months of time to the service of the public. He is obliged, besides, to neglect his own business, if he has any; and there are very few members of this Council who have not some business which suffers by their absence from their homes. A member is obliged to neglect his business, and to suffer very much in his purse in consequence. He is obliged to incur considerable expense in living here, and he is obliged to expose his health to very great danger in a local climate which, I venture to say, is the most inhospitable in this favoured colony. Sir, we have here a modern Cave of the Winds, with but a weak substitute for the Æolus of old, who, controlling storms, was still but the servant of the Olympians. Captain Edwin is not strong enough for the place, and is forced to content himself with giving warnings of the approach of the furies whom he cannot command, and who appear to be constantly "on the loose." Is it nothing that a man incurs such expenses and such risks as I just have referred to? These are arguments which ought to be considered. But those expenses and these inconveniences are common to all the members of the Legislature—to the members of this Council and to the members of the House of Representatives—and so far the recognition of their services has been equal, and I am content. But there is another provision which is proposed to be made in the Bill, to which I object. The Bill says that there are "additional expenses necessarily incurred" by members of the House of Representatives for which provision is to be made. I am curious to know what is the nature of these additional expenses. There are, no doubt, the expenses of election; but there is not opposition at every election. Some members are elected unopposed and without expense: the consideration, nevertheless, is general. When the Regulation of Elections Act established the practice of voting by ballot, there was also passed an Act known as the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act. The purpose of that Act was to limit, as far as possible, expenditure at elections, so that, as it was said, a poor man and a rich man might be placed on an equality in their efforts to serve their country. Have the provisions of that Act been observed, we will say, at the recent elections? My own political apprenticeship was served in a provincial district in which electioneering was one of the fine arts. The rolls were scientifically stuffed in those days. I have known a cargo of immigrants expected, but who had not yet arrived, who recorded a block vote for a particular party. I have known teams of working bullocks so moved by the prevailing excitement as to "vote early and vote often" for their favoured candidate. I have known Returning Officers in out-districts who converted themselves for the nonce into spiritualistic mediums, and enabled incorporeal electors to plump for the man of the people. These things occurred in the old times. In the recent elections in that particular district which was under my observation it was not without a certain pleasure that I noticed that the

Hon. Dr. Pollen

"humours" of old times were in some sense restored. Whiskey, in its natural form of mountain-dew, descended from the skies and moistened the refractory clay of independent electors. In committee-rooms conjurors produced long-beers without number from empty hats, whilst the inexhaustible bottle poured out streams of all kinds of liquors to satisfy thirsty politicians. On the eve of the elections a very curious metamorphosis occurred. Some fairy, I suppose, touched every cab in the district with his wand, and converted it immediately into a private carriage, and the private carriages were lent next day to the candidates for the purpose of bringing electors to the poll. Every morning we see in the public journals a report of the proceedings upon an election petition before Judges of the Supreme Court in a part of the world not very distant from here. It is as plain as daylight to any person who reads between the lines that there has been gross corruption—gross violation of the law—in that district; but, excepting "the Man in the Moon," nobody knows anything about it. Money has been flying about in all directions; nobody has received it; nobody has paid the money. The member who was returned declares that he has not paid any money, and does not intend to pay any money. Will he receive any share of the subsidy which is proposed to be given to reimburse members of the House of Representatives under these circumstances? If our benevolence in this matter is so great, and if we are so anxious to reimburse candidates for their election expenses, why should that benevolence be confined to the winning candidate? Is it ex victis always? Is there no virtue on the losing side, and are we to suppose that the defeated person's desire to serve the public is less than that of the gentleman returned in opposition to him? If it be not, why should he be deprived of a share of the public benevolence we propose to bestow on successful candidates? I think that there are there an inequality and an injustice which certainly require remedy. I listened, not without sympathy, to the piteous moans of the defeated candidates on the hustings, when the numbers were up and the result was declared. The wailings as to falsified promises, the immorality of the ballot, and all the rest of it, were really sad. We are told again that members of the House of Representatives necessarily incur a considerable amount of expense because they are obliged to travel through their districts in order to make themselves acquainted with the wants of those districts,—and, I suppose, to submit occasionally to that process which is familiarly known as "heckling," and which is pleasant to the operator, if not to the persons operated upon. We are told by the terms of the Bill that there are additional expenses necessarily incurred by members during the session. What are the necessary expenses? A member is troubled, no doubt, during the session of Parliament by frequent communications from his constituents. These may be very important matters for the candidate himself; the question is, Are they of sufficient importance to the country generally to require a national monetary recognition? Payment of members is as old as representative institutions. There was a time in English history when the monarch was all-powerful, and the people were almost helpless. In those days the localities represented paid their own members. Now and here, when the people are all-powerful, and the Crown is but an emblem which we all revere, the whole people provide the pay for the members of the Legislature. It would seem, under these circumstances, but fair that, when expenses are incurred which are necessarily local or personal, these expenses should be defrayed by the localities or persons concerned, and not, as now proposed, by additional taxation upon the whole of the people of the colony. That seems to be a proper solution of that question. It is unfair to ask that the State shall, in advance, make a general and fixed money-provision for contingencies which have not even the recommendation of being common, or of being constant, or of being equal when they arise. Sir, I ask, why is this distinction of treatment between the Chambers made? Why, in these times of difficulty and distress, should an exceptional burden be imposed on the taxpayers of the colony, to meet contingencies which I have endeavoured to show are not constant, which are not equal when they occur, which affect only individuals or localities, and which, I think, should be provided by the districts and localities which they affect? It is in order that I might obtain this information that I have given the notice standing in my name, and which I now move.

Motion made, and question proposed, "That this Council will concur willingly with the House of Representatives in any reduction of allowances to members which shall maintain the equality of treatment between the two Chambers established by 'The Parliamentary Honorary and Privileges Act, 1884.'"—(Hon. Dr. Pollen.)

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—Sir, I think, if a stranger had been listening in the gallery to what my honourable friend Dr. Pollen has been saying, he would have wondered what in the world it was he was talking about, and what the subject was that was under discussion. He would have said to himself, in the first instance, that it was railways, because my honourable friend made that subject an important part of his speech. Then, he might have thought that we were merely passing time, because my honourable friend related a lot of curious stories, which I have never heard before, and in which I have no doubt he himself was interested. My honourable friend told us a story about bullocks voting. I suppose he must be acquainted with the circumstances, which, I presume, must have come under his own personal observation. Then, the honourable gentleman spoke in reference to immigration, and I have no doubt that when the stranger heard his remarks he would have thought that the subject under discussion was the question of immigration. I say that nine-tenths of what the honourable gentleman said contained nothing relevant to the question before the Council. I will not follow my honourable friend in all the mazes through which he has attempted to lead us. His speech has been, as regards the question before us, something more of sack than of bread. There has been a gallon of sack to a pennyworth of bread—in other words, nine-tenths irrelevant to one-tenth relevant. But, Sir, I will leave that part of his speech alone, and I will confine myself, as far as I can, to the subject really under discussion. I will notice one thing to commence with. The honourable gentleman has not waited for the Bill relating to this subject, which has yet to be discussed, but has taken the bull by the horns, and not only traversed the Bill but the whole policy of the Government in anticipation. It appears to me, in reference to the several Bills now here, that, any one of them falling, the rest must necessarily fall too; and it might be very well said, in reference to the motion of the honourable gentleman, that to a certain extent a portion of it was of the nature of a no-confidence motion. No doubt it could be interpreted, to a certain extent, to mean that. The honourable gentleman commenced by traversing this Bill and the general policy of the Government; and I ask whether, in his remarks, he meant to say that we have been going on extravagantly. I understood him to say that we had been going on extravagantly, and that we are now going on extravagantly, and that we shall go on extravagantly; and I presume he means that to be a reflection upon the Government—that an ill example has been set by other Governments, which carried on extravagantly, and that the present Government intend to carry on extravagantly also. Sir, that is a very wide charge; but I would call to the mind of the Council that the present Government have, at all events, initiated something in the shape of retrenchment, and the very first occasion when the question of retrenchment comes before the Council my honourable friend gets up and treats with the strongest possible opposition the whole of the policy of the Government. Now, Sir, I may, at all events, express my impression that my honourable friend has invited us to assume a very false position; and I regret to say that, if the Council follow the lead of my honourable friend, I am sure, before long, they will see strong reasons to regret it. My honourable friend says he wants an equality—

The Hon. Mr. BUCKLEY.—Sir, I rise to a point of order. I am sorry to interrupt my honourable friend, because we always listen to him with very considerable pleasure. Now, I understood him to say that we should very soon see something worse if we followed the lead of the Hon. Dr. Pollen.

An Hon. MEMBER.—He said we should have reason to regret it.

The Hon. Mr. BUCKLEY.—I am sorry if I have misunderstood him.

The Hon. Mr. WHITAKER.—I did not know that there was a point of order. I was not able to catch the observation that the honourable gentleman made.

Hon. Sir F. Whitaker

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—I understood the honourable member was complaining of certain words used by the honourable gentleman. Perhaps the honourable gentleman will be good enough to explain what was the point of order.

The Hon. Mr. BUCKLEY.—Sir, it was this: I was under the impression that the remarks of my honourable friend meant a threat to this Council that by following the lead of the Hon. Dr. Pollen there might happen something of a worse character. These are not the exact words, but that was the impression left on my mind by what I understood him to say.

The Hon. Mr. OLIVER.—The words were these, so far as I heard and understood them: that if the Council adopted the plan suggested by the Hon. Dr. Pollen they would soon find reason to regret their action.

An Hon. MEMBER.—“Follow the lead” were the words.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—I did say “follow the lead;” and I apprehend that the Council, if they do follow the lead—

The Hon. Mr. BUCKLEY.—I did not object to follow the lead of the Hon. Dr. Pollen; I should be very well pleased to follow his lead. But I am complaining of the remarks made by the Hon. the Attorney-General.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—Then I will leave the question to your decision, Sir, as to whether my remarks were of an offensive character, and if so I will withdraw them.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—There is nothing out of order in what the honourable gentleman has said. The honourable gentleman may proceed with his remarks.

The Hon. Mr. MANTELL.—I wish to raise a point of order, Sir. May I ask whether it is strictly in order to anticipate the discussion on the second reading of a Bill which is on to-day's Order Paper? It is the eleventh order of the day on the Order Paper, and when that is reached we shall necessarily have to go through the discussion all over again.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE.—I would call your attention, Sir, to the fact that the mover of a resolution must base his remarks upon the Bill. I think this objection should have been taken at the time it was moved.

The Hon. Mr. MANTELL.—I do not object to it.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—The question is one that very naturally arises, and, in anticipation that it might be raised, I have looked up a ruling on the subject, which I will read to the Council:—

“On the question of the second reading of a Bill all amendments must ‘strictly relate to the Bill.’ Resolutions may be moved declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the Bill; or expressing opinions as to any circumstances connected with its introduction or prosecution; or otherwise opposed to its progress; or seeking further information in relation to the Bill by Committees, Commissioners, the production of papers, or other evidence. A resolution of this kind, to be admissible, must deal with the particular Bill, and not with other Bills, or Bills generally; and should not be a mere negation of the principle of the Bill."

I think, under that ruling, which appears to me to be in accordance with other authorities, that the Hon. Dr. Pollen is perfectly in order in moving the motion.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—I also looked into this matter, and I found it was perfectly competent to move the resolution which the Hon. Dr. Pollen has moved, and I think he was perfectly at liberty to say what he has said on this occasion. Whether he should have dealt with the question in the manner that he has is another matter; but I find no fault with the way—the point on which he has opened it. The honourable gentleman objects to what he calls an "inequality;" but the very object of this Bill is to place the members of the two Houses upon an equality—that their expenses, whatever they may be, should be provided for. There are two ways of dealing with the question of remunerating honourable members for the expense and trouble they are put to in attending Parliament: one is the reimbursement of their expenses only, and the other is their payment. The £100 which it is now proposed should be given for attendance at a session is the same as was formerly given. Subsequently to that an alteration was made, and the sum was increased to £210, and that could only be treated as a payment of members, because the £100 which they had received was more than amply sufficient to pay the expenses of attending the session at Wellington, and therefore in the £210 we have at present payment of members. The new Bill proposes to revert to the old policy—that is, the reimbursement of the expenses of honourable members in attending the session. The members of the House of Representatives are necessarily put to other expenses which the members of this Council are not put to. My honourable friend opposite has given notice to ask a question regarding a return showing the particulars of the "additional expenses necessarily incurred by honourable members" in respect of which provision is intended to be made by the Bill. The expenses of a member of the House of Representatives—and I can speak from experience—are very considerable. There are the expenses necessitated by attending the election, and other expenses afterwards, which members of the Council are not at all subject to; and, if we are to affirm the principle of reimbursement, we must take into consideration the expenses they are put to not only in coming to Wellington and in remaining in Wellington, but other expenses which are necessarily incident to a seat in the House of Representatives. It may be insinuated—and I so understood my honourable friend when he spoke of all these different things which were done at elections, and which were so objectionable—that the proposed £50 was intended to cover those and other expenses of a like description and character.

But it is to cover the expenses to which I shall allude presently that this £50 is proposed to be given. If honourable members refer to the Corrupt Practices Act of 1881 they will find there that a number of expenses are legalised. We know, from experience and from what is now going at Wanganui, that the Act is an extremely stringent one. It is an Act taken, with some modifications, from the Act of the Imperial Parliament; and, in giving effect to it, no doubt people get into trouble and lose their seats. What will be the result of the present proceedings at Wanganui we are unable to judge. We do find evidence of a variety of proceedings which come within corrupt practices according to the Act, but, Sir, there are also a number of legitimate expenses. The expenses which are legalised by the Corrupt Practices Act are these:—

"1. The personal expenses of the candidate.

"2. The expenses of printing, and the expenses of advertising in newspapers.

"3. The expenses of stationery, postage, and telegrams.

"4. The expenses of holding public meetings.

"5. The expenses of a number of committee-rooms, not exceeding one committee-room for each polling-place in an electoral district.

"6. Expenses in respect of miscellaneous matters, not exceeding twenty-five pounds, so nevertheless that such expenditure is not incurred under this head in respect of any matter constituting an offence under this Act, or in respect of any matter or thing payment for which is expressly prohibited by this Act."

So we see that there are these enumerated expenses which necessarily fall upon every candidate for a seat in the House of Representative, more or less. A very large sum may be spent on these, or a smaller sum. But the man who can carry through an election for anything that is proposed to be given here I am sure will find that he is doing it upon a very economical scale indeed. Then, when a member is elected, what are his expenses? Honourable members can well understand the innumerable telegrams that are sent to members, and the variety of expenses of one kind and another which members of this Council are very free from. I think the immunity they get from being worried with regard to different things required by constituents repays them for having something less than members of the House of Representatives, who are subject to all these troubles. Now, I really wish the Council to consider its position in the matter. It is not my intention nor is it my wish to insinuate, nor is it my belief, that there is any improper motive or desire on the part of members of this Council in objecting to the proposed reduction; but I will ask the Council to consider what will be the result as regards the public. The whole opposition will be put down to a desire to acquire public money. I, for one, repudiate altogether the idea that that can have any effect in influencing the decision of the Council in this matter; but I am equally well satisfied on the other hand that it will be put down by the country generally to a desire to retain this

£210; and the action which my honourable friend has taken is—I will not say intentionally—calculated to produce that result. Now, I ask the Council whether or not they feel themselves in a position to hear all these things necessarily said in consequence of what takes place here to-day. I am quite sure of one thing, and that is that it will be attributed to no other motive; and, whether or not that may have influenced any honourable members around me—I do not insinuate that it has—I do repeat that the country will necessarily put it down to that motive. Members of the Council are taking up this view not only on their own account but on account of members of the other House, who are equally desirous that this amount should be retained. And I am satisfied that the country will give credit to both Houses for a desire for the retention of this money. I say that is a very unfortunate position for the Council to place itself in; for honourable members, I am quite sure, will recollect that during the elections there was a demand that the money should be saved by reducing the number of members of the House of Representatives, and the necessary consequence which would follow, that the members of this House should also be reduced. At almost every election which took place the subject was discussed. The subject seemed to be universally considered; and a universal demand was made that the number of members should be reduced. It was thought that the number of members at £210 was wholly unnecessary for carrying on the business of the country. And I think so, too. I think the number of members excessive, and I think the payment is excessive also. If we are to go in for the payment of members, then let them be properly paid, if it is the will of the country they should be; but it is not. At present we are not in a position to pay members, and it is not proposed by this Bill to do so; but it is proposed simply to reimburse the expenses they are necessarily put to and that are incident to their position as members of this Council. I am sure that members of this Council will be quite satisfied that £100 is fully sufficient to cover all the expenses they are put to here; and this Bill, if I understand it rightly, puts members of the Council and of the House precisely in the same position in that respect. But, in order to put the members of the other House on an equally fair footing, it is necessary that they should receive reimbursement of expenses incident to their position in that House. Now, Sir, in consequence of what took place during the elections, members were in a great measure returned to the other House with the object of carrying out some reform in the way in which the popular intention went. It was considered that some alteration should take place in the Upper House and in the payment they should receive; and it was the general impression that there should be a difference made between the two Houses, apart altogether from what is proposed in this Bill as to what they should receive. In Auckland—I do not say it was universal—the feeling was very freely expressed that the members of this House should not be paid at all. I do not agree with that. If we adopted it I believe it would impair the utility of this Council, because it would shut out many desirable men who could not afford the expense. But there is a strong feeling throughout the country, I may say, that what has been received by the members of this Council has been a great deal more than they ought to have received. Well, Sir, the object of the Bill is to put the matter on a different footing. The House of Representatives is representing the country, and its members are sent here to represent the country; and, when we find that the country and the House are in unison, I ask the Council whether it is prepared to enter into a contest with the House, backed by the will of the country. The Council must give way. It is impossible to resist it. When the country has resolutely made up its mind that a certain thing is to be done it must be done, and this Council cannot resist it. Now, I ask, is the Council prepared for such a contest as that? because a contest inevitably stands out before us. Will they place themselves in a position to traverse the policy of the Government with regard to their retrenchment proposals? That policy has been received by a very large majority of the House, and evidently is in perfect unison with the intentions of the country; and I warn this Council that it would be an unwise thing, it would be a very unwise thing, it would be a foolish thing, for them to enter upon such a contest. No doubt the Council might make some delay in the matter, but eventually they will necessarily have to yield, backed as the policy is by the country and the House of Representatives. That decision is not to be resisted successfully by this Council. It would be impossible it ever could be, and therefore it is that I wish to point out to the Council, that if they follow my honourable friend into the division, necessarily they will get into such a position. I do not know whether my honourable friend alluded to the fact that some years ago a contest arose in the Imperial Parliament with regard to their financial measures; and I suppose that for the future the same policy would have been adopted here as there in order to overcome the resistance of the House of Lords. What was done was to put the whole of the financial measures of the Government into one Bill, and it was impossible for the House of Lords, as it would be for this Council, to throw it out. But if all these financial proposals were placed in one Bill, and that Bill was now before the Council, I ask this Council whether they are in a position to say that such a Bill should not pass. Then inevitably the result would be to throw the whole country into confusion. However, at present it is not in that position. The Bills are brought in separately, propounding the different financial measures of the Government. Now, I see before me that if these measures are rejected the consequence will be of a very serious character; I feel the result will be that the Council will not come off best in the matter. I am quite sure the Council eventually will have to give way. Therefore I wish to impress upon honourable members that they have a very serious matter before them at the present time. It is not a question whether there is to be a difference between members of one House and the other, but involves a much larger and wider question, and it is well honourable members should consider that, and not confine their views simply to what is contained in this Bill, but look at the question generally. I admit that, if this resolution should be carried, it does not necessarily throw out the Bill now standing on the Order Paper—that is, the Honorarium Bill. All I can say, therefore, is that, whatever may be the result of this proposal, I shall, having the power to do it, to-morrow place upon the Order Paper the Bill itself, and, whatever the result may be of this division, I shall endeavour to impress upon the Council again the propriety of passing that Bill. It will be said this does not necessarily throw out the Bill; but, if it is intended to carry out this resolution, some other motion will be proposed to throw out the Bill, by moving that it be read this day three months, or six months, or, on the other hand, that it should be laid aside; but, if that should be carried—and I hope it will not, whatever the result of this motion—the result would be of a serious character, and the Council would find themselves in a conflict from which I am sure we should retire with disgrace. I therefore oppose this resolution.

Hon. Sir F. Whitaker

The Hon. Mr. MANTELL.—I will just say a few words to express what I think will be the wiser course to adopt with regard to this resolution. You have ruled—and, I have not the slightest doubt, correctly—that the resolution was not out of order, although it refers to the main principle of a Bill which is on the Order Paper for second reading. The Attorney-General has also followed your ruling; but I think it would be inconvenient to anticipate the possible result of the second reading of a Bill by a resolution of this kind, placed on the Order Paper on the very day that the second reading of the Bill is announced. I think, therefore, it will be better, having had the advantage of hearing opinions expressed on both sides of the matter, to decline to come to a decision on the resolution, and to apply ourselves to the question again when the Bill does come on. I cannot but think, although older parliamentarians than I may be able to take a different view of the matter, that those who, like myself, are young and inexperienced, will find that course to be the far wiser one, and the easier to follow. We shall then discuss the Bill, though I may say I shall take no part in it, because I quite approve of the measure as it stands; but those who are disposed to discuss the measure will discuss its merits on the question of the second reading of the Bill itself, and not by anticipating the measure by coming to a premature decision. I shall now therefore move the previous question.

The Hon. Mr. McLEAN.—I am going to support the Bill as it has been brought in, and, though I do that with a probable loss to my pocket, I feel that I can certainly do it without any loss to my dignity as a Councillor. However, I think that the Hon. the Attorney-General has mistaken this resolution somewhat. I do not see any reason whatever why the Council, if they so please, should not pass this resolution and also vote for the Bill. We might, I think, quite properly do both. This resolution only says that we will gladly accept any reduction that the other branch of the Legislature puts upon itself, but it does not say that we will not go any further than that; it does not affirm the principle that we are not to go any further. Therefore I think it would be perfectly proper to vote for this resolution and to vote for the Bill, and that there would be no inconsistency in so doing. As to the question of equality, as one who has been a member of the other House for many years I feel that I had demands upon me as a member of that House—legitimate demands—that I never have had since I have been in this Council. As the Attorney-General put it, there are legitimate expenses incurred in the election of members of the other House. It is a fact that considerable sums are spent on advertising, even when it is conducted upon the most economical principles. One gentleman whom I am acquainted with spent £46 in advertising alone.

The Hon. Mr. SCOTLAND.—It was his own choice.

The Hon. Mr. McLEAN.—Sir, it was not his own choice, for, unless he was prepared to expend that, it would have been better for him not to stand. There are others who spent large sums. I know of one gentleman who spent £180 in advertising and in getting his speeches reported and printed; and there are other expenses which appear legitimate enough. In some of these elections it is quite true, as the Hon. Dr. Pollen says, and as the former Premier gave it out—and, I presume, he spoke feelingly—that as much as £800 and £1,000 is spent in election expenses. I think there were very few elections in the colony that cost anything like those sums; but, I presume, the late Premier was able to speak feelingly and from personal experience upon the subject. These, of course, were not legitimate expenses; they are sums which if a candidate chose to spend he could, if he was simple enough to be preyed on by professional electioneering agents. Still, there are certain expenses that are fairly chargeable against a member of the other branch of the Legislature as election expenses, and there are large amounts paid by them for telegrams alone. When anything exciting is going on, people send them telegrams from all quarters, and they must answer them, and cannot make the replies "collect." I have myself known members of the other House pay £2 a day for telegrams; and they had to pay it—they could not well get out of it. I think, therefore, that they are perfectly entitled to an extra amount to reimburse them for their expenses connected with the sittings of that House. Now to come to the measure of the Government. I think myself that it would ill become this Council to simply thwart the present measures that are being carried out by the Ministry for the good of the country. The Government have started on a course in which they need our sympathy and our support. What I feel is that, when we commence at the top, when we commence with ourselves and go down, every one downwards will accept it, even to the labouring-man. Would the labourer be content to accept less wages if we do not reduce our own pay?—for you may call it pay or honorarium, as you like. I ask honourable members, will the labourer on the railways accept less wages unless we show him an example? But I venture to say that, if we do set that example, and it is put to them fairly, they will be perfectly willing that their wages should be reduced, notwithstanding what may be said to the contrary. In the other House you hear new members say that the legitimate pay of these workmen—6s. 6d. a day—must not be reduced. How many members of this Council have half the income they had five years ago? How many of them have one-fourth of what they had then? And if, after the luxury we have been living in, we find it necessary to level down, is it not wise in us to show an example in this levelling-down? As has been said, those who at present are receiving salaries and wages are the best off in the country. Where are the merchants in the southern parts of the colony that are doing anything more than holding their own? Where is the cockatoo, working from daylight to dark, that is earning even 3s. 6d. a day for himself now?—and, as against that, the railway employes must not be touched; and the whole of the cockatoos of the country, and all the labouring people, are to be taxed to uphold the extra wages. These men are receiving 6s. 6d. a day, and alongside them, near my place, the men who are working for the County Council are receiving 5s. a day, and they are quite as good as the men who are working on the railways. The few men I have employment to give to ask me 5s. a day, and they are good men, and are well satisfied with that; and one man the other day said he was quite ready to take 4s. 6d. a day, and that he thought that quite enough under the circumstances. You have to take into consideration all these things to get the people below you to accept the inevitable, and to come down in their demands, so as to comply with the present circumstances of the country, without which the country cannot become prosperous again. It is necessary, I think, that some expression of opinion should go forth on this matter of retrenchment, because, as we cannot touch the Bills themselves—that is to say, cannot alter them—we must either accept or reject them, and my strong feeling is that we must commence with ourselves. The reduction of members in the other branch of the Legislature has been desired by the electors of the colony, and I venture to say that some of the honourable members who have pledged themselves to carry that Bill, and who are now stabbing it in the back and trying to kill it by a sideward, should they succeed will have to account to their constituents for their conduct. I feel very strongly that such a Bill should pass, that it is a fair Bill, a just Bill, and one that the Council should accept without any hesitation.

Hon. Mr. McLean

The Hon. Dr. GRACE.—I have no doubt that the motion of my honourable friend Dr. Pollen has been entirely misunderstood. I did not hear very well what he said, but I know the exact character of his genius, and that there is infinite humour in the drift of his intention. The most important consideration, in his view, is the securing of a continuance of the equality of privilege between the Chambers which was established by the Parliamentary Honorarium and Privileges Act of 1884. Now, the Hon. the Attorney-General has demonstrated that, in the matter of expenses, there is no equality of sacrifice between the two Houses, but that the equality of treatment consists in this: that in each House each member is to receive an honorarium of £100. My honourable friend Dr. Pollen must have wished, therefore, simply to resist the only inequality of treatment evidenced by the Act, the inequality of treatment shown towards the members of the House of Representatives resident in the City of Wellington and resident members of the Council. You see such is the true drift of my honourable friend's motion. It is the delicate way he has of touching the whole thing. He exhibits a refinement in the furtherance of his object which, for my own part, I have not tact enough to show. Therefore you will see, Sir, it is incumbent on us to send the members of the House of Representatives of the City of Wellington away without any honorarium, and to give them £50 for expenses, in order to secure the necessary equality of treatment. It is towards that blot in the Bill—that inequality—that my honourable friend points: any one will see it. To his acute mind the absurdity of the thing must appear very striking, because the Bill talks about "the expenses" of members of the House of Representatives as being £50; but, notwithstanding the extra trouble and expense to which honourable members of the other House are subjected, according to the lucid explanation of my honourable friend Sir Frederick Whitaker and my honourable friend Mr. McLean, I find that members of the other House resident in the City of Wellington are to be only allowed £25 for this purpose. Now, the just mind of the Hon. Dr. Pollen, holding the whole subject in an even balance in the true scales of his experience, shows him the absurdity of this in an otherwise admirable measure. I fully agree with him in this view. For my own part, if it were possible, I should be happy to assist in depriving the members of the other House resident in Wellington of their honorarium; but, as I am not in a position to do that, I can only contribute to the general retrenchment by depriving myself of my own, and I shall be happy to do it.

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS.—I must say I was very much disappointed with the remarks of the Hon. the Attorney-General, which seemed to be greatly of the special-pleading order: they were certainly and entirely lawyers' argument. He asked if the Council is prepared to enter into a conflict with the House of Representatives. I say the Council is not prepared—I certainly am not—to enter into a conflict with the House of Representatives; but, at the same time, I am prepared to speak my mind, and I say that the conflict is not with the House of Representatives, but with the honourable gentlemen sitting on the Government benches. I know this proposal is not the wish of the people of the colony. I have had opportunities of mixing with the people of the colony in my own district, and I have told them times without number, when I was a representative in the other House, that I would not come to Wellington and serve them, giving my time, without any remuneration whatever, and at the same time be out of pocket. I feel perfectly certain that the public have no desire to have our services without paying our travelling-expenses. The Hon. Mr. McLean has said that we should not thwart the Government in carrying out their policy of retrenchment. I do not think there is a single member of this Council who is at all anxious to thwart the Government in any measures they have brought forward to effect retrenchment. I hold that the remarks of the honourable gentleman in that respect are libelling the Council. Now, when the question of a reduction of members was before the Council I suggested that the proper course would be to refer to the Committee then appointed such questions as this of the honorarium and others; and I think it would have been well if the Hon. the Attorney-General had accepted my suggestion and referred that matter to the Committee. By this means the Council might have expressed its opinion on the question now before us, and thus have avoided any chance of a conflict with the other branch of the Legislature. When the Act of 1884 was passed, it was considered that members of Parliament, when attending to their legislative duties, were entitled to be recouped their travelling-expenses at the same rate as Ministers of the Crown when travelling on business connected with the Government; and, if the rate of travelling-allowance for Ministers is reduced, I say it is quite right that the allowance to members of Parliament should be reduced also. But the allowance should not be reduced to what is totally inadequate to meet honourable gentlemen's expenses. I may here remark that I think the word "honorarium" is altogether misapplied, and should be replaced by the words "payment of members' expenses when absent from their homes attending to their parliamentary duties." Now, the Bill to effect reduction has not been drawn upon any principle, as far as I can see. It is what I should call a most irritating Bill, and intended to create a feeling of irritation on the part of members of this Council. Now, considering that the so-called honorarium is intended to recoup members their expenses when absent from their homes attending to their parliamentary duties, it is a question whether those honourable members who reside within a reasonable distance of this House of Parliament should or should not receive any honorarium at all; but, supposing we assume either that they should or should not receive any honorarium, I ask, for what reason does the Bill provide that such members belonging to one House should receive honorarium, while members belonging to the other House should receive none? That is making an inequality between the two Houses which, I think, no Government, with a proper sense of their responsibilities, should entertain for a moment. Then, there is another inconsistency in the Bill. The Act of 1884 provides for "reimbursing members of the General Assembly their expenses in relation to their attendance at Parliament." The present Bill does not purport to do anything of the sort. Sir, as it is now near four o'clock, when we pass to the orders of the day, I move the adjournment of the debate.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—I will take this opportunity of stating to the Council, in reference to my ruling just now, that May says,—

"That all aids and supplies, and aids to His Majesty in Parliament, are the sole gift of the Commons; and all Bills for the granting of any such aids and supplies ought to begin with the Commons; and that it is the undoubted and sole right of the Commons to direct, limit, and appoint in such Bills the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations, and qualifications of such grants: which ought not to be changed or altered by the House of Lords."

Motion for adjournment agreed to.

NORTH DUNEDIN CEMETERY EXTENSION BILL.

The Hon. Mr. OLIVER said, in this case he was rather in a position of some difficulty. For himself he was opposed to the Bill, but the promoters of this Bill in the other branch of the Legislature found it almost impossible to find a member of the Council willing to undertake the conduct of this Bill through the Council; and in that difficulty—they having previously applied to him and he having declined to take charge of the Bill—they again applied to him, and he said that, rather than a Bill which affected the Town of Dunedin should not be taken before the Council for its consideration, he would, pro forma, consent to assume the charge of the Bill. It was a Bill intended to permit the Corporation of Dunedin, who were the trustees of the Town Belt for the purposes of public recreation, to help themselves to an additional portion of that Town Belt for the purpose of extending the cemetery. He thought the Town Belt was a reservation of so much value to the public for the purposes of recreation and health that he very much regretted that this design should have been entertained, and he did not think it was at all justifiable. He knew that the Corporation of Dunedin had made a large sale of allotments in the cemetery that had already been taken from the Town Belt, and he thought that, instead of helping themselves to another portion, they should buy land elsewhere. He did not know whether, after moving the second reading of the Bill, it would be in his power to vote against the Bill; but, if he were allowed to vote against it, he certainly would do so.

The Hon. Mr. MANTELL said there was scarcely any room left for an amendment: The honourable gentleman had moved the second reading of the Bill in such a strain that really one almost seemed to hear the words "this day six months," though the honourable gentleman had not used them. The Bill was gone through very carefully by the Local Bills Committee to which it was referred, and of which he (Mr. Mantell) was a member, and in that Committee they had had a good deal of discussion upon the Bill, and a great deal of evidence on both sides had been given. The Committee finally reported in favour of the Bill by the vote of the Chairman.

An Hon. MEMBER.—The casting-vote.

The Hon. Mr. MANTELL said he did not use the words "casting-vote," because the Chairman of the Committee had only an original vote. There was a great deal to be said in favour of the measure, and the Committee had an opportunity of knowing that when the Bill came before them. There was also a great deal to be said against the measure, which the Committee had had an opportunity of hearing. But his own objection to the measure was that it proposed to continue the practice of intramural interments, which was so much against the instincts of modern civilisation; and it should be considered whether this should be allowed in the case of Wellington. It was more than twenty years ago that the then Superintendent of the province gave to the Seat of Government Commissioners in his presence a positive assurance that if Wellington were made the seat of Government the cemetery should be removed. Still, it had not been removed; it was yet unclosed, and nothing had been done towards that end. The main drains in the neighbourhood of the cemetery passed one to the north and the other to the south of Government House, and would doubtless carry to Her Majesty's representative the odours which arose. However, this was not a matter which affected the citizens of Dunedin. He should vote against the second reading of the Bill.

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS thought it but right that he should explain the exceptional position of this Bill. In the settlement of Otago by the New Zealand Company and the Otago Association provision was made that a reserve should be made right round the town for the purposes of recreation and amusement. That was what was called the Town Belt, or it might be called the Domain of the City of Dunedin. The Otago Block was purchased by the Association, and each person who became a purchaser under that became also a member of the Association, and had a full interest in all the reserves within the Otago Block, which consisted of 1,440 properties of sixty and a quarter acres each—fifty acres rural, ten acres suburban, and a quarter-acre of town lands. Each one of the purchasers under the Otago Association and the New Zealand Company had a vested interest in this Town Belt; also all those in the City of Dunedin and suburbs who had acquired it since. He might explain to honourable members who had never seen it that this was merely a strip of land going right round the town. In some places it was ten chains in width, in other places less, and in other places more. Now, if honourable members would refer to the Bill they would see that the preamble declared that, by a Crown grant, the Queen granted to the Superintendents of the Province of Otago the Town Belt, to hold in trust for the purposes of recreation for the inhabitants of Dunedin and its suburbs; and by subsequent legislation after the abolition of the provinces it was re-enacted, and the reserves were vested in the Dunedin Corporation in trust "for the specific purposes for which such reserves were made." They were made for the recreation and amusement of the inhabitants of the City of Dunedin and its suburbs, and also of those who purchased land under the Otago Association. Then, again, the preamble stated that the Belt was to be held in trust by the Corporation for the purpose of the public recreation and amusement of the inhabitants of the city and suburbs. The preamble showed clearly what was the intention of the Act—it handed it over in trust to the City of Dunedin. Now, the present Bill diverted this portion of the Town Belt from the purposes of recreation and amusement; for he held that it could hardly be considered that a cemetery was a fit place for recreation. And there was no necessity for it, inasmuch as the Corporation could get land elsewhere. They had a surplus from the Cemetery Fund on the 30th September of £3,246 14s. 7d., and had that surplus been invested at interest it would have amounted by this time to between £10,000 and £12,000. This surplus was on their books; but they had spent the money, and they had the surplus only on paper. They had spent it illegally; and, had he called their attention to the illegality of using it for the purpose to which they applied it, they would have said that that was "no matter," and they expected an Act of indemnity would be passed in order to get over the difficulty. This accumulation had been effected through the sale of plots for interment, and these plots were sold at the following rates: £10 for a 10ft.-by-10ft. plot, £3 for one 8ft. by 10ft., and £1 5s. for a plot 8ft. by 4ft.

The Hon. Mr. SCOTLAND.—Is that an advertisement?

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS said it was not; but he wanted to show that the cemetery was paying the Corporation very handsomely, and that they were spending all the money they were getting from it on other city works in order to save themselves taxation. The Corporation had an annual revenue from reserves, in addition to this—he was not certain of the amount, but he knew it was over £15,000 per annum; so that they were not badly off, and could repay this £3,240 if they liked, and buy land for a cemetery. They had twenty acres adjoining the southern cemetery, and it had been urged that they could use that for the purpose of a cemetery; but they said, "Oh, no; we want this for revenue purposes, and we will get a piece out of the Town Belt for a cemetery, and make a revenue from that too." The actual difficulty was that they had spent the money, as was proved by the evidence of the Mayor of Dunedin last session before a Committee of the other House. That gentleman stated, in the course of his evidence, "It is the most beautiful site in or near Dunedin;" and, further, "It has been suggested that we should go into the country and get a piece of land; but we have no means with which to purchase land." Having spent all the money, they had no means with which to purchase land. Then, the Mayor was asked, "What is the amount to the credit of the fund now?" and he answered, "Nearly £3,000: but we have not the money. It is merely a matter of account." A question was put to him by Sir Robert Stout, and that was the answer. On the 30th September last the amount to credit was £8,240, as he (Mr. Reynolds) had already stated. Then the Mayor went on to say, "We have not the funds nor the power to get any." So that the whole difficulty was that they had spent the funds, and now they wished to filch another piece of the recreation-ground, in order to get more money to squander in the town, and to do it contrary to law. The Mayor was asked by Sir Robert Stout, "I should think you might get another site further from the city: this neighbourhood will be built upon. You might try to get the other boroughs to purchase, jointly, a cemetery, say, at Green Island, or elsewhere; and the expense of funerals would not be increased." Then, the answer was, "But if you get land there, where is the money to come from? We have no power to raise money." Then he said again, "We cannot get land without paying for it; and, inasmuch as, through bad management by the City Council in the past, the Council has got to the limit of its borrowing powers, and there is no prospect of reducing its overdraft, we have neither funds nor the power to get funds." He merely quoted these statements to show that the whole object of this Bill was to get a portion of the recreation reserve for cemetery purposes from which they could derive a large revenue. The Local Bills Committee of the other House last session fully considered this Bill. That Committee consisted of Mr. W. F. Buckland, Mr. Conolly, Mr. Hursthouse, Mr. Reese, Mr. Reid, Sir Robert Stout, Mr. Hislop, Mr. Guinness, Mr. Kerr, and Mr. G. F. Richardson, only the last four of whom were now in Parliament. That Committee were unanimous in making the following report: "Your Committee beg to report that the evidence shows it to be inadvisable to grant the powers asked for by the Bill." Then the Bill was dropped; but, under a resolution passed by the other House, that local Bills dropped last session might be taken up this session at the stage at which they had been dropped, this measure was again brought before the House of Representatives, and had now been passed on to the Council. Now, he might say that the City Council were in favour of this Bill; but not so the public. Those who were interested in the reserve in this Town Belt were opposed to any part of it being used for any other than recreation purposes and amusement. On one occasion the City Council put up a fever hospital on it, and the citizens subscribed money and brought an action in the Supreme Court, and the hospital had to be removed, at a loss of about £4,000. The citizens, in this, were actually fighting themselves with their own money.

Hon. Mr. Oliver

An Hon. MEMBER.—An Otago free-fight.

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS said he believed it was very likely—he was not certain—that next session the citizens of Dunedin would ask Parliament to pass a Bill taking away from the City Council the control of the public reserves and vesting them in the Public Trustee in trust for the special purposes for which those reserves were made, and it would be very wrong for the Legislature to anticipate such action by taking a part of this reserve from the citizens. He urged the Council not to assent to this Bill, and moved, as an amendment, That the Bill be read the second time that day three months.

The Hon. Mr. BUCKLEY had no desire whatever to enter into this Otago free-fight; but, in the peculiar position in which the Hon. Mr. Oliver was placed, he thought it was only right and due to the honourable gentleman whose name was on the top of this Bill that some consideration should be given to him, and that this Bill should receive some better treatment than it now appeared to get. If in order, he would move, That the debate be adjourned. He would not refer to the Bill now, but would simply explain his reasons for moving the adjournment of its consideration. His honourable friend had explained that several members of the Council had been asked to introduce this Bill, and had refused. He had been asked to support this Bill, and he should support it. He was not asked to introduce it, or he should have done so. He thought it was only right that, the promoters of the Bill having gone to the trouble to introduce it, some consideration should be given to it; and therefore he moved the adjournment of the debate, in order that further time might be given for the consideration of the Bill.

The Hon. Mr. SHRIMSKI was rather taken by surprise by the manner and conduct of the Hon. Mr. Oliver in taking charge of a Bill and then asking the Hon. the Speaker's ruling whether he could not vote against it.

The Hon. Mr. OLIVER wished to say, in explanation, that Mr. W. D. Stewart, the member of the other Chamber whose name appeared on this Bill, told him that he had tried in vain to get an honourable member to take charge of it; and he himself had asked many members of the Council to relieve him of the difficulty in which he found himself placed by consenting to move the second reading. So that the peculiar position he occupied in regard to this Bill was not one of his own seeking.

The Hon. Mr. SHRIMSKI accepted the honourable gentleman's explanation. At the same time, he would say this: that it looked rather peculiar to young members, as some of them were, to find that an honourable gentleman who had been in the Chamber for some years should take charge of the Bill, move its second reading, and then ask leave to vote against it. But after the honourable gentleman had spoken he was rather surprised to find the Hon. Mr. Reynolds getting up and making a long speech and telling them all about how the reserve was dedicated to the Corporation by the New Zealand Company, and giving the whole history as to the charge for interment, and information of that kind. He (Mr. Shrimski) thought that when the Hon. Mr. Oliver and the Hon. Mr. Reynolds were both Ministers of various Governments at various times—

The Hon. Mr. BUCKLEY said he had moved the adjournment of the debate, and the honourable gentleman must confine himself to the question.

The Hon. the SPEAKER said the Hon. Mr. Shrimski must confine himself to the motion for the adjournment of the debate.

The Hon. Mr. SHRIMSKI said he was speaking to the adjournment, and his reason for so speaking was to show that the measure should receive further consideration, and receive what was always desirable in the Council fair-play from all parties, whether they approved of a Bill or not. That was his reason for supporting the adjournment of the debate. This was not the first time that public reserves had been taken from the public for other purposes than those to which they were originally dedicated. He had known the Hon. Mr. Oliver, when a Minister, to take something like sixty acres in the place he (Mr. Shrimski) came from—

The Hon. the SPEAKER said the honourable gentleman must confine himself to the motion for the adjournment of the debate.

The Hon. Mr. SHRIMSKI said he would support the motion for adjournment.

The Hon. Mr. MENZIES.—(First sentence inaudible.) If the Bill were taken into consideration, then he would explain that there were good reasons for taking a favourable view of it. Further provision was required for the interment of the dead, and the particular spot of ground referred to adjoined the existing cemetery. The drainage from the greater part of the land, so he understood in Committee, ran into the harbour. For various reasons he need not now recapitulate he would ask the members of the Council to suspend judgment until they heard what could be said on the other side.

The Hon. Mr. McLEAN thought the honourable gentleman had plenty of time to discuss the matter now. If he had such good reasons for supporting the Bill he should give them, and they would be listened to at once. They might just as well be given now as postponed. For himself, he disapproved of the Bill, and he thought the Council should not agree to the adjournment. He would ask the honourable gentleman to give the reasons why the Council should pass the Bill.

The Council divided on the question, "That the debate be adjourned."

AYES, 9.

Buckley	Kenny	Shepherd
Dignan	Mantell	Shrimski
Hart	Scotland	Wahawaha.

NOES, 22.

Acland	Miller	Richmond
Barnicoat	Oliver	Stevens
Bonar	Peacock	Swanson
Fraser	Peter	Taiaroa
Holmes	Pharazyn	Waterhouse
Lahmann	Pollen	Whitaker
McLean	Reynolds	Williams.
Menzies

Majority against, 13.

Motion negatived.

The Hon. Mr. MENZIES said it appeared to the Committee, from the evidence they received, that additional ground was urgently required for cemetery purposes in the neighbourhood of Dunedin, and that this particular spot had to a certain extent already been set apart for this purpose, the locality being very suitable. He was led to understand, as a member of the Committee, that the drainage of this land ran into Pelichet Bay, and, consequently, away from the inhabited part. He had subsequently been informed, however, that a portion of the drainage went in a different direction; but the one great object was to keep it clear of the thickly-inhabited parts, and the drainage would run clear of such parts. Although it might be possible to find cemetery-accommodation at some distance from the town, none could be found so near as to enable the poorer classes to bury their dead without incurring large expense. No doubt a site could be found somewhere alongside the railway, but, if such a site were selected, the expenses to the poor would be very much greater than if the locality selected were within a short distance of the city. The point the Hon. Mr. Reynolds had referred to had also come up for consideration by the Committee, and it appeared that, though the Council had, as a matter of account, a considerable amount of funds, or ought to have a considerable amount of funds, at its disposal for this purpose, yet they could not readily obtain that money and make it available for the purchase of the site required for the necessary cemetery-accommodation. Land in the neighbourhood of Dunedin had risen very considerably in value, and, in order to obtain a sufficient area, a large sum would be required. The Committee had also taken into consideration the fact that if the portion of the reserve required to give the extra accommodation necessary were given it would not seriously impair the value or the convenience of the recreation ground in the neighbourhood; and the Committee finally decided that the Bill should go further. He might say that he maintained no very strong opinion on either side. It seemed to him that it would be very convenient to have the cemetery enlarged, and that there were fewer objections to taking this course than to rejecting the Bill, and thereby subjecting the inhabitants of the town to the further inconvenience of insufficient accommodation for burials.

The Council divided on the question, "That the word 'now' stand part of the question."

AYES, 5.

Acland	Hart	Shrimski.
Buckley	Menzies

NOES, 21.

Bonar	Miller	Shephard
Dignan	Peacock	Stevens
Fraser	Peter	Swanson
Holmes	Pharazyn	Taiaroa
Lahmann	Pollen	Wahawaha
Mantell	Reynolds	Whitaker
McLean	Richmond	Williams.

PAIR.

For.	Against.
Barnicoat.	Campbell.

Majority against, 16.

Second reading negatived.

NATIVE BILLS.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER said that, with regard to the three Native Bills on the Order Paper, he found, on consulting the Standing Orders, that they must go before the Native Affairs Committee. He therefore thought it would be better if these Bills were read a second time pro forma and sent to the Committee, and that the debate should be taken upon them when their committal was moved. This course would relieve honourable members from the necessity of returning in the evening, which otherwise they would require to do.

The Hon. Mr. BUCKLEY hoped the Council would not take any such course. The Bills were very important, and they should not affirm their principle in the manner suggested. They knew nothing about the Bills, and the Hon. Mr. Taiaroa told him that he had not even read them. The Bills should not be pushed forward in this way.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER did not wish to push forward the Bills. The Hon. Mr. Taiaroa was a member of the Committee, and would have an opportunity of considering them, and their principle could be debated when the Bills came back from the Committee. He merely suggested this as a convenient way of dealing with the Bills.

The Hon. Mr. SHRIMSKI thought these Bills were of great importance, for they changed the whole system of dealing with Native lands. Having been a member of the General Assembly for eleven years, he knew, as a member of the other branch of the Legislature, that it had endeavoured to pass measures to protect the Natives, and that it had, to a great extent, at last succeeded; but here it was proposed that in one moment the whole of that legislation should be reversed. This was a very serious question, and he, for one, should object to its being dealt with out of the ordinary course. Ever since he had been in the Council Bills referring to land had been, after the first reading, referred to the Waste Lands Committee, and he did not see why on this occasion they should depart from the rule hitherto adopted. The procedure was according to Standing Orders, and he did not see why it should be changed. For his part he had no objection to sit long after Christmas; but it appeared to him strange, after being in session nearly nine weeks, for eight of which they had been doing literally nothing, that in the ninth week the honourable gentleman should wish to have great measures forced through in the manner he evidently desired; and for his (Mr. Shrimski's) part he must raise his voice against this method of proceeding with the business.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER said that if honourable members objected he did not wish to press the proposal. He had made it simply for the convenience of honourable members, and had no doubt it would be for their convenience. There was no intention to press the Bills through, but it was intended merely to refer them to the Committee, and to take the debate on the principle of the Bills subsequently.

The hour of five o'clock having arrived, the Hon. the SPEAKER left the chair.

COUNCIL RESUMED.

The Hon. the SPEAKER resumed the chair at half-past seven o'clock.

NATIVE LAND ADMINISTRATION ACT REPEAL BILL.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER. — Sir, in moving the second reading of this Bill—the Native Land Administration Act, Repeal Bill—it is unnecessary for me to trouble the Council at any great length, because the Bill, after being read a second time, will have to be referred to a Select Committee, and when it comes back it will be open to us to consider it fully on the motion for going into Committee, and also in Committee. In 1856 Parliament passed an Act called the Native Land Administration Act, the object of which was twofold. First, it was to make provision for the future as to the disposal of Native lands; and, secondly, it was to clear up a large number of transactions in land already begun but not completed, and to give persons who had fairly and honestly dealt with the Natives for their land by purchase completed titles. In both of those objects the Act has failed entirely. The Act has been in force nearly eighteen months, and I am informed that not a single transaction has taken place under it, as the Natives will not bring their land under its operation. The consequence is that the whole of the Native lands are completely shut up, because the Natives are quite unwilling to sell under the Act, and the Europeans are therefore unable to buy. As I have said, the Act has also failed in its second object. There were very many cases in which, under the Native Land Act of 1873 and other

Acts, purchases of Native lands were incomplete. They were not illegal, but they were incomplete, because, by the Act of 1873 and other Acts, it was required that a purchaser should get the signatures of all the owners of a piece of land before he could get a Crown grant or any title to any part of it. Of course, where there are a large number of owners in a piece of Native land, it is a matter of very considerable time and difficulty to do that. In some instances there are over a hundred owners in a block, and sometimes even several hundreds, and the consequence is that there are a great many persons who have bought the interests and obtained the signatures of a considerable proportion of the owners who are yet quite unable to get a title under the legislation that is now in force. It was sought to make provision, by clause 24 of the Act which this Bill is to repeal, to enable those persons who had already obtained a number of signatures, but had not been able to complete their title, to go on and have their cases heard before the Native Land Court, so that they might have what they had bought partitioned off from the remainder and get their titles. A person who had bought interests in a block of Maori land was given the right to bring his case before the Court; and the Court, on being satisfied that the transaction was a proper one in all ways, had power to take steps to give the person a title to what he had bought: the Court had first to give a certificate that the transaction had been an unobjectionable one, and then the buyer had the power to ask for partition of the land. For instance, if a man had bought the interests of, say, twenty in a block in which there were fifty owners, the Court was given power to give him a title to the proportion he had bought, and to give a Native Land Court title—with or without restrictions—for the remainder to those Natives who had not sold. There was a special provision in the Act that nothing should be done in regard to dealings with Native lands, except in the ways pointed out, and all the Native Land Acts then in existence were repealed, there being some sixteen or seventeen of them, I believe. At the present time, therefore, this is the only law in relation to Native lands; and, as I have said, it is entirely inoperative. It is inoperative in both its objects: that is, it is inoperative in its object of providing a way for the buying and selling of Native lands, because the Natives will not bring their lands under its operation; and it is inoperative as to closing up incomplete transactions, because a decision of the Supreme Court has shown that what was intended to be done under it cannot be done. The Legislature fully intended, in passing the Act, that the provisions as to closing incomplete transactions should apply to dealings in which the land was held under certificate of title, memorial of ownership, or Crown grant; but in a case brought before the Supreme Court the Court decided that, looking at the terms of the Act and its general scope, the Act could only apply to land held under Crown grant, and the result is that nineteen out of twenty of the incomplete cases for the Land Court to deal with are precluded from being dealt with according to the intention of the Legislature. Of course honourable members will see it is quite clear that something will have to be done; the matter cannot be left in its present state. The Natives are very dissatisfied with the Act, and have expressed their dissatisfaction through deputations from all parts of the country to the Native Minister and the Premier, and they are desirous that it should be repealed. I think it is quite hopeless to expect that the Act can have any effect if it is continued in operation, for, as we have already seen, the Natives will not bring their lands under it, and therefore no one can buy their lands. As for winding up old and incomplete transactions, every one, I suppose, desires that the intentions of the Legislature should be carried out, and that people who have already incurred very considerable expense in bringing their cases before the Native Land Court and presenting their claims should be enabled to get their cases heard; for, as I have said, through the decision of the Supreme Court, nineteen out of twenty of them are now shut out. I will say nothing of the interpretation of the Act by the Supreme Court: to my mind it is not a correct interpretation; but it is a decision of the Supreme Court, and, that being so, of course the Native Land Court immediately stopped all further proceedings, and the matter is now brought into the position that nothing further can be done unless that part of the Act is repealed by the Legislature. Whether or not this Bill, as it stands, will meet the difficulty is for our consideration. It will first be considered by the Native Affairs Committee of the Council, and then it will be open for the whole Council to fully consider it in Committee. I believe the Bill—in the framing of which I have taken a considerable part—will effect the purpose for which it is intended. There is a special provision of some importance stopping all fresh transactions in Native lands until a new Act has been passed by the Legislature. In the Financial Statement the Colonial Treasurer stated that it was proposed to pass a temporary Act to enable the Land Court to close up incomplete transactions in many cases, which by the decision I have referred to, were excluded from hearing; and that next session—which will be in a very few months—the subject should be dealt with comprehensively, and a Bill brought in providing how Native lands shall be dealt with in the future. It is the intention of the Government to ask the Natives throughout the country to make suggestions during the recess as to that intended legislation. Whether we shall be able to produce a measure which will operate to the satisfaction of both races is a matter that only the future can determine. Looking at our past experience, I must confess that I have not very great hopes of it, but, at all events, there must be fresh legislation, and we must do the best we can to make that legislation satisfactory. The present Bill is intended only to meet the difficulty partially and temporarily until the Assembly meets again. I do not think, in the meantime, it is of very great moment whether the whole of the Native Land Administration Act is repealed or not, because it is entirely inoperative as to its chief object; but, as to its second object, that of enabling the Land Court to complete unfinished transactions, I think that we should remedy the deficiency the decision of the Supreme Court has shown to exist, and let the intention of the Legislature be carried out by empowering the Land Court to hear and determine cases where persons have bought Native land but have been unable to get a title. That, I think, would be sufficient in the meantime; but, as far as I can learn, the Native mind is very dissatisfied with the Act, and will be satisfied with nothing short of its repeal. They object very much to its provisions, and refuse to act under it at all; and therefore it does not effect the purpose in either part for which it was intended. In the present session, to frame and consider a Bill dealing with the whole subject of Native lands would be impossible; and it is necessary, before any legislation is passed, that the Natives themselves should be consulted, and that we should see what they want; for it is quite clear that in any Native Land Bill to make it operate satisfactorily we must carry the feelings of the Natives with us. Whether we shall be able to do so is a matter of doubt; but, at all events, we shall have to try our best next session, and, if Parliament is able to do that, it will do a very good work. I do not think I need say more now; but I will ask the Council to read this Bill a second time pro formâ as it were, and it will then go as a matter of course to the Native Affairs Committee, who will report on it, and I shall then have an opportunity of addressing the Council in regard to it when moving that it be considered in Committee of the whole Council.

Hon. Sir F. Whitaker

The Hon. Mr. TAIAROA.—I think it is right I should make a few remarks on this Bill, a copy of which, by the way, I have only received to-day. Some of its clauses are rather complicated, and I do not quite understand them yet; and, no doubt, it takes some little time to turn over and consider them before one can thoroughly understand their effect. I quite agree with the Hon. the Attorney-General in saying that the Native Land Administration Act of 1886 has caused the Natives considerable trouble. I feel satisfied of that, because I notice that nearly all those Native members of the other House in the late Parliament who voted on that measure were not re-elected at the last election. But I do not think the desire of the Natives is carried out by the provisions of this Bill. Some of the Natives desire that the Native Lands Administration Act should be entirely repealed, while others think that the Act should be allowed to remain, but that some parts of it should be amended. I think at the time that Act was being passed the Native members of the other House, like myself, did not fully understand some of its clauses. I said at the time that the Bill ought not to apply to lands sold by one Native to another

Native, or which were held by them in severalty; also to land which had been mortgaged by consent of the Government before the passing of that Act, and to other lands similarly situated. It has been since shown that where a Native bought land from another Native and desired to raise a mortgage on it he was precluded from doing so by the provisions of the Act of last year. Now, in the interpretation clause of "The Native Land Administration Act, 1886," it explains that "land" means "land owned by Natives," except land purchased under Crown grant or conveyance, or such as is owned individually. It was in reference to that portion of the Act that the Natives desired some amendment should be made. I should like to know from the Hon. the Attorney-General what position those lands would be in after the passing of the Bill now before the Council. As far as I can see, this Bill only applies to lands which were being negotiated for, but the negotiations for which had not been completed before July last, and will not apply to any land which has been mortgaged or leased since that date. The Natives complain that they have suffered through the transactions which have taken place since last July. They thought that the Bill did not come into force until the 1st of January last, and they therefore thought that they had up to that date to carry out any further transactions they wished. I did not see the Gazette myself, but I have been told by Natives that it distinctly said that the Bill would not come into force until the 1st January, 1887. I am pleased to hear that this Bill is to be referred to the Native Affairs Committee, where they may make amendments or such suggestions as they may see fit. I would like to give an instance, which will perhaps explain my meaning better. My youngest son bought a piece of ground from Natives. It was fifty acres in extent. He paid for it in cash, and the deed was passed and signed by His Excellency. The land has been lying comparatively idle for a long time, but my son is now beginning to farm it. Before the passing of the Native Land Act of 1886 he had borrowed some money for the purpose of improving it, but he had not received the money when the Act came into force. He arranged with some one to have a mortgage raised upon the property for a short period—three months. At the end of the three months he found that he could not receive certain moneys which he expected, and he arranged for an extension of the mortgage. Just before the meeting of this Parliament the deeds were sent up here, in order to get His Excellency's permission to the mortgage. It was forwarded here, together with letters on the subject, from his solicitors. Mr. Lewis, Under-Secretary to the Native Department, said these lands, although they had been bought from other Natives, could not be mortgaged. I may add that this mortgage had been previously assented to and approved by the Frauds Prevention Commissioner. The Government lawyers said that, although it was land purchased from another Native, it could not be mortgaged, because clause 3 of the Native Land Administration Act debarred any such transaction. I mention this case because I know the particulars; but there are a great many more cases in similar positions. I trust the Bill will now go before the Native Affairs Committee, in order that Mr. Lewis, Under-Secretary, Mr. Mackay, and the Government lawyers may attend, and perhaps we may make the necessary amendments. I think that we should bear this in mind: that when mortgages become due the Natives will consider that it is through the provisions of that Bill that they will be prevented from raising loans, and that by that means they will lose their properties. The mortgages to which I refer are all complete, with the exception of having the Governor's permission, which is preventing their being carried out. I think this Bill will amend the difficulties to which I have referred.

Bill read a second time.

MAORI REAL ESTATE MANAGEMENT BILL.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—This Bill is for the purpose of reviving two Acts which were repealed last session, one of which was the Native Land Court Act, to which I have referred, and the Maori Real Estates Management Acts of 1877 and 1887. I have not been able to understand why those two Acts were repealed. There were no provisions made in their place, and the consequence has been that there is a quantity of land in the hands of trustees which cannot now be dealt with, and the whole thing is in a state of confusion and difficulty. The object of this Bill is to revive those two Acts. I have been informed that the operations of those Acts were satisfactory; and all I can now say is that it is very unsatisfactory that lands of this character should be in such a position. I propose the second reading of this Bill. It will be necessary for it to go before the Native Affairs Committee as well as other Native Bills we are passing. In point of fact, the whole three are for the purpose of curing difficulties which already exist.

The Hon. Mr. TAIAROA.—Sir, I do not wish to oppose this Bill, but I would like to ask the Hon. the Attorney-General if he remembers a question which I asked him, and which was on the Order Paper of the 4th November, as follows: "Whether the Government will, during the present session, bring forward a measure to enable the properties of a person dying intestate to be disposed of for the purpose of liquidating his debts?" and I think that the Hon. the Attorney-General then assured me that he saw no objection to this, and that he would consider the matter when any Bills were brought before the Council relating to the subject. I hope that the Council, in Committee, will see fit to insert some such provision in this Bill, so that the successors to the property of Natives who have borrowed money and have died intestate, or who have given promissory notes to pay certain sums of money, should pay the debts due by the deceased. And the Native

Hon. Mr. Taiaroa

Land Court has invariably stated that it awarded the land to the rightful successor, but it could not take any steps with reference to the debts of the deceased. I make this explanation because I know that both Maoris and Europeans have suffered from that cause, and I hope this course will be adopted with reference to those debts which a Court of law may be satisfied are bona fide. I do not wish such a provision to apply to any debts which may be said to be owing, but to such debts as it may be proved to the satisfaction of the Court are genuine liabilities, or that something may be done for securing the payment of these sums, either by holding back the land until the debts are satisfied or by some other means.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—In reference to what the Hon. Mr. Taiaroa has submitted to the Council, I perfectly remember his giving me a letter pointing out the same thing which he has just now brought before the notice of the Council, and I recollect telling him that, so far as I saw, there was no objection to do what was asked, and I would bear it in mind when the Native Land Bill, which is to be brought forward by the Government next session, comes up for discussion. The object of the Native Land Act which is now repealed was to prevent any dealings in Native land except those specially provided for in the Bill; but there was no provision in which cases of the present description could be dealt with; therefore it is an entirely new feature. I have no objection that this matter should be considered in Committee, and, if it be found convenient and proper to add a clause to it of the nature proposed, I have no objection. It is a new subject and will require legislation; and the most proper time to consider it will be when deciding, next session, on the legislation which is to take place in connection with Native lands generally. But, if there are any urgent cases to be provided for, we may make some temporary provision in the present Bill till then. I wish to assure the honourable gentleman that I have not forgotten what he pointed out to me. I have kept it in mind, and intended to act upon it.

Bill read a second time.

The Council adjourned at fifteen minutes past eight o'clock p.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, 7th December, 1887.

Representation Bill—Privilege: Words used by Sir J. Vogel—Representation Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER took the chair at eleven o'clock a.m.

PRAYERS.

REPRESENTATION BILL.

Major ATKINSON.—Sir, in consequence of a division which took place in Committee early this morning, I ask the House to adjourn till half-past two o'clock. The Government do not propose to go on with questions to-day, but to postpone them till to-morrow. If the House will consent to adjourn till half-past two, I shall be prepared to make a statement to honourable members.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE RESUMED.

Mr. SPEAKER resumed the chair at half-past two o'clock.

PRIVILEGE: WORDS USED BY SIR J. VOGEL.

Sir J. VOGEL.—Sir, before the Orders of the Day are called on I wish to make a few remarks, and I will place myself in order by moving a resolution. I presume we shall have from the Premier, in redemption of the promise that he made the day before yesterday, a statement as to the course of business during the rest of the session. Before he makes that statement, I wish to call his attention to the fact that I have a number of resolutions on the Supplementary Order Paper. I invited the honourable gentleman to tell me whether he would give me special opportunities of moving those resolutions, as to which I have received no reply from the honourable member since. Now that all the heat in connection with the immediate question is at an end, and that the result remains in a resolution on the records of the House reflecting on my conduct, I think no honourable member will begrudge me an opportunity of placing before the House my view of the position and of the occurrence which led to it. Sir, the occurrence arose out of a question put by the honourable member for Marsden—Mr. Robert Thompson. Now, I wish to say that, had I not been interrupted, I am quite sure that the remarks I should have made would not have been of a nature to cause the honourable gentleman more than a slight temporary irritation. I think the honourable member had a perfect right to information on the subject on which he sought information; but the mistake the honourable member made was in the way in which he put this question. If I have, or if any other honourable member has, an improper use of officers of the Government, the fault is not with me or with other honourable members; it is with the Government. It is the Government which is responsible for allowing any misuse of the services of Government officers; and therefore, if the honourable gentleman had put his question in a way which would have asked the Government whether it was true that they were allowing one or more members to improperly use the services of Government officers, there would have been no objection to the question, and, moreover, it would have afforded me an opportunity of setting the matter right. But the honourable member put the question in a manner which was, to say the least, offensive. Sir, there has not only been that question, but we have seen within the last day or two that other honourable members, or another honourable member, has felt himself warranted in putting a personal question relating to myself. And in this case the honourable gentleman has stated that he was put up to it by some other honourable member. I rather admire the chivalry of the honourable member for Marsden in taking the whole responsibility of his action upon himself. It is quite clear the honourable gentleman could not have had sufficient knowledge of the matter to have moved in it without having been put up to it by some other honourable member; but, in a spirit of chivalry, he has considered it necessary to shield that honourable member. I myself am in a rather peculiar position. I should like to illustrate by an anecdote the position I consider I have occupied since 1884. There was at one time in a school an old French master who had the misfortune to lose one of his legs, which was replaced by a cork leg. It became the fashion in the school to creep under the master's desk and stick pins into this cork leg, and every new boy was expected, as a matter of etiquette, to do this. On one occasion a rather clumsy new boy set himself to the task; but, unfortunately, he stuck the pin up to the head in the wrong leg; and I need not point out how the master strongly objected to a proceeding of that kind. I had been subjected to a great deal of annoyance, and it seemed to me that the time had arrived when I should put an end to it. Owing to my not being always able to hear what honourable members say, I am at a great disadvantage as compared with other honourable members. On looking over Hansard, for instance, I find that the honourable member for Waipawa suggested some time ago that I was a professional politician, and also that I ought to go to America to get up bogus companies. That was the meaning of his remarks, and I dare say the honourable gentleman would be very much offended if I suggested that he should go to some country where he could chase Natives up trees. As regards the question put to the House, I rose to make what seemed to me a mild protest against the question, and I was met with an opposition which, I cannot help thinking, was totally opposed to the spirit of the precepts which rule in Parliaments generally. I heard last night and yesterday language used unchallenged which was certainly of a much more serious nature than any language which I had used when I was stopped. Then, I was told that, when any honourable member attacked me, I had a right to defend myself, but not to attack him in return. Unfortunately, the whole course of our debates, from one end of the session to the other, is, with slight exception, of the character known as the tu quoque. It is the custom, in conducting our debates in Parliament, when one member is attacked, for the attacked member, instead of replying to the attack and confining himself to the matter raised in that attack, to resort to the line of argument that enables him to say to his assailant, "You're another." That is a practice which goes unchallenged in this Parliament, and also in others; and yet I was told I could not make a counter-attack. Well, Sir, then some words fell from me that I subsequently withdrew, and a discussion took place upon a resolution moved by the Premier. But on the second day of the discussion a new departure altogether was taken. The form of the original course was abandoned, and a new resolution was substituted. I do not know whether it is within the knowledge of members of the House, but I may state that after that resolution was moved I sent word to the Speaker and asked him for permission to come before the House, but I was told that I could not be allowed to come to the House unless I confined myself simply to an apology. So that, although a new motion had been made in reference to me, I had no opportunity of addressing the House on the subject. As regards the matter generally, I may say that there is no doubt that the wrong Standing Order was acted upon. In fact, there was no Standing Order which could be acted upon save that referring to the taking-down of words objected to, and, as in this matter they were not taken down at the time they were spoken, it had become impossible to take them down at all. So that the whole proceedings were certainly irregular. Then the resolution was passed. But since that time a newspaper of which a member of the Government is a large proprietor has used language in reference to the matter which, as compared with what I said, is as wine to water. We were told that the newspaper was to apologize at once; but it did not, and in the following week another newspaper belonging to the same proprietor, having exhausted its power of language in the previous week, exhausted its pictorial power in the following week, and, with pre-Raphaelite cruelty, indulged in charges against members of this House which went far beyond anything I had said or hinted. Now, I ask, is it right that an honourable gentleman should sit calmly, unchallenged, on the Government benches, without being called upon to appear before the bar of the House, under these circumstances, while I should have this resolution recorded against me? I appeal therefore to honourable members, as a matter of fairness, to say whether that resolution against me, which was the result of mistaken action, should be allowed to remain upon the records of the House. I think, in view of the fact I have stated, and of the further fact that it is obvious that the proceedings were irregular, that the Government can have no difficulty in withdrawing that resolution and cancelling it. I should like the Government to give me an answer as to whether I am not entitled, as a matter of justice, to have that resolution cancelled, and whether they will not enable that to be done. I will not press the Premier for an answer to-day, but I will ask him to take the matter into consideration, and give me an answer to-morrow or next day.

Mr. SPEAKER.—The question is, That this House do now adjourn.

Sir J. VOGEL.—Am I to understand that the Government refuse to give me any answer as to whether they will consider this matter?

Sir J. Vogel

Do they intend to leave me entirely to take my own remedy?

Major ATKINSON.—I understood that the honourable gentleman did not want an answer till to-morrow. But I am quite prepared to give him an answer now. The Government will not give him any facility for moving his resolutions.

Sir J. VOGEL.—Then I shall be obliged—I will not say positively till I consult my friends, but it seems that the honourable gentleman will force me to take a course which I shall be sorry to take—to bring this matter up, as I can, by a question of privilege. I shall not undertake to say when I shall do so. I understand that the honourable gentleman will pay no heed to the appeal which I have made to him. Therefore, as he will not give me facilities, I must throw upon him the responsibility of whatever course I may deem it necessary to take in this matter.

Motion for adjournment of the House negatived.

REPRESENTATION BILL.

Major ATKINSON.—Sir, it will be in the recollection of the House that last night, upon a certain amendment being put on a clause in the Representation Bill, and being carried, the Government thought it necessary to ask that progress should be reported, in order that we might consider the effect of the amendment. The Government have now come to the conclusion that they will invite the House to go into Committee again upon the Bill, go through the Bill, and then to recommit the Bill, in order to have the amendment made in the clause reconsidered.

Sir J. VOGEL.—Will the Government give an intimation of the course that business is likely to take? The Premier promised yesterday and on the previous day to make such a statement.

Major ATKINSON.—Yes; I had intended to make the statement to-day, but it is impossible for me to do so until I see how the honourable gentleman is going to act to-day. Upon that depends very much the course of business. The opposition with which the Government have been met by certain honourable gentlemen, of which we have again had a specimen this afternoon, makes it impossible for the Government to make any statement at present, but I will do so as soon as I can.

Sir J. VOGEL.—Simply with the object of facilitating business, I will ask the honourable gentleman to consent to the postponement of the further consideration of the Representation Bill till half-past seven to-night, so that the honourable gentlemen who are acting with me may consider the course that they will take. Without mentioning anything more specific, I think I may say, with a tolerable amount of certainty, that he is more likely to save time by agreeing to that proposal than otherwise. Certainly it is not fair, seeing that we have only just had this announcement made to us, that we should be asked to go into Committee again upon this Bill. I ask, therefore, that the matter may be postponed till half-past seven o'clock.

Major ATKINSON.—I am sorry that I cannot accede to the request of the honourable gentleman. After the honourable gentleman first pledging himself to support the Bill, and then yesterday coming down and saying that he should oppose the Bill in all its stages, I am not prepared to postpone it for any purpose whatever. I shall therefore ask the House to go steadily on with the work.

Sir J. VOGEL.—I shall only say that I did not give any pledge whatever, and that I did not say yesterday that I should oppose the Bill in all its stages.

The Bill was then further considered in Committee.

IN COMMITTEE.

Clause 2.—House of Representatives to consist of seventy members, whereof three to be Maoris.

Mr. SEDDON moved the insertion of the following words: "and after a fresh census of the population of the colony has been taken."

The Committee divided.

AYES, 28.

Blake	Joyce	Smith
Buxton	Kelly	Steward, W. J.
Cadman	Kerr	Taylor
Feldwick	Lance	Turnbull
Fish	Larnach	Vogel
Fitzherbert	Loughrey	Walker.
Fraser	Perceval
Grey	Reeves, R. H. J.	Tellers.
Grimmond	Reeves, W. P.	Levestam
Jones	Richardson, E.	Seddon.

NOES 49.

Allen	Hodgkinson	Pearson
Anderson	Izard	Pyke
Atkinson	Jackson	Rhodes
Barron	Lawry	Richardson, G.
Beetham	MacKenzie, T.	Ross
Buchanan	McGregor	Seymour
Carroll	McKenzie, J.	Taipua
Cowan	Mills	Taiwhanga
Dodson	Mitchelson	Tanner
Fergus	Moat	Thompson, R.
Fisher	Monk	Ward
Fitchett	Moss	Wilson
Fulton	Newman	Withy.
Goldie	O'Connor
Graham	Ormond	Tellers.
Hislop	Parata	Bruce
Hobbs	Peacock	Macarthur.

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Ballance	Hall
Duncan	Russell
Guinness	Valentine
O'Callaghan	Whyte
Samuel.	Stewart, W. D.

Majority against, 21.

Amendment negatived.

The Committee divided on the question, "That the word 'seventy' stand part of the clause."

AYES, 54.

Allen	Jackson	Reeves, R. H. J.
Anderson	Jones	Rhodes
Atkinson	Larnach	Richardson, G.
Beetham	Lawry	Ross
Blake	Macarthur	Seymour
Bruce	MacKenzie, T.	Steward, W. J.
Buchanan	McGregor	Taipua
Carroll	McKenzie, J.	Taiwhanga
Cowan	Mills	Tanner
Dodson	Mitchelson	Taylor
Fergus	Moat	Thompson, R.
Fisher	Monk	Turnbull
Fitchett	Moss	Ward
Fulton	Newman	Wilson
Graham	O'Connor	Withy.
Hislop	Ormond	Tellers.
Hobbs	Parata	Barron
Hodgkinson	Pearson	Peacock.
Izard

NOES, 20.

Buxton	Grimmond	Richardson, E.
Cadman	Joyce	Smith
Feldwick	Kelly	Vogel
Fish	Lance	Walker.
Fitzherbert	Levestam	Tellers.
Fraser	Loughrey	Perceval
Goldie	Reeves, W. P.	Seddon.

PAIRS.

For.

Hall
Russell
Stewart, W. D.
Valentine
Whyte.

Against.

Ballance
Duncan
Samuel
Guinness
O'Callaghan.

Majority for, 34.

Word retained.

Major ATKINSON moved, That the word "four" be added.

The Committee divided.

AYES, 49.

Anderson	Jackson	Pyke
Atkinson	Larnach	Rhodes
Beetham	Lawry	Richardson, G.
Blake	Macarthur	Ross
Bruce	MacKenzie, T.	Seymour
Carroll	McGregor	Steward, W. J.
Cowan	McKenzie, J.	Taipua
Dodson	Mills	Taiwhanga
Feldwick	Mitchelson	Tanner
Fergus	Moat	Thompson, R.
Fisher	Monk	Walker
Fish	Newman	Ward
Fulton	O'Connor	Wilson.
Graham	Ormond
Hislop	Parata	Tellers.
Hodgkinson	Peacock	Buchanan
Izard	Pearson	Hobbs.

NOES, 30.

Allen	Goldie	Kerr
Barron	Grey	Lance
Buxton	Grimmond	Levestam
Cadman	Jones	Loughrey
Fitchett	Joyce	Moss
Fraser	Kelly	Perceval

Reeves, W. P. Taylor Withy.
 Richardson, E. Thompson, T. Tellers.
 Samuel Turnbull Reeves, R. H. J.
 Smith Vogel Seddon.
 Stewart, W. D.

Majority for, 19.

Word inserted.

Mr. SEDDON moved the addition of the following proviso: "Provided, however, that subsection three of section three of such Act shall be read as if the word 'twenty-five' had been inserted therein in lieu of the word 'eighteen.'"

The Committee divided.

AYES, 18.

Buxton Kelly Walker.
 Fitzherbert Lance
 Grimmond McKenzie, J. Tellers.
 Guinness Richardson, E. Kerr
 Joyce Steward, W. J. Seddon.

NOES, 48.

Allen Jackson Ross
 Anderson Lawry Seymour
 Atkinson Levestam Stewart, W. D.
 Barron Mackenzie, T. S.-Menteath
 Cowan Mills Taipua
 Dodson Mitchelson Taiwhanga
 Feldwick Monk Tanner
 Fergus Moss Taylor
 Fisher Newman Thompson, R.
 Fish O'Conor Thompson, T.
 Fitchett Peacock Ward
 Fulton Pearson Whyte
 Goldie Percival Withy.
 Graham Reeves, W. P. Tellers.
 Hislop Rhodes Bruce
 Hobbs Richardson, G. Macarthur.
 Izard

Majority against, 33.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. SEDDON moved, That the following proviso be added to the Bill: "This Act shall have no force or effect until the altered electoral boundaries necessary thereunder shall have been made by the Commissioners, and a description thereof laid upon the table of the House."

The Committee divided.

AYES, 19.

Buxton Kelly Taylor
 Feldwick Kerr Walker
 Fish Loughrey Ward.
 Fitchett Moss
 Fitzherbert Reeves, W. P. Tellers.
 Grimmond Samuel Guinness
 Joyce Smith Levestam.

NOES, 47.

Allen Fisher Lawry
 Anderson Fulton Macarthur
 Atkinson Goldie Mackenzie, M.
 Barron Graham Mackenzie, T.
 Beetham Hislop McGrogan
 Bruce Hobbs McKenzie, J.
 Cowan Hodgkinson Mills
 Dodson Izard Mitchelson
 Fergus Jackson Moat

Monk Rhodes Valentine
 Newman Richardson, G. Whyte
 O'Conor Ross Wilson
 Ormond Seymour Withy.
 Peacock S.-Menteath Tellers.
 Pearson Taipua Buchanan
 Pyke Thompson, T. Thompson, R.

Majority against, 28.

Amendment negatived.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 3.—Commissioners to give effect to Representation Act and this Act.

Mr. LEVESTAM moved, as an amendment, to omit the last words of the clause, for the purpose of inserting words to the effect that the colony be divided into districts, to be defined in a schedule to the Bill.

The Committee divided on the question, "That the words be retained."

AYES, 54.

Allen Izard Richardson, G.
 Anderson Jackson Ross
 Atkinson Macarthur Seymour
 Barron Mackenzie, M. Stewart, W. D.
 Beetham McGregor S.-Menteath
 Bruce Mills Taipua
 Buchanan Mitchelson Taiwhanga
 Cadman Moat Taylor
 Cowan Monk Thompson, R.
 Dodson Newman Thompson, T.
 Fergus O'Conor Valentine
 Fisher Ormond Ward
 Fitchett Parata Whyte
 Fulton Peacock Wilson
 Goldie Pearson Withy.
 Graham Pyke Tellers.
 Hislop Rhodes Lawry
 Hobbs Richardson, E. Mackenzie, T.
 Hodgkinson

NOES, 13.

Feldwick Kerr Turnbull.
 Fish Loughrey
 Fitzherbert Samuel Tellers.
 Grimmond Seddon Guinness
 Joyce Smith Levestam.

PAIRS.

For. Against.
 Carroll Walker
 Tanner. Lance.

Majority for, 41.

Words retained.

Mr. FITCHETT moved to add the following words to the clause: "Provided always that the Commissioners shall, within six months from the passing of this Act, report the names and boundaries of the electoral districts fixed by them to the Governor, who shall forthwith proclaim the same in the Gazette; and such Proclamation shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, have the force of law from the date of such Proclamation."

The Committee divided on the question, "That the proviso be added to the clause."

AYES, 25.

Blake Feldwick Fraser
 Buxton Fitzherbert Grimmond

Guinness McKenzie, J. Taylor
 Jones Moss Turnbull
 Joyce Perceval Walker.
 Kerr Reeves, R. H. J.
 Lance Reeves, W. P. Tellers.
 Larnach Richardson, E. Fitchett
 Loughrey Stewart, W. D. Seddon.
 NOES, 48.

Allen Izard Richardson, G.
 Anderson Jackson Ross
 Atkinson Lawry Seymour
 Beetham Mackenzie, T. Taipua
 Bruce McGregor Taiwhanga
 Buchanan Mills Tanner
 Cowan Mitchelson Thompson, R.
 Dodson Moat Thompson, T.
 Fergus Monk Valentine
 Fisher Newman Ward
 Fish O'Connor Whyte
 Fulton Ormond Wilson
 Goldie Parata Withy.
 Graham Peacock Tellers.
 Hislop Pearson Barron
 Hobbs Rhodes Macarthur.
 Hodgkinson

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Levestam	Pyke
Steward, W. J.	O'Connor
Vogel.	Carroll.

Majority against, 28.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. SEDDON moved the addition of a proviso making the allowance in the quota in favour of mining districts 25 per cent. instead of 18 per cent.

The Committee divided.

AYES, 9.

Grimmond	Reeves, R. H. J.	Tellers.
Guinness	Samuel	Duncan
Kerr	Seddon.	Turnbull.
O'Callaghan

NOES, 44.

Allen	Lance	Seymour
Anderson	Lawry	Taiwhanga
Atkinson	Macarthur	Tanner
Bruce	Mackenzie, T.	Taylor
Buchanan	McGregor	Thompson, R.
Dodson	Mitchelson	Thompson, T.
Fergus	Monk	Valentine
Fisher	Moss	Walker
Fulton	Newman	Ward
Goldie	Pearson	Whyte
Graham	Reeves, W. P.	Wilson
Hislop	Rhodes	Withy.
Hobbs	Richardson, G.	Tellers.
Jackson	Ross	Barron
Kelly	Russell	Mills.

PAIR.

For.	Against.
Smith.	Larnach.

Majority against, 35.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. SEDDON moved the addition of a proviso exempting the Provincial Districts of Nelson, Westland, Taranaki, and Marlborough from the operation of the Bill, the electorates in those districts to remain as if the Bill were not passed.

The Committee divided.

AYES, 7.

Guinness	Samuel	Tellers.
Joyce	Turnbull.	Grimmond
Kerr		Seddon.

NOES, 46.

Allen	Lance	Russell
Anderson	Lawry	Seymour
Atkinson	Macarthur	Taiwhanga
Barron	Mackenzie, T.	Tanner
Bruce	McGregor	Taylor
Dodson	Mills	Thompson, R.
Duncan	Mitchelson	Thompson, T.
Fergus	Monk	Valentine
Fisher	Moss	Walker
Fulton	Newman	Ward
Graham	O'Callaghan	Whyte
Hislop	Pearson	Withy.
Hobbs	Reeves, W. P.
Izard	Rhodes	Tellers.
Jackson	Richardson, G.	Goldie
Kelly	Ross	Wilson.

PAIR.

For.	Against.
Marchant.	Stewart, W. D.

Majority against, 39.

Amendment negatived.

The Committee divided on the question, "That clause 3 stand part of the Bill."

AYES, 44.

Allen	Izard	Ross
Anderson	Kelly	Russell
Atkinson	Lawry	Seymour
Barron	Macarthur	S. Menteth
Bruce	Mackenzie, M.	Taiwhanga
Buchanan	Mackenzie, T.	Tanner
Dodson	McGregor	Thompson, R.
Fergus	Mills	Thompson, T.
Fisher	Mitchelson	Valentine
Fitchett	Monk	Ward
Fulton	Moss	Whyte
Goldie	Newman	Withy.
Graham	Pearson	Tellers.
Hislop	Reeves, W. P.	Jackson
Hobbs	Richardson, G.	Rhodes.

NOES, 18.

Duncan	Kerr	Walker.
Feldwick	Lance
Grimmond	Marchant	Tellers.
Guinness	Samuel	O'Callaghan
Joyce	Taylor	Seddon.

Majority for, 31.

Clause agreed to.

Dr. FITCHETT moved a new clause providing for the amalgamation of the city electorates.

The Committee divided.

AYES, 12.

Buxton	Joyce	Seddon.
Feldwick	Kerr	Tellers.
Grey	Moss	Fitchett
Grimmond	Reeves, R. H. J.	Stewart, W. D.
Guinness	Taylor

NOES, 44.

Allen	Izard	Russell
Anderson	Jackson	Seymour
Atkinson	Kelly	Taiwhanga
Barron	Lance	Tanner
Bruce	Larnach	Taylor
Buchanan	Lawry	Thompson, R.
Dodson	Macarthur	Thompson, T.
Duncan	Marchant	Valentine
Fergus	McGregor	Walker
Fisher	Mitchelson	Ward
Fulton	Monk	Wilson
Goldie	O'Callaghan	Withy.
Graham	Pearson	Tellers.
Hislop	Rhodes	Mackenzie, T.
Hobbs	Ross	Mills.

Majority against, 32.

Clause rejected.

Bill reported.

Major ATKINSON.—Sir, I beg to move, That you do leave the chair, in order that the House may go into Committee on clause 2 of the Bill, with the view of striking out the words of the clause in the second line after the word "determination"—namely, "not earlier than the eighth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine."

Mr. SEDDON.—I wish to rise to a point of order. Is it proper to move that the Bill be recommitted to consider the excision of certain words—for instance, the words just mentioned by the Premier—or to consider the clause as a whole?

Mr. SPEAKER.—I have always held that a recommitment should be for the consideration of the whole of the clause, and not for merely a part of a clause.

Mr. WALKER.—Is it not new business to take this recommitment to-night? I should say distinctly it is new business to move that you do leave the chair to recommit a Bill at the hour of eight minutes to one o'clock a.m.

Mr. SEDDON.—Before you give your ruling on that point, Sir, I am aware, after looking up the matter, that the ruling, under ordinary circumstances, would be given against the contention of the honourable member for Ashburton; but when it is the intention of the Premier to reverse the conclusion arrived at yesterday it somewhat alters the circumstances. If the question had arisen while members were discussing the Bill there would not have been the same contention; but the conclusion was arrived at yesterday, and a large number of members were then present who may not know that it was the intention of the Government to recommit the Bill for the purpose of considering these specific words.

Mr. BUCHANAN.—I would bring under your notice, Sir, that the Premier distinctly expressed his intention yesterday to move for the recommitment of the Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER.—This is a motion on the report of the Bill, and merely extends the time for the consideration of the business that has been under consideration, and does not involve calling on an order after half-past twelve.

With regard to the question of the third reading, I would hold that that is new business, unless it were a Bill of an urgent nature, which might be passed through more than one of its stages at a sitting; but the recommitment of the Bill for the reconsideration of this clause, I hold, is not new business.

Mr. WALKER.—Will the Government listen to an appeal—

Major ATKINSON.—To reason.

Mr. WALKER.—In the early part of the sitting to-day this Bill was committed, and the Railway Boards Bill was also committed, and it was understood we were to go through both. I do not think it was understood that we were going to recommit the Representation Bill to-night, and I think many honourable members have gone away on the understanding that that would not take place. Therefore I appeal to the Premier to allow this matter to stand over till to-morrow. Let him sit all hours of the night to do the business of the House; but, in all fairness, let the Representation Bill stand over till to-morrow.

Mr. W. D. STEWART.—This proposal of the Premier's is a vital question underlying the whole consideration of this Bill; and I think it is extremely desirable, if not strictly in accordance with the Standing Orders, that members of this House should have a full opportunity of considering the important question contained in the proposal of the honourable member. It is very well known that I have supported the reduction of members; and I have even voted in favour of a larger reduction than the Government have carries in this Bill. I was opposed to any increase over seventy, and voted against any such increase. The object of this amendment is this: A feeling was entertained that, if this amendment were not carried, the Bill, being passed this session for some reason which has not been explained, might be held in terrorem over this House during the next three years; and, with a view of obviating that feeling and, so to speak, of getting rid of it, it was proposed that this Bill should practically remain inoperative until Parliament expires by effluxion of time. I felt that might be open to some misconstruction and injustice, and that if this Parliament were dissolved a week or a day before the full three years for which we have been elected a wrong might be done, because this Bill would become nugatory. With a view of obviating these results, this amendment was proposed by me, that, at all events, this House should have something like a feeling of independence in regard to the forcing of a dissolution during the next two sessions. I thought that no elections would take place under the existing law, seeing that the House would have passed a Bill reducing the number of members to seventy-four, and that no Government would venture to advise a dissolution before, at all events, the 8th October, 1899; otherwise there would be a very serious wrong done, because the new elections would have to take place under the existing law. I am aware that in this House there are some members who feel that there should be no dissolution of this Parliament, but that Parliament should be allowed to run its full course, and that we should fight out our troubles in the best way we can, and that the Governor should not grant a dissolution unless some unforeseen circumstances arose. But what was felt was this: that this amendment, so important in its consequences, and so perfectly clear and intelligible, should be inserted in the Bill with a view of preventing what may be termed this arbitrary right of advising His Excellency to grant a dissolution. Yesterday, by a fair majority, this amendment was carried; and I understand that the opinions of honourable members of this House have in no way altered on this important question, and that there is still a majority in the House in favour of the amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN.—Put it to the vote.

Mr. W. D. STEWART.—We know that the member for the Wairarapa only votes in one direction. The honourable gentleman knows what it means to say, "Put it to the vote;" but I appeal to those members who voted with me after full consideration and discussion of the proposal, who gave their votes in favour of the amendment—I appeal to those honourable members to vote against the recommitment of the Bill. It would be wrong to give a reversal of the decision which we came to yesterday, and it would be a weakness on the part of those members to recede from the position which they then took up. I know that, as a matter of fact, several honourable gentlemen came to me and urged me to propose this amendment, declaring that they would support me; and yet, because the Premier took up a certain position in regard to the matter, and told them that he would abandon the Bill, those persons then said that, owing to the opinions which the Premier had expressed, they would not vote with me. To those honourable gentlemen I have nothing to say; but to the other honourable members who did vote with me I say that I fail to see that any intimation from the Premier as to the consequences of their vote relieves them from the duty which they are in honour bound to perform. I say that, as a matter of honour and justice, they are bound to stand up for the amendment on the present occasion, let the consequences be what they may. I shall therefore submit that it would not be fair on the part of those honourable gentlemen to vote for this House reversing the decision it gave last night. I shall not detain the House, beyond saying this: that I feel that the House deliberately came to the conclusion that it was not wise that such a power as is contained in the clause should be given to the Government; and I submit that members who urged me to move that amendment, and who, after full debate, voted with me, should not on the present occasion desert me. I say that such conduct would be an injustice to me and a wrong to the country.

Major ATKINSON.—Hear, hear.

Mr. W. D. STEWART.—I do not know what the honourable gentleman means by "Hear, hear."

Major ATKINSON.—An injustice to the honourable gentleman!

Mr. W. D. STEWART.—Yes. I say that those honourable members who came forward and urged me to propose the amendment are, in loyalty, honourably bound to support me on the present occasion. The honourable member knows that.

Mr. M. J. S. MACKENZIE.—Who were they?

Mr. W. D. STEWART.—I am not called upon to name any honourable members in this House, and I am not going to institute such distinctions; but I say that those honourable members who supported me when I proposed that amendment should support me on the present occasion. The matter was fully discussed, and the vote was deliberately given; and I do not think it is the duty of this House to reverse its decision in consequence of anything that may have been said by the Premier to honourable members—of any threat that he will take a certain course—although I do not know what it is.

An Hon. MEMBER.—He says he will resign.

Mr. W. D. STEWART.—I do not know anything about that. I have looked on this as not being a party question in any sense of the term, or as "hostile" in the ordinary sense of the term. There was no intention on my part of that kind. A number of honourable members who supported it are generally recognised as Government supporters, and I cannot conceive why those honourable gentlemen should be called upon to put their consciences into their pockets and vote contrary to what they think. A more improper power to put into the hands of the Government I cannot conceive. Honourable members deliberately decided the matter, and I do not see why they should be called upon to reverse their votes without any explanation; because no explanation has been given to justify such a course. As I say, the amendment was not moved in any hostile spirit to the Government. The Premier did not seem in very good health last evening, and took the vote in a wrong light; I will not say he lost his temper, but I must confess that he took it in a light which could not have been expected; and I say that it is improper and unfair to this House and the country that those honourable gentlemen who supported me last night should not support me now.

Mr. BUCHANAN.—The honourable gentleman who has spoken has attempted to read a lecture to certain honourable members who happened to vote in the direction which he indicated last evening owing to a misapprehension, and who may not be inclined to follow him this evening.

Mr. W. D. STEWART.—They do not require you to defend them.

Mr. BUCHANAN.—I believe the honourable gentleman is quite right in that; but I have got up to say this: that a lecture upon consistency comes with very bad grace from that honourable gentleman, especially after the course he has adopted with regard to this Bill. Last night when the Bill was before the House he told us that he voted against the Bill last session, but that now he is in favour of a reduction of members, because his constituents have demanded it. In other words, he has just done what he accuses those honourable gentlemen of intending to do—he has put his opinions in his pockets because his constituents have ordered him to do so, although he now deprecates the same course being taken by other honourable members on the demand of the Premier. With regard to my vote upon this Bill, I can only say that it would be well for the honourable gentleman if he could give as consistent a vote as I have done.

Mr. STUART-MENTEATH.—I do not intend to detain the House at any length in connection with this subject, but I wish to explain my line of action in regard to the matter. Now, I feel that the question which has occupied our attention during the last few days is one of great importance, perhaps one of the greatest importance that could come before us, and I feel a very great sense of responsibility to my constituents in this matter. I feel that in passing such a measure as this without an amendment of the character of that which I proposed but which was rejected, or without an amendment such as that carried by the honourable member for Dunedin West, a great and unconstitutional power was being placed in the hands of the Government. I felt that when the Bill first came up for its second reading, and when it went into Committee, we were asked to place a dangerous power—none can be more dangerous—in the hands of the Government; and, though I approve of the main features of the policy of the Government, as announced to us during the present session, there are yet many matters which are to be left over for consideration during next session; and I feel very great doubt, until I am fully aware of the direction in which the honourable members on those benches are going, about the expediency of intrusting them with this enormous power for good or evil over the destinies of this House for the next three years which they will have if this amendment be not made. That is my feeling; and I spoke very much to the same effect when addressing the House on the second reading of the Bill; and I clearly indicated that when it went into Committee I should take some step of hostility in reference to that particular part of the Bill to which I am alluding. When the Bill was in Committee the honourable member in charge of it—the Premier—announced to several of his supporters that they were perfectly free to vote on this Bill as they liked. Up to the time the honourable member for Dunedin West moved his amendment, in fact, nobody knew that this question was to be treated as a Ministerial question.

Hon. MEMBERS.—“Yes.” “No.”

Mr. STUART-MENTEATH.—I will not say that nobody knew it; but I will say that I did not know it. Then, when the amendment was moved, I think the Premier said that he would, if it were carried, drop the Bill. Well, even then, accustomed as we are to see Bills dropped in this House without it involving consequences to the Government so serious as this would appear to involve, I had no reason to suppose that the carrying of this, in my opinion, beneficial amendment could possibly involve the existence of the Government. The Bill was introduced in a very short speech, and we had no indication given to us of any such vital principle being contained in it as appears to lurk in it. When the amendment was moved we were told that the Bill was to be dropped if the amendment were carried; but that did not seem to me to involve much. I know that in previous sessions, during which the honourable gentleman who is now at the head of the Government led the House, more Bills were dropped than were carried through. In 1883 the constant accusation was that he brought down Bills, pushed them through some of their stages, and then threw them into the waste-paper basket. Those previous tactics of the honourable gentleman led one to suppose that if the honourable gentleman were met by an adverse vote with regard to a clause of the Bill at such a critical period as this an opportunity would be taken to throw the Bill into the waste-paper basket. Now let us look at the Bill and at this particular clause. The Bill is part of a scheme of retrenchment—a part which, I must confess, I do not regard as at all likely to effect retrenchment for some time to come. The Bill does not come into force for three years. It cannot come into force for three years if Parliament runs its normal course; and if Parliament does not run its normal course the Bill will be open to grave abuse. I say, then, that up to the time the division was taken on this amendment those who were supporting the Government were led into placing themselves in what has since appeared to be a false position. Immediately after the amendment was carried the adjournment of the House was moved, and we were told that the Government were going to consider their position, and that if leave to recommit the Bill was refused they would resign. Then I had to consider what course I would take. I felt that I was at liberty to accuse the Government of great mismanagement in the conduct of public business. And I felt also that I was called upon, if I submitted to the passing of the measure in its present form, to do that which I consider very dangerous to the future well-being not only of my constituents, but of the colony. On the other hand, we have assembled here, at a very critical period in the history of the colony, to push through certain reforms in a very limited period of time; and I have every reason to believe that those honourable gentlemen who occupy the Government benches are the best fitted to perform the duty which the country requires to be performed at the present time. I had to weigh in the balance the importance of these questions—the importance of the passing of the Representation Bill as against the importance of carrying out measures for which the country is crying. So far as they were disclosed by the Financial Statement, I believe those measures have met with the approval of the country; and therefore I feel that I have to choose between two evils, and I think that I shall best consult the interests of the country if I choose what I deem to be, after careful consideration, the lesser of the two. I propose, therefore, to take the course of walking out of the House and not voting at all upon this question. Now, I should like to say this: I consider that, wittingly or unwittingly, the Government, in forcing this measure through in its present shape, have taken a step which must strain the allegiance of the thinking men of their party. I am prepared, for the reasons I have given and in the critical condition of the country which I have already spoken of, to support them; but, although I am prepared to do that at the present time, I must say that many more—one or two more such strains upon my allegiance will be more than I can stand. I think that, if a Government will force through the House this measure, an unconstitutional measure, a measure which is calculated to give them power which is unconstitutional, and which they have not yet shown their fitness to use, such a Government has, I say, gone far towards forfeiting the confidence of its followers by so doing. I say it is most unseemly to see a Government, during a critical time in the history of the country, when so little time is left before the close of the session, and we have so many more measures for which the country is calling, straining every nerve to pass a measure which does—what?—which practically assures them their seats upon those benches for three years. There can be no denying it, that the effect of this measure will go largely in that direction; and I repeat that it is a most unseemly thing to see a Government forcing on that which, whether rightly or wrongly, may be interpreted to be a measure passed to build up their position, at a time when the country is so much in need of more important measures. Now, I know that those who adopt an independent tone in this House are subjected to all sorts of criticism and all kinds of abuse. Motives are attributed to them, and the Ministerial Press starts out upon a mission to villify them. There are those in this House who will endeavour to discharge their duty, those who belong to no party in this House, who are independent of party, and who are prepared to do what is right in the interests of the colony. I say there are men in this House who will not be deterred by the abuse of the Ministerial organs, and who will not be drawn from the path of duty by the flattery of the Opposition, but will proceed to do only what they conceive to be in the interests of their constituents and of the country; and who, when they see party “moves” which they think to be unworthy of the party they are supporting, will openly and without fear or favour express their views, no matter what effect their so doing may have upon their position in the House.

Mr. Buchanan

Dr. FITCHETT.—The honourable member who has just sat down has pointed out with such force and clearness both the unconstitutional nature and the pernicious influence of the power which the Government propose to confer upon themselves by this Bill that I marvel that he can find these lighter in the balance than the maintenance of a party in power. Surely it is not sufficient that a Minister shall stand up and say, “If you do not support me I will resign.” Surely a duty devolves upon even a Government supporter, when such a threat is held before him, to ask whether it is reasonable, or whether any great principle is involved. Is the Premier, in a mere fit of petulance—in a mere fit of temper—to command the adherence of every nominal supporter to any unconstitutional measure he may propose, by a threat such as that? I think the honourable member for Te Aro scarcely weighed this, and is scarcely wise now when he announces his intention of retracing the step he took after careful consideration yesterday—a step the reasons for which he has put so clearly again to-night. I really cannot understand it. It is, of course, a matter for himself; but I hope I shall never be long enough in Parliament to sacrifice my judgment on the altar of party politics in a way like that. But, leaving that branch of the subject, and coming to the motion now before the House, I would urge the Premier to lay to heart what the honourable gentleman who has last spoken has said as to the strain he puts upon the allegiance of his followers by the extraordinarily arrogant tone he assumes in forcing this recommitment of the Bill.

Mr. FISHER.—We shall not lay that to heart.

Dr. FITCHETT.—I am speaking to the Premier, and not to the Minister of Education now. Speaking to the motion, I ask, is it wise of the Premier, for his own sake, to put so grievous a strain upon the allegiance of his followers as he is doing in pressing for the recommitment of this Bill to-night? Last night the thing was discussed exhaustively, and a division was taken upon it in a full House; and now, at this hour of the morning and in a very thin House, an attempt is made to force the measure on again so that the deliberate judgment of the House and of many of his own supporters may be reversed. You already, I believe, Sir, have ruled that it is competent for the honourable member to move this now. I am sorry that I was not in the House when the question was raised, because I should have submitted for your consideration certain authorities in May to show, at all events, that this is not the usual practice in the English House of Commons. I ask, is it reasonable, seeing we have no assurance that the honourable members who voted last night are here now—is it reasonable that, with a thin House, at so absurdly late an hour, and without any prior notice, we should be called upon to reverse a previous decision? I will not take upon myself the responsibility of moving an amendment, but I trust that some honourable member who will follow me will do so. One word before I sit down. I merely wish to say this, because what I say now will be reported: that I have always supported the reduction of the number of members, and I have supported a greater reduction than this which Ministers propose; but I have also supported the amendment of the honourable member for Dunedin West, for the reason so ably pointed out by the honourable member for Te Aro—that it does put in the hands of the Government an unconstitutional power, which will enable them to threaten the Opposition and their own supporters, and secure their retention of office.

Mr. W. P. REEVES.—The honourable member for Te Aro appears to me to resemble a sign-post on a roadside: he points with perfect accuracy the way which one should follow, but does not travel in that direction himself. The honourable gentleman has made a very excellent speech, and has said what we have all felt; but, unfortunately, he has accepted the snub, he has taken the slap in the face, he has oringed under the whip: after which he tells us that, if these insults and indignities are put upon him often enough, the time may come when he will resent them. He says he has been knocked down this time, and if he is struck once or twice more he will get up at some future day. I was very sorry to hear a gentleman of the character and attainments of the honourable member for Te Aro adopt such an unworthy position. This is a specimen of the freedom of discussion we are so often promised. This is a specimen of our liberty and independence of judgment. How often have we been told that when the principle of a Bill has been affirmed the fullest liberty is allowed in Committee! The principle of this Bill was carried. It was not opposed by many of us who wished to affirm the principle that there should be a reasonable reduction in the number of members; but when we get into Committee an exceedingly sensible, proper, and constitutional amendment is proposed, and then suddenly the Premier turns round and tramples on the House in this way. I ask, is this a House of Representatives or a house of correction? Is it a Parliament or is it a penitentiary? Is this a ruling Legislature or a village school? Because it seems to me that the extraordinary rules and discipline that are maintained in this House are such as to lower it to the level of an establishment such as I have mentioned. I think it is most painful to see grown men frightened and reduced to the position of crouching children in the way the honourable members for Te Aro, Mount Ida, and Thorndon have been terrified and frightened. Sir, how will the Premier tyrannize over these men, how will he despise them, in the future! Is there any indignity that he will hesitate to heap upon them in the future, now that they have taken their punishment and sit under his yoke? I think a worse lot will be theirs in the future. I am sorry for the honourable member for Mount Ida,—a gentleman who occupied a very prominent position in the country a few months ago,—that he should descend to the servile position he now occupies. I am sorry for the treatment he will get. We know the Premier. We know how the honourable gentleman treats men when he thoroughly gets their measure; and he has thoroughly got the measure of those honourable gentlemen over there now. Well, I pity the honourable gentlemen, and I congratulate the Premier. He has put the screw on very successfully, and I suppose that he laughs now; and he may well laugh. The honourable member for Port Chalmers amused the House, I am told, a little while ago by quoting a nursery rhyme at my expense with regard to my relations with Sir Julius Vogel. Sir, the honourable gentleman had better talk about something he knows a little of. If he knew what my relations with Sir Julius Vogel have been for the last four or five years he would have done anything rather than quote the peculiar rhyme he inflicted on the House. But, as nursery rhymes are in vogue to-night, I should like to close my brief remarks with one. I can conceive the Premier singing of the honourable member for Mount Ida, who knocked the honourable gentleman down yesterday, and picked him up to-day so obediently, somewhat like this:—

Dr. Fitchett

Who picked me up when'er I fell,
And kissed the place and made it well?
My Scobie.

Mr. M. J. S. MACKENZIE.—Mr. Speaker, I have listened to-night to the speech of the honourable gentleman who has just sat down with some degree of amusement. It is perhaps an unfortunate thing that individuals can sometimes be most amused where there is the greatest lack of good taste, as was manifest in the few remarks which that honourable gentleman made to-night. Perhaps I ought to complain of the presence of an unseemly levity rather than of the lack of taste. However, he is quite young to this House, is now in a phase of political life we have all passed through, and after he has a little more experience he will learn that gravity is occasionally not unbecoming in a politician. So much for the honourable gentleman's tone. I have only to say one word with regard to the remarks that he made about certain of us. I think he likened myself and some others to crouching children who were frightened at something or other.

An Hon. MEMBER.—The Premier.

Mr. M. J. S. MACKENZIE.—Quite so. Now, we are frightened; and, as some honourable members do not know what we are afraid of, I propose to tell them. There should not be any mystery about it after the last three years, but within the compass of a very few minutes I will tell them all about it. I was one of those who voted with the honourable member for Dunedin West last night, because I thought then, as I think now, that, taken per se, the amendment was a very proper one, and would do no harm. On precisely the same grounds I should vote for it again. But it so happened that the Government, most injudiciously and unnecessarily in my opinion, made the amendment a Government question. Their determination was not, at the time, known to us, or, as I find, even to their own whips. But, having made it a Government question, and after discovering they had done so, and that they were determined, rightly or wrongly, resolutely to stand by it, we had to take a choice—namely, whether we should leave the Government in the possession of a weapon of considerable power over the House in the matter of a dissolution, or trust the control of public affairs in the hands of some honourable gentlemen who have so disastrously signalised themselves in the past. Regarding that power, I do not go so far as the honourable member for Te Aro, or think it contains the evil that he does; but the choice was whether we would leave the Government in possession of that power for good or for evil, or whether, looking to the attitude they had assumed, we were to break up a Government which is now carrying out a very difficult and, I hope, a very good policy for this country, and put in their place—whom, Sir? why, a set of men, a part of a set of politicians whose whole career, for the past three years, has been an infraction of every sound principle of politics, who have honeycombed the country with political corruption and demoralisation—that is what we are afraid of. I make no imputations against any honourable member; but, when honourable gentlemen get up and say that I am afraid of any man or set of men, they are saying things they can scarcely believe to be true. I am afraid of persons getting into power from that side of the House who would carry out a policy that would be disastrous to the country. Beyond that, I think the amendment of the honourable member for Dunedin West was a proper one. But, after all, it is a comparatively small matter. If I chose to vote for the amendment I should do so; but I do not choose to do so, and shall go out of the House, so as not to embarrass a Government that, having taken this stand, are otherwise doing the work which the country has demanded, and which is about to be, I hope, successfully and carefully performed.

Mr. MOSS.—I was not in the House when this vote took place last night. I waited until two o'clock in the morning, and then, finding myself voting with a small minority against the Government on a question connected with this Bill, I thought I might as well go into the library and finish some important correspondence. Therefore I was not here when the vote took place, and I had not the slightest idea of such a vote being contemplated. As soon as I found that the House had suddenly adjourned I mentioned to honourable members that had I been in the House I should certainly have voted for the Government on this occasion. When I repeated this to-day the honourable member for Dunedin South was kind enough to favour me with a little of that mighty-mouthed oratory which pours from him in such a full stream when he is in the humour to favour us with it. If he were now here I should ask him not to think me likely to be influenced by anything of that kind. I should have voted against the amendment last night for the simple reason that I did not see the danger which struck some other honourable gentlemen. Supposing the threat of dissolution to be held over us, what would happen? We should practically reduce the House to seventy members, and bring the Act into immediate operation. In these days it must also be evident that Ministers' own seats are not so safe that they can look at a dissolution with more unconcern than other members. If the House is to be reduced to seventy members—and I am bound to say that, so far as I am concerned, I am only representing the opinion of my constituents and my own when I say I have a very strong desire to have the House reduced to seventy members—the sooner it is so reduced the better. Now, Sir, if a dissolution took place at our next meeting, seventy members would be returned to the following Parliament, and we should avoid the whole or the greater part of the reductions being taken from the towns. The Bill has many defects, to my mind; but certainly the reduction of members is not one. I should certainly have liked to see it accompanied with measures that would save this Parliament from the labour of local affairs, and it would also have saved it from the necessity of having so large a number as seventy. When the colony was younger and Parliament had no local affairs to look after the colony was represented by a much smaller number, who found no difficulty in managing the affairs of the day. Such a measure of local government ought to have accompanied this Bill. Then, as to the time of the Bill coming into operation, I moved an amendment that the Bill take effect on the 31st December of next year. I thought, if it were to take effect, it ought to take effect then. These were my objections; but to the objection that the Government would hold it in terrorem over us I did not attach much importance. I do not believe that honourable members would be influenced by such a threat, and if they did it would be only bringing the Act into immediate operation. As I should have voted last night against this amendment, I shall most assuredly vote for the recommittal of the Bill to-night. I do not regard it as a party question, and, in the peculiar state of parties in this House, I should not feel much embarrassed if it were, looking to the fact that I have been alone to a great extent throughout the misgovernment of the last eight or nine years, in which the Premier has had his share quite as much as the late Government. For all that time I have been found protesting year by year against the policy which I believed was bound to end in the trouble and disaster we are placed in now. That I had not many voting with me or protesting with me is surely not my fault; but that I have had no part in this political misgovernment, and that I have been carrying on one continual protest against it, I am proud to admit. I need not trouble the House with any further remarks, except that, as I should have voted most certainly—and I mentioned that as soon as I heard what occurred—I shall vote in the same direction as I should have done last night had I been here. We hear of the leader of the Opposition—and I observe that the Premier takes some delight in speaking of the honourable member for Christchurch North as the leader of the Opposition. That may or may not be. I do not know it. I know I have not attended any caucus in which such an arrangement has been made; but I know the party to which I do belong consists of very earnest members, determined to encourage local industries by tariff protection. That party is almost entirely to be found on the Opposition side of the House. The Premier has not many Protectionists behind him. Therein is the great difference between the two sides of the House. It is a difference that ought not to be imported into this question, and I certainly shall not introduce it now. I have not regarded this as a party question, and as I should have voted last night so I shall vote this evening if the Premier pushes on the Bill to the late hour he feels inclined to do; but I hope that on better consideration he will not press it on to-night. I am sure a better feeling will be created if a little consideration be shown and this Bill be recommitted to-morrow.

Mr. LEVESTAM. — I must say that the honourable member for Dunedin West has every reason to complain of the conduct of some of those honourable gentlemen who voted for his amendment last night. They are now leaving him in the lurch. The honourable member for Wairarapa has lectured the honourable member for Dunedin West. He says these remarks come with a very bad grace from him, seeing he has changed his opinions at the instance of his constituents. The honourable gentleman surely overlooks the fact that, in a matter of this kind, there is no principle involved, but it is simply a matter of detail; and I think, there, representatives may properly give way to their constituents. If it were a matter of principle, then, I say, no representative has a right to pocket his principles either for the sake of pleasing his constituents on the one hand, or the Government on the other. And that is what is being done by those honourable gentlemen who are willing to vote differently from the way in which they voted last night. These honourable gentlemen have told us that they supported the amendment last night because they were afraid a great wrong might be done by the Ministry in power, whether this or any other; but, in order to keep them in power, they are willing to risk a great wrong upon the people of New Zealand—a wrong that may be done, because they may hold it as a threat over this House, and prevent this House from passing legislation that is thought highly necessary. The chief reason why I am speaking now—and I am and always shall be opposed to the recommitment of the Bill—is that upon the understanding that this was not to come on I paired with the honourable member for the Dunstan. Now, the honourable member for the Dunstan voted last night in the same direction as I voted myself. It is therefore unfair to me, and unfair to the honourable member for the Dunstan, to proceed with the recommitment of the Bill to-night. A "pair" has been offered to me to relieve me from my responsibility—namely, the honourable member for Waitotara; but the answer made is that there is a petition hanging over his head and he cannot be accepted as a "pair;" but that gentleman has been allowed to vote and speak in this House all through the session, and no objection has been made to that: and the same is the case with the honourable member for the Eastern Maori District. However, I shall not break my pair; but I think the Government whips—who are, of course, acting at the instigation of the Government—are treating me very badly in withholding from me my power to vote. The honourable member for Mount Ida told us that all those who thought he was afraid of any man or any number of men were greatly mistaken; and yet the very next words he used were that he was afraid of the Opposition party. That shows that the honourable member for Mount Ida is afraid of men. I have no desire to detain the House, and simply wished to put myself right in regard to my not being able to vote, under a misapprehension that this motion would not come on to-night. It is very unfair of the Government to recommit the Bill now, and it is equally unfair for those honourable gentlemen who voted in one direction yesterday to stultify themselves to-night by voting in an opposite direction. One reason they give is that it would be a great pity to turn a Government out which is doing good work and passing excellent legislation. Now, I should like to know what this excellent legislation represents. They have reduced the Governor's salary: that is a great thing! They have reduced their own salaries so low that it will be difficult to get any one to take their places: that is another great thing! They have reduced the honorarium paid to members so much that it will be very difficult for the people to choose representatives; and by this Bill they are making it still more difficult to get proper representation in this House. They have brought down their estimates without any details, and ask us to vote them as a whole and then go home and leave them to do as they like. Then, they have brought forward a Land Bill in which they seek to deprive the people of that great boon, the Land Boards. I should like to know what real good they have done. They also brought forward a Financial Statement; but such strictures have been passed upon it, and it has been so clearly shown that they have made no savings, that they are afraid to allow that Statement to be discussed, and deliberately bring all sorts of business before it on the Order Paper.

Major ATKINSON. — I rise to a point of order. I would ask, Sir, what has the honourable member is saying to do with the recommitment of this Bill?

Mr. SPEAKER. — It has to do with it in this way: that some honourable members have alleged that the reason for altering their votes was to prevent a Government in which they had general confidence from being turned out of office on a particular point of their policy. That is the reason why I did not interrupt the honourable member in his criticism of the conduct of those members in regard to the position they have taken up.

Mr. Moss

Mr. LEVESTAM.—Does the Premier think that he has all the wisdom in the world? If he thinks so, I can tell him that I do not, that there are many persons in the colony who are of the same opinion as myself, and that his demeanour in this House always makes him appear most offensive. Only this afternoon, when I asked him a question, he sat silent, and would not answer; and then on one or two occasions he accused me of having obstructed the business. I appeal to you, Sir, whether I have on any single occasion obstructed the business this session. During the whole of the afternoon I sat in my place and said nothing except to move one amendment, which I pressed to a division; and I have yet to learn that an honourable member who proposes an amendment, or speaks on a measure before the House, is guilty of obstruction. What are we sent here for? Is it not to watch over the interests of our constituents? and, if anything is proposed which we think may hurt them, should we not be failing in our duty if we were to remain silent? The honourable gentleman told us, when moving the second reading of this Bill, that he thought it was for the good of the country, and that in Committee we should be at perfect liberty to discuss it; and then, because one honourable member offends him, he tells us that he will take away all power from the House and will accept of no amendment. If the few remarks which were made had not offended the honourable gentleman he would have allowed us to speak for the good of those who sent us here. Is that the duty of a Premier or a Government? The honourable gentleman is very much mistaken if he thinks that he can muzzle me and a great many more members of this House. I claim the right of speech, and I am proud to say the Standing Orders and laws of this country give us that privilege; and I shall use it. But to come back again to the question of which we were speaking: so far has the delay in allowing the financial proposals to be discussed gone, that one honourable member has put a question on the Order Paper asking the Premier whether he will give us an opportunity of discussing those proposals. The reason for the delay is, that the honourable gentleman's proposals have been so out to pieces that he cannot defend them. He has brought forward no real proposal for retrenchment or anything else. He has told us that every day which is wasted in debating in this House is so much money being spent, and yet he brings forward a Bill which is of no immediate use; and why? He says, To affirm the principle; but he knows quite well that, if the Bill is put on the Statute Book as it stands, he will have to bring down another measure next session to amend the law, and it will then be open to any honourable member to change the number of members again. What he ought to do is to bring down a carefully-prepared measure and put it on the Statute Book in such a form that it shall be final. This is playing at legislation. Does the honourable gentleman show an example of retrenchment when he spends two days in discussing a Bill which it is merely his whim to place on the Statute Book? If he calls that retrenchment he stands alone in that opinion, and I can tell him that the country is getting quite weary of his proposals and policy, because they are a mere sham and nothing else.

Mr. TAYLOR.—I wish to enter my protest against the recommittal of the Bill, and for this reason: I happened, to-day, in going down town, to converse with two very strong supporters of the Government, and I put the question to them, "Why does the Premier make this such an important question?" Their reply was, "We do not quite understand why he makes it so; but we are prepared to trust him." "But," I said, "supposing another Government take their place next session, and they use the power, what do you think of that?" They said, "That is a different thing altogether." I am sure the Premier would not use it against the interests of the country; but, seeing this power is so strong, I ask him why he should take it. If he thinks it is necessary, I am prepared to go to a division and abide by the result. I cannot see that this has any object, except as a threat; but I do not think he would exercise that power in the direction some persons imagine he would. But, if it is not absolutely necessary, why kick up all this row about nothing? However, if the Premier thinks it necessary, we had better go to the vote and settle the matter at once.

Mr. SEDDON.—Sir, I do not intend to delay the House long in speaking on the recommittal of this Bill; but I am one of those who generally take upon themselves the responsibility for anything they do. I am not one of those who have had a good deal to say on the Bill in Committee, and now that it is being reported in Hansard, deny that they had anything to say there. I take the responsibility of saying to the Premier and to the electors of Kumara that I have obstructed this Bill. I have done it with an intention; the object I had in view has been gained, and I will tell the Premier what it was. Although I was left alone, the forms of the House were used against me so as to prevent my speaking; and the Chairman's authority was used against me, for, instead of taking the usual half-hour's adjournment, the Chairman, at the dictation of the Premier, remained in his seat. Sir, I object to the Chairman being dictated to by the Premier or anybody else; and I am sure that you would not submit to such a thing, but that you would always protect the weak against the strong. But, to-night, instead of my being protected by the Chair, the Chair was made a party to force this Bill through. Now, I was saying that I had taken upon myself the responsibility of delaying the Bill, and I will give the Premier my reasons for doing so. I knew from the course pursued by the Premier that it was his intention to get the Bill recommitted to-night in order to get the amendment carried by the honourable member for Dunedin West eliminated from it, and that he would afterwards ask the House to agree to the amendment he would make. I knew that if that were agreed to to-night there could not be a full and fair discussion of the matter; that, if the proposal were made at an earlier period of our proceedings to-night, there could not be the same discussion as there would be if it were put off till to-morrow, when honourable members will have had time to consider over the position taken up by the Premier and the difficulty which it has placed them in. No doubt a good deal will be said by honourable members; and I wished that the light of day might be thrown upon it, and that the vital amendment proposed by the Premier, and which no doubt will be agreed to, should stand over till to-morrow. The amendment, when reported from Committee, cannot be put to the House to-night, and then we shall be able to discuss it to-morrow. The Premier knows what I have struggled for, and I take the responsibility; and what I have done is in the interests of the colonists of New Zealand. Now I come to the reasons given by some honourable gentlemen who have seen fit to change their minds to the extent of disfranchising their constituents by abstaining from voting on this question. Is that what honourable members are sent to this House for? Is it their duty to disfranchise their constituents when there are grave constitutional questions involved? Is it their duty to walk into the lobby when the issue concerns the welfare of those they represent? Is that a dignified position to assume? Those honourable gentlemen take a great responsibility in following that course, which I regret to see them take. And I regret it the more because they are gentlemen for whom I have always had the highest respect. Sir, I believe in fair-play, and I therefore regret that the Premier has been accused of not making it known to his party last night that this was a party question. An endeavour has been made to cast blame on him in that respect. I say the Premier is not to blame, because he told the leader of the Opposition, when that honourable gentleman agreed to the amendment that I proposed, that the circumstances of the case were altered, and that, as the Bill went into Committee in the altered state of affairs, it would be made a Government question. That was before we went into Committee; and when there, at the first amendment proposed, the honourable member for Hokonui asked the Premier direct if he was going to make this a Government question, saying that if he was not he should vote for my amendment, but if the Premier gave him a pledge that the question of local government would be considered during the recess, and also declared that this was a Government question, he should vote against my amendment. The Premier gave that honourable gentleman an assurance that the question of local government would be considered during the recess, and he spoke as plainly as a man could speak, saying straightforwardly that this would be a Government question. How could it be said in Committee time after time to-day, in face of that, that the Premier had not declared it was a Government question, when he declared distinctly that it was? I regret that it should have been made a party question; but that does not alter the fact that it was. It would be far more manly and straightforward, I think, if those who voted against the Government last night—seeing that a grave constitutional question is involved, a question of greater importance than one of party—were to say plainly now that they have seen fit to change their minds, and that, on reconsideration to-day, they are voting for party as against the unconstitutional power contained in the measure. If honourable members on reflection came to that conclusion it would be a fair defence for their change—a change contrary to the direction in which they went last night. I think it would be more fair and logical of those honourable members to vote directly opposite to the way they voted last night than to refrain from voting at all. I wish to say that I object to government by caucus, and there is no doubt that this course means government by caucus, and that, to my mind, is detrimental to the people. First we had what was no doubt an arrangement as to the four Native votes. It appeared strange to me last night that two Natives voted against the Government and one with them, while the fourth was absent. Now we find that the Maoris are left untouched by this Bill, and that clause 4 was struck out at the request of the Premier; and, of course, the whole of the Native members voted for the Bill when so amended. That was the result of arrangement and compact, and to that I object as being done unconstitutionally. I object as far as I can object in the passing of any measure to arrangements of that kind being made. Then, the Government have proposed and effected a most material alteration in the measure by increasing the number of members to seventy-four. I believe that at the caucus of Government supporters held to-day that increase was agreed to. That, no doubt, was a sticking-point to some honourable members supporting the Government, and the Government gave way to that extent and did it by a caucus arrangement. Thus by secret arrangements and caucuses two most important amendments are made in the Bill which the Government submit to this House. I hold that it is most unconstitutional and improper to change the whole face of a Bill by a caucus arrangement. Anything that is done to a Bill should be done in full House, and not by secret caucus arrangements. I cannot possibly understand the action of the honourable member for Te Aro, holding the views he does, and saying that the Government have been and are forcing this measure through the House by unconstitutional means, and yet being a party to those unconstitutional means. The honourable member for Te Aro asked the Government to deal with this matter in a proper and constitutional way, and I think that, holding those convictions, had he been the strong man I have always regarded him as, it is strange to find him taking the most undignified course that could possibly be taken by an honourable member—namely, walking out of the House. The atmosphere of Wellington must have changed that honourable gentleman, for when I knew him on the West Coast he was a man of strong convictions: he was very careful in forming his convictions, but, when he had formed them, I always regarded him as being certain to adhere to them. But now I see him, in a question where a grave constitutional issue is involved, and while thinking the Government are doing wrong, because he does not wish to see a change of Government, leaving the House instead of voting, and so disfranchising a large and important constituency. I really cannot understand the honourable gentleman's action, and I can only say that I regret to see him adopting such a course. The Premier has plainly said to the honourable gentleman that if he really holds the views he has expressed it is his duty to vote against the Government: the Premier said that as plainly as language and demeanour could say it. He said, "If you hold that we are forcing the Bill through by unconstitutional means, and that it gives us an unconstitutional power, you ought not to support it;" and the only logical sequence to the honourable member's speech is that he should vote against the Government and justice as he did last night. He should do that in justice both to himself and his constituents. It is really no friendship to the Government for him to point out the wrong that has been done and in the same breath to say that the Government can do it, and that he will not stop them by his vote. However, I have always said that while we can hold different opinions from our fellow-members', and can discuss their action, members are only responsible to their constituents; and, of course, in this case the responsibility is with the honourable member for Te Aro, and I have no doubt the honourable member will give them the same explanation as he has given us, and they will be his judges upon it. As regards the honourable member for Mount Ida, he says his reason for supporting the Government in this is because of the sins of the late Government and the political corruption of the late Government. I can only say this: that it shows great inconsistency on the part of the honourable member, because he was returned first to this House as a most ardent supporter of the honourable member for Christchurch North. The honourable member for Mount Ida said more, wrote more, and did more to bring Sir Julius Vogel into power than any other member of this House. For two years he was a follower of that honourable gentleman and the party; and then, it is true, he left them; but I would like the honourable gentleman to be a little more careful in the remarks he makes, when he advances charges of political corruption without giving a tittle of evidence or stating a single fact to support his charges. That is a most unfair position for any honourable gentleman to take up, and I, for one, feel compelled to resent the honourable member's action in that respect. I say there was nothing in the administration of the late Government to justify applying the term "political corruption" to it—that term cannot be truthfully applied to it. The Minister of Education laughs. He has not long been in office; yet what have the present Government done in the short time they have been in? I can prove that they have given employment to a gaol-bird against whom there are several convictions, discharging honest working-men to give him a place. They have only been a short time in office, but—

Mr. Seddon

Major ATKINSON.—Will the honourable gentleman give me the name?—because I should like to make inquiry.

Mr. SEDDON.—I will give the honourable gentleman the name. I hope the Minister of Education will laugh again. He is not going to laugh at me. The honourable member for Mount Ida said that he was afraid that the Opposition were desirous of obtaining seats on the Government benches, and it was to prevent any such catastrophe occurring that he has withdrawn from the position he took up last night. It might be some information to the honourable member and the Government when I say there is no wish on the part of the Opposition to take office. I think it would be a very serious mistake if the Opposition were to attempt, under the circumstances, to test the question with the Government as to who shall occupy those benches. There is another view I take of the question, and it is this: I think the honourable member for Te Aro, the honourable member for Mount Ida, and those who voted with them—I will name them all: the honourable members for Thorndon, Mount Ida, Te Aro, Roslyn, Wallace, Taranaki, Rodney, Western Maori, and Hokonui. There are nine members who are found voting, as a rule, with the Government, and those nine members voted last night for the amendment of the honourable member for Dunedin West. And, Sir, I will say to them that I believe they have been simply frightened by the Government—I was going to use another term, and say they were bounced by the Government. There is no danger of the Opposition coming into office, even supposing they wished it. It is not on a simple question like that carried last night that the Premier and Government will resign. The threat of resignation was neither more nor less than an empty threat; and that experienced men like those I have just named should be frightened like schoolboys with a paltry threat of this kind is, to me, inexplicable. I wonder they had not a little more firmness. There is no doubt these honourable members have been haunted, what between whips and Ministers, and even the Premier himself. I had thought that the long interview he had with the honourable member for Te Aro would have induced the latter honourable gentleman to go the full length of voting. There is no doubt that every possible pressure has been brought to bear on these honourable gentlemen to get them to the condition they have been brought to. Some of them have taken a step further than others. Some have gone the whole length of reversing what they did last night, and some have agreed to walk out. Let it be a matter of history. We have the names of honourable members who said that it was not right to give this unconstitutional power to the Government. I will read the names of those who voted against the amendment: Mr. Allen, Mr. Anderson, Major Atkinson, Mr. Barron, Mr. Beetham, Mr. Bruce, Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Carroll, Mr. Dodson, Mr. Ferguson, Mr. Fisher, Mr. Goldie, Mr. Graham, Mr. Hislop, Mr. Hobbs, Mr. Jackson, Mr. Lawry, Mr. Macarthur, Mr. T. Mackenzie, Mr. McGregor, Mr. Mitchelson, Mr. Monk, Mr. Peacock, Mr. Pearson, Mr. Rhodes, Mr. G. F. Richardson, Mr. Seymour, Mr. Tanner, Mr. R. Thompson, Mr. Whyte, Mr. Withy. Those who voted for the amendment were: Mr. Blake, Mr. Duncan, Mr. Feldwick, Mr. Fish, Dr. Fitchett, Mr. Fitzherbert, Colonel Fraser, Sir G. Grey, Mr. Grimmond, Mr. Guinness, Dr. Hodgkinson, Mr. Jones, Mr. Joyce, Mr. Kelly, Mr. Kerr, Mr. Levestam, Mr. Loughrey, Mr. M. J. S. Mackenzie, Mr. Marchant, Mr. J. McKenzie, Mr. Moat, Dr. Newman, Mr. O'Callaghan, Mr. Parata, Mr. W. P. Reeves, Mr. R. H. J. Reeves, Mr. Ross, Mr. Seddon, Mr. Smith, Major Steward, Mr. W. D. Stewart, Mr. Stuart-Menteath, Mr. Taipua, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Valentine, Mr. Ward. The numbers, including the "pairs," taken on the amendment of the honourable member for Dunedin West were 42 to 46. Messrs. Larnach, Moss, Taiwhanga, and Hutchison did not vote. It will be somewhat amusing, no doubt, when we take a division on the motion for recommitment. Those who read history and who read Hansard will see the changes which have taken place in this very short space of time. When Hansard is printed it may perhaps be found that the two division-lists appear in different numbers of that publication; but, in the way I give the names now, the whole matter will be under review; and those who sent honourable members to this House will, no doubt, when the proper time comes, want to know why this change has taken place. I think that many honourable members will have a difficulty in explaining to their constituents why on one day, after fair and free discussion, they came to the conclusion that the amendment was necessary, and that the great unconstitutional power asked for by the Government in this Bill should not be given to them, and next day, without any reason being given—because it will be a pure blank, so far as Hansard is concerned—they changed their votes, or did not vote at all. It is with the feeling that a time for explaining their attitude in this matter will come that I have just given the names. When the motion is moved to-morrow that we agree to the amendments, I shall have something further to say upon the principles contained in the Bill. I shall also oppose the third reading. I think it is only fair to the Premier to say that I shall again test the opinion of the House as to the number of members. If the Bill is recommitted to-night, there are a number of honourable members who are prepared to vote in the direction I wish and have contended for. There are a number of honourable members who consider that the number of seventy-four is too large. I intend to take a vote on the question whether or not the number mentioned in the Bill shall be retained. I state this now to the Premier so that he will not be able to say, after we get into Committee, that I have taken any unfair advantage. Whatever I say or do in this House, honourable members will agree that I fight fairly, and am not offensive to honourable members; and I never wish to be so. In the heat of debate one may, perhaps, use language a little stronger than he would in his calmer moments; but it is not my wish to be offensive, and I may add that I never, outside this Chamber, carry any feeling, whatever honourable members may think or say. With these remarks, I shall oppose the recommitment of the Bill.

Mr. Seddon

Mr. JOYCE. — Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that, as we have entered upon another day, and as honourable members are wearied by this lengthy sitting, I should detain you for but a brief period. I may say, Sir, I have been here nine weeks to-day, and this is the first opportunity I have taken to address you. Patience has a limit. So it is with me on this occasion. I intend to offer a few remarks as to why I record my protest against the recommitment of the Bill. It was not until yesterday that I really saw the reason of the Premier's movements and tactics subsequent to the delivery of the Financial Statement, and the proposals which we have had submitted to us. I think—if I may be pardoned the expression—that the whole scheme of the Government, up to the present time, is a sham. There is really no desire to benefit the country; none whatever. The object is simply to waste time—to weary us, that we may, when we draw near to Christmas, go away and leave all legislation and administration to the Government. I have a duty to perform to the colonists of New Zealand, and especially to those who sent me here; and I believe that if this Representation Bill were passed in the form indicated by the Premier a great injustice would be done to the colonists of New Zealand, especially the working-classes. I believe it is the intention of the Premier, if this Bill is passed, to have a dissolution next year; and with that dissolution twenty-five members will be swept away, and the hope we have been cherishing to get support to local industries will be destroyed, and the prospect of that support being given removed further away than it has ever been in the whole history of the colony. I believe that it is my duty to do all that I can to resist the passing of this measure, since the amendment of the honourable member for Dunedin West, which was carried yesterday, is intended to be thrown out to-night; and, if ten members of this House will just be as determined as I am, I will read the Premier of New Zealand such a lesson as he will never forget. I will endeavour to use no personalities, none whatever, and I trust the Premier will not receive the words I am now speaking in that light; but I have now been here for nine weeks—and I have never missed a day from this House, excepting Sundays. I have never forced my speeches on the House, but I have endeavoured to do my Committee work. There were two occasions on which I spoke: one was when I was requested to do so by the honourable member for Auckland West in relation to the Shop-hours Bill, and on another occasion by the honourable member for Auckland Central, when moving the second reading of the Elective Governors Bill. With the exception of those occasions, I have abstained from taking up the time of the House; for I knew that, as a new member, I should listen to the older ones, and endeavour to receive instruction from them. Certainly the instruction I have received during the last nine weeks has not been very great. But the time has come when I think I ought to record my protest against the present proceedings of the Government. Is there any necessity for passing such a Bill as this? Certainly not. At the present time, in the town that I represent there lives a man with some five or six children, who, through no fault of his own, some two years ago met with a railway accident which rendered him incapable of doing any work; and the man is practically starving, and asks for work, and two days a week at 5s. a day are offered to him. He is now getting charitable aid; but, if he accepts that two days a week work, the assistance will probably be stopped: while the present Government will waste weeks in bringing down useless measures. If practical legislation was entered upon, possibly that man would be able to go upon the land like others, or be employed in some industry which would enable him or his family to earn sufficient bread by this employment, without applying for charitable aid. We also find there are hundreds in New Zealand to-day who are borne down by great oppression. This is the language I find in one of the Dunedin papers:—

“Having been absent from town for some time, I did not notice your note on this question which appeared in your issue of Nov. 28. You draw attention to the cruel, inhuman manner in which growing lads, known as parcel-carriers, are laden with heavy parcels, such as linoleum and calico, every night till near midnight, and, you truly say, at starvation-wages. Sir, as an ex-parcel-carrier, and on behalf of the large number of white slaves of Dunedin, I render you my own warm, heartfelt thanks. I have written over a hundred letters on this very form of white man's murder, and have told the drapers that they should be ashamed of themselves for their treatment of these lads. I will at once draw Parliament's attention to this matter.—CITIZEN.”

That appeared in a Dunedin paper on Monday last, and a Bill to give relief to those has been introduced into this House, and no time afforded for its consideration; and yet we waste days and weeks over useless legislation. Sir, when the history of this Parliament will be considered a few years hence, I think there will be many who will say that the Hon. the Premier has made a great mistake. He will admit that I have not in any way opposed him or interfered with him in any way; but last week I learned that the Government will, in all probability, remain in power during the session; and, until permission was given by those whom I look upon as the leaders on this side of the House, I would not approach the Ministers for any favours. Then I went and asked that the Shop-hours Bill should receive some consideration at their hands. So that the Government will see that any remarks I am now making cannot be construed as in any way in opposition to their measures. So far as the reduction of members is concerned, I care very little about it. I believe the increase in the number of members which was made in the year 1881 should not have been made, and there may be some reason for the Government, or a majority of the House, reducing the number of members in the next session. I should not say so much about that; but that this session should be thus engaged, and time wasted at this season of the year in a measure of this kind, is, I think, very foolish indeed; and I think the time will come when no one will regret this waste more than the members of the present Government. There are honourable gentlemen on the Government benches whom I personally esteem, and, so far as I am concerned, they might remain there so long as I am a member of this House. But I say this: that they are using the power which they possess against the best interests of the Colony of New Zealand; and I would urge the Premier at this stage to consider whether it would not be advisable to adjourn this debate till to-morrow or some convenient time, and whether it would not be better to allow the amendment passed last night to remain in the Bill and appear on the Statute Book. I think that would be a wise thing to do. The principle of the Bill would be carried—that is, the reduction of the number of members. We have settled that, and to go any further than that would be giving the Premier such a power that in a moment of weakness he might use it and regret it afterwards. I do not for one moment imagine that it is the intention of the Government to use the power in the manner mentioned; but when they are driven to extremes, as, unfortunately, the honourable member at the head of the Government has been driven on more than one occasion, this would be a dangerous power to possess. And I would again urge the Government to accept the position in which matters are now found, and let the Bill go as it stands at present, and let us finish up some other matters of business that may be necessary, so that the House may adjourn before the Christmas holidays. If the Government drive the Opposition to extremes, I say it is the duty of the Opposition to use every moral power which they have to resist any encroachment on the rights of the people. And I say this: that I believe the Government may be charged with obstructing the rights and privileges of the people quite as much as the Government may consider the Opposition are obstructing the passage of this Bill. At any rate, our last sitting was a long one, and we returned here again in the morning. It is now close on three o'clock a.m., and I ask the Premier whether he considers it his duty to detain us until he forces this Bill through the necessary stages in order that it may appear on the Statute Book of the colony.

Mr. KELLY.—I trust the Premier will accept the advice offered by the last speaker to adjourn this question till to-morrow. Perhaps honourable members will then come to the House in a better frame of mind, and the matter might be settled without further debate. It appears to me that honourable members representing country districts are placing themselves in a false position by supporting the honourable gentleman in this Bill. Sir, I voted against the Bill consistently on clauses that are of no importance, with the exception of the last few divisions; and it is my intention to vote against the Bill on every possible occasion, because it is an injury to the district I represent. It sends us back to the position we were in in 1875. It is a great retrograde step, and I consider it is the duty of the honourable gentleman who has brought forward this Bill to send the country districts ahead instead of backward. I remember that, in the early days in this House, in 1875, there were petitions sent from the district I have the honour to represent, which was annexed to that portion of the East Coast called Gisborne. Both Tauranga and Gisborne were unanimous in asking for separation. There were battles in this House over that, and separation was eventually granted. It appears to me this Bill will practically place my district in the position in which it was in those days; and whatever percentage is allowed should be settled by this House—that is, as between the cities and country districts—before the Bill is passed. I consider that 18 per cent. is not sufficient for the country districts; it should be at least a third—33 per cent., or perhaps 50 per cent.; but the honourable gentleman in charge of the Bill thinks that should be left over till next year. I have no intention to take up the time of the House in speaking on the question at present, because I think, if the honourable gentleman accepts the advice of the last speaker to adjourn the debate till to-morrow, perhaps little time would be lost, and the Bill would be carried without much opposition.

Mr. GRIMMOND.—I desire to enter my protest against the recommitment of this Bill. The measure was introduced to us in a manner that would seem to show that the Premier did not attach much importance to it. When I read it, however, I attached great importance to it; and I know that a great number of the members of the House attach great importance to it. When the measure came to be considered in Committee some honourable gentlemen who are not sycophant supporters of the Premier made an amendment in one line of it, calculated to secure necessary safeguards to the representation of the people of the country; and because of that small amendment the Premier says he will resign if it is not reversed, and the whole colony is to be handed over to the tender mercies of the honourable member for Christchurch North! But, while there is so much objection to this particular amendment, we find that other amendments were being made by other honourable gentlemen to which there is no objection whatever. For instance, we find that the provision about the Maori representation has been entirely altered, and the result of that alteration is that the honourable gentlemen who represent the Natives in this House have altogether changed their position in reference to the Bill. I think that the House ought to have a little more time to consider the provisions of the Bill; and, as it is now three o'clock in the morning, I think that the best thing that we can do is to adjourn the further consideration of this measure until to-morrow. I therefore move, as an amendment, That the Bill be ordered to be recommitted to-morrow.

Mr. R. H. J. REEVES.—I wish to second the amendment, and I wish to take this opportunity of saying that I regret very much that this House has been dragged through the mire. I regret to hear that circumstances have occurred this morning which have altered the tone of the honourable gentlemen who last night voted for the amendment of the honourable member for Dunedin West. It is true that I hardly expected anything else from some of them. We have heard to-night one of those honourable gentlemen give a lame and paltry excuse for the action he took. If I might be allowed to say it, if it would be in order, I should say that their action was most contemptible. I may say, in the first place, that I was one of the strongest, and am one of the strongest, supporters of the Government in the reduction of the number of members. I pledged myself to it not only at this election, but in years gone by; for I believe and have believed that seventy members are more than sufficient. But the position which it is desired to place us in is this: that the Premier may hold in terrorem over our heads this matter of dissolution. At any time during the next three years he might have a dissolution, under circumstances which would make it necessary that twenty-one of the members of this House should lose their seats. Such a state of things I consider to be most dangerous, and the people of a free country should not consent to such a thing. It is a great pity to see these men driven into the lobby like a lot of dumb animals. I have seen some strange things enacted in this House—some melancholy cases of abnegation of principle;—but I did not think it would come to what we have seen to-night. I thought a number of gentlemen who call themselves honourable men would have scorned to do such a thing as we are told they intend to do—that they should get up and repudiate their action within twenty-four hours! It is only twenty-four hours since the honourable member for Dunedin West carried his amendment, and yet here we have gentlemen willing to repudiate the action they took in connection with that amendment. I am astonished that honourable gentlemen should repudiate and swallow their convictions. I remember that once in this House a certain honourable gentleman said that he had had to swallow his convictions, but that it was one of the most nauseous doses that he had ever had offered to him. That was the honourable member for Rangitikei, Sir William Fox. These honourable gentlemen whose conduct we are now discussing have done the same thing to-night; and I say that it reflects very little credit on them, and very little credit on the constituencies which returned them to this House. I hope that the time will come when the Premier will put these gentlemen upon their mettle; and these gentlemen shall see what their constituencies think of and say to them. I hope that they will treat them in the manner in which men who have no political principles should be treated, and that is, reject them.

Mr. Joyce

Amendment negatived.

The House divided on the question, "That the Bill be recommitted for the reconsideration of clause 2."

AYES, 29.

Allen	Goldie	Monk
Anderson	Graham	Pearson
Atkinson	Hamlin	Rhodes
Barron	Hobbs	Seymour
Bruce	Jackson	Taiwhanga
Buchanan	Lawry	Thompson, T.
Dodson	Macarthur	Wilson.
Fergus	McGregor	Tellers.
Fisher	Mills	Tanner
Fulton	Mitchelson	Thompson, R.

NOES, 17.

Blake	Lance	Taylor
Feldwick	Larnach	Walker
Fraser	Loughrey	Ward.
Guinness	O'Callaghan	Tellers.
Jones	Seddon	Grimmond
Joyce	Stewart, W. D.	Reeves, R. H. J.

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Beetham	Fish
Cadman	Fitzherbert
Carroll	Vogel
Cowan	Buxton
Hall	Ballance
Izard	Fitchett
Mackenzie, T.	Reeves, W. P.
Moat	Perceval
Moss	Kelly
O'Connor	Steward, W. J.
Ormond	Smith
Peacock	Richardson, E.
Pyke	Levestam
Richardson, G. F.	Samuel
Ross	Kerr
Russell	Duncan
Taipua	McKenzie, J.
Whyte	Turnbull
Withy.	Grey.

Majority for, 12.

Recommittal carried.

IN COMMITTEE.

Clause 2.

Major ATKINSON moved to strike out the words, "not earlier than the eighth day of December, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine."

The Committee divided on the question, "That the words be retained."

AYES, 16.

Blake	Joyce	Walker
Feldwick	Lance	Ward.
Fraser	Larnach	Tellers.
Grimmond	Loughrey	Seddon
Guinness	O'Callaghan	Stewart, W. D.
Jones	Taylor

NOES, 29.

Allen	Graham	Rhodes
Anderson	Hislop	Seymour
Atkinson	Hobbs	Taiwhanga
Barron	Jackson	Tanner
Buchanan	Lawry	Thompson, R.
Dodson	Macarthur	Thompson, T.
Fergus	McGregor	Wilson.
Fisher	Mitchelson	Tellers.
Fulton	Monk	Bruce
Goldie	Pearson	Mills.

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Ballance	Hall
Buxton	Cowan
Duncan	Russell
Fish	Beetham
Fitchett	Izard
Fitzherbert	Cadman
Grey	Withy
Kelly	Moss
Kerr	Ross
Levestam	Pyke
McKenzie, J.	Taipua
Perceval	Moat
Reeves, W. P.	Mackenzie, T.
Richardson, E.	Peacock
Samuel	Richardson, G.
Smith	Ormond
Steward, W. J.	O'Connor
Turnbull	Whyte
Vogel.	Carroll.

Majority against, 13.

Words omitted.

Bill reported as further amended.

The House adjourned at twenty minutes past three o'clock a.m.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

Thursday, 8th December, 1887.

First Reading—Third Reading—Owhaoko Case—Government Business—Parliamentary Honorary and Privileges Bill—Ministers' Salaries and Allowances Bill.

The Hon. the SPEAKER took the chair at half-past two o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Governor's Salary and Allowances Bill.

THIRD READING.

Pharmacy Bill.

OWHAOKO CASE.

The Hon. Mr. MANTELL moved, That there be laid upon the table copies of all memoranda and telegrams in connection with the Legislative Council paper No. 1, already printed, relative to the application for a rehearing of claims to the Owhaoko Blocks. He was under the impression that the Government had no objection to allow the papers called for to be laid upon the table. By the kind permission of the Attorney-General he had gone through all the papers connected with this matter, with a view to select the smallest possible number which would place the matter more clearly before the Council than had been the case before in the paper, No. 1, already printed. He thought it would be premature now to have any discussion upon the merits of the question; but if this resolution were agreed to an opportunity would be afforded for discussion. He would also feel it his duty to move that a table should be printed. There were only some ten memoranda and telegrams, and also a portion of the evidence which was omitted when the first paper was printed. He would therefore strictly confine himself at present to moving the motion standing in his name.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER would simply say, in reference to what his honourable friend had said, that he had no objection at all to the production of the papers; but he did not know that he would pledge himself to the printing of them till they had been laid on the table. If they were not too bulky he would be quite willing, however, that they should be printed. But he wished to guard himself against committing himself now to the printing of them.

The Hon. Mr. MANTELL wished to say that the discussion of that question should be taken when the papers had been laid on the table.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS.—Sir, before you call upon the first order of the day, I should like to say a few words. It is well known, of course, that the Government have the right to fix the order of business as they think proper; but, still, I consider that the Council are in a position to say which is the best order in which to take the discussion on the Orders No. 2 and No. 8—the Parliamentary Honorarium and Privileges Bill and the adjourned debate on the motion, "That this Council will concur willingly with the House of Representatives in any reduction of allowances to members which shall maintain the equality of treatment between the two Chambers established by 'The Parliamentary Honorarium and Privileges Act, 1884.'" I do not think it would be advisable to take the discussion on the Parliamentary Honorarium and Privileges Bill before we finish the discussion on the adjourned debate we had yesterday. I trust, therefore, that the Government will give way, and will agree to No. 8 taking precedence of all other orders. It is absolutely necessary that Order No. 8 should be disposed of before we take up the second reading of the Parliamentary Honorarium Bill. I therefore move, That those orders of the day take precedence of all other orders of the day.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE.—Speaking to the question of order, I would call attention to the fact that, if the Council adopt the suggestion of my honourable friend, it will be necessary to move the suspension of the Standing Orders.

The Hon. Mr. McLEAN.—How is it that this question came before us in the form of a notice of motion, and it is now set down among the orders of the day? It ought to be among the notices of motion.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—This was an adjourned debate, and therefore it comes on as an order of the day.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—I may say this is the first time I recollect, during the time I have been in the Legislature, that the right of the Government to place business in the order they wished it on Tuesdays has been challenged, and I apprehend that the motion could not be put to the Council without altering Standing Order No. 2, which provides,—

"Unless otherwise ordered at a previous meeting, the sitting-days of the Council shall be Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays; the right being reserved to the Government of placing Government orders in the rotation in which they are to be taken on Tuesdays and Thursdays."

This is the practice which has prevailed in the Council and the House of Representatives, and I never heard the right challenged before. The Government always exercises its right as to the order of Government business on these days.

The Hon. Dr. POLLEN.—The right to regulate the procession of business on the Order Paper is a very efficient weapon of party warfare, and is used in that sense justly in another place, and properly—fairly—used there. But here, where there is no party, I think it would be a departure from the usual course in this Council if such a power were used to block the expression of an opinion by the Council on a question which concerns not politics at all, but its own personal and legal status. I therefore hope my honourable friend will not give way in this matter, and that the Council will not be deprived of its right to say that this order of the day shall be postponed or that order of the day shall not be postponed. If this question is not now decided it could not be decided hereafter. Suppose the question were now discussed and settled permanently, it would not to a great extent practically affect the business now pressed. Supposing the Council were to declare that they were prepared, in the terms of the resolution, to concur willingly with the House of Representatives in the reduction of the allowances, it does not follow that that means that the Bill shall not be passed. There are many members of the Council who will willingly vote for the second reading of the Bill when it is brought up. There are many other members of the Council who, in view of the expediency of not committing the Council—

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—The honourable member will excuse me. The honourable member must not take advantage to make a speech on the merits of the question.

The Hon. Dr. POLLEN.—I was explaining—

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—I hope the honourable gentleman will confine himself to the point of order.

The Hon. Dr. POLLEN.—I wish to explain that there are members in this Council who, from motives of expediency, will unwillingly consent to the second reading of this Bill, and I have no doubt whatever that both these parties will make a majority in regard to that question. Therefore this motion will not affect it.

The Hon. Mr. MANTELL.—Respecting the point of order, I can see nothing at all irreconcilable between the Standing Order and the proposal of the Hon. Mr. Reynolds. The Government has the right to arrange the Order Paper on Tuesdays and Thursdays; but it is quite competent for the Council, when the Order Paper is before us, to say whether we will submit to such an arrangement. We may say Yea or Nay, as may please, without at all infringing the prerogative of the Government.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—Referring to Standing Order No. 2, my opinion is that this question cannot now be put, unless the Standing Order be suspended. The words of the Standing Order have been read. It commences, "Unless otherwise ordered at a previous meeting" the sitting-days of the Council shall be on certain days, "the right being reserved to the Government of placing Government orders in the rotation in which they are to be taken on Tuesdays and Thursdays." The honourable member, therefore, if he desires, may put the motion, which it is quite competent to put; but that will have to be done by the suspension of the Standing Orders.

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS.—I should like to ask you, Sir, whether it would not be competent for me, when the first order of the day is proposed, to move that the consideration of all the orders of the day should be postponed, in order that Order of the Day No. 8 might be considered. I maintain that a member of the Council can move that, when the first order of the day is called on; and these other Bills can be considered at a later period of the day.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—No doubt; but that is not the question. The question that the honourable gentleman put is a different question from that now under discussion. When the first order is called on it may be disposed of in any way the Council thinks fit, in keeping with the proposal which I understood the honourable member to make to the Council.

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS.—I would point out to the Government that if they assented to this course it would save time; but if the Government object to it I shall move the suspension of Standing Order No. 2, so as to enable me to make the motion. I make that motion.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—With what object is that made?

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS.—I move, That Standing Order No. 2 be suspended, in order that Order of the Day No. 8 may be taken before the other orders of the day.

The Hon. Mr. PEACOCK.—I understand, as you read out the Standing Order, that notice must be given at a previous sitting.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—That is the proceeding, if the Council thinks it proper to suspend its own Standing Orders.

The Hon. Mr. McLEAN.—I would suggest to the honourable gentleman that when the Bill comes on for discussion he should move the adjournment of the debate, so that this Order of the Day No. 8 may come on. I am going to vote for the Bill, and I feel that there will be no inconsistency in my doing so and voting for the motion as well. The motion does not prevent any one from doing that.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—The Council will be good enough to observe that there is a question before the Council—the suspension of Standing Order No. 2. If it is desired to provide otherwise, the question raised will have to be withdrawn.

The Council divided.

AYES, 22.

Barnicoat	Kenny	Reynolds
Brett	Lahmann	Scotland
Buckley	Martin	Shepherd
Chamberlin	Menzies	Shrimski
Dignan	Morris	Taiaroa
Fraser	Peter	Walker
Hart	Pollen	Wahawaha.
Holmes

NOES, 15.

Acland	Miller	Stevens
Baillie	Oliver	Swanson
Bonar	Peacock	Waterhouse
Grace	Pharazyn	Whitaker
McLean	Richmond	Williams.

Majority for, 7.

Motion agreed to.

PARLIAMENTARY HONORARIUM AND PRIVILEGES BILL.

ADJOURNED DEBATE.

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS.—I was in possession of the Chair when the adjournment of the debate on this question was moved yesterday; and I think I then stated that there was another inconsistency in the Bill—namely, that the Act of 1884 provided for reimbursing members of the General Assembly their expenses in relation to their attendance on Parliament, and that the present Bill did not do so. The present session, I suppose, will not close before the 20th of this month, which will give seventy-six days, sitting. I have calculated that it takes members three days, upon an average, to come to Parliament, and three days to return. That gives six days, which would, altogether, make it come up to eighty-two days. By the Bill it is proposed that the honorarium this session for the members of the Council shall only amount to £50—a sum, I say, altogether disproportionate to the expenses of members attending the session. I know that it will not pay expenses, and I am by no means extravagant either. I do not think that it will pay the expenses of any member of Parliament who is attending this session. While I do not look for any payment for my services to the public, yet I do not expect—and I know that the public do not expect—that I am to give my time and, in addition to that, to be out of pocket in paying my own travelling-expenses. I think that if honourable members give up their time to the public it is as much as can be expected of them, and that at any rate they should be paid, and that liberally, for their travelling-expenses while away from their homes. I do not see why members of Parliament should be treated at all differently from members of the Ministry. Ministers, if away from their homes, have ample allowance to pay for all their expenses; and why members of Parliament should be put in a different position I cannot for my life understand. If members of Parliament are not to be paid sufficient to recoup them for their expenses when they are absent from their homes, the result will be that all members of the Council will have to be chosen from among gentlemen who reside in Wellington, or from others who may have axes to grind, and whose purpose it would answer to come here not only without any honorarium, but to pay something in addition. This is not what the colony requires. The colony requires to have its best men in the Council, and, in getting them, the colony would never refuse to pay them a liberal allowance—I do not say an extravagant allowance, but a liberal allowance—to pay their expenses while they are absent from their homes. I think that this Bill should have provided that when there are two sessions in one year, supposing the first session did not exceed seventy days, the payment to members should be at so much per day, and then that for the second session they should have the full honorarium. This Bill is retrospective. I came up here fully expecting that I should receive £105 to recoup me for my travelling-expenses; and it is just possible I may not have made provision otherwise for meeting these expenses, or I may not be in a position to pay the balance between what my expenses have been and what I shall get. I hold we have no right to have any retrospective legislation, unless it is done on a fair basis. I hold that members of this Council should receive, for this session at any rate, enough to pay their travelling-expenses while here. If this Bill is allowed quietly to be assented to by the Council, the result will be that we shall be lowering ourselves in the esteem of the public. In fact, the making a difference between this branch of the Legislature and the other without protest on our part would be tantamount to our admitting that we are of less value than what the other branch is. I deny this. I have had many years' experience in the House of Representatives, and also have been a good number of years in the Council; and I have always maintained, and I do now maintain, that but for the Council the legislation of the colony would be most unsatisfactory. I say that it is a safeguard for the colony to have a body such as ours to watch over the measures brought before Parliament. I consider the benefits are incalculable which have resulted from the Council in the past in watching over and checking hasty legislation, and stopping the passing of many doubtful measures which have been introduced into Parliament. I should despair of any satisfactory legislation taking place in the colony if the Council were to cease to exist. I admit that when I was a member of the other branch of the Legislature I often, along with others, used to grumble most terribly when some of my little Bills were rejected by the Council; but, on mature consideration, I have always come to the conclusion that the Council did right in the public interest. Of course, at the time it is very irritating, if a member of the other branch of the Legislature has succeeded in passing his Bill, possibly by log-rolling, or possibly through party, to find it thrown out when it comes to the Council; but, in nine cases out of ten, I believe the members of the other branch of the Legislature will admit that the Council has done right in rejecting the Bills. I am going to throw out a suggestion to the Attorney-General, and I hope he will accept that suggestion. It is, that he withdraw the Bill now before Parliament, and introduce another Bill, making an equitable provision for this Council: a Bill placing the Council and the House of Representatives upon the same footing as regards the amount for payment of travelling-expenses. I think the honourable gentleman will do well to take my advice on this occasion, if he never took it before. He would do well to accept my advice rather than feel that the members of the Government in the Council are acting contrary to the feelings of the members of the Council. It is not advisable that any sort of irritating feeling should exist in the Council as between the members representing the Government and the other members of the Council; and I do trust the Attorney-General will take the matter into consideration, and that he will withdraw this Bill, and bring down another Bill, which there will be no difficulty, I am convinced, in passing. I know perfectly well that the members of the other branch of the Legislature consider, as I do, that this Bill is a most unsatisfactory one. I trust the honourable gentleman will seriously consider the propriety of adopting the suggestion which I have made.

Hon. Mr. Reynolds

The Hon. Mr. SCOTLAND.—I confess I think the motion of the Hon. Dr. Pollen is a very proper one to bring forward, and I am equally certain this is the proper position for it to occupy on the Order Paper. With reference to the Bill the second reading of which the Attorney-General is to move to-day, I think that both Houses have an equal claim, if there is a claim to be put forward, upon the country. Members of both Houses equally give up their time to the business of the country. Time, according to the adage, is money. Therefore, on that ground I think no difference should be made between the honoraria paid to the members of both Houses. I am sorry I cannot vote for the motion, having already committed myself in something I have said during the present session on this subject. I said that, in my opinion, the members of the other House should receive a slightly larger honorarium than ours. I still adhere to that opinion: not on the ground of their being at any expense in carrying through their elections, as I do not think the country has anything to do with that at all. Candidature is not compulsory upon them. They are asked, certainly, by their fellow-citizens, in some instances, to come forward; but I presume they are not obliged to come if they do not like to come. The call is not imperative; this is a free country, and they are free agents. But what I say is this: They are undoubtedly subject to greater wear and tear than we are, their health is put in greater jeopardy than our health is, and they are exposed to later sittings. I dare say I shall be told that they are not obliged to sit late, that they can go home and go to bed, and leave those who are fonder of talking to do the talking. That is not the proper way to do the work of the country. Here is a system, and so long as there is constitutional government there must be government by party. If there is any benefit to be derived from the government by party, members of this Council enjoy their share of that benefit. We are saved by the gentlemen in another branch undergoing this fatigue, not only for themselves but for us. On that ground I certainly would always advocate a larger honorarium being paid to the members of the other branch of the Legislature. In regard to the number of telegrams which they were said to receive and send off daily, I may say I think that could be stopped in a great measure if they pleased. I have heard it insinuated that members sometimes put their constituents up to sending telegrams. I do not know whether this is the case; but, if so, no doubt that adds considerably to their expenses. The country has got nothing to do with that; let them settle that between themselves and their constituents, and not ask the country to meet that expense. They might just as well send in their tailors', bootmakers', and hatters' bills to the country. I cannot help thinking that there is something very like a Tory reaction going on in this country. Toryism is very infectious. There is a Tory Government in power at the present time in England, and it seems to me that we have got a very Tory Government in power here now. This proposal to reduce the honorarium perhaps is only a prelude to abolishing it altogether. Would the people like that, if they calculated the cost? Perhaps some of them have only looked at the saving of cost; but they do not know what the result would be. It is considered right in the United States, with their practical good sense, that members of both Houses should be paid an equal honorarium; and I have no doubt that if the Americans thought it was wise and prudent that the members of their Legislature should receive no honorarium they would very soon strike it off. But they see that in a democratic country there must be an honorarium, or a much worse thing would follow. I do not know what members of this Council will approve of the Bill which is to be brought forward. I hope there are not any plutocrats who wish to see the Council composed only of large landholders and very wealthy capitalists, that this Council may be turned into a club of rich men. If there are any such—and I hope there are not—let me tell these gentlemen that the country would soon get sick of them—would soon call out for their abolition. If there are any such gentlemen in this Council, I have no doubt they hail with great satisfaction the advent of this Government to power. Perhaps the newspapers in the pay of the Government may abuse us and ascribe the worst possible motives. Well, let them do so. Who cares for their strictures? It can do no harm except to the papers themselves and to the cause of journalism. The Hon. Dr. Pollen has just as much right to bring forward this motion as the honourable gentleman who is going to move the second reading of the Bill has to do so. In fact, that honourable gentleman did bring forward a motion, but he withdrew it for some reason of his own. He ought not to be angry. The Hon. Dr. Pollen has thought proper to bring forward a motion on the same subject. I do not know what right the honourable gentleman has to hold out something like a threat to us, and to talk to us with such a voice of authority on the subject of vox populi. I have heard it stated that, if the honourable gentleman were to offer himself as a candidate for a seat in the House of Representatives, there is not a constituency in the colony that would have him. Whether that is true or not I do not know. Their reason for not accepting him would not be his want of knowledge, but that he knew a great deal too much. There are people in the world who are too clever by half. If payment to members is necessary I say it should be a sufficient payment; and the Bill does not provide a sufficient payment for the Council, at any rate. I regret that I cannot vote for the motion of the Hon. Dr. Pollen, although I agree with it to a certain extent. I must console myself with the pleasure of voting against the second reading of the Bill brought forward by the honourable gentleman.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE.—I do not know whether we are to have two discussions—one upon the resolution and one upon the Bill—or not, but I think that perhaps it would be just as well to make the remarks we have to make upon the subject of the honorarium at the present time. At any rate, so far as I am concerned individually, I propose to adopt that course, and the few observations I have to make will be made at the present time. I listened with some degree of interest to the remarks of the Hon. Mr. Scotland. I was anxious to know in what way they were to conclude. He told us that he was quite in favour of members of the other House of the Legislature having a higher honorarium than ours—

The Hon. Mr. SCOTLAND.—Slightly higher.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE.—And the honourable gentleman wound up his remarks by saying he would vote against this Bill, the tendency of which is to give to the members of that branch of the Legislature a higher honorarium than we are to have. The honourable gentleman spoke of plutocrats who would vote for the Bill. If this matter is to be decided by the votes of those who have a keen love for money, and who turn it to the best account, I have no doubt the vote of the Hon. Mr. Scotland will be recorded in its favour. The Hon. Mr. Reynolds made one or two remarks that were interesting to me. I was pleased to see that he had arrived at the conclusion at which I had arrived myself long ago, that he was not in all cases infallible—that in one or two cases he had made a mistake; and I believe the honourable gentleman will, in the course of a few years, probably arrive at the conclusion that, if he perseveres in the course he is now about to adopt, he will give another proof of his fallibility. My honourable friend's remarks were not altogether to the point. He said we were here for this session for eighty-two days, and that he should only receive £50. But my honourable friend overlooked the fact that he had received £210 last session, so that the total would be £260 for the period he has attended Parliament during the existing year.

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS.—Perhaps the honourable gentleman will allow me to explain. I received no £210 for the year. That was all I received for my Ministerial services.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE.—If the honourable gentleman received £210 for his Ministerial services, the Ministry with which he was connected acted altogether outside the law, and ought not to have authorised the payment of one penny outside what is provided by the Civil Service Act; but, as a matter of fact, the honourable gentleman did make application for his honorarium, as he was entitled to do, and he received it. I do not see that the amount he received was in connection with his Ministerial services. As a matter of fact, it was in connection with his attendance at Parliament. The Bill that has been introduced by my honourable friend the Attorney-General contains two important provisions. The first and most important one is that contained in the 2nd clause, which is to the effect that members of the House of Representatives shall receive an amount—additional to that received by the members of the Council—of £50 in consideration of the additional expenses necessarily incurred by them. Objection has been taken to that provision. I must say I heartily agree with that provision. I think the members of the other branch of the Legislature are well deserving—and I agree with the Hon. Mr. Scotland in that respect—of a larger amount of remuneration than that paid to the members of this branch of the Legislature, for the simple reason that their expenses necessarily must be larger. As pointed out by the Attorney-General, there are electioneering expenses to which they are exposed that they cannot possibly avoid, and which will always be found very considerable. As pointed out by the Hon. Mr. McLean, there are considerable expenses in connection with telegraphing throughout the session—expenses to which, to a very great extent, members of this branch of the Legislature are not exposed. I do not know how much that amount may be, but I am informed that in many cases it is as much as one or two pounds a day. There are, likewise, incidental expenses attached to the position of members of the other House to which we are not so much liable, in the contributions to local charities. A member of the other branch of the Legislature is necessarily called upon to contribute to charities to a greater extent than a member of the Council is, and I have no hesitation in saying that if he altogether ignores these applications, as has been suggested by one or two members, it will be impossible for him to retain his seat. We do not go so far in this matter as they do in England. In England I know there are instances where a candidate has been asked the straightforward question, how much he will be prepared to contribute to local charities in the case of his appointment. We do not go so far as that here, and I hope we shall not come to that. At the same time, there are charities to which a person in the position of a member of the other branch of the Legislature must necessarily contribute. The other important provision in reference to this Bill is that relating to the non-payment of members residing in Wellington. Now, I agree with other honourable gentlemen that in that respect there is an inequality which is, to my mind, not justifiable, and for the reason that the same law does not apply to the members of both branches of the Legislature. I should not have objected to this were members of the other branch treated the same as members of the Council. But one likes to be treated with fairness, and the old saying that "What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander" is applicable in this case. The same reasoning which points out that members in this branch should not receive payment if they resided in Wellington applies with equal force to members of the other branch of the Legislature living in Wellington. However, I cannot regard this as an unmitigated evil; for this reason: It has evoked for members of this Council residing in Wellington expressions of sympathy from my honourable friend Mr. Reynolds, for which I was myself little prepared. As a rule, he has shown so little sympathy with Well-

Hon. Mr. Waterhouse

ton members that the change in his opinions is almost an equivalent for the monetary loss inflicted by this distinction. There is another respect in which the alteration does not altogether displease me. It is this: It opens up the way for further economies in the future. If we want to economize still further, in the case of vacancies arising all the Government has to do is to appoint members living in Wellington, and in that way they can reduce the expenses still further. It will be the duty of the Government, with new appointments, to consider whether they cannot get a man of equal ability in Wellington as a member, instead of going elsewhere, in which case they would have to pay £100 a year. This consideration will, I am sure, be appreciated by the Hon. Mr. Reynolds. But, Sir, while I recognise that there is a degree of unfairness in this Bill, it is my intention to vote for it in its entirety; and the more I think of it the more I am impressed with a sense of the responsibility resting on this Council in connection with the matter. I support the Bill, first of all, because it is a part of a large and comprehensive measure in connection with the system of retrenchment introduced by the Government in order to place the finances of the colony on a more satisfactory footing. If we attack that system in detail, by throwing out one measure after another, and more especially a measure of this character, we shall be inflicting a strong blow at the cause of retrenchment, which is now being so strenuously taken up not only in the Legislature, but throughout the colony at large. And, then, another reason which will lead me to vote for it is the feeling that we cannot expect that the large portion of the public that will be subjected to a more or less deep degree of suffering in consequence of the measure of retrenchment now being introduced will submit to their lot quietly if certain classes are to be exempted from these reductions. It will add poignancy to their sufferings if they see that members of the Legislature exempt themselves from participating in measures of retrenchment. Sir, I cannot imagine a more inexpedient act than it would be to throw out this Bill. It would lead to invidious comparisons that would be injurious to the character of this House. Is it not apparent that in one branch of the Legislature they are prepared to subject themselves to reductions, not only as regards honorarium, but also in the number of members from ninety-five to seventy-four? and do they not, in that respect, show the public a spirit of self-sacrifice? What would be the feeling with reference to this Council if we not only refused to reduce our number, but if at the same time we refused own to ourselves submit to any financial loss? It would, in the public mind, have a very bad effect indeed, and I think the result would be very destructive of the prestige of this branch of the Legislature. Sir, I must vote for the Bill on another ground, though, perhaps, I shall find honourable members not agreeing with me—on the strong constitutional ground that the other branch of the Legislature are the controllers of the public expenditure, and that it is not for this branch of the Legislature to impose limits upon their reduction of expenditure. They, as the guardians of the public purse, have the undoubted right of imposing limits upon expenditure. I would point out, moreover, that this is not a single measure; it is part of a financial scheme introduced by the Treasurer, on the passing of which the finances of the colony depend; and we must pass it in its entirety or reject it in its entirety. It is not constitutional to take it in detail, and say we take it in one part and refuse to take it in another. Sir, there is no principle more clearly laid down in the constitutional government of Great Britain than that the House of Lords cannot interfere with the financial measures of the Government. The last interference on the part of the House of Lords was, as honourable members are aware, in the case of the paper duties, and that is many years ago; and then, Sir, the House of Commons answered their claim for interference by maintaining their right, as guardians of the public purse, to deal with financial measures in such a manner as they determined upon, stating,—

“That this House has in its own hands the power so to impose and remit taxes and to frame Bills of supply that the right of the Commons as to the matter, manner, measure, and time may be maintained inviolate.”

Sir, whatever we may do we cannot prevent the other branch of the Legislature from claiming that which is in its own hands. This brings me to the last consideration; and I shall refer to this point a little more fully—that is, as regards the consequence of our action should we throw out this Bill. I have stated, Sir, and I regard it as increasingly important the more I look into it, that I feel that the consequence of our action will be so great that we may well pause before proceeding to throw out the Bill. We may depend upon it that if we throw out this Bill there will not be an expression of sympathy throughout the length and breadth of the land in our favour. Our wives, children, sisters, cousins, and aunts will perhaps sympathize with us; but we shall be universally condemned from one end of the colony to the other.

The Hon. Mr. CHAMBERLIN.—No.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE.—The honourable member may say “No;” but that shows how utterly he fails to realise public opinion.

The Hon. Mr. CHAMBERLIN.—That is a matter of opinion.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE.—If we throw out this Bill, what will be the position of the Government and Parliament? This is one of the measures on which the financial proposals are based; and neither Government nor House of Representatives can allow this matter to remain in a quiescent state if this Bill is thrown out. They are bound to take action; and were I in the place of my honourable friend I would say unhesitatingly to the Council, “If you throw out a measure so intimately connected with the finances of the colony as this is, you must get some other persons as representatives of the Government in this Council. I, as representative of the Government, call upon you to support the Government by passing their financial measures;" and if their financial measures were not passed I should undoubtedly feel it my duty to leave upon the Council the responsibility of their proceedings. I feel that, under such circumstances, I could not conduct the business of the country. That is a matter for their own consideration—but probably another course would be adopted, and this in accordance with that line of policy laid down by the House of Commons in the case to which I have referred. They then maintained that they had the power in their own hands—the inherent power. The Government will recognise that they cannot allow their financial measures to be defeated in this branch of the Legislature, and they will adopt the course that is undoubtedly open to them of introducing into the Appropriation Act a clause providing that the present year's amount to be paid under that Act shall not exceed the amount stated in this Bill. I should be sorry to see such a course adopted. It is only under extreme circumstances that it would be justifiable. I do not hesitate to say at once that, if this Bill is thrown out of the Council, the financial proposals of the Government, which depend so much on the passing of this measure, would suffer: and they would be quite justified in adopting that extreme course. I ask, then, the Council to fully and deliberately weigh this matter, recognising the responsibility attaching to their votes, and not to be influenced by any feelings of regard to themselves, but to regard, on the contrary, what is the best for the interests of the country.

The Hon. Dr. POLLEN.—I shall have a very few words to say upon this matter, and chiefly in reply to the speech which was made yesterday by my honourable and learned friend the Attorney-General. Now, I have had so long and intimate acquaintance with my honourable friend that I am able to tell, by the tones of his voice, whether he is uttering his personal conviction or is speaking from his brief. It is not, therefore, necessary for him to assure me—as I am sure he is ready to do—that, when he stated yesterday that I was setting myself to oppose the policy of the Government—traversing their policy—and that I was actuated by sordid motives—the sordid motive of endeavouring to obtain more money for my services in this Council than the colony was disposed to give me—he knew the motive of my conduct in this business—

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—I beg my honourable friend's pardon. I said just the opposite to what he has represented. I said I did not think any person in his position would do so: on the contrary, he was acting from conviction, and not from any sordid motives.

The Hon. Dr. POLLEN.—But he was good enough to say that other people might not be so charitable. Sir, I am not an opponent of the Government. I am, by constitution and temper, a supporter of authority on all occasions. If I were disposed to be an opponent of the policy of the Government I should be in this difficulty: that I do not know what the policy of the Government is. Sir, I venture to say more—that my honourable friend does not know what the policy of the Government is. He is the brain of the Government; he is the Ulysses of the Government camp; and yet I venture to say that he does not know, nor does the Premier or any member of the Government of this colony know, at this moment what is the complete policy of his Government. The process is going on; it is being developed, but it is not yet crystallized. What we do know is that they propose—and we all concur—to endeavour to make ends meet by retrenchment, by additional taxation, and by borrowing to cover existing deficiencies. That is all we know. That is not a statesmanlike policy in the largest sense of the word, or the policy which I expect to see developed by my honourable friend and his colleagues. And I could not, therefore, oppose what I do not understand. But there is a part of the policy which I do understand, and I support it most cordially, and, instead of endeavouring to thwart the policy of retrenchment, I am endeavouring to assist my honourable friend in taking it to a further extent than he or his colleagues seem willing to take it. I desire to save the expenditure by the colony of £5,000 a year during the whole currency of the Parliament for purposes which I believe to be unnecessary. Looking at the question of the policy, I ventured to point out to my honourable friends of the Council the rocks upon which our policy has hitherto split and been wrecked. I pointed to the extravagant and useless expenditure on railways; I pointed to the extravagant and useless expenditure on harbours, for the purpose, apparently, of taking traffic from the railways that the colony had gone to the expense of constructing; I pointed to the enormous waste in constructing works on gold-fields for the purpose of procuring parliamentary support; and I pointed to the wasteful expenditure which is going on in opening lands for settlement when we have no settlers. But there were two leaks in the Exchequer—the extravagant expenditure upon national education and the extravagant expenditure amongst local bodies—which I failed to notice. Sir, the expenditure among local bodies grows in an inverse ratio to the progress of settlement. Settlement, for years, I am sorry indeed to say, has been at a standstill; but the expenditure by local bodies has not ceased to progress. Now, these local bodies are debauched by the subsidies which are offered to them—by the facilities which have recently been afforded to them of obtaining cheap money. There is no one, who has himself had the misfortune to be a ratepayer under these fortunate local bodies, who does not consider that the rates are altogether in excess of the needs of the local districts, and that they are imposed for no other purpose than grabbing a share of the Government subsidy. We had a return upon the table here last year showing that, under the

Hon. Mr. Waterhouse

Government Loans to Local Bodies Act, more than a quarter of a million of liabilities and expenses had been incurred within the first three or four months of the Act coming into operation. I have asked for a return to be furnished to the Council of the expenses, in continuation of the previous return, up till the 30th September last; and I shall not be surprised myself, and the members of the Council need not be surprised, if, when this return is laid on the table, it shows that our liabilities under the Act amount to half a million of money. These are all points which, I am sure, will not escape the attention of the Government, but which certainly have not yet been declared as entering into their programme. So far from opposing the Government, I have the most earnest and honest hope that, in regard to the questions to which I have made reference, their policy will be such as I can cordially support. One gentleman told us that public opinion would condemn us if we adopted this resolution. Sir, there is no one in this Council who has more respect for a well-informed and intelligent public opinion than I myself have. But I have no respect for a public opinion that is what I call "shoddy" in character—a public opinion which is manufactured de die in diem, a public opinion which is manufactured and promulgated by self-constituted high priests of the temple of knowledge, whose origin is certainly not divine. I have been engaged, myself, in the manufacture of public opinion. I have had my hand upon the machine, and I know exactly how to appreciate the value of the product. I am not afraid that the people of the colony will condemn me for having used my humble endeavours to save them £18,000 in gratuities to representatives—an expenditure which, in my opinion, is absolutely unnecessary. Sir, I need not detain the Council longer, and I do not suppose anything I could say would alter the decision of the Council upon the subject; but I think that there ought to be a permanent protest recorded on the minutes of the Council against the departure from the system, in respect to the payment of members, which has been established by law in this colony. Sir, I have heard no sufficient reason whatever to justify that departure. It is an invidious distinction, which I resent with all my force. I do not want more pay than is proposed to be given by the Bill which is now before the Council; but I do want that encouragement shall not be given for illegal practices at elections; I do want that subsidies shall not be provided by the State to reimburse expenses incurred in the evasion or violation of the law, or for expenses incurred for personal purposes, which can in no sense be called general, and which, if incurred, should be defrayed by those persons by whom and for whose interests they are incurred. I am quite clear upon that. These expenses are not constant; they do not occur in every case. One-third of the members of the House of Representatives represent city or suburban constituencies. They can travel from one end to the other of their district for 8d. Many honourable members declare their unwillingness to accept this douceur. One-half of the communications which members receive during Parliament are applications from friends anxious for billets, and most probably the other half come from gentlemen who have axes to grind, or from local bodies which have little jobs to be accomplished. Sir, I say that the colony is no more, as a whole, bound to supply funds to reimburse members for these expenses than the keeper of a dairy is bound to allow rats which surround his cheese to get into it for their supper. I have no doubt my honourable friend will be able to carry these Bills; but I am very sorry that he thought it necessary to warn us that if they were not carried they would be forced down the throats of the Council by that process which is known as "tacking."

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—My honourable friend is mistaken. I said nothing of the kind.

The Hon. Dr. POLLEN.—I am not in accord with some members of the Council upon this question of the privilege of the Council—as to its power and authority of dealing with money Bills. But I have very clear and distinct faith on that subject, founded not upon parliamentary custom, but upon written law. I look to the Constitution Act, and I find that there is one exception stated there to the power of the Council in dealing with money Bills, and that is, that those Bills shall not originate in the Council. That being the exception stated, I think my honourable friend himself will admit that, as a matter of legal construction, the general powers are held by us. However, I shall not discuss that question now; but I hope that, if the Council should refuse to read the Honorarium Bills a second time, honourable gentlemen in another place will not be rash enough to provoke a conflict with this House upon the question that the Council has refused to allow them to take more money from the public purse than the members of this Council think they are justly entitled to. I have no fear of a conflict of that kind. But, if it did occur, I should, in my place in this Council, not hesitate to defend the right of the Council to deal with measures of that kind; I should be prepared to move that the Appropriation Bill itself should be read that day six months, and leave to the other side the responsibility of the mischief they provoked. I have talked upon this subject very much more than is usual with me; and I have said my last say upon the question. I hope this motion will be recorded in the minutes of the Council; and I am quite satisfied that the Council shall deal with the Bills as it deems best without further interference on my part.

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS.—The suggestion made by the Hon. Mr. Reynolds, that the Government should withdraw this Bill and reintroduce it in a form exactly in conformity with his views, is one which, I think, can only have been dictated by the natural benevolence of my honourable friend's disposition; but, much as we may admire this disposition, I venture to take the opportunity of informing my honourable friend that, although I have no doubt that the Government will take this suggestion, or any other suggestion that he may make to us, at its true value, we are not in a position to accept his recommendation. The Hon. Dr. Pollen, in the course of his earlier remarks, informed us that the payment of honorarium to the members of both Chambers for a number of years past has had nothing to do with our financial difficulties. I am not aware that any one ever suggested that it had. Then, Sir, the honourable gentleman proceeded—

The Hon. Dr. POLLEN.—I said, “did not cause them.”

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS.—Precisely; which is practically the same thing. Then, my honourable friend informed us, in his rather lengthy remarks, that the real cause of the misfortunes of the country was the expenditure which has taken place on public works, and our extravagance in other such ways, and that small economies were of no use in a case of financial difficulty such as ours. I have heard exactly that argument used over and over again for many years past when any attempt whatever has been made to promote a spirit of economy in the country. It is because the Government held that vigorous measures were necessary that they came to the determination to give effect, as far as they could, to the very distinct expression of opinion in the colony in favour of retrenchment on a large scale, and have brought forward the proposals to Parliament which they have done. And, in point of fact, that is the main ground on which this Government took office. In saying this I may say that it has become our duty, from the position we have taken up in regard to it, not to swerve in the smallest degree from the lines we have laid down, in obedience, we believe, to the voice of the constituencies at large; and that, without making such threats as have been alluded to by my honourable friend who has just spoken, we, without making threats at all, feel it necessary to say, once again, we consider it our duty to adhere to that position. There are few persons who have had any experience of the financial affairs of this country who will be found to disagree with the Hon. Dr. Pollen in his remarks as to the frightful extravagance and the unexampled expenditure which have taken place during the last fifteen years on public works and other objects. But it is also, at the same time, true that economy has to be practised in the direction of the annual expenditure—far more practised than we desire to see it—owing to the great rate at which the interest on the public debt has progressed; and that, if there should be any hesitation in taking vigorous and consistent steps in the direction of economizing in our ordinary expenditure, we shall find that we shall only go from bad to worse, until measures similar to those the Government propose will have perforce to be adopted. We have determined, in pursuance of the plan, we have adopted, to bring, if by any possibility we can, our ordinary expenditure within revenue; and that is the tendency of the proposals which have been laid by the Colonial Treasurer before Parliament. This is part—possibly not a large part—of these very proposals; and I say it is one of those parts that are essential to the whole—it goes hand in hand with the general reduction in ordinary expenditure. We trust we shall be supported in reducing the expenditure of public money on public works within reasonable limits; and I submit that this has been the character of all the proposals which have hitherto been laid before Parliament this session; and we have given no evidence whatever of any desire to continue the rate of expenditure such as has been condemned by the Hon. Dr. Pollen. Under these circumstances, I fail entirely to understand how my honourable friend can say that he has no idea of what the final policy of the Government is, and that it is going to be developed piece by piece. Has my honourable friend ever read the Financial Statement? Has he ever examined the principles of the Government in regard to the very measures which he has now said that he has frequently urged should be adopted? Has he considered the principles in reference to the Crown and Native Lands Rating Act? I may say that the Statement bristles with the very kind of economies that my honourable friend says ought to be made. I submit that he has neglected to study the proposals of the Government, and he has rashly condemned them without having made himself ordinarily familiar with them. He has accused us, or, at all events, suggested that we have failed to recognise the importance of a reduction in the educational expenditure; whereas this is a leading part of our economies. It is one on which, no doubt, a great difference of opinion exists, and one on which the Government has received, and is likely to receive, and has expected, a large amount of criticism. But how my honourable friend can find it possible to say that we have neglected this important branch of the subject of economy, or that we have failed to recognise the importance of a less wide distribution of subsidies to local bodies, I am entirely at a loss to understand. Without desiring to occupy more time than I can possibly avoid, I may add my testimony, having been a member of the House of Representatives for a number of years, to that of the Hon. Mr. McLean and other members of the Council in regard to the item of additional expense of members of the House of Representatives. There are a large number of districts in the colony where, putting altogether aside the question of election expenses, there are very heavy expenses during the recess which it is absolutely impossible for a member to escape. Not only are there the telegrams which have been spoken of, and the additional subscriptions, and so forth; but in the larger country districts the necessary cost of travelling in order to discharge the recognised duty of members—that of meeting their constituents in the different centres of population in the districts—entails expenditure which is absolutely unavoidable, and which is very large; and I submit that this alone is quite sufficient ground for making the distinction of £50 for the additional expenses proposed in this Bill. I will, further, say that, as regards meeting the expenses of elections, an amount of £50 would be absolutely inadequate to meet contested elections in a general way. But there are the other expenses, which, I venture to think, should be quite a sufficient warrant for passing this clause in the Bill. I am not going now into any question of the dignity of the Council. I do not recognise that this is involved in the question at all, either in the Bill or in the motion. But I do make this appeal to honourable members. It is unnecessary to say much after the appeal of the Hon. Mr. Waterhouse; but what I do say is that, as a member of this Chamber, I do most sincerely trust that it will itself support the Government, whatever that Government may be, in endeavouring to rescue this colony from its financial difficulties. A responsibility of the gravest character rests on this Chamber. There are few who have studied the financial condition of the country as some of us have done, myself amongst the number, but know the urgency of setting our finances in order. I once more beg honourable members—whether at the cost of a certain pecuniary sacrifice, whether at the cost of a little dignity—to aid any one in entering upon a course which has become absolutely necessary for the well-being of the colony.

Hon. Mr. Stevens

The Hon. Mr. BARNICOAT.—I had hoped, and had been led to believe, that the question of honorarium would very briefly engage the attention of the Council, and that a decision would probably be arrived at after very little discussion. But, as many honourable members have spoken on the subject, I must be indulged for a few minutes while I give my reasons for the vote I am about to give. It is understood by members of the Council that the motion which is avowedly under discussion—for the Bill seems to be under discussion also—is in opposition to the Bill; that it conflicts with the Bill which is immediately to be brought before the Council. I must therefore vote against this motion, but I do not see how it can be done directly. It can be done, but only by means of carrying “the previous question.” Those who vote in the negative would say that this Council will not “concur willingly with the House of Representatives in any reduction of allowances to members which shall maintain the equality of treatment between the two Chambers established by ‘The Parliamentary Honorarium and Privileges Act, 1884.’” Those who wish to set aside the motion should resort to the expedient of “the previous question.” Although much may be said for an equality of payment to the members of both Houses—and I admit it is reasonable in one point of view, for the duties of members of both Houses are of equal importance, and they are engaged on the same legislative duties, and are the same time away from home and its occupations—still, it must be apparent that the duties of members of the two branches of the Legislature are unequally onerous and troublesome. The labours of the members of the other House are very much greater than ours; they begin before the session begins, and close long after its termination; and during the session their labours are much more exhaustive and wearisome. I think, therefore, they may fairly command a higher honorarium. But this difference may be overestimated, and I think it is too liberally allowed for in the Bill before the Council. As to the compensation which is supposed to be given for the expenses in connection with elections, and so on, I may say that, if there are four sessions in this Parliament—that of 1887, 1888, 1889, and 1890—the members of the other House will be too liberally recompensed for their additional expenditure on that account. But it is unbecoming to set aside any measure coming from the other House having for its main object the reduction of parliamentary expenses. One member says that this Council will be lowering itself in the estimation of the general public if we agree to the proposed reduction; but I think we should be lowering ourselves very much more in the estimation of the general public did we not willingly accept the Bill. I am chiefly influenced, I may say, by the consideration of the unwisdom of any action which might be interpreted into a want of sympathy with those doomed to the merciless process of retrenchment.

The Hon. Mr. OLIVER.—I had proposed to make a few observations on this matter, but I deferred my address to the Council in the hope that those who favoured the views of the Hon. Dr. Pollen would come to his assistance, and would argue the case further from their point of view. But it seems that the whole duty of upholding this view is to be devolved upon him alone. The Hon. Dr. Pollen told us, in effect, that in certain circumstances he would enter with a light heart into a conflict with the other branch of the Legislature. He claimed for the Council the power to meddle with money Bills except in the initiation of them. I hope that this view does not commend itself to members of this Council, for most certainly, if the Council should be so ill-advised as to enter into such a conflict, not only would the prestige and dignity of the Council be very much lowered in the result, but its influence for good also. There is no constitutional principle more firmly established than that it is not possible for any but the representatives elected by the people to initiate or govern taxation. I hope, therefore, that this view, at any rate, will not have countenance from the Council. A great deal has been said as to the loss of dignity of this Council which would follow the acceptance by its members of a lower money-allowance for the performance of their duties than is given to the members of the more popular branch of the Legislature. I by no means see that the fact of receiving payment necessarily lowers the dignity of the recipient of that payment; but I do say this: that when very high functions are performed—I know of none higher than the function of legislating for a people—in that case those who perform those high functions increase their dignity not by the amount of their pay being increased, but by performing them for little pay or none at all. And I hope that this view will be acknowledged by honourable members before they give a most momentous vote. I look with great alarm on the way in which this question may be treated by the Council. I feel quite sure that the Council has now arrived at a critical point of its existence, and on the course which may be taken by honourable members in regard to the settlement of the question now before us will depend to a very great extent the future usefulness of this branch of the Legislature. I hope, therefore, that it will not adopt this motion, which is in opposition to the Bill which will shortly be before us, and which, in fact, we are now considering and debating as fully as the resolution of my honourable friend opposite. There is no doubt, theoretically, if the principle of payment of members is adopted, the members of both branches of the Legislature are entitled to equal payment. I do not think a word can be said against that position. But, without going into the details of the items of expenditure of members of the other branch, which we are not called upon to inquire into, I would say that it is within the knowledge of every member of this Council—that it is a matter of common knowledge and of notoriety—that the members of the other branch of the Legislature are put to much greater expense in the performance of their duties than the members of the Council are. I would therefore pass this part of the argument by altogether, only appealing to the general knowledge of the subject which we all possess. If this is conceded, then I say this Bill which the Government have introduced is not open to the objection which seems to be raised against it in the terms of the resolution of the Hon. Dr. Pollen. It says,—

“That this Council will concur willingly with the House of Representatives in any reduction of allowances to members which shall maintain the equality of treatment between the two Chambers established by ‘The Parliamentary Honorarium and Privileges Act, 1884.’”

I say that, if it is conceded that members of the other branch of the Legislature must necessarily be put to greater expense in the performance of their duty than the members of this branch are put to, it follows that, if the same sum of money were paid to both, there would be then no equality of treatment—there would be an inequality of treatment. Therefore, it seems to me, the Bill is not open to the objection which my honourable friend opposite urges against it. Recently we had before us a question of limiting by law the number of the members of this Council. The views I expressed were adverse to the adoption of a limit, and I think the way this question may possibly be settled affords a strong argument for the position I then took up. There is no doubt that if the Council rejects this Bill there are several ways in which the views of the Council may be overborne. We have not been threatened by the Government at all. It has been stated that the Government threatened the Council with what would be the result if they rejected the measure. We have had no such threat. We were warned that the result might not be desirable from the point of view of this Council; but there were no threats used. But, still, it is within the knowledge of us all that there are some ways in which the opposition of the Council can be overborne. A tack has been mentioned by the Hon. Dr. Pollen, and there may be a number of appointments made in the Council sufficient to overbear resistance. I hope, Sir, none of these alternatives will become necessary. I sincerely hope that the Council will on this occasion adopt the course which prudence and wisdom dictate. From my point of view, having already made the Council aware that I was not a believer in the payment of Councillors at all, I shall not be misunderstood if I say that the Bill is deficient in one small particular. It is in its failure to make some larger provision for the expenses of members in attending the second session of Parliament during the same year. If the principle is adopted that a sufficient amount should be paid members to reimburse them their expenses, then £50 for the second session will not be sufficient; and on that ground I think the Bill is defective. But that does not apply to the current year, because every member of the Council who has attended the first session this year has already received £210; and, therefore, for this session that objection would not apply. But we have not only to consider this year, but the future, and I think the Bill is in that particular defective from the point of view of the Government, that a sufficient sum must be paid to reimburse expenses. But that is only a small defect, and can be easily corrected at a future time. I urge the Council not to place itself in a false position by the rejection of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Oliver

The Hon. Mr. CHAMBERLIN.—As I think the reduction affects every member of the Council personally, I think they should all have an opportunity of expressing their opinions in Parliament. The remarks I am about to make on the subject are not uttered in any party spirit at all. I belong neither to one party nor to the other. As far as the present Government are concerned, I have every respect for them; but, with regard to some of their measures, I am sorry to say I cannot quite approve of them, and the present is among that number. In reference to a remark which fell from the Hon. Mr. Waterhouse, that members of another place were quite prepared to sacrifice their principles, and that members of the Council are not so prepared, now, Sir, it is quite easy to conceive that the members of the House are so prepared, because every one of them, without doubt, has the greatest confidence in himself, and thinks that he, at all events, will be returned. There is no doubt, in my opinion, that that is the feeling of members in another place. And, what is more, of course they have been elected to carry out a retrenchment policy, and they knew very well that if they rejected the reduction of members in their own Chamber they would be flying in the face of the instructions they have received from their constituents. With regard to members' expenses, I have heard it stated by several members of the other House that it is necessary that they should have a larger honorarium to meet their expenses. I totally disagree with that. I think it is a wrong principle that the representatives of the people should be put in by their self-seeking; my opinion is, that the candidate should be sought out by the constituency, and should be picked from the few men who are best capable of looking after the interests and welfare of the colony. It is well known that wherever representative government is in existence the candidates who come forward have objects of their own to serve, rather than the objects of the people whom they profess to serve. It is true that in Great Britain there are many gentlemen of great wealth and leisure who desire to be in the House for the sake of the position; but in a colony like this, where there are comparatively few men of wealth and leisure, they cannot afford the time and expense connected with attending this Assembly without considerable loss to themselves, unless it is recouped by a considerable honorarium. It is not merely the expenses of attending a session that have to be considered, but it is what a man may lose by being away from his home, business, or profession. We have a gentleman who lives not a hundred miles from the post-office in Auckland, who says that every day he is absent from that neighbourhood he undergoes a loss of £25. There are many others in a very similar position, either professional men or business men. I consider that when gentlemen come forward and sacrifice their time at a very large expense some consideration should be given to them. It was true that, in the case I mentioned, the existing honorarium is a very small consideration for such loss. I would prohibit every candidate for the House of Representatives in any way soliciting a vote, or going to any expense in contesting a seat in the House of Representatives; and I maintain that it should be made criminal to do anything of that kind at all. Let him, as a representative, be sent here by the will and wisdom of the people; and let members not be men who are seeking their own personal objects, or who desire to grind their axes. If no honorarium were given, what would be the result? The House would consist to a very large extent of wealthy men. That I should, personally, be delighted to see, because, at heart, I am a thorough conservative. But we are a democratic country, and to go back to that is out of the question. Therefore I maintain there should be sufficient honorarium to pay members their reasonable expenses. It should not be sufficient to create a class of politicians who would make it a profession. I should not be in favour of that, as it would probably have the effect of raising up a number of carpetbag men, who would make their living out of the country at the rate of £300 a year. We have had a comparison of the work done in this House with that done in the House of Representatives. It has been stated that the members of the other House have to undergo much longer sittings than we have to undergo. But the reason of that is that they waste so much time in mere simple talk; and to what purpose?—not talking upon the merits or demerits of the Bills brought before them, but merely to turn out the existing Government and get into office themselves. As to the value of the work, I consider that, if that were taken into consideration, we ought to have in this Chamber double the pay they get in the other Chamber, because I look upon it that the work done in this Chamber is far more valuable. Here we go into the Bills thoroughly, and do efficiently the work that is placed before us; whereas Bills are sent from another place in order to be thoroughly criticized and mastered and improved in this Chamber. I cannot help thinking that the real object of this Bill is simply to further the interest of a certain class in the colony who desire to take advantage of the benefits arising from measures of this kind, and to obtain a power against the interests of the people and the democracy of the colony. I shall certainly vote in favour of the resolution of the Hon. Dr. Pollen.

The Hon. Mr. PEACOCK.—In reference to the question now before the Council I wish to state my opinion. Upon a former occasion I had the honour of bringing before the Council a resolution endeavouring to effect retrenchment by a reduction in the honorarium. But it will be remembered that on that celebrated occasion I got rather "sat" upon. I did not get that hearty support of honourable members which I am glad to see the Bill before us now is getting. I am much pleased to see the Bill is now introduced, and I hope it will be agreed to. I thoroughly agree with every word that the Hon. Mr. Waterhouse has uttered on this subject. He exactly represented my views in a manner better, perhaps, than I should have expressed them myself, and therefore I need not detain the House any longer. I think there is a difference between this body and the other Chamber which has not been alluded to, for, while we retain our seats, no matter what happens, for life, those gentlemen are liable to lose theirs by dissolution even before they have had an opportunity of reimbursing themselves. I shall give my hearty support to the Bill, and shall be very glad indeed if the Council will support it.

The Hon. Mr. BONAR.—I desire to say that, although I did not give my vote for the suspension of the Standing Orders, still I am very glad that this resolution proposed by the Hon. Dr. Pollen has come on for discussion before we come to the consideration of the Bill; because I think, no matter what has been stated and what reasons may have been assigned, it is right that this Council should have an opportunity of expressing its opinion on this subject before expressing its decision on the Bill; and I was a little surprised that an opportunity was not afforded by the Government earlier, seeing that it was announced in the Financial Statement that resolutions on this subject were to be brought down for the consideration of the Council before any measure was submitted. The statement there is as follows: "The Government will invite the Legislative Council to express, by resolution, its opinion that the honorarium paid to its members should not exceed £100." It was contemplated to do this when the Hon. the Attorney-General brought down his resolution, which, for reasons best known to himself, was withdrawn; and I was glad to see this resolution brought before us, because it enables the Council to give expression to its feelings without embarrassment to any honourable member. I hope the Council will pass the resolution. It expresses what has been, practically, the law of the land hitherto. It was the practice of Parliament that both Houses should be placed exactly on the same footing one with the other; and, without wishing to claim any undue praise for ourselves, I say this branch of the Legislature has taken its full share of responsibility in connection with all matters coming before Parliament for its consideration, and that we do our business in a more business-like manner. We do not devote so much time to mere talking, and we are not to have it thrown in our faces afterwards that we do not sit such long hours as the House of Representatives. I say we do our work deliberately, and free from all the embarrassments which prevail in another place. I do not wish to follow all the remarks which have been made in respect of this proposal; perhaps I do not agree with all that has been said; but I think we shall be doing right to give our assent to the proposal now made. Any other considerations can be dealt with afterwards on their own basis. I may say that it has been found more convenient to consider the Bill along with this motion, so that the same discussion will do for both. While having intimated my intention to support the resolution, I do so in no spirit of hostility to any of the measures of the Government, and I do not consider I am acting inconsistently when I say that I intend to give the second reading of the Bill my most hearty support. I do not consider that that is inconsistent; but—while I am prepared to give this Bill my hearty support, as a portion of those important and necessary measures now being introduced by the Government as a whole in the shape of retrenchment, to which I shall give my hearty co-operation—we are not to be deterred from expressing our opinions upon the way in which these measures are brought down, and I do regret the mode in which this Honorarium Bill has been brought down for our consideration, for it creates inequality which ought never to have been created, and which has never been observed since Parliament came into being. And, while talking about honorarium, I may refer to what has been made a great deal of—namely, the extra £50 as allowance for expenses to members of the House of Representatives. The expenses of members are not more than they were ten or fifteen years ago, and I cannot see why this extra allowance should be given at the very moment when the severest retrenchment is required; it might have been left over. With regard to the members' expenses for telegrams and so forth, that does not come to anything like the same amount now as it used to do when we had large sums of borrowed money available for expenditure. The telegrams received are not one tithe of what they had been before. As has been said, a very large proportion of these telegrams were applications for assistance in some form or other from individuals or local bodies; and, in reference to the remarks made about the representatives having to bear the expense of sending the telegrams, the course which the members ought to pursue, and which some do pursue, is to send back their communications in reply marked "Collect," so that the burden may fall on the proper shoulders. Although the members of this Council are not so much deluged with communications from persons resident in their districts, still there are those who have occupied the position of representatives in the district, who are therefore largely applied to and who have large expenses to bear, quite equal, in fact, to those which the members of the House of Representatives are put to. I would not concede this allowance, and I should like to have seen that clause struck out; then there would have been a saving in this session of the Assembly in that respect. A great deal has been said about what has been done in the House of Representatives; but the position of the members of the House this session is precisely what it would have been had this Act not been passed. They will receive £50 honorarium and £50 for allowances, and therefore, instead of receiving £105, to which they would have been entitled, they will receive only £5 less. That is the whole difference. My own opinion is that we shall find this item of allowances will be materially increased from time to time, and the expenses will begin to go on again. As regards the Councillors, we are not obliged to attend for the whole session; but, if we do not attend every day of the session, neither do we draw the whole of our honorarium, and this would save the country something. Sometimes we are waiting for weeks, while other parties are settling their differences. We have been told by the Government that this is a part of the great policy of retrenchment which they intend to carry out; and I think that there is no single member of the Council who will not assist in that direction, and join in the hope that this policy of retrenchment will be carried out. I am sure it is the desire of every member of the Council to assist in getting the finances of the colony once more restored to a sound and substantial footing, and that we shall not allow any personal sacrifice of our pockets or feelings to interfere with that.

Hon. Mr. Bonar

The Hon. Mr. MENZIES.—My honourable friend Dr. Pollen has been charged with trying to frustrate the object of the Government in endeavouring to carry out retrenchment; but, Sir, although the charge has been made by a number of honourable members, it appears to me that the charge is a most unfair one—inconsistent with the sentiments which the honourable gentleman expressed. His desire evidently is, and the resolution if carried out would be, to extend retrenchment still further than the Government desire to carry it. I was surprised, on looking first at the Bill, and reading only the first two sections, to see that the effect of those sections would be very largely to increase the expenditure for this session; and, looking at those sections, and looking no further than those sections, I began to cypher out the possible result, and a feeling of astonishment crept across my mind when I seemed to see that the older members in another place were jockeying the younger members, and, in point of fact, the effect of the two first sections would be to give a very large honorarium to the elder members and a smaller one to the new members; in fact, that the elder members would have a large addition to the honorarium that was supposed to be offered by the Bill, and at the expense of the others. But, fortunately, before I proceeded to take the Council into confidence in this matter, I looked at the 3rd clause, and there I found that the other clauses were governed by the final one; so that, in point of fact, the effect, even in this session, will be a very slight reduction. The object of this resolution, and the object, I trust, of the majority of the members of this Council, will be to carry retrenchment still further in this direction, and to maintain that equality of the honorarium given to members of both Houses which has uniformly prevailed from the earliest meetings of the Assembly, and to continue it still further. The supporters of this resolution are charged with endeavouring to introduce inequality. Why, it is the equality which has hitherto prevailed that they seek to continue, and which this Bill seeks to destroy. Some honourable members have rather taunted those who go with the motion with the fact, or what they assert to be the fact, that the only reason in support of the motion rests on the very able speech of the honourable member who moved it. But the speeches of those who express different views have deduced no arguments which invalidate the arguments used by the Hon. Dr. Pollen. The chief arguments in antagonism to his were in regard to the propriety of making additional allowances to the members of the House of Representatives in consequence of election expenses which they undergo; and I think that argument was fairly shattered by more than one honourable member who referred to the subject, by pointing out that the action taken by any candidate for a seat in the House of Representatives was spontaneous. A candidate was perfectly without compulsion in the conditions in which he came forward, and neither he nor his friends had any right to claim for him any consideration for the expense which he thereby incurred. The result of a candidature at a general election, or at any election, is very much a matter of chance. It may be that A.B. will be elected; but it is quite on the cards that C.D. will be elected; and, if it should so happen that A.B. is elected by a majority of a few votes over C.D., it seems to me extremely partial justice that A.B. should be rewarded for his success, when in the course of the election he has incurred no more expense than, possibly not even so much as, C.D., whereas he gains all the privileges acquired by being successful. He gains the privilege of political power, which every honourable member possesses more or less; he gains the entrée to the best club in the colony; he has access to the library, and has various other privileges which I need not state. And, in order to place the copestone on all these privileges, £50 more is to be given to the honourable member who has won all these things—whilst the other, who might be equally eligible, perhaps more so, simply because he has not been able to poll quite so many votes, gets nothing. That, however, was not the only reason. It is said that members of the House of Representatives have much more work than the members of the Council. To honourable members who have sat in this Council for a number of years the idea that more work is really done by individual members of the other House is very amusing. They certainly keep up longer hours; but I think that the amount of work done, absolute, clear work, is generally confined to a very small number, and that the majority take their work very easily; and I might add a great deal to illustrate what I have said, but the facts are undeniable, and are known very well to all of us. These are the two great claims—namely, election expenses and the amount of work. I do not think that, if the particular amount of work and the character of the work done by the two Houses are contrasted, it will be found that the value of the work done in the other House is very superior. In connection with this question of election expenses, I hope my honourable friend will explain to us how it is that elections can be conducted in Wellington for half the cost of those at any other place. I have been very much puzzled over that problem ever since I was here; and I think it is a problem which the Attorney-General ought to endeavour to solve, for the instruction of the Council. It seems ridiculous, but no doubt there must be some substratum of fact in the matter. What those who support this resolution seek is to maintain that equality which has always prevailed in respect to the matter of the honorarium; and I trust they will be successful. One honourable member strongly deprecated the idea of this Council thwarting the policy of the Government. Other honourable members went a little further, and deprecated the idea of the Council interfering in any way with the financial policy of the Government. The financial policy of the Government was whole and entire, no part of it ought to be meddled with, and any infraction of any part of it might involve the sacrifice of the whole. The doctrine is not altogether a new one, but it has always appeared to me that the chief value of this Council lay in the direction of the independent action which it was ready to take upon every question. The members of this Council are not appointed here as tools for the Government, merely to register what they decree. If the Council is to continue of any value, if it is to continue to be respected, it must continue to express this independent opinion as to what is brought before it, and to do what it thinks is right, whatever the consequences. I do not at all admit that we are necessarily tied down to what have been called constitutional precedents, if we could only look to precedents in the House of Lords—and I am very well aware it has been the practice to look for precedents there, and to be, to a great extent, guided by what we find has been the course in that very illustrious body. The position in this Council is a totally different one and rests on a very different basis from that of the House of Lords. We hold our position simply upon a paper Constitution. Our powers are statutory, and those we have were derived originally, and perhaps principally, from the Constitution Act; and subsequently these powers have been extended and confirmed in some directions by Acts of the Assembly—the Privileges Act, for example. I deny altogether that this Council is debarred from dealing with questions of finance. I think the position was laid down very clearly by the Hon. Dr. Pollen, that under the Constitution Act all questions of finance in any shape must be initiated in the other branch of the Legislature—by a message from the Governor, usually—but none are to be initiated here. But, beyond this restriction, that of debarring the Council from the initiation of financial questions, there is no statutory prohibition from dealing with any financial question that is brought before us. I am quite aware that the custom has been, and perhaps it is a constitutional custom to follow, for this Council not to meddle with financial questions; but that it does not hesitate to reject any financial proposal if it sees it is wrong to entertain it. An honourable member who sometimes complains of the pliancy of the Council deprecated the idea of the Council interfering with this question, seeing it was a financial question, and attacked what he considered a constitutional privilege which the other branch of the Legislature claimed, to control all financial questions. The Council is not always guided by such timid counsels as these. It will be in the recollection of some honourable members that on one occasion they thwarted and reversed the financial policy of the late Colonial Treasurer at a time when he was in the zenith of his power; and its action no doubt completely subverted the policy that the Government of which he was the Colonial Treasurer laid down. I should be very sorry indeed to think that the Council would fail to show this perfect spirit of independence on any occasion on which it was necessary to exhibit it; and in this particular instance I think we should be allowing inequality by agreeing to what is proposed in a Bill which is not under consideration now, but which will be brought before us shortly. We should simply invite further trespasses upon our functions, and encourage the other branch of the Legislature to trample still further upon these functions.

Hon. Mr. Mensies

The Hon. Mr. MILLER.—I shall support the motion of the Hon. Mr. Mantell in regard to the Bill under consideration. I had hoped that there would be no discussion at all upon this honorarium question. It seems to me that it would have been very much more dignified on the part of the Council if it had simply accepted the measure without any debate whatever. However, Sir, when the honourable gentleman whom we all regard as one of the most useful and able members of this Council took up the position which he took up and proposed to show us that we were bound to object to the proposals of the Government, I was quite prepared to put aside my own views for the time being, in order that I might hear what fell from the honourable gentleman, accustomed as I am to listen to what he says with great attention; but I am bound to say that, though I can always follow the honourable gentleman with the greatest ease, on this occasion I utterly failed to understand the arguments he was bringing forward. It seems to me that it would be very much more dignified on our part to pass over this extra honorarium which the members of the other House are to have by this Bill, and accept what is voted, without another word. What is to be the upshot of any opposition which we may offer to this Bill? It is all very well to say that we must defend our privileges and must insist upon the necessity of the two Houses being treated in the same way. It really seems to me that that is all simple moonshine. What on earth can it matter to this Council if the members of the House of Representatives have a small addition to their honorarium beyond what we have? I say that nobody who knows anything at all about the matter can say that the members of the other branch of the Legislature are not put to greater expense than we are put to. They have much larger expenses than we have; and, if it were merely a question of this wretched honorarium, surely the argument that we are here for life ought to settle the question. A member of the House said to me yesterday, "My election cost me all the amount which I shall receive during the three sessions I shall be in this Parliament."

An Hon. MEMBER.—He broke the law.

The Hon. Mr. MILLER.—Not at all. Any honourable member who has fought an election must know that he cannot conduct an election without great expense, especially in a large district. I say there has been no argument whatever in defence of our not passing this measure, and I say, further, that, even if I could feel that I could go with the Hon. Dr. Pollen, I would pocket my dignity for the sake of supporting the Government in the systematic economy which I believe they are anxious to introduce. Even if the position taken up by the Hon. Dr. Pollen were much stronger, I would still vote for the Government, because I say, if there is one body more than another in this colony whose bounden duty it is to assist the Government in every possible way in retrenchment, it is the Legislative Council; and, whatever you may say about ignoring the vox populi, and not caring for public opinion—and I quite admit we ought not to be swayed by any fear of public opinion—I do not think we ought to ignore and put aside altogether from us the light in which we shall appear to the people, as obstructing the measures of the Government. I say it is a matter of very great importance to this Council what view the people will take; and I am perfectly certain of this: that, whatever may be the motive—and I am not imputing any motives whatever; I know that the Hon. Dr. Pollen is quite incapable of harbouring any sordid motives—he and those who are backing him up now ought not to forget that they will be exposed, inevitably exposed, to a charge of having been actuated by sordid motives.

An Hon. MEMBER.—By whom?

The Hon. Mr. MILLER.—By the people. I say, from one end of New Zealand to the other, it will be said that a portion, at any rate, of the Legislative Council were anxious to keep the honorarium at a higher rate.

The Hon. Dr. POLLEN.—The honourable gentleman has entirely misstated the whole of what I said. We wish to have no increase of the honorarium on the part of the Council. We wish to save the Treasury of the colony from being called upon to pay, in the next four years, £18,000 or £20,000 for expenses which, as we think, it is not necessary to allow.

The Hon. Mr. MILLER.—I never for a moment denied that that was the object of the honourable gentleman. I do not say that he does not wish to reduce and retrench to the utmost in his power; but I say the action being taken now by him and some other honourable gentlemen will be regarded in another light altogether; and honourable members must not forget that they are exposing themselves to a charge of the nature which I have described. I do not think the honourable gentleman, with all his influence, will be able to insist upon such a change as is apparently contemplated. The thing will come again in some other shape. I say, again, I think it will be very much more dignified of us to pocket this little difference between the two Houses, and simply pass the measure without any further debate. It has been stated that the difference in the treatment of the two Houses puts an indignity upon us. The honourable gentleman said it was invidious and unjustifiable. I think it would be better if the two Houses were treated alike; but I say that, this having been done, I think it would be much more dignified for us to accept the position without any further argument. It will not hurt our dignity, and we shall be in a much stronger position in the future if we accept this now—we shall be in a position to insist upon further retrenchment, as much as we deem desirable. I am not going to take up the time of the Council further. The matter has been thoroughly well threshed out, and every phase of the question has been put before the Council. But I do most sincerely trust that this Council will not place itself in the position of obstructing a Government measure which, I believe, is entirely in the interest of very necessary retrenchment.

The Hon. Captain FRASER.—I cannot but regret that the Government cannot see its way to do away with the honorarium altogether. If that had been done all this wrangling would not have been heard. I myself do not like to be put at a lower level than the members of the other House, particularly when I think that the ink is hardly dry upon the guarantee which—in face of the power of the Attorney-General and the majority of the other House—we have fixed in the Midland Railway Bill, which will in future save the colony several millions of money. I do not intend to say any more, except that I intend to support the resolution of the Hon. Dr. Pollen.

The Hon. Mr. ACLAND.—I wish to say how thoroughly I agree with every word that has fallen from the Hon. Mr. Miller. I think it would be, as he said, the greatest mistake we could make to throw any opposition in the way of this Bill. The Bill is not complete; I think it is in some things rather awkward. The main thing which I think is unfair is that, while it proposes that members of the Legislative Council who reside in Wellington shall receive nothing, members of the House of Representatives who reside in Wellington are to receive the whole. Then, the Hon. Dr. Pollen is very anxious to save money, and pointed out several ways in which that might be done. I hope this Bill will be carried, but I do not know what would be the effect of throwing out this measure. The present Ministry are evidently determined to adopt a system of retrenchment. They began by reducing the salary of the next Governor, and also reducing their own salaries; and they call upon the members of both Houses to submit to a reduction of their remuneration. I hope, therefore, that we shall not throw any obstacle in the way of this measure, although we could not stop it altogether. Almost every paper in the colony would be saying, if we rejected the measure, "Here are the gentlemen who are put in for life, and the only thing they care for is the honorarium." I do not say that that would be the case with us, but that is what the papers would say. I dare say we shall see this debate commented upon in the newspapers as it is. I shall vote for the second reading of the Bill.

The Hon. Mr. LAHMANN.—Sir, I beg to say a few words in explanation of the way in which I am going to vote. It must be apparent to every member in this House that each member is determined to assist the Government in carrying out their retrenchment proposals. Therefore the questions are simply these: What are the means to arrive at this retrenchment? and are these means justifiable or not? I fully agree with the motion brought forward by the Hon. Dr. Pollen, and I have stated over and over again that, if we Councillors were getting nothing, and the members of the other House nothing, I should not have anything to say against it. I do not care whether or not I can afford it—if I cannot afford it I can stay at home; but I am certainly of the opinion that it is an injustice that members of the other House should be rewarded—for what? It is almost in the shape of a bribe to make the gentlemen of the other House willing to pass the Bill. I have been moving in politics very many years, and I have always found that at the elections the people themselves have never the slightest complaint against the Legislative Council. It has happened that candidates have forgotten the services rendered by this Council, and have adopted the rôle of the mountebank, in order to say something to arouse the independent electors against the Council. But, notwithstanding that, the people of the colony are well aware of the reason for having a Council, and know that the savings which have been effected by the Council have been very great. I am positive there is not a member of this Council who would not willingly sacrifice even the little he is going to receive this year, provided this retrenchment scheme was carried out in the general policy of the Government. But what we cannot understand is, why one branch of the Assembly should get pay to which they are not entitled. I agree with the sentiment expressed by the Hon. Dr. Pollen, that the expenses of members are not such that the colony is responsible for them. Either they are responsible for that themselves, or their constituents are responsible. It often happens that in many instances unsuccessful candidates have spent more than the successful one; therefore I cannot understand for my life why it should be that members of the other branch of the Legislature should be rewarded—I call it rewarded, and nothing else. It is not due to them in the least. It has been stated, and rightly so, that this retrenchment will reduce the honorarium of the old members of the House by only £5, while the members of the Council are asked to contribute more than 52 per cent. We, however, do not object. We say, "As retrenchment is the order of the day, let it be carried out generally, and not partially only." With reference to the Acts which come before us, we should try to see how far they can be made effective. But I say this cannot be altered in any way, except for expediency, and I am most willing to assist the Government in that. I shall vote for the motion of the Hon. Dr. Pollen with all my heart; but, if the Government could see their way clearly to alter the Bill and reduce the honorarium in an even manner, I would vote for the Bill.

The Hon. Mr. MANTELL.—As I see there is a desire on the part of the Government that I should withdraw the amendment I have moved on this question, I think it will simplify matters very much if I do so.

The Hon. Mr. RICHMOND.—The straw has been well threshed out; yet I must say a few words on this subject. The previous question, which has been withdrawn, meets my view completely. I feel very much surprised at finding so much feeling shown by honourable gentlemen. I recognise the force of the arguments used against the expenses of members in connection with elections being paid by the State. I think there is a great deal to be said against it; and had that motion had reference to that proposal I should have supported it. I do not care what the newspapers or any uninformed person may say; but I do care for my self-respect, and I should lose that if I were to weigh personal considerations on such an occasion as this, when the battle of economy is the battle of the colony. The right of the Council to interfere with a financial Bill is not unmistakably denied by the Constitution; but, on the other hand, I think that the thirty-five years or more of precedent during which we have not, on any important occasion, interfered with the finances of the country ought to have established a custom stronger almost than statute. I hope this Bill will be adopted.

The Hon. Mr. SHIRMSKI.—I wish to say a few words before you put the question. It is my intention to support the Hon. Dr. Pollen in the motion that he has made, and I have no fear of any accusation that may be brought against me for the vote that I intend to give. I have only one object in view, and that is to come here and do my duty, and be independent. The Hon. Mr. Oliver remarked that it was a pity that no one among those who intend to support the honourable gentleman got up to speak. The Hon. Mr. Miller has told us that the light in which we should appear would be very bad if we threw out the Bill. I have no object in view in appearing here but solely to do my duty. There may be honourable gentlemen who have other objects in view, and, in the end, may yet receive a very large share of the public money. But I have no other object in view, and, from the commencement of the session till the end of it, I have never been absent from my place in the Council for a single day; but I find there are other honourable gentlemen who have been absent for two months, and then come in at the fag-end of the session and tell us we are getting too much honorarium. Neither was I absent from my duties when a member of the other Chamber, and, as far as this question is concerned, I know my duty to the public. I am willing to forego every shilling of my honorarium if it is in the interests of the colony, and will assist the Government in carrying out their plan of retrenchment. I do not ask for a single penny. I have been twenty-six years in the colony, and have endeavoured to give my assistance and services in various local bodies without pay wherever they were wanted; and it is not from any sordid motive of receiving payment that I am here. As a rule, we find a second session of Parliament in the same year usually occupies a longer period than the first, because, in the first session, usually, a dissolution takes place at the beginning, and the second session occupies a longer time; and no doubt this session would have occupied a much longer time had it not been for the fact that we were approaching

Hon. Mr. Lahmann

Christmas time. The Hon. Mr. Waterhouse has stated that honourable gentlemen would receive £260 for the year. That is true for the present year; but what will it be in the future? I have been in the other Chamber when I sat for five months and five months and a half, and I ask the honourable gentleman whether he considers the amount in question sufficient to pay an honourable member's expenses under such circumstances. But I can say this: that I contested four hardly-fought elections, and never have my expenses been more than £20 on any one occasion. I have said to the electors, "If you want my services, and you think they are of any good to you, I will give them you; but to spend money I refuse." In reference to telegrams, a good deal of what has been said is absurd. You must remember that we have been here in Wellington since last April, off and on: that is nine months; and if members are to be charged with sordid motives under these circumstances it is rather unfair. In regard to local charities and subscriptions, many of the honourable gentlemen in the Council are as often called upon to put their hands in their pockets as members of the other House, and, indeed, more so, because they are in what is supposed to be a better position, and they have to put down pounds where others would put down shillings. I know that, for I have had experience of it; therefore I fail to see where the argument comes in about expense. I object to the distinction made between the two Chambers, and shall give my vote for the motion.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—Before the question is put I should like to say a few words in reference to what has fallen from some of my honourable friends around. In reference to what my honourable friend Mr. Scotland has said—that I "could not get elected by any constituency in the colony; and why?—because I know too much;" well, all I can reply is that I do not think the honourable gentleman could get elected by any constituency in the colony; and why?—because he knows too little. I come now to what the Hon. Dr. Pollen has said. He said he was sorry I had charged him with having sordid motives. Now, I have known the honourable gentleman a long way towards fifty years, and I know perfectly well that he knows it did not enter into my mind; and I am sorry that he should have accused me unjustly. I did not charge any single member here with voting on the Bill from any motives of anything but the very best description. But I said I was perfectly certain that the public at large, and the papers as well, would not take the same view of it. Whether honourable members are really voting from conscientious motives or not I really do not know, and did not express any single opinion on it. The Hon. Dr. Pollen has also stated that he did not know the policy of the Government, and that he does not think that we know what our policy is. The Government have been considering their policy for two months, and their policy is before the country. Therefore it is absurd to say that we do not understand what our policy is, seeing that we have it before the Legislature. There was, at all events, a clear plan placed before the country, and this plan has, I am sure, met with the general assent of the country. I agree, however, with the honourable gentleman's remark that a great deal of our difficulties arose not from the small matters, such as the honorarium, but from extravagance on a large scale. No doubt there has been extravagance on a very large scale; I do not deny that. I am satisfied there has been: but this comes from my honourable friend with not the best grace, seeing that he was a Minister at the time when the greatest possible extravagance came before the country, in the shape of the tremendous scheme for borrowing ten millions.

The Hon. Dr. POLLEN.—I was not in the Government in 1873. I went in and took office not for the purpose of assisting borrowing, but as a drag on expenditure.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—I will just see how the matter really stands during the time after the honourable gentleman was in the Government. I was not in the Government for several years after the great borrowing policy was initiated; and, if I do not mistake very much, my honourable friend proposed some of the principal measures for borrowing money in this very Council.

The Hon. Dr. POLLEN.—Hear, hear.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—Yet the honourable gentleman speaks of this great extravagance, making it appear as if it were all attributable to members of the present Government. To one member of the present Government, no doubt, it was attributable, because Major Atkinson was then in the Government. The honourable gentleman says we have no policy, except that we do a little retrenchment here and there. I ask the honourable gentleman to look through the Financial Statement. I am afraid he has not read it. At all events, if he has read it, it appears to me he must have forgotten what he has read. Since the Council broke up I have looked through the Financial Statement, and I find it proposes to reduce the Governor's salary, to reduce the Ministers' salaries, and to reduce their travelling-allowances; it proposes dealing with the Ministerial residences; it proposes to deal with Legislative expenditure; it proposes a reduction in the number of members of both Houses; and it proposes to reduce all the departmental expenditure. Then we come to what my honourable friend stated as to another matter. He said that we have been granting too large subsidies to local bodies. I say we have been doing so; but the Financial Statement tells us that this is to end. With regard to the railways, does it not tell him the same thing? Is it not that certain expenditure is to be continued only so far as is absolutely necessary to bring the railways to points at which they can be used, and that then the expenditure is to cease? It provides that no new railways are to commence, and that borrowing is, within a limited time, to cease; and that expenditure on railways and public works is to cease absolutely. Could anything more have been done? The honourable gentleman tells us that he could show us where we could save £20,000. The great chief he served under in 1878 tells us that he has a scheme which will get the colony out of its trouble. My honourable friend was here with him then. He says that £20,000 could be saved in some way, but he does not tell us how. Possibly he might be induced to sell the secret; perhaps it would be worth something to buy. If he would sell us the secret, and allow me to appraise the price as soon as we got the benefit from it, I would enter into a contract with him in regard to it. The honourable gentleman said—but I am quite sure that it was a mistake on his part—that I stated to the Council that I would compel them to accept the Bill. Could I be so imprudent? It is contrary to my view of conducting matters of this kind—the holding-out of anything in the shape of threats. I held out no threat of any description. I said nothing, except as a matter of argument, to promote the conclusion I desired. Certainly, so far from threatening, I carefully avoided anything of the kind. Why? Because I was quite sure it would rather destroy my object than assist me to carry it out; and therefore my honourable friend was mistaken; and I am quite sure the Council will bear me out that I never made any such threat as has been attributed to me. What I did say, and what I repeat, is that the Government have spent the last two months in endeavouring to sketch out a policy whereby our revenue and expenditure may be made equal—at all events, whereby our expenditure shall not be larger than our income. That is our object. The question under consideration now may not be a very large matter. I regard as of more importance than the saving of the money the example which we shall set. We have set an example with the Governor's salary, with the Ministers' salaries, and with the House of Representatives, with the view of saving expenses as far as possible; and I ask, is the Council going to stand out against the saving of expenditure? My honourable friend says that what they desire is that we should be put on the same footing as the members of the House of Representatives. I have discussed this point before, and shall not go into the matter again. But I am quite sure, if honourable gentlemen will look around, they will see that they will have attributed to them a desire not to decrease expenditure. I do not say that that is what they want, but I know that is what the public will say. That is what they do say now, and that is what they will say. I am quite sure that the Council will bear me out in this: that so long as I have sat in this Council I have been as careful of the privileges and position of the Council as any other member of it; and it is because I desire that the Council should stand well with the public and the world at large that I think they should take a course which would place them above suspicion. This is my wish and my desire.

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS.—The Hon. the

Hon. Sir F. Whitaker

Attorney-General stated that I wished him to take back the Bill and make provision in a new Bill to pay my own personal expenses.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—No; I did not say so. I said that the honourable gentleman wished me to take back the Bill and bring in another, the effect of which would be to give the honourable gentleman a larger honorarium.

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS.—There was nothing in my remarks which would lead honourable gentlemen to come to that conclusion. What I want is that the members of both Houses should be put in the same position, and that the Bill should not be retrospective for this session; and I said that honourable members could not recoup expenses out of £50 for this session.

The Hon. Dr. POLLEN.—I may explain that I did not say that the Government had no policy. I said they had not a complete policy. My honourable friend must admit that there is a portion of the policy of the Government as yet undetermined, and a very important portion of it—that which relates to the Customs tariff of the colony. The Prime Minister has declared that it was impossible, in the time which was given him, to consider the question of the revision of the tariff. That is a very material portion of the policy of the Government, the most important portion remaining to be disposed of; and it was in this sense that I said the policy had not yet crystallized, that it was in course of development, that it was not complete. I am sure it is not yet complete.

The Council divided.

AYES, 16.

Brett	Lahmann	Reynolds
Buckley	Martin	Shephard
Chamberlin	Menzies	Shrimaki
Dignan	Peter	Taiaroa
Fraser	Pollen	Wahawaha.
Holmes

NOES, 12.

Acland	Miller	Swanson
Baillie	Oliver	Waterhouse
Grace	Richmond	Whitaker
McLean	Stevens	Williams.

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Bonar	Barnicoat
Campbell	Pharazyn
Morris.	Kenny.

Majority for, 4.

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER, in moving the second reading of the Parliamentary Honorary and Privileges Bill, said,—I think the question that is before us on this Bill has been so fully discussed during the last two days in the Council that I should only be wasting the time of the Council if I went over the ground again. I believe that it has been looked at from every point of view in which it can be looked at, and, under the circumstances, anything further that I can say would not change the views of any honourable member as to the way in which he is going to vote on this occasion. I hope the Council will feel that this is an important occasion, and an occasion on which honourable members should, setting aside all minor feelings, and in the special circumstances of the case, support the Government in the policy they have endeavoured to lay before us. It is an essential part of that policy that the several reductions should be carried out as provided in the several Bills which follow on the Order Paper. The first Bill, at all events, has been fully discussed. With regard to the others very little, I think, need be said. I apprehend that honourable members will accept these without difficulty, and probably without question. I ask the Council to vote for the second reading of this Bill, and thus enable the Government to complete the policy of retrenchment which they desire to carry out.

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS.—The Hon. Mr. Stevens said that the Government could not take my advice. Had he studied this question he would have seen that it was not only my advice but the feeling of the members of this Council that the Government should put both Houses on the same footing. The principal fault I have to find with this Bill is that it makes a distinction between the two Houses. Of course this has been pretty well discussed; but I think it is right, before I move the adjournment of the debate, to explain my reasons for doing so. No one would sooner advocate retrenchment and support the Government in any scheme that they introduced than myself; but I hope to see the Government schemes put on such a footing that they may include justice along with retrenchment. If the Government had proposed even a much larger reduction in the parliamentary expenditure than what they have, if this reduction had been equal in both Houses I should have supported them in the Bill. There is a very objectionable retrospective clause. The Act provides for "reimbursing members of the Assembly their expenses in relation to their attendance on Parliament, and further to define their privileges." This Bill is simply an amendment of the Act, and I hold that the Government should not entertain retrospective legislation in a case like this, whereby the honorarium of members of the Council will be reduced to a sum that will not reimburse members their expenses for the session. By the present Act it is provided that an honorarium shall be granted to members of both Houses of Parliament of £105. By the Bill it is proposed to grant to members of the House of Representatives who were members during last session a sum of £100, being exactly £5 less than what they are entitled to receive under the present Act. But in the case of the members of this Council the reduction is to £50, being £55 less than what they are entitled to receive under the Act. A great deal has been said about local expenses, and expenses of sending telegrams, which members of the other branch of the Legislature are put to. I have gone through more elections, I believe, than any man in the colony—that is to say, elections to the Provincial Council and the House of Representatives—and I can say this much: that all the time I was a member for Dunedin, both in the Provincial Council and the General Assembly, my expenses never came to £10—that is to say, not one single election cost me a £10 note. Then, with regard to the expense of telegrams, I know quite well that, up to very lately at any rate, honourable members, if they had to send telegrams on public business, always got them franked, and very seldom paid for the telegrams themselves. Now, I am going to move, That the present debate be adjourned, in order to give the Government the opportunity of giving effect to the resolution just passed. By moving the adjournment of the debate we do not throw out the Bill at all. I trust the Government will give the matter their fullest consideration, so that they will be enabled to bring down a Bill in such a shape that it will not cause resistance on the part of the Council.

The Hon. Mr. MANTELL.—Owing to the position I took up with regard to the resolution which has just passed, I have not had any opportunity of expressing my opinion on the Bill. But other honourable gentlemen have availed themselves extensively of speaking on the resolution. I may therefore ask the Council, already wearied with the subject, to allow me grace for five minutes in which I may give expression to my reasons for the position I take in regard to this Bill. I have made it no secret at all that I believe that the honorarium to members of this Council was valuable chiefly inasmuch as it contained a safeguard against the Council being swamped by a Government in a fit of temper or disappointment; and I have repeatedly said that I should always vote for the honorarium until there was some limit placed to the number of members of the Council. It is with great reluctance that I now feel under the necessity of surrendering this safeguard; and I do trust, if this protection is removed from the Council, honourable members will pursue the even tenor of their way without listening to any intimidation or anything of the kind. If any swamping comes, let it come, but let us take it calmly, at any rate. Of course it is easy to understand that, if members may be added to this Council without any additional cost to the Consolidated Fund, the Government might, in its haste, summon a sufficient number of members residing within three miles of Wellington to overwhelm votes adverse to their policy at a particular time. Such a thing may happen; but I only hope that, if we put it in the power of this or succeeding Governments to take such a course, the apprehension of its happening may not in the least degree affect the free and independent exercise of our judgment on any questions brought before us. The time has now come when retrenchment is cried for all over the country, and very wisely so. It appeared to me twenty years ago that it might be commenced then. However, it was not done then, and there is the more necessity for doing it now. It is proposed in this Bill that honourable members residing in Wellington, or within a certain distance of it, should receive no honorarium. The Government will probably try how the experiment acts. If it succeeds, the Government may, in some future session, propose to carry it further. I shall have great pleasure, Sir, with this limitation, in supporting this Bill.

The Hon. Mr. SCOTLAND.—I think we ought to be obliged to the Hon. Mr. Reynolds for the suggestion he has thrown out. The motion of the Hon. Dr. Pollen which has just been carried has shown what the feeling of the Council is on the subject. The Council declared its desire to be placed on the same footing as the other branch of the Legislature. Now, if this is carried it will afford an opportunity to those who have sent us this Bill to review what they have done and make another arrangement which will do justice and meet our views, and will show that they are not like those persons, referred to by an American writer, who are ready to shed the last drop of their brother's blood for the good of their country.

The Hon. Dr. GRACE.—I shall feel bound to support the Bill. I think the Ministers have given a sufficient pledge of their desire to effect economy by so severely retrenching their own salaries. I think that the House of Representatives have shown a sincere desire to advance retrenchment by their acceptance of this measure. The country is deeply indebted to them. I could not, however I might be otherwise disposed, Sir, refrain from supporting this measure when I realise the fact that there are a great number of members of the Civil Service who will leave without any commensurate remuneration, and others who will suffer serious reductions in their salary, which mean a great hardship to those who have wives and families to keep. Many of them will be sent on the road to insolvency, and have to remodel their old mode of living at a time when they are least able to do so. In the face of this fact I cannot but support this Bill. I look upon the measure all the same as an incompatibility. It is called an Honorarium Bill, and yet it is to pay expenses. It really ceases to be an Honorarium Bill under these circumstances, and becomes a Payment of Members Bill for the House of Representatives. The absurdity of the Bill is to be seen in the fact of the difference it makes between resident members of the House of Representatives and members of the Council. The contention of the Bill is that any possible City-of-Wellington member of the House is necessarily more valuable than a resident member of the Legislative Council. This is an absurdity. I cannot believe that my services, after seventeen years' experience, are less valuable than those of any possible member for the City of Wellington. To show, further, how the Bill is irreconcilable with itself, I find the principle of the Bill to be that members of the House of Representatives shall have an allowance for expenses of £50 a year, and yet resident members of the House of Representatives are to receive £25 only, in conflict with that principle. In addition to that, they receive honorarium, whilst resident members of the Council, in one part of the Bill, receive nothing as such, but as members of the General Assembly receive £25 a year for expenses, and this in contradiction to the spirit of the Bill. Therefore I occupy the position of a member of the General Assembly, and am entitled to £25; but as a member of the Council I receive nothing. I therefore occupy the position of a Councillor without honorarium, but am to be degraded to the position of receiving £25 for expenses which I am not supposed to incur.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—I think that must be a mistake in the Bill.

The Hon. Dr. GRACE.—There are more mistakes than that, I can assure my honourable friend. It is, as drafted, an offensive measure. The Bill is unworthy of the Government. When you empty a man's pocket you ought to do it with decent politeness. However, for the sake of the country the Government shall have my support.

The Hon. Dr. POLLEN.—As a point of order, I would ask you, Sir, to decide whether this is one of the Bills having the character in regard to which you have ruled that it is not competent for this Council to alter them in any way.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—I can reply to that question, because I have already considered it, as one that might probably be asked. I have no doubt that this is strictly a money Bill. It is a Bill to assist the general financial arrangements of the Government. If it stood alone there might be a question about it; but, as it is a part of the financial policy of the Government, the Council, in my opinion, has no power whatever to amend this Bill. It is before them to reject or to accept it as they think fit to do.

The Hon. Dr. POLLEN.—In that case, then, the Council will be unable, on your ruling, to correct any mistakes in the Bill, such as that which has been pointed out by the Hon. Dr. Grace. Under these circumstances I intend to support the amendment of my honourable friend Mr. Reynolds, and I will do so provided the adjournment he asks for shall be for a short time. I do not myself frequent the lobby, nor hear much of what is going on there; but I have heard, Sir, that a very considerable number of honourable gentlemen who represent constituencies in another place are most anxious that this Bill should not pass in its present shape, seeing the objection which has been taken to it in this Chamber; and it is for that purpose—to enable the Government to ascertain the new views of the House on this subject, and to arrive at some modus vivendi between the two Chambers which shall allay the irritation which the present proceedings have undeniably caused—that I venture to recommend my honourable friend the Attorney-General to accept the amendment, and allow a day or two for the adjournment.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—The Council will permit me to say that, should there be any amendment required on the question referred to, about the General Assembly, or anything of that sort, it will be competent to have the correction made by message from the Governor.

Hon. Mr. Mantell

The Hon. Mr. BUCKLEY.—Sir, you having ruled that it is a money Bill, I venture to assert that, when I called your attention to the position of the Bill on its initiation in the Council the other day, your ruling that it could be discussed by the Council was not strictly correct. I called your attention to the fact that the provisions of a certain Act had not been complied with. You said on that occasion that because it did not propose additional taxation my point of order was not in order; and therefore the Government were quite right in introducing the Bill without the order of the Governor, as required by the Constitution Act, or accompanied with the usual certificate which should have accompanied it, coming up from the other Chamber. It seems to me that the two rulings are, with all respect to you, Sir, inconsistent.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—I think the rulings are perfectly consistent. The accuracy of the rulings I gave when the question was put to me the other day will be borne out by May's Parliamentary Practice. The rule is this: Where there is a reduction of taxation, it is competent to introduce such Bills. But, where it is the intention to impose taxation, Bills are introduced by message from the Governor or with a verbal recommendation from His Excellency by the mouth of a Minister; and there is no inconsistency in treating this as a money Bill.

The Hon. Mr. MANTELL.—I would ask an explanation, Sir. Are we being asked to pass this Bill with a provision which is confessedly not intended? There is no doubt a clerical error in it, and if a correction could be inserted it would save time.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—Generally speaking, clerical errors can be amended; but I should avoid giving an opinion, and ask for time to consider how far it could be corrected. I should think a verbal alteration could be made. I will proceed to put the question.

The Council divided on the question, "That the debate be adjourned."

AYES, 14.

Brett	Lahmann	Shephard
Buckley	Martin	Shrimski
Chamberlin	Menzies	Taiaroa
Dignan	Pollen	Wahawaha.
Fraser	Reynolds

NOES, 14.

Acland	McLean	Swanson
Baillie	Miller	Waterhouse
Barnicoat	Oliver	Whitaker
Grace	Richmond	Williams.
Mantell	Stevens

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Bonar	Scotland
Kenny	Morris
Peacock.	Reeves.

The Hon. the SPEAKER gave his vote in favour of the "Noes."

Motion negatived.

On the question, That the Bill be read a second time,

The Hon. Captain FRASER said,—I have to say that I intend on this occasion to vote with the Government.

The Council divided on the question, "That the Bill be read a second time."

AYES, 18.

Acland	Lahmann	Richmond
Baillie	Mantell	Stevens
Barnicoat	McLean	Swanson
Dignan	Miller	Waterhouse
Fraser	Oliver	Whitaker
Grace	Peter	Williams.

NOES, 9.

Brett	Martin	Shephard
Buckley	Menzies	Taiaroa
Chamberlin	Pollen	Wahawaha.

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Bonar	Scotland
Kenny	Morris
Peacock.	Reeves.

Majority for, 9.

Bill read a second time.

MINISTERS' SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES BILL.

On the question, That this Bill be read a second time,

The Hon. Mr. SHRIMSKI said,—Before you put this question, Sir, I venture to say I have all respect for the Ministry, but I think they have gone rather too far in retrenchment as far as their own salaries are concerned. I think Ministers of the Crown ought to receive a sum which would enable them to keep up their position with a certain amount of dignity, and I do not think £800 a year would enable them to do that. I merely wish to express my opinion that the amount they have consented to accept is insufficient for the position they occupy.

Bill read a second time.

The Council adjourned at twenty-five minutes past nine o'clock p.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Thursday, 8th December, 1887.

First Reading—Imprest Supply Bill (No. 3)—Oamaru Harbour Board Loan Bill—Representation Bill—Imprest Supply Bill (No. 3)—Representation Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER took the chair at half-past two o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Pharmacy Bill.

IMPREST SUPPLY BILL (No. 3).

This Bill was sent by message from the Governor.

Major ATKINSON.—I move, That the message be referred to the Committee of Supply. This is a matter which has escaped my notice owing to the press of business during the past day or two, and it is necessary that it should be considered at once. I hope, therefore, that the House will consent to the Bill being passed through all its stages. Of course, if the honourable gentleman opposite would prefer it being postponed until half-past seven, I shall offer no objection to that course being taken.

Sir J. VOGEL.—I should certainly prefer its being left over until half-past seven, and I think that at half-past seven the honourable gentleman should give us an explanation as to the course of business for the rest of the session. We have asked for this day after day, and the honourable gentleman has simply said that he would not make a statement. When going into Committee of Supply we have a right, even a small minority of the House has a right, to ask for information. We have felt during the present week that the honourable gentleman at the head of the Government has a power in his hands, and is disposed to use it in a very arbitrary manner. I asked whether the honourable gentleman could give us the information on Monday. On Monday he said he would give it to us on Tuesday; but Tuesday has come and gone; so has Wednesday; and here is Thursday, and we have no such explanation: and I think that we ought to have the views of the Government as to the course that business is to take. An important question is as to how the honourable gentleman proposes that we should vote the year's appropriations. How many days does he propose to give us to decide questions relating to expenditure? And especially does it interest a large number of members to know what opportunity we are to have of discussing the proposed alterations in the education system of the colony. I will say no more, but will express the hope that the honourable gentleman will, to the best of his ability, this evening, when the proposal is made that you leave the chair, give the House the information for which I think the House has a right to ask.

Major ATKINSON.—Sir, the request of the honourable gentleman would, under ordinary circumstances, be a perfectly proper one, and the Government would be to blame if they were not prepared to give the information asked for. But my difficulty is this: I cannot tell when the honourable gentleman's party will permit the ordinary business to go on. If the honourable gentleman can tell me when this Bill will be finished, which ought to have been finished two days ago, then I will tell him when I can make this statement. If what we hear is correct, it seems impossible for me to make any statement during the day.

Sir J. VOGEL.—Will the honourable gentleman excuse my asking him plainly this: Does he consider two days a long time to consider and discuss such an important measure as the Representation Bill?

Major ATKINSON.—No, I do not think it was anything too long to discuss it; but yesterday we were not discussing it at all. Last night we were informed by one honourable gentleman that he had been deliberately delaying the Bill all the evening, because he was determined that we should not take the third reading yesterday. We were told that, and we know what took place during the afternoon. I say this: I should have told the honourable gentleman on Monday, as I was prepared to do, until I found the attitude that he and his party were taking up with regard to the business of the House, which is, apparently, a determination to delay—until I found that, I hoped that the Public Works Statement would be delivered on Wednesday, and that we should be able to resume the financial debate on Friday. That is what I should have told the honourable gentleman, and I should have told him what Bills we were prepared to go on with. But it is impossible now for the Government to make any statement to the House in consequence of the extraordinary delays which are, as it seems to me, wantonly provoked by certain honourable gentlemen; and it is possible that we shall have to ask the House to sit after Christmas. That is a possibility, for the Government intend that the House shall not break up until the measures which they consider necessary for the good government of the country are passed. We are not going to leave our work undone in this respect. That is really my difficulty, and I hope the House will understand distinctly that it is from no desire to keep back information, but simply because I cannot tell when the Government business will be permitted to go on. That is, as I have said, the whole difficulty; and as soon as I am assured that only reasonable discussion will take place, and not obstruction, upon the Government measures, then I shall be able immediately to tell the House, and shall be delighted to tell them, what business we propose to take.

Motion agreed to.

On the question, That Order of the Day No. 18 be fixed for half-past seven this evening,

Mr. SEDDON said,—Sir, I cannot allow the remarks of the Premier to go unchallenged. He has said that, if they were ordinary difficulties that the House was under, the statement which he has promised a week ago, and which I say the House should have had in its possession a fortnight ago, would have been made on Monday last. Sir, I say the Premier is treating honourable gentlemen as though they were so many schoolboys; and I, for one, will not submit to this treatment. If the honourable gentleman wishes to conduct the business of the colony in this way, let him take it to himself that, though he may be doing what he thinks will please those who support him, he is not doing justice to the colony. I say there are grave doubts in the colony on very important matters connected with several measures and principles that the Government have submitted; and the longer these delays take place, the longer matters are indefinite, the greater the loss to the colony. Then, the honourable gentleman, I suppose, referred particularly to myself, when he said that a boast had been made of wilful obstruction. I say this to the Premier: that, so long as the forms of the House are conformed with, it is the bounden duty of every honourable member here to use those forms to prevent measures of the pernicious nature of the one he refers to from becoming law. I say that he has no excuse whatever for saying that he will refuse to tell the House what business he intends to bring forward. I say that it is the Premier who has caused the delay. Why has he forced upon the House and the country a measure which is not to have effect for three years? He was the cause of the obstruction yesterday. Did he not, as Premier, the night before say that if a certain amendment were carried he would resign? He cannot deny that; and he did not resign, but he called a caucus of his party, who obstructed the business of the House yesterday when it met at eleven o'clock for the purpose of asking questions. The Premier then moved the adjournment of the House, and said he intended to make an important statement that day at half-past two. He called together his followers, and arrangements were entered into that, I say, are objectionable, and are detrimental to the welfare of the colony. Then, at half-past two he came here and told us that he was going to recommit the Bill. Was not that obstruction? Had not the House by a very large majority decided that an important amendment should be made? And because the honourable member could not get his way, he obstructed the business by forcing the House to recommit the measure. Then, if he uses force, how can he complain when force is used against him? I, for one, resent his interference with the liberty of full and fair discussion. I object to the gag being applied in any way that the Premier likes or thinks fit to use it. Then, the honourable gentleman, not satisfied with that, threatens honourable members again. He says, "If you persist in the way you are going on, it means that the Government will ask the House to sit after Christmas." Another threat from the honourable gentleman! That is the way he carries his measures; that is the way he always conducts business in this House. It is by constantly holding the whip over those who choose to follow him that he carries the measures that he has carried, and that he himself has so often had to be a party to repealing. I do not care if we do sit up to Christmas, nor does this side of the House: we are prepared to sit here until the public business is done in such a manner as to be satisfactory and profitable to the people of the colony. The leader of the Opposition told the Premier long ago that we were prepared to sit until such time as the business was done with satisfaction to all concerned. If the honourable gentleman wishes to hold this threat over those who support him—to say, "You must be dumb, you must not move; if you carry an amendment again, I shall keep you here until after Christmas"—if he wishes to do that, and if it affects his supporters, it may, but the threat will have no effect on this side of the House. We care not for a threat of that kind. Then, the honourable gentleman speaks of reasonable discussion. Does he mean to say that, when you alter the Representation Bill to the extent of taking away a third of the number of members, we should pass it in less than three days? Then, when an amendment was proposed, the Government made it a Ministerial question and promised the House they would resign, and then backed out of it and made their supporters eat the leak. Is that the way we are to have fair discussion, reasonable discussion? By a majority of five the House has said that they have no confidence in the Government, as plainly as ever language put it. This amendment said distinctly, "We will not trust you with power to dissolve Parliament and send twenty-five members about their business at any time you like. We do not consider you are the gentlemen who should have that power." The Premier said, "We must have that power, and if you do not give us that power we will resign;" and, in the face of that, by a majority of five, the House said, "Resign." Sir, where is the resignation? A caucus was held as usual, and then the day after the Premier got over his difficulty he tries to eliminate altogether from the minds and memory of honourable members what has occurred. And he says that so long as there is fair discussion he does not object. I say that yesterday was wasted by the action of the Government, because they did not accept the will of the majority of this House. The House, by a large majority, decided that it was too great and unconstitutional a power that they wished to hold over members. Sir, we are not at all responsible for the position; and I say this now: that the measure I have been alluding to—the Representation Bill, the alteration in the numbers of this House, the power which the Government wish to have to dictate as to when the electoral boundaries shall be altered—I say that is of such importance that I do not think the House has come to a fair conclusion, and that I believe a further discussion will be of benefit to the country. It may not be of immediate benefit; but when honourable members go back to their constituents, and the people of the colony understand the importance of the Bill, they will say that the Premier has endeavoured to use every means at his disposal in order to burke a fair discussion. I say, Sir, the Premier ought to have taken the House and the country into his confidence as to the business that he intended to propose. He told us up to to-day that he intended to conclude the business before Christmas. I say we should have known a week ago what the Government intend to do. We are told, "We intend to carry through that which we desire; and it means this: that if there is further obstruction—unless you are good boys and do as we tell you, we will make you—we will keep you here till after Christmas." Sir, I say, with regard to that statement, that I am prepared to stay here after Christmas. I am prepared to take my Christmas dinner in Wellington, and not go home until the business of the country has been disposed of. Let those honourable gentlemen who are not prepared to back the Government go home, and we here shall be able to carry on the business without them. The Minister of Education shakes his head. Sometimes that means something,—sometimes nothing, because there is nothing in it to shake. I say the responsibility of what has occurred rests upon the Premier and not upon this side of the House. The House and the country, I say, have a right to know what business the Government intend to proceed with; and, if the Premier wishes to pursue this course, and say, day after day, on some paltry excuse, that he refuses to take the House into his confidence, the responsibility must rest with him and not on this House. I do not care whether the Government do not tell the House distinctly between this and Christmas what they intend to do. As to my own action, I shall assist in passing what I consider ought to be passed, and I shall use all reasonable means in my power to prevent the transaction of any business that I think ought not to be done. I have told the Premier, so far as the Opposition is concerned, that I belong to a party of one, and that is myself; and anything I say or do I hope he will take in that light. The leader proper of the Opposition has asked a fair question; he has received an answer that is not at all satisfactory. He may be satisfied with that answer, but I am not. Day after day the Premier has promised to make a statement as to what he intends to do, but that statement has been put off on some frivolous excuse. If it would not be too strong or unparliamentary language to use, I must say that I would not give that credence to the statement of the Premier that should be given to the words of one in his position. He told us that he intended that the Public Works Statement should be delivered last Tuesday: but his action with regard to that matter corresponds with his calling the House on Friday in order to make the Government proposals known. The House met on Friday, and it was immediately adjourned to the Tuesday following. The honourable member seizes any imaginable excuse in order to procrastinate. I am prepared to stay here and do my duty. If the honourable member never makes any definite statement, I shall be as much satisfied as if he told the House at once what he intended to do. He is dribbling the business out purposely, so as to deal with only one or two questions. I am told that the Government have decided that the whole of the estimates should be put through at one sitting; that the Government intend to go into Committee of Supply, and Ways and Means, and to force the estimates through holus-bolus. We are to be asked to swallow the whole of these estimates at one meeting, and allow it to rest entirely with the Government as to the way in which these estimates should be passed. Well, Sir, all I can say is that when those troubles come I shall meet them. If they attempt to force the estimates, the responsibility will rest with them if they are obstructed in that proceeding. I am not prepared to sit here calmly and allow the business to be run through in any way the Government please, more especially as the Government have treated honourable members in the way they have done during the last three or four days. I shall therefore resent the action they now propose to take.

Mr. Seddon

Mr. FISH.—I should just like to take the opportunity of saying this with regard to the Representation Bill before the House last night: We are aware that the Bill has practically been rejected, in the form it now is in, by a majority of this House, and we know that that majority was turned into a minority by a threat on the part of the Premier of resigning his position, thereby inducing those of his own party who were not satisfied with the Bill, and who voted with the amendment of the honourable member for Dunedin West, to recant and do just the opposite. It is not in my province, nor is it my intention, to criticize the conduct of the honourable gentlemen who did that. I am free to admit that they were placed in a difficult position: and at all times honourable gentlemen must pay great deference and consideration to party ties. Therefore I am not one of those who are prepared to say that those honourable gentlemen, in recanting, or in going from the opposition they had previously assumed, have done anything unparliamentary or anything wrong. If the Government have strained the relations between themselves and those of their supporters who have acted in this manner, that is their business. But I say it was and is the duty of the Opposition, seeing that the Bill is now in the position it is in, to obstruct the passage of that Bill as much as it is in their power to do. They were entitled to and ought to use every form of the House to prevent the Bill, of which the majority of the House are not in favour, from being forced on the country until a clear majority of the House were in favour of it. But the position I have taken is this: I said at a meeting of the Opposition yesterday that the Bill ought to be obstructed: that the Opposition as a body ought to obstruct that Bill, and prevent its being made law. A number of the members of the Opposition were not in favour of that course. Had they been in favour of it I should have been prepared to debate the Bill for a considerable time in order to prevent its passing; but I am not prepared to take the onus and responsibility on myself of an individual obstruction. I do not think I should be justified in doing that, and I do not intend doing it, nor have I done it. I do regret that the Opposition did not unanimously, or nearly unanimously, consent to obstruct this Bill to the utmost of their power. I have no hesitation in saying that the position in regard to this Bill is unparalleled; and, if it is not unparliamentary to use such a term, I say it is a most atrocious proceeding on the part of the head of the Government to force a Bill of this kind through the House, under the circumstances. He has taken a responsibility upon himself which is wrong, and which he ought not to take, and which is unfair to the country. And in saying this I wish again to state that I was pledged to, and am in favour of, a reduction of members; but I hold that we now know so much more of the ultimate results that will accrue from the passing of this measure, and the measure that is going to be brought in next session in order to give it so much more force and effect, so much additional light has been thrown on the whole subject, that we are right in demanding that we should be allowed to go to our constituents, and, after explaining the new position of affairs, to come back either to assent to the passing of the Bill or to throw it out altogether. The honourable gentleman is not doing his duty in taking the high, extreme, and tyrannical course he has done on this occasion, and I feel sure that a number of his own party feel the same way; and the position he has placed some of his party in is a most cruel one. I do not blame them, however, for doing what they feel compelled to do, because I recognise that the ties of party are strong, and must not be lightly broken.

Mr. SAMUEL.—As one of the representatives of a provincial district which will suffer very severely by this Bill, I wish to place upon record that, in Committee, I have done my very best to prevent it from passing. I consider it a very bad Bill; that it will render a very large number of the people voiceless, and unable to complain effectively of the grievances under which they suffer, and that it will create dissatisfaction from one end of the colony to the other. At the same time, I desire to express my great satisfaction that several honourable members have endeavoured to give the House time to consider the ill effects of this Bill, and, notably, the honourable members for Christchurch North and Auckland Central. Both those honourable members have done their best to give sufficient time for its consideration, and have recognised in this what I presume they will admit to be their error in the past—the error of the honourable member for Christchurch North in saying that “the resort of talking out measures is an odious practice, and one which the members of the House should join in discouraging;” and also the error of the honourable member for Auckland Central in stigmatising the discussion on a measure the other night as “a solemn farce.” I am glad the honourable gentlemen have recognised the use of such tactics, and that they have found that if it is in the interests of the colony it is right and proper that they should use such an “odious practice” and play a part in such a “solemn farce.” I think, however, that we have now done enough. There is no use in wasting time struggling further. The majority of the House for some reason—and I believe it is because of the fear of the present Government going out of power and another Government coming in—have determined to carry this Bill, and it seems to me useless waste of time to oppose it. I hope the House will accept the inevitable, and go on with the business and try to get it finished as soon as we can.

Sir J. VOGEL.—As to the point of order, we should understand what the position is, and I think I may ask it equally on behalf of both sides of the House. At any rate, I may ask for an expression of opinion about passing a measure through all its stages. I want to know, Sir, what position we are in when you leave the chair and we go into Committee of Supply. As matters now stand the Premier cannot move a resolution. The Minister of Education cannot move that you do leave the chair, nor can the honourable member for Wakatipu. I believe they have all spoken. I cannot speak, and a dozen others cannot speak, because they have already spoken on the motion for going into Committee of Supply, if it is considered to be a resumption of that adjourned debate. There are a number of honourable gentlemen who wish to speak, and it is not likely that they will be willing that the debate should be cut short. I cannot see how we can now go into Committee of Supply. I felt it was a mistake the honourable gentleman asking that the Financial Statement discussion should be taken on a motion for leaving the chair. It should have been taken on the second reading of a finance Bill. Practically Supply is shut out until the discussion is at an end. If the discussion had gone on day after day it would have been a different matter. The position is, that there is an adjourned debate on the motion to go into Committee of Supply. The question, That you do leave the chair in order that the House may go into Committee of Supply, has been put, and the debate adjourned on it from day to day. I do not know that there is any rule making it necessary, but the propriety of things requires that the possibility of going into Committee of Supply should be kept open. When the motion that you do leave the chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply is put, we are confronted with an unfinished debate on the financial proposals of the Government, and that surely is not a fitting time to propose to suspend the Standing Orders to put an Imprest Supply Bill through all stages. At any rate, Sir, I should like you to tell us if, when the order, “Committee of Supply,” is called on and the motion is put that you do leave the chair so that the House may go into Committee of Supply, it will be competent for those honourable members who have not yet taken part in the financial debate to then make speeches if they wish to do so, or whether those who have already spoken in that debate will be able to speak again.

Mr. SEDDON.—The order for Committee of Supply stands on the Order Paper in this form: “The Committee of Supply—adjourned debate. (18th November.)” And then there is this footnote: “Financial Statement.—Question proposed, That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair. (Hon. Major Atkinson.) Debate. Ordered, That the debate be adjourned until Tuesday next. (Mr. Walker.)” Therefore, Sir, when the order is called on at half-past seven o'clock, will you call on the honourable member for Ashburton, who moved the adjournment of the debate, to resume it? If that is so, we shall be debating the proposals of the Government. In that debate I have not yet spoken, nor have a number of other members. I should like to reserve my right to speak on the Government's financial proposals; and I should like also to speak on the specific motion raised to-day. The position is one of difficulty, and I should like to see a clear course pointed out.

Mr. SPEAKER.—The course of business is not fixed by the Speaker, but by the leader of the House, and what course he will propose to adopt I cannot tell. I suggest, as a convenient course for both parties, that the financial debate should by consent be placed temporarily aside, and that the Premier should be allowed to move that the House should notwithstanding immediately resolve itself into Committee of Supply, which, if agreed to, the next question would be that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair in order to go into Committee of Supply; which members might discuss or not, as they thought proper.

Sir J. VOGEL.—Sir, if you will excuse my remarking it, I would observe that any irregularity in going into Committee of Supply affects most seriously the privileges the House possesses. Either it is wrong or right that this debate should be concluded. Surely we have made a mistake in not observing the order of the House that the debate should be resumed at a certain time, instead of allowing the Government to put that order down on the Paper, when it could not be resumed at that time, Sir. You have not answered the question I put to you; but have simply expressed your opinion as to a way in which we might get out of the difficulty. Surely we have a right to know what are the exact rights and wrongs of the case. Sir, if you have any doubt as to the course which we should pursue, it would not be unreasonable if you were to take time to consider it, although it would be more convenient to know now, because it might guide us in deciding what should be done this evening. I want to know specifically if, when it is ordered that a debate shall be resumed on a certain day, the Government can have the power of placing the order for resuming the debate lower down on the Paper; and also if, when the order for Committee of Supply is called on, it would be open for us to resume the financial debate. I want information on those two points. Then, I want to know if, when it is moved this evening that you do leave the chair to go into Committee of Supply, it will be considered that any debate which takes place is the adjourned debate, and that only those members who have not spoken in that debate have the right to speak. I should be glad, Sir, if you could enlighten us on those points; but, if you cannot do so now, we would wait till half-past seven, for I am sure honourable members would suffer temporary inconvenience in order to keep all the safeguards that now hedge around the spending of public money by order of the House.

Mr. Seddon

Mr. SPEAKER.—I cannot give any fuller information than I have given.

Sir J. VOGEL.—May I ask you, is it possible to go into Committee of Supply without resuming this adjourned debate?

Mr. SPEAKER.—I think so. It will be quite competent to further adjourn the present financial debate, and, for convenience' sake, take a formal sitting of Supply to facilitate the introduction and passing of an Imprest Supply Bill.

Sir J. VOGEL.—Then there might be two Committees of Supply on the Order Paper. The debate on the order to go into Committee of Supply to-night might be adjourned, and we should be in the position of having "Committee of Supply—adjourned debate," twice on the Order Paper at the same time. How would it be possible to distinguish between the two? We might go on having half a dozen adjourned debates on Committee of Supply if we could have two. I really cannot help thinking that the debate should have been resumed on the day ordered. Will you satisfy me on that point, Sir—should not the debate have been resumed on the day ordered?

Mr. SPEAKER.—I think, not necessarily. It became an order of the day, and the Government have the right to arrange their orders of the day as they choose.

Sir J. VOGEL.—Then, Sir, will it require the general concurrence of the House that we should actually go into Committee of Supply to-night without resuming the adjourned debate, or what course would you suggest?

Mr. SPEAKER.—I have given all the information I can give, and cannot answer further questions on the point.

Mr. SEDDON.—May I ask, Sir, if, when the order "The Committee of Supply—adjourned debate," is called on to-night, you will call on the honourable member for Ashburton to resume the debate, as it was adjourned on his motion.

Mr. SPEAKER.—If no other arrangement is made to facilitate business, I shall call on the member for Ashburton to take up the debate; but I understand that a special proposition will be made to go into Committee of Supply, in order that the Imprest Supply Bill may be passed.

Sir G. GREY.—I confess I cannot understand the position we are in—whether we are now to go into Committee of Supply at once to deal with the Governor's message asking for supply, and then resume the adjourned debate, or whether the whole debate is to go on before we can deal with the Governor's message. I think it is desirable that there should be some means by which we could at once deal with the request of the Governor, and I think we should know whether we can do that at once, without going into the whole of the debate on the finances.

Mr. TURNBULL.—It does seem a most extraordinary position, certainly. It appears to me, Sir, looking at the Standing Orders, that we cannot go into Committee of Supply without resuming the adjourned debate in the regular form. It is a matter for the very serious consideration of the House whether we should go into Committee of Supply without finishing the adjourned debate, because possibly we might be depriving ourselves of the right to resume that debate at all.

Major ATKINSON.—Sir, I need only say in reply that it is always customary in the House to assist the Government to get the necessary supply, and I have no doubt the House will on this occasion do as it has always done. I take it that there is no difficulty in the case at all. If my memory serves me there is a precedent in an exactly similar case either in 1879 or 1884, when we had an adjourned debate on the motion to go into Committee of Supply just as we have now, and yet passed an Imprest Supply Bill without resuming that debate. It frequently happens that there is a long debate on the Financial Statement beginning just before supply is wanted, and supply must necessarily be granted before the debate is finished. There is nothing at all irregular in the course that is proposed, nor need there be any inconvenience, because, I take it, it is always the desire of the House to grant the Government the necessary supply. That being so, I assume that when the order for Committee of Supply is called on this evening the general debate will be adjourned until a future day, and, the House having gone into Committee, the whole position, as to the adjourned debate and everything else, will be in exactly the same position to-morrow that it is in now. I do not think honourable gentlemen will find any difficulty in doing that. Of course, when the order for the Committee of Supply is called on to-night, it will be competent for honourable members to speak as much as they like; but it is not the custom of the House to do so when an imprest is wanted, the House being always willing to grant supply without debate. I should have preferred to go on with it now, but the Government have agreed to postpone it till this evening at the request of the leader of the Opposition; and I do not think we shall find any difficulty in proceeding then. When the Governor's message was referred to the Committee of Supply I explained that I had had a message for several days, but in the press of business had forgotten it, and so had omitted to ask leave to pass the Bill through all its stages at once.

Mr. TURNBULL.—If the honourable gentleman moved that the House go into Committee of Supply, I understand that there is nothing to prevent any honourable member getting up and continuing the debate on the financial proposals of the Government.

Sir G. GREY.—I understand, on the other hand, that a motion may be made that the adjourned debate be further adjourned.

Major ATKINSON.—Yes.

Motion agreed to.

OAMARU HARBOUR BOARD LOAN BILL.

Mr. HISLOP moved, That the House agrees with the amendments made by the Legislative Council in this Bill, with the following exceptions: The striking-out of clause 8 of the Bill, as passed by the House of Representatives; the insertion of new clause 5; and the insertion of the word "annually" in clause 6 of the Bill, as amended. The alterations made in the Bill took away the power which was sought, of having the whole of the loans consolidated; and he thought it was a disadvantage that that power should be taken away. He had agreed with the honourable gentleman in charge of the Bill that that amendment should be agreed to, so that the works might be proceeded with as soon as possible. There was, however, one clause which dealt with a power of rating. It was doubtful whether that power was not taken away by the Act of last session, and the clause provided that the power should continue to exist; and therefore it should be retained in this Bill. Then, with regard to the provision that the Board should go to the ratepayers before borrowing, he might point out that, as the Board had already gone to the ratepayers, it was unnecessary that they should repeat that operation, and be put to all the trouble and expense which it would entail. As to clause 6, the Upper House, under a misapprehension as to the existing law, had inserted the word "annually." The effect would be that, instead of levying the rates at the time the loan was raised, which was necessary in order to give the proper security, the Board would have to levy a rate from year to year, and that was inconsistent with the provisions of the Rating Act of 1882.

Mr. E. RICHARDSON asked whether it would not be necessary to have some words put in in place of those which were struck out.

Mr. HISLOP thought that would not be necessary, as it was covered by the Act of 1882.

Mr. MILLS said he found some difficulty with reference to this matter. He had not been able to gather the full purport of the explanation offered, as the honourable gentleman's remarks were scarcely audible. He should like to know clearly what exception the honourable gentleman took to the amendments made by the Upper House.

Sir J. VOGEL asked whether the consent of the ratepayers had already been given to the £40,000.

Mr. HISLOP said to £30,000. The authority of the ratepayers was taken for necessary works, which were estimated to cost about £30,000.

Sir J. VOGEL said it seemed to him that the House was asked to break through all precedent.

Mr. HISLOP said the honourable gentleman was fully informed by him last session of the existing nature of the authority given by the ratepayers, and the honourable gentleman at that time went very carefully through the Bill.

Sir J. VOGEL said he remembered having a long conversation with the honourable gentleman as to the apparent evasion of the clauses of the Rating Act, and the honourable gentleman then undertook to make the necessary amendment. He understood now that the Board was asking for a larger loan.

Mr. HISLOP said it was at the instance of the honourable gentleman's own Government that the assent was taken from the ratepayers, and afterwards the matter was further discussed between the honourable gentleman and himself, and they substituted £38,000 for £30,000.

Sir J. VOGEL said his Government insisted that the assent of the ratepayers should be taken, and he understood that the honourable gentleman was now asking for greater borrowing-power than the ratepayers had assented to. He was not raising the question as to whether it was necessary to consult the ratepayers so far as the £30,000 went; but, if an additional amount was to be asked for, it was necessary that such additional amount should have the assent of the ratepayers. If the honourable gentleman would make an alteration so that the ratepayers should assent to the additional £10,000, that would be sufficient. He was sure the honourable gentleman must see the fairness of that course.

Mr. TURNBULL had understood the Colonial Secretary to say that there was no necessity for taking a fresh poll of the ratepayers, for the poll for ratification of one of the loans had already been taken. He must, however, have misunderstood the honourable gentleman, as it did not appear whether it had been taken upon the consolidated loan or on the single loan as now altered; also whether there were two distinct rates or only one.

Mr. HISLOP might explain, with reference to the remarks of the honourable member for Port Chalmers, that one alteration which he wanted to make was in the restoration of clause 8, which dealt with the power of reviving the balance of the rate authorised by the Act of 1882. It was doubted whether there was power to authorise the raising of the balance of the rate; and this clause would give that power. As to clause 5, what took place between the honourable member for Christchurch North and himself was this: They did not confine themselves to any particular sum; but they agreed that an estimate should be made by a Government engineer as to the probable cost of the works. The estimate was £30,000; but every one must recognise the fact that the works might possibly cost more than originally estimated. A circular was then sent round by the Board to all the ratepayers, asking them whether the works should be proceeded with on the estimate supplied, upon which it was intended to levy the rate authorised by section 6. That was assented to by a great majority of the ratepayers. As the honourable member for Christchurch North was no doubt aware, the amount of £38,000 was placed in the Bill of last session. That was advertised in the papers circulating in the district, and not only that, but it was also referred to in locals and in discussions in the newspapers, and there was not a single objection made to it. Then, with regard to taking a poll, he submitted that it would be exceedingly inconvenient that a poll should be taken again for the £10,000 required to complete the work. The £38,000 was inserted in the Bill of last session; but at the suggestion of the honourable member for Dunedin South it had been altered to £40,000 in the House. He submitted that, as the ratepayers had been consulted as to the works generally, and had had full opportunity of objecting to them, it was not necessary, for the sake of such a small sum, that they should be consulted again. As the Government had advanced part of the money to complete the works, it was necessary that this Bill should pass in order that they might be recouped. The works were of very great importance, and he thought there ought not to be any unnecessary delay, or any question of going to the ratepayers again. He need only add that, if there was any very great objection in another place to these amendments, inasmuch as the ratepayers could be consulted again, and would no doubt consent, it would be for the honourable gentleman in charge of the Bill to consider whether he would still resist the amendments. With regard to the word "annually," he had explained that the Act of 1882 made provision for that.

Motion agreed to, and Mr. Hislop, Mr. J. McKenzie, and Mr. Duncan appointed Managers to draw up reasons for disagreement.

REPRESENTATION BILL.

Major ATKINSON moved, That the House do agree with the amendments made in this Bill.

Sir J. VOGEL.—I shall ask the honourable gentleman to postpone this Bill until half-past seven. The position of this measure has very much changed during the last few days. When it was originally brought in it appeared to be a measure which was brought down in compliance with a wish generally expressed during the elections, that the number of members of the House should be reduced; and it was brought down as though it were merely intended to reduce the number of members of the House, without any alteration of the other provisions of the law existing. But the night before last a resolution was come to by the House to the effect that this Bill should not come into effect for two years, and at the same time we learned that this Bill was not regarded by the Government as being a complete measure, but merely as a part of a series of general measures which are to be brought in next year. So that, from the point of view of the necessity for disposing of business as far as we can this session, it is quite evident that nothing can be said in favour of this Bill, unless it bears the character given to it by the Press, and by some members of this House, that it is a Bill by which the Government will be able to coerce a large number of the members of the House into complying with their will as to the manner in which they shall vote, upon the pain of extinction of their seats. Only from that point of view can there be the least necessity for hurrying on the Bill this session; because, if the Bill is not to be used until further alterations have been made in the electoral laws, what can the object be of passing it this session? Of what use is it to pass it if its complement is not to be passed till next session? I say that either the Bill is unnecessary, or it is a Bill of a character which no honourable member who has any respect for the honour and independence of the House can possibly approve of. That it is in the mind of the Government to get this passed so that, on getting any excuse, they may be in a position to force on a premature dissolution I do not, myself, believe. I can hardly suppose that such a conspiracy, such a scheme, can be in the minds of the Government as to pass a Bill for the purpose of holding a whip over honourable members. Still, it has been stated; and if it is not the case—and I must say that I cannot bring myself to believe that that is the object of the Bill—then I say that there can be no need whatever for urging it on during the present session. Yet we see that the Government are carrying it by coercion. The other night we had the deliberate opinion of the House expressed in the shape of an amendment carried at the instance of the honourable member for Dunedin West, and yet that deliberately expressed opinion has been reversed, not because honourable members have seen that they were wrong in the opinion which they had expressed in voting for the amendment of the honourable member for Dunedin West, but because the Government have said that they look upon it as a Government question. I do not grudge the Government the triumph they have won by inducing those gentlemen who are their supporters to either vote against the amendment or to walk out of the House when the matter came up again. I do not grudge the Government that triumph, nor am I going to say anything harsh with regard to those honourable gentlemen who have been persuaded to adopt either of those courses, because I recognise that it is in consonance with parliamentary practice for members to make sacrifices of their opinions if they wish to keep a Government in office. I am not reflecting upon the conduct of those honourable gentlemen: still, the fact is that the opinion of the majority of the House is in favour of fixing a time for this Act to come into operation so as to exclude the possibility of its having such a character as that to which I have alluded. And, now that the Government have shown their power, have shown that they are able to enforce their will, I ask, how can they, with any reason, when, admittedly, there is no necessity for the Bill to be carried this session, and at a time when the Government are asking us to forego discussion in order to get the business through rapidly—I ask, how can they reconcile it to themselves to make so much point of a measure which there can be no reason to hurry on until next session?—because it is admittedly incomplete until further legislation can take place. I trust that the honourable gentleman will accede to what I believe is the wish of the House on both sides, and not press the measure forward this session. But, Sir, I shall not go so far as that at present. I will merely ask that this order of the day be postponed until the order of the day for Supply, which we have just determined shall be set down for half-past seven, has been disposed of—in fact, to make it the second order of the day after half-past seven. In the meantime, we may be able to take into further consideration the question of whether we will allow it to pass, or endeavour still to ask the Government to reconsider it—whether we will ask for a recommitment, and review the vote that was taken, I believe, at three o'clock this morning. I confess, with no small amount of humiliation, that, physically, I am not strong enough to take part in a debate in the middle of the night, and there are probably other members who are in the same position; and it does seem a cruel thing that measures which affect the representation of the country, and which in all Parliaments are looked upon as matters of a most important character—we know how Reform Bills are debated for month after month—I say it seems a cruel thing that members who wish to exercise their right of discussing such measures should be put before the House in the character of obstructionists, and that they should be shut out from the consideration of such measures by the business being taken when the early hours in the morning are approaching. I felt incapacitated from taking part in the discussion of the amendment of the honourable member for Dunedin West, or the motion for the restoration of the Bill to its original shape. I tell the honourable gentleman that a measure which reduces the representation of the country by 25 per cent.,—a measure which will alter the existing representation as regards town and country and rural districts, —a measure which may give a large power either to the town districts or to the country districts, according as it is used,—a measure which makes a most important change in the present incidence of representation—is not a Bill which should be forced through the House without full and ample discussion, and without much consideration, not only by the House but also by the country. And I take leave to think that a Bill of this kind, of the meaning of which we now know much more than when it was introduced, should not be forced through in the manner in which the honourable gentleman is forcing it through. I know that the honourable gentleman will tell me that I have changed my position, and accuse me of fickleness. So long as the honourable member accused has no right of reply it is easy to make charges of that kind. But I say that my position has been perfectly consistent. When the Bill was brought in and read a first time I was aware that the feeling of the country was in favour of a reduction of members, and, though I thought it would be exceedingly mischievous, I intended to support it. But when I come to know of the larger objects of the Bill,—that it is intended to make a change from the democratic system of triennial Parliaments, of single electorates, of elections upon one day, and the various ramifications of the measures which have given our representation such an extremely democratic character—that the Bill is, in fact, merely the thin end of the wedge, to be driven home for the purpose of effecting a complete reformation in all these matters,—and when I come to know that the Government would neither allow these alterations to be considered at once, as proposed by the honourable member, so that the country would know what they were like, nor would they agree to the amendment of the honourable member for Dunedin West so as to provide that the Act should not be used as it is feared it might be used;—when I come to a knowledge of these things, then I see that the Bill has a much larger scope, has a much larger meaning, than I had originally supposed, and I feel it my duty to urge on the Government, notwithstanding the large majority that they have, not to press on the measure during the present session. At any rate, we may ask them to allow us further time for its consideration, and therefore I move, That consideration of the amendment be postponed until half-past seven o'clock to-night.

Sir J. Vogel

Major ATKINSON.—I am sorry to say I cannot agree with the proposals of the honourable gentleman. I can see no good whatever to come from it. If it were really a question on which the House required further time for consideration it would be a different matter; but the House has had ample time to consider it, and the country has had ample time to consider it, and the Bill is now passed as it was originally introduced by the Government, with the exception that there is an increase of four members. That is the only alteration in the Bill. I must ask the House to proceed with the Bill at once, and to dispose of it. I do not propose to answer any more speeches with regard to it. The country may judge between us and the honourable gentlemen who say that they have a constitutional duty to perform. That, I think, is the best course. We have endeavoured to give reasons why the Bill ought to be placed on the Statute Book; those reasons are in print, and the arguments of the Opposition are in print; and it is for the public to judge between the Government and the Opposition in this matter. I hope the House will see its way to proceed with the Bill and pass it through its final stages this afternoon.

Mr. LEVESTAM.—I understood the Premier to say, just now, that reasons had been given by the Government, and had been answered, and that those reasons were in print. Now, I have not seen one reason in print, nor have I heard any reason given why the amendment of the honourable member for Dunedin West should not be accepted by the Government. We are told that the country has had ample time to consider the whole of the Bill, and that the country has expressed an opinion regarding it. I have seen no such expression of opinion in print; but I have seen it stated that the Government are hurrying through this measure, which is uncalled for, and is not wanted. The honourable gentleman himself admitted that this measure could not possibly take effect next session or during the recess. If this is so, I ask him, where is the necessity for passing it now? The honourable gentleman has further admitted that it will be absolutely necessary next session that some amending Bill should be brought down to complete the Bill; because it is a notorious fact that the Bill as it stands is unworkable and useless, and that it will not fulfil the object for which it is intended. This being the case, I fail to see why the Government should at the present time try to force the measure through, unless it is with some motive of which we are not aware. I myself moved an amendment in Committee that the schedule should be attached to the Bill; but the Premier would not consent to any amendment. But I hold that our experience in the past has shown that it is absolutely necessary that we should make some provision to have the representation of the colony adjusted by other persons than the Commissioners. However anxious the Commissioners may be to do justice to all parts of the colony, it will be readily admitted that they cannot have the knowledge of the various localities that is possessed by members of this House. If I remember rightly, when the Act was passed last session there was a proviso that objections might be raised to the boundaries of the districts as decided upon by the Commissioners; but that had to be set on one side during the last recess, as there was no time to do it. Then, the Commissioners are bound by hard-and-fast rules; no matter what objections are raised, they will be unable to go outside the four corners of the Act. Now, it is quite notorious that in many districts large tracts of country have been disfranchised. In the district which I come from—the Nelson Province—the electoral districts have been so amalgamated as to make the representation practically nil in some portions of it. Large districts which were purely agricultural and large districts purely mining districts have been welded together, although they are really geographically divided. I may say that this has been the case in the Waimea and Motueka Districts. As far as the Province of Nelson is concerned, I am afraid that under these proposals, as it has only a few inhabitants, the various electoral districts would probably be united with the City of Nelson, and they would only be able to send a representative to represent both town and country districts. I have always held that districts that are sparsely populated should have more representation than the more densely populated ones. A town that has twenty, thirty, or forty thousand inhabitants can be more easily represented by one man than can a district such as we have heard of, where a member has to travel four hundred miles on horseback to visit his constituents, be represented by half a dozen. I trust that the House will pause before passing a Bill of this kind, and the more so because if it passes the Bill as it stands the boundaries will have to be adjusted by the Commissioners. We have seen in the past that, on account of the large representation possessed by some portions of the colony, large sums of money have been expended in particular districts, and in consequence of this expenditure the population there has increased; so that they have gained no end of power as regards other portions of the colony. If this Bill is to become law, and is acted upon without the districts being adjusted by the House, the consequence will be that the towns will be so largely represented that the country districts will be practically unrepresented. If we take towns such as Christchurch, Dunedin, and Auckland we find that they have eight or ten members within a very small area; and the result of this Act will be that they will retain their number by freely amalgamating with themselves districts in the surrounding country. This would be the result; and we also know that the representatives of towns are always ready to unite together to further their own interests. One has only to go through the country to see that the large bulk of public money has been spent on those places where the town members have a greater voice than the country members. I trust that the House will pause before it allows this Bill to become law, more particularly after what took place the other day when the honourable member for Dunedin West moved his amendment. He was urged to move it by a number of members of the House who were anxious that the proviso should be added to the Bill. It was clearly demonstrated that no harm could arise from having such a proviso, and it was also shown that the absence of the proviso might work a great deal of harm to the colony. As I have said, the honourable member was urged to move this, and he did move it, and it was carried. What took place next? The Premier told the House then that, this having been passed, he must consider his position, and that he would probably have to resign. On the following day he called his supporters together and they held a meeting, and then he caused them to agree to rescind that which they had done the day before. But so firmly were they convinced that their case was right that they said, "No; we cannot vote against what we have done; but what we will do is this: We will walk out of the House;" and thus they have been instrumental in inflicting what they themselves consider to be a grievous wrong to the colony. For what reason have they done this? Simply because the Government said, "We will have this," and flatly refused to give any reason whatever why. It is all very well for the Premier to tell us that reasons have been given, and that they are printed. I ask him, where are these reasons? They are not in Hansard, because what took place was in Committee; and they are not in the public prints, for the public prints condemn the action of the Government very strongly in this matter, and have been urging members of this House not to submit to what they call the indignity that has been placed upon them. I have taken no part in the discussion of this Bill; but, notwithstanding that fact, I have been taunted in the House by the Premier with obstructing the measure. Why was I told that I was obstructing the measure because I used the privilege which belongs to every man,—because I did my duty and opposed those portions of the Bill which I thought were injudicious and hurtful to the country, especially to that part of the country from which I come? And yet, because I did that, I was told that I was wasting time. I say, in reply, that I have not been wasting time but simply doing my duty; and I say that the Government have been deliberately wasting the time of the House in bringing forward a measure which they admit is unnecessary. For what reason do they bring it forward? Simply, they tell us, because they want it placed on the Statute Book that the number of members of this House shall be reduced. If that is all they want to do, they have really achieved nothing, because whenever a new Bill comes before the House next session it will be competent for any member of the House to move an amendment that the number be reduced or that it be increased. If the Government really thought it necessary that a Representation Bill should be passed during the present session, then, I say, it was an imperative duty on their part to prepare a Bill that would be final, and would be such as to give satisfaction to the whole country. If that had been done, there is no man in the House who would have shrunk from his duty to do his utmost to pass it. I say it is an utter waste of time to pass this measure, if it has to come up again and be chopped about next session. I say the Government have deliberately wasted the time of the House; but, more than that, they are asking the House to do that which is wrong, and they have brought pressure to bear upon their supporters to cause them to rescind that which was affirmed by a large majority of the House. That is a wrong act on the part of the Government, which, I think, we should not in any way countenance. For these and various other reasons—for I have no desire to prolong the debate—I shall vote for the amendment of the honourable member for Christchurch North.

Sir J. Vogel

Mr. WALKER.—I trust that I shall not be branded by the Premier as one of those who are obstructing. I have all along expressed the most confirmed distaste for the proposal embodied in the Bill. I have, whenever the opportunity has been afforded me, uttered my protest against it: and I venture also to say that I have never abused the privilege of speech in this House to prolong a discussion unnecessarily. I simply wish to say that I consider it my duty to place on record why I do not approve of this Bill, and why I regret exceedingly that the Government have been so ill-advised as to bring it forward, not only at all, but especially at this time. The Premier, in his public professions to the country and to this House, has stated that it is necessary that certain things should be done. In the first place, he said that we ought to put our house in order—that we ought to look after the finances of the colony. The few remarks which have proceeded from his side of the House go to show that that honourable gentleman took office on the professed understanding that the finances of the colony were to be his chief care, and that no time should be lost by him and by his Ministry before the country should see that they were really in earnest in this matter. Well, Sir, what is the step now? What is he doing now in bringing down this Bill?—Taking up the time of the country simply with legislation which he and his side declare is only a fragment of what is necessary. He assured us, and we were assured by honourable members who are in his confidence,—or, if they are not in his confidence, they know very well how to put the matter in a reasonable way before him,—I say we were assured by those honourable gentlemen that this measure will have to be gone over again next year and put in a different shape. Why, then, this indecent haste, as I call it, that the time of the country should be wasted in this special session dealing with a matter which the Premier and his supporters admit to be fragmentary, and admit also to be unnecessary at this special time? I cannot conceive it, except that he has found the question of representation a very convenient stalking-horse for the last two years. He made as good a use of it as he could in 1886, and again in the last session of the last Parliament, of course using different tactics; and he again brings it forward to distract and disturb the public attention from topics that he knows are most necessary and vital to the true interests of the colony. It is all very well for him to talk about obstruction, but I challenge him to say that one unnecessary word has proceeded from this side of the House on this matter. —(Oh!)—Where do the “Ohs” come from, Sir? From honourable members to whom I give credit for conscientious opinions. They conscientiously believe that the number of members should be reduced; but I have just as much conscientious scruple in the matter as they have, and why should I not use the opportunity of placing on record my belief that the step is a retrograde and bad one? What is there unreasonable in doing that on the part of myself or any other honourable member who believes as strongly as I do that this is a mistake?

Major ATKINSON.—You spoke three times last night.

Mr. WALKER.—The honourable member says I spoke three times last night. Was it not on three different questions?

Major ATKINSON.—Just three speeches on the same subject.

Mr. WALKER.—There is no pleasing the honourable gentleman. If I sat quiet he would be just as likely to find fault with me for not treating his measures with proper respect. If this Bill is as important as he says it is, it demands proper discussion from the House, and it has not received anything more than the proper discussion it requires from this House in order that the country may really understand what it is doing at the present time. Besides being unnecessary, I also say this is simply fragmentary legislation, dealing only with one piece of a very large subject; for I maintain that you cannot touch one bit of our constitutional structure without endangering and imperilling the proportions of the whole. The Premier, in his Financial Statement, sketched out certain reforms in our legislative system, and he began with certain reforms as regards the Legislative Council. Those reforms have never yet come before us, and I maintain that it is most important that we should have the whole before us, and not touch it in fragments. In the first place, if I understood his proposals aright, he proposed to make the number of members of the Council a fixed number, and that the tenure of office in that body was to be— However, I am not going to discuss that question now, and I admit that there is much to be said on both sides of the question. But it must be admitted that the proposal, so far as we can judge, was a step in the direction of conservatism, giving that body a much firmer position than they have had hitherto. It was depriving this House of the balance of authority which it previously held in the Legislature of this country. And therefore, if that step was to be taken which he proposed in his Financial Statement, I say we should also have had it before us. We should also do nothing to endanger the franchise, and the privileges of the people as represented in this House;—because, Sir, I maintain that this proposal as embodied in the present Bill also goes in the same direction, which is to divest the people of the privileges they have enjoyed for some years, which, I maintain, they value, and which they require. And therefore I consider this as a step which is reactionary, and one that will probably be disastrous in its consequences. Then, Sir, I presume, if there is any excuse for this Bill at the present time, it is because it bears on its face an expression of economy; and those who support it say that they believe that this measure will be of considerable importance in that direction. Well, I venture to think that, of all the devices for securing economy we have heard preached in this House, this is the most illusory. The honourable gentleman, I presume, imagines that by a rule-of-three sum he can reduce the parliamentary expenditure by reducing the number of members. I suppose he argues that, if ninety-five members consume a certain number of hours in talking and doing public business, if he reduces that number by twenty it will reduce the time occupied in talking, and the amount of parliamentary expenditure will be reduced in exactly the same proportion. But is anything more illusory, more absolutely belied by the experience of the past? Absolutely, if we look up the records, and compute the length of the sessions previous to the increase to the present number, we shall find that the sessions averaged longer in those days than now, that then the speeches were longer, that the discussions were increased accordingly, more than now; and since the change, the figures show that our sessions have been shorter, the discussions more reasonable, and the conclusions come to in a much more businesslike and quicker manner. I defy any honourable member to dispute these facts. I have worked them out. I find that for the four years before 1881 the sessions averaged 117 days, and since 1881 up to the end of last year they only averaged 102 days. I also state this: that the last Parliament and, I believe, this Parliament have shown a most reasonable exercise of its powers of speaking. During the last Parliament there was very little speaking done, comparatively; whereas, on the other hand, in a smaller Parliament it is just as possible for the talkative members to exercise their power of obstruction and impeding business by unnecessary talk. Experience shows that was the case in the past, and I have no doubt experience will show so in the future. The reason is very easy to see. If we could ballot out twenty—those whom some of us might think bores and nuisances—I admit we might get a very perfect Parliament as far as silence is concerned; but the honourable members who do talk long and delay business, in the eyes of some honourable members, are the very men who are elected, and who will be elected, simply because they have the power of talking, and can convince the electors of what they believe to be for the good of the country when they canvass for seats in this House. The class of men who take up time are just the very members who always will be, and must be, returned to a popular House of Assembly such as this. And the smaller the House the more effect, the more weight, the more importance these talkative members must have, simply because they are in a greater proportion in a smaller House than in a larger one. I feel very sorry indeed that the Premier has thought fit to raise this difficulty at the present time. Especially am I sorry that he has been unfortunately advised to make a reasonable amendment by the honourable member for Dundin West a Ministerial question; but I am still more sorry that those honourable gentlemen who voted conscientiously for that amendment were frightened by this bogey of another Ministry coming into office whom they possibly might not be able to support. Do those honourable gentlemen not know that if they choose to stick together on that side of the House they have a working majority; and, if the Premier had been weak enough to resign because of their conscientious and patriotic action the other night, are they not aware that the same majority must have the power of saying who the Ministers shall be, and who should be Premier? And even if the honourable member for Egmont had chosen to say, "I will resign; I will not carry on unless you allow me to do everything I choose," are they not aware that there still are members in this House as perfectly able to lead as the honourable member for Egmont, and possibly to lead with much greater discretion than he has shown during the present session? I would only contrast the action of the present Premier with that of the late Premier in respect to this very measure. The late Premier's supporters were as much opposed to the Bill which he brought down as many of the supporters of the present Premier are to the Bill which he has introduced. Did they truckle to him and do whatever he told them to do? I say No. And did he ask them to do so? Like a sensible man and a reasonable man, he said, "I won't ask you to do anything of the sort;" and the consequence was that the Bill was passed in a form which, I believe, was acceptable to the country, and was considered as reasonable by the House; and I am very sorry indeed to see the present Government bringing forward a measure which goes far to alter the representation of this country in the wrong direction. I should be sorry if in the opinion of any honourable member I have taken up the time of the House unnecessarily; but, when I consider that a wrong thing is being done, I must raise my voice against bad legislation, and I will do so in spite of the Premier or anybody else.

Mr. Walker

Mr. W. D. STEWART.—As I have been mixed up in some way or another with this question, I wish to say something in reference to it. I think the last speaker has stated what is perfectly true—that the mistake made was in the Government taking this up as a no-confidence question. I had no wish or intention that there should be anything of the kind. On the contrary, I was urged by some Government supporters to propose that amendment. They saw the difficulty which they were in, and could not solve it, and I suggested this as a way out of the difficulty. I realised the consequences of the amendment of the honourable member for Te Aro, and that that would lead to undesirable results. With that object I hurriedly prepared this amendment, intending it as an ordinary Committee amendment, and not desiring that it should be treated in any way as a no-confidence question. I believe I am right in saying that those supporters of the Government who voted with me did not look upon it as in any sense a question involving want of confidence; and I think there can be no question whatever that the object of the Premier in making it a question of "no confidence" was simply to endeavour to consolidate some of those supporters whose constant support the honourable gentleman does not seem as certain of as he desires to be. I have just received a telegram from some leading citizens of Dundedin, which I shall read for the information of the House, as showing the opinion taken by them on this very large question; because, although I have supported the reduction of the number of members to a reasonable limit, I do feel that this Bill is placing in the hands of the Ministry a power which they may exercise in an unconstitutional way, and this telegram very fitly and properly states the exact bearing of the question. They say, "All independent, thinking men cordially approve your amendment Representation Bill. Most unconstitutional leaving power in hands any Premier reduce members when he pleases by dissolution." This is a telegram which I have just received, which conveys in a few words the real bearing, object, and possible results of this Bill. I observe that the Colonial Secretary, who, apparently, is not able to understand its bearing, is indulging in those meaningless ejaculations in which he occasionally indulges in this House. Now, I do emphatically protest against the exercise by the Ministry of this unfair control which they have endeavoured to exercise over some members who usually support them; and I think the Bill, if passed, will be—or is liable, at all events, to be—very unfairly used. As is suggested in the telegram I have read, the moment the Premier finds that he cannot control the business of the House he can say, "I shall reduce the number of members to seventy-four, by advising the Governor to dissolve Parliament." That is not a proper power to put into the hands of any Minister. I was much struck by the remark of the honourable member for Ashburton, that the unduly large number of members in the Council has been looked on by some more as a grievance than the number of members of this House; and I think it would have been very much better if the Government had also directed their attention to that so-called grievance at once, as well as taking up the time of the House in the way they have taken it up at this stage of the session. If this Bill had been introduced at an earlier stage of the session, when we could have debated it instead of the large number of useless questions that were then brought before the House, it would not be open to objection so much as it is now; but, seeing that, in all probability, there will be two or three other sessions before this Parliament ends, I think the Bill ought to have been introduced at such a time that it could have been discussed fairly and openly. We have now been here eight weeks, and we have done literally nothing, owing to the way in which business has been managed in the House, and the way in which adjournments and interruptions have taken place so frequently—we are practically just where we were a week or two after we started. I do most emphatically protest against this waste of time, when, though there are a large number of important financial questions to be brought under our consideration, all these irrelevant questions are brought out, and the financial questions kept from us. We were returned here primarily to put the finances of the country into a satisfactory condition, and we have carefully evaded that question. Some consideration has been given to one or two fragments of it, but the scheme as a whole has not been brought before the House in that comprehensive and satisfactory manner we are entitled to receive it in. I really hope that the Ministry will even now direct their attention and ours to the business of the country, and not fritter away our valuable time in the way that they have been doing for some weeks past.

Mr. SEDDON.—If any proof were wanted that the Government had wilfully wasted the time of the House it has been afforded this afternoon. The leader of the Opposition asked the Premier to postpone the consideration of the amendments in this Bill until this evening, and if the Premier had accepted that suggestion we could have had an hour and a half's solid work on the Railways Bill, which is the next order of the day. But the honourable gentleman seems to say, "You must either take the Bill as I wish it, whether you like it or not, or you shall have no other work to go on with." Had this Bill come on later in the evening probably one debate would have done for the agreeing to the amendments and the third reading; but now we have a discussion on the amendments, and then there is to be an interruption for Supply, and then we have to go back to another discussion on the Bill. I think, in the interests of the colony and of Ministers themselves, it would have been well if they had taken up another attitude, and if the Premier had endeavoured, in this debate, to show the House and the colony why he has deliberately abandoned the principles of this Bill since it was brought down to the House. He has changed front entirely as regards the Maori representation. The proposal by him was that there should be three Maori members; but, for reasons best known to himself, an arrangement has been come to with the Maori members, the effect of which we saw at the caucus held yesterday—the whole of the Native members attended that caucus and gave in their allegiance to the Government. Then, in every division taken last night, the whole of the Maori members voted with the Government, and that too is very significant, and it proves very conclusively that, seeing there was opposition from the Native members to this measure as introduced, in which they were supported by those of the Opposition who opposed the Bill, the Natives have secured for themselves that which we are fighting for. It does not say much for those honourable members; and perhaps in the future they will have cause to regret the action they have taken, because, before we have done with the Bills relating to the Natives and Native lands, the Native members will be in trouble of their own, and will need the assistance of their friends. They have now thrown themselves into the hands of the Government; and, for my part, I believe that a great many on this side of the House will leave them in the hands of the Government, and I hope their lot may be a happy one. But for the actual evidence we have of it, I could scarcely have believed that the Native members would act in the detrimental and objectionable way they have acted towards those who have been and were willing to assist them in getting their grievance remedied. Sir, that concession to the Natives alters the whole principle of the Bill, because, the Premier having consented to increase the Maori representation, he must necessarily increase the European representation somewhat proportionately. That is why the Government agreed to increase the number from seventy to seventy-four. They could not give the Natives increased representation and in the same breath refuse to give increased representation to the European population of the colony. By this alteration the Government have caused an increased direct expenditure of £1,000 a year to the colony for the expenses of additional members. Is that their retrenchment? Is that the cardinal point in their policy? Directly there was a little objection shown to their measure they gave way and consented to that increase of expenditure. But, leaving aside the increased direct expenditure, let us take the Premier and the Government on their own argument. They have told us that the larger the number of members the greater the demand on the public purse of the colony for the construction of roads and other works. Well, if that statement is true, the Ministry have arranged for increasing the public works expenditure by one-fifth, by the alteration they have made in the Bill. I should have thought that we should have from the Government some explanation of why they thought fit to depart from the principle of the Bill in this respect, and so to do what will cause a very heavy direct cost yearly to the colony, besides increasing the indirect cost by one-fifth, according to their own assertions. Then, I say, again, there has been no explanation why the Government should still wish to have the power that is contained in section 2 of the Bill—to hold in their hands an unconstitutional power. To demand, as they do, that the House shall give them the power to reduce the number of members by twenty-five whenever they choose is, to my mind, about the most pernicious and iniquitous proposal I have ever known to be brought forward. I do regret that a more united and a more determined resistance has not been made to this demand—a demand for a power to deprive the people of their liberties, and a power to “gag” members of this House. I say, Sir, that such a demand, such a power, is most dangerous and unreasonable. It is a power which no other Ministry has ever sought, and it is a power which we should not give to any Government. To say that that power will not be used is to say what is contrary to history and to experience. I have never yet known a power to be possessed by any Government but that, when their existence was at stake, they would always use it to the fullest extent. Then, I ask, why should we wilfully and knowingly—for it has been fully exposed—agree to give this power to the present Government? The fact of their insisting on this measure passing as it stands, and not allowing the limit of a single day in the coming into operation of the Bill, negating an amendment that it should be after six months, negating the proposal that it should not come into operation until this Parliament expires by effluxion of time; and then, when an amendment was carried that it should not come into operation until the 9th October, 1889, the fact of their exercising the power given to them as a party, and saying that they will resign if that amendment is not struck out of the Bill—all this shows that they are determined to have this power. I put it very clearly to the House whether it would not have been far better for that party to have reconstructed the Government, —because any Government in this Parliament must come from that side of the House. It would be very inconvenient for this side of the House to attempt now to form a Government, and there is no desire to do so at the present time. Therefore it was not a sufficient reason for those who went back on the vote they had given to say that they did so through fear of a Government being formed from this side of the House. There was no such fear, and it was pure intimidation and bounce on the part of the Premier to say that he would resign. He will swallow far more noxious doses before he vacates those benches. It will be as it has always been with him and with those who have acted with him, that force alone will compel them to vacate those benches. I do not believe that they would vacate their seat even on a direct vote of the House being carried against them; but they will follow the course which was taken in the first session of 1884, when, although defeated by a majority of fourteen against him, the Premier claimed a dissolution. If he does that under this measure the result will be that the elections will be manipulated, there will be twenty-five members less, and he will expect to come back with a majority to support him. If it were a Government such as we used to have in the earlier history of New Zealand, then this indecent holding on to office would not be in the same position as it is at the present day. The assertion by the Premier the other night that he would resign stated a decision hastily arrived at, and, I believe, regretted five minutes after it was expressed, and then an excuse was sought to withdraw him from the position into which he had got. They held a caucus, and we find many of his own supporters telling him that the Government had acted wrongly, and had strained the relationship between themselves and their supporters, who would on the next opportunity vote against them. I should like to know why, under these circumstances, we should give the unconstitutional power conferred by clause 2 of this Bill. And, outside that, I should like to know whether there is not another large power given to the Government. Under clause 3 power is given to them to direct the Commissioners when they are to fix the boundaries. This is the first turn of the screw. There are some honourable members who are not blindly following the Government, and who wish to keep their freedom of action and vote conscientiously; but, as soon as they do that, on the first or second vote that is given against the Government the Government will direct the Commissioners to fix the boundaries. When honourable members find the boundaries of their districts being fixed, they will come to the conclusion that the Government are about to ask for a dissolution, and then they will immediately afterwards be found following the Government like lambs, and eating the leek as they did yesterday. That is too great power to give to the Government, and will be enough to force the weak-kneed gentlemen who dare to differ from them to recant and support them. Such a power ought not to be held in terrorem over honourable members, and I could not permit this Bill to pass in its present form without entering my protest against it. Then, with regard to the effect of this Bill on the people generally, there can be no doubt that, if it remains without any alteration in the quota, it means that very large power will be given to the towns over the country.

Mr. W. D. Stewart

Mr. FISH.—No, no.

Mr. SEDDON.—I think I shall be able to prove to the honourable gentleman that it is so. I say that, with the difference in quota fixed at 18 per cent., this Bill will give a preponderance of power to the towns. We have an indication from the Government side of the House that they intend to alter the quota, and that the country members will combine to increase it from 18 per cent. to 25 per cent., or, it may be, 33 per cent. or 50 per cent. in favour of the country. In that case the towns will suffer, and the great question of Free-trade versus Protection will remain in abeyance as far as the black sheep among the Government supporters are concerned. The Government are afraid to touch it. They have refused to do justice to the towns by dealing with the tariff this session. If this measure is passed, and the Government can hold a threat of dissolution over our heads, we shall not have that fair consideration of local industries which the position of the colony at the present time demands. We know from past experience that the country members predominate in this House. We know that in the ranks of the Government supporters country districts predominate, and therefore it is that the Government want to force this Bill through and get the large powers conferred by it. In the interest of trade and of the artisans of New Zealand it is not desirable that we should give too large powers to the country districts, more especially when the people of those districts do not understand what is for their benefit. If the towns are prosperous, then, instead of having unemployed working for 4s. 6d. a day, those men would be earning their 10s. or 12s. a day, and would not be compelled to ask for pay from the State, and be dragged down to the condition of pauperism, with their wives and children absolutely in want. If due consideration were given to the encouragement of local industries these families would all be prosperous, and the artisans of this colony, than whom, I say, there are none more intelligent in the Australasian Colonies, would be making a good livelihood. Instead of that, we have men of this class in the towns dragged down to a state of pauperism; and, instead of having a market for our produce amongst ourselves, we are obliged to send it away. That we should still further increase this pauperism and add to the ranks of the unemployed is about the most disastrous thing that ever could happen to New Zealand. If we give the power to the country members which is provided under this Bill it means distress and ruin to our artisans, to our towns, to the country districts, and to New Zealand as a whole. And, Sir, in this way wages must come down; and it is my opinion that it is the chief aim of the present Government to bring wages down. They are doing their best in every direction to bring wages down, causing depression, and stopping public works. I believe that when the Public Works Statement is brought down it will be seen that the Government, making an excuse of the present state of the London money-market, are not going to borrow any money. Public works are to be stopped, and there is to be no revision of the tariff. There are to be more unemployed, more destitution, and then, in sheer desperation, men will be compelled to seek for work at less pay than is sufficient to find them in the necessities of life. And we know that, as a result of that, the wealthy will become more wealthy and the poor poorer, and we shall have the poor-houses and the workhouses—we shall have the same state of affairs existing in New Zealand as exists in the Old World—the palace and the workhouse—that blot upon our civilisation. But now is the time, and those who wish to do what is just to the great bulk of the population will rise to the occasion. Let them be beyond party, let them not be swayed in the manner in which it is attempted to sway them, let them be true patriots, and let them do what is right and just to their fellow-men. If they do not, retribution will follow. We shall have to call upon the artisans in the different centres to assert their rights much more forcibly than they are doing at the present time. We shall have to establish unions to fight this terrible power that is draining the lifeblood out of the people of the colony. The Government, unfortunately for themselves, are being made use of, not to use a stronger term. They are neither more nor less than the representatives of wealth. They occupy that position knowingly and wilfully, and to their great discredit, or else they would not do what they are doing in the way of a reduction of salaries. What does it mean? It means that the power I refer to will be behind the scenes. Where are the best men of that party now? Are they on the Government benches? No; there are exceptions. The Minister for Public Works is an exception. If they were all like him my remarks would not be so severe. The best men in the party remain behind. They pull the strings. They are to get their own way. Wages are to be brought down; the masses are to have their representation taken away from them, which, to my mind, is the most serious matter of all. It is taking away rights that it has taken years to get for them, and a great injustice is being done. The Limitation of Votes Bill is not to be passed. Why should not that measure be passed, so that we should have manhood suffrage pure and simple? On the other hand, the property vote is to be retained; and if it is retained, and we reduce the number of members of this House, it means that the next House we have will represent wealth and property instead of people: and that will be an evil day for New Zealand. In the protest that I am making upon this occasion I am speaking in the interests of the people generally. I do not think that the people of the colony can know the full effect of the measure that is before us. If they did—if the Press of the colony had done its duty, and had pointed out to them the effect of this Bill—they would have protested against a measure which is depriving them of their rights and doing them an irreparable injury. It has taken ten or twelve years of hard honest work to bring the representation of the people of the colony to its present position, and yet in one short session, not three months since the election took place, all the work of years is to be undone. Sir, I should not dare to go home to my constituents unless I had done in a legitimate manner all that could be done—all that should be done by a minority, even though challenged and driven from point to point by a dominant and servile majority. The forms of the House and the freedom of speech are the only power we have. The Premier has said that he will not reply to anything that may be said by us on this side of the House. His silence gives assent to what we are saying; but his silence, or the strongest power he can assert, will not prevent me from speaking and voting against this Bill at every stage.

Mr. Seddon

Mr. KERR.—I wish to put on record the regret that I feel at this Bill being pushed on at the present time. It will do a great deal of harm to the place I come from, and, if I were not to protest against it in the fullest manner that I can, when I went back to my constituents they would say that I had not done my duty. We were the first province that was settled in the South Island, and in due time we had our proper share of representation. But the present Premier, when he was in office before, did all in his power to take away our representation; and now he is going further in the same direction. We had the night before last a majority which said that the provisions of this Bill were not right. But then we had the Premier taking it as a no-confidence motion, and bringing pressure to bear upon the weak-kneed members of his party who had gone into our lobby; and now we have the Bill before us in the same shape as it was the other day. Now, if there had been any reason why this Bill should be passed this year, I could have had a reasonable excuse for going back to my constituents and saying that it was necessary to pass the Bill in the interests of the country. But the Bill can be of no use. It can be used for no other purpose in this world than to be held as a whip over us. If the Government had exempted the smaller districts from the operation of the Bill I should have been glad to see it pass; but the Premier would not do it, and it is quite true what people say and believe, that the present Premier does everything in his power to wipe Nelson out. Why he should do it I do not know. I can remember the time when his province was in difficulties, and when the people of Nelson did everything they possibly could for them. We put up houses for them, fed them, clothed them, did everything that could be done for them at our own expense; and this is the gratitude we are to receive for what we did in those days! If this Bill is passed our country districts will be wiped out altogether, to the great detriment of the farmers in the country. We shall be in this position: According to the population basis the country will have no representation whatever, or next to none; the town members will have to represent both country and towns. One honourable gentleman says, "Hear, hear;" but I would give him twelve months to go over the district I represent, and unless he had a man with him he would never do it at all. It is certain that town members know nothing at all of what the country members have to do. I would give the honourable member three weeks to go through my district, and I expect that, when he saw the rivers and the roads that I have to go over, he would turn back: he would do what some members of the House did last night—he would retract, and say he would have nothing to do with it. I maintain that it is not necessary that towns such as Wellington should have the number of members they have; it is a curse to the country. They are of no benefit to the country, they know nothing of country life, and when they give a vote they do not give it intelligently, for they do not know what they have to give it for. I speak especially of the Town of Wellington. What do its members do? All they do is to worry the Government for post-offices and printing-offices, to get the expenditure of money here; and as long as they can get that they care nothing about the outlying districts. I should like the Wellington town members to go through the country districts in their own province, and then to ask themselves if the country districts do not require double the representation of the towns. The population basis is wrong altogether, and I shall do my best to get it made two to one. I think 25 per cent. would be too small an allowance to make to the country districts. Who are the "backbone and sinew" of the country, if not the men who live in the country? I speak for myself. I came in one of the first ships to New Zealand, and when we landed at Nelson there was not a house in it. We brought everything that we wanted with us from England—even what we had to eat; and we made the town, and after we had made the town we went into the country, and we live now the furthest back in the country. But it appears to me that the "new-chums" in the city—those who have borne little of the burden—are going to represent the people of New Zealand, and that they know nothing about the country. I shall do my best to give the country two to one, and I think if we do that—if we give the country more representation—we shall do a good thing. I want to know what is the use of this Bill if it is passed; it cannot come into force for three years. When I was before the electors, going my rounds, they all said, "Well, there are very few people who could get through this district as well as you." The throat of the Premier does not frighten me a little bit; but it seems that the majority are in his power. When a substantial majority carried the amendment against the Premier, why did he not use the forms of the House to stop business? He and his colleagues then did not say a word; but the next morning they called their supporters together, took them into a room, and told them they would have to do what he wanted, and that, having a majority, he would carry the Bill, whether it was for the good of the country or not. That is what they did, and I say they did it by unlawful means. Last night did not one member after another condemn the Government for what they had done, in the strongest terms they could use? And, then, what do they do? They quietly go round and, like—I was going to say something perhaps not parliamentary—but they were as frightened as I have ever seen a woodhen when I have been riding along the road. Can they possibly think that those on this side of the House are going to be domineered over?—because, if they do, they may depend upon it they have made a mistake. I shall have my say, and say what I think proper. As I told the Government before, if they did what was right I should follow them; but if they are going to bully me they will find they have made a great mistake, for I will stand up against them as long as I have breath in my body. I ask, what is a fair thing for the district I come from? You may depend upon it the people there will back me up in what I am doing. But my opinion is that the Government do not care quite so much for pushing this Bill through as to kill time. If they did want to push the business on in the way they pretend, they would never have brought this Bill on the floor of the House at all. There is the retrenchment which was to be done, and which we wanted to come down on the floor of this House more than anything in the world. I do not believe they want to bring it down at all, or that they will ever make anything out of it. I wanted to help them to retrench all that was possible; but I shall have to go home, and I shall be asked what we have done in the House with regard to retrenchment, and I shall have to say that I have done everything I could to get it done in this House, but that it was only promised to be done during the recess. What is the result of the retrenchment? There is one man in my district who has been discharged, and I think it was very wrong, for there was a great deal of work to be done at the station during certain seasons. There is not a day but I get two or three telegrams from that place; and what do the Government do? They are going to send a man back to look after the platelaying during the day, and his wife is to look after the parcels. That is retrenchment! However, I am satisfied with that. But they have done worse than that. The people are now finding fault with the taking-away of the telephone office; the Government have taken away the telephone office, and placed the telephone in a store. Now, that is a wrong to the people who live there, and it is wrong to the Government. It is well known that there is great jealousy between one store and another, and by putting the telephone in a store other people will not use it. Now, I want to know if that is right, and what retrenchment it will effect. They might just as well have put the telephone in the office where it was before, and have let the woman look after it just as she is looking after the parcels. By so doing the work could have been done for a quarter of the money, and it would have been a boon to the district. If these little places were not represented in the House there is no doubt they would get nothing. As I have said, I want the retrenchment proposals on the floor of this House, so that I may be able, when I go to my people, to tell them what is being done.

Mr. Kerr

The hour of half-past five o'clock having arrived, Mr. SPEAKER left the chair.

HOUSE RESUMED.

Mr. SPEAKER resumed the chair at half-past seven o'clock.

Mr. SPEAKER.—The honourable member for Motueka was in possession of the chair when the House adjourned at half-past five o'clock. The honourable member can either finish his speech, or, with the consent of the House, move the adjournment of the debate in order that the motion to go into Committee of Supply, fixed for half-past seven o'clock, may be proceeded with.

Mr. KERR.—I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Debate adjourned.

IMPREST SUPPLY BILL (No. 8).

Mr. SPEAKER.—I may say, with regard to the course that has been formerly adopted as to Imprest Supply Bills, that it has been this: On two previous occasions when the House proceeded with Imprest Supply Bills there were debates proceeding on the motion for going into Committee of Supply, during which amendments were moved expressing a want of confidence in the Government. On both those occasions—in 1877 and 1880—the main debates were put aside, and special sittings, as it were, on Supply were held in order to enable Imprest Supply Bills to be passed. I presume that may have been done under arrangement with both sides of the House. No arrangement has been come to to-night, and the order is called on. It will be my duty to call on the honourable member for Ashburton to resume the debate on the question formerly before the House—namely, That the Speaker do now leave the chair, in order that the House may resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir J. VOGEL.—It will perhaps be convenient that I should answer the question, put to me earlier in the afternoon by the honourable member at the head of the Government, as to the course the Opposition will adopt with reference to the Imprest Supply Bill he desires to pass through. Sir, I felt a hesitation in giving that answer this afternoon, because I could not help feeling that the honourable members with whom I have the honour to act are suffering under a very keen sense of irritation at the insinuations and, in fact, the open accusations which have been levelled at them during the last two days because they considered it their duty to discuss, I will not say amply, but in a very modified form, a measure of the very greatest importance; and therefore I thought it better, before I would give a reply, that I should place myself in communication with the honourable gentlemen who are acting with me. Sir, I am able, as I anticipated I should be, to say that, notwithstanding the excuses which they might have for a different course, the honourable members on this side of the House have determined to interpose no obstacles in the way of the honourable gentleman obtaining the supplies which he deems necessary. We think it better, following the general course, that an Imprest Supply Bill should not pass through all its stages to-night. It is not the custom—that I need not point out to you, Sir—except in cases of emergency, to allow resolutions from the Committee of Supply or Committee of Ways and Means to be reported the same day on which they are passed. It is only in a case of the very last emergency that such a course is adopted. Indeed, there is an instance in the House of Commons where a report from a Committee of Supply was adopted, and where the House the next day cancelled the adoption of the report, and insisted that it should not come on without notice. And, Sir, I think it would be better not to allow it to appear that imprest supply could be obtained so easily, and to pass the measure through only part of its stages to-night and finish it to-morrow. But, at the same time, if the honourable gentleman at the head of the Government will say he considers it so urgent that the Bill should pass through to-night, and recommends us to disregard the usual practice, then honourable members on this side of the House will interpose no obstacle. They will place upon the honourable member the responsibility of saying that he considers it is urgent that the Bill should pass through all its stages to-night; and we will accept his assurance, and allow the Bill to pass through without any difficulty. Sir, it is legitimate, as I need scarcely point out to the honourable member, on occasions of this kind to elicit from the Government information upon all questions which are not already upon the Order Paper, and it is usual for the Government to afford the fullest information. Now, Sir,—

Mr. SPEAKER.—There is no motion yet before the House. I understood you were answering some question; but I think you had better let the order be called on for going into Committee of Supply.

Sir J. VOGEL.—You had called upon the honourable member for Ashburton to resume the debate on the Financial Statement, and I was explaining why it would not be necessary to do so.

Mr. SPEAKER.—I had intimated that, if no arrangement were come to for further adjourning the financial debate, I would call on the honourable member for Ashburton to take it up. I thought you were answering some question that had been put to you by the Treasurer earlier in the day. I thought, having arranged that, the Treasurer would move the House into Committee of Supply for the special consideration of the Imprest Supply Bill.

Sir J. VOGEL.—I think the course I am pointing out will be an easier one. I was saying that it was usual on occasions of this kind for the Government to answer freely such questions as they are able to reply to. And, Sir, I think it will not be inappropriate that we should seek to obtain information from the honourable gentleman in the course of the Bill passing through. But I must say this: that we do not wish the honourable member to understand that we are putting questions as any threat held out to him in regard to the Imprest Supply Bill. Whether he chooses to answer the questions, whether he treats us with courtesy or not, we shall still interpose no obstacle to the Supply Bill passing through. Whatever provocation we have received, we do not consider it would be right to deal with such a matter on a question of supply. And now, Sir, I would suggest to you that it would be better to call on the honourable member for Ashburton and allow him to move the further adjournment of the debate, and then call up Supply.

Mr. SPEAKER.—The order having been called on, I think it will be for the honourable member for Ashburton to move the further adjournment of the debate.

Mr. WALKER.—I beg to move, That the financial debate be adjourned.

Debate adjourned.

Major ATKINSON.—Sir, I beg to move that you do leave the chair, in order that the House may go into Committee of Supply, for the purpose of passing an Imprest Supply Bill. The matter is one of urgency. I forgot to ask the House for supply a few days ago, and I have to apologize for the omission. But, as to-morrow is Friday, and as we must have money by Monday, it will cause considerable inconvenience if this Bill be not passed. I therefore move that you do leave the chair. It is quite in accordance with our ordinary custom, and not, as the honourable gentleman said, "very exceptional." Many a time we assisted the honourable gentleman to pass an Imprest Bill through at one sitting, so that there is nothing unusual in it. This is not an Appropriation Act, or anything more than a Bill to provide money to carry on the necessary business of the country. Nor are we abandoning any of our privileges by adopting the course I propose. I beg to move, That you do leave the chair, in order that the House may go into Committee of Supply, in order to pass the Imprest Supply Bill.

Sir J. VOGEL.—I should like to ask the honourable gentleman if he will be kind enough to give to the House some idea as to the course and order of business which he proposes during the rest of the session, and especially what further business he proposes should be attended to.

Sir G. GREY.—Before the Premier replies, I beg to move an amendment to the motion. It is, To omit all the words of the question after the word "That," with a view to inserting the following words: "in the opinion of this House it is desirable we should, without further delay, proceed to consider what measure should be taken to relieve the distress prevailing amongst the farming, labouring, and industrial classes of New Zealand." I have no desire, Sir, to raise a debate on this subject at the present moment, and to stop supply; but I have not been able to get a motion before the House this session. I tried to get one on, but it was struck off the Order Paper in due course; and this is my only chance of bringing forward one of the most important subjects that can possibly occupy our attention. If the Premier will give me an opportunity at some other time to move in this matter, I will not debate this question now, but will allow supply to be passed with the least possible delay.

Major ATKINSON.—It is quite impossible that the Government can, under a threat of this sort, promise the honourable gentleman an opportunity. The honourable gentleman must take his own course. If the honourable gentleman had thought proper to consult the Government something might have been arranged; but, certainly, under these circumstances we cannot make any bargain with the honourable gentleman.

Mr. TURNBULL.—I am sorry to hear the remarks the Treasurer has just made. The right of bringing up subjects on which honourable members feel strongly on the motion to go into Committee of Supply is one of the greatest rights this House has.

Major ATKINSON.—I do not dispute the right. The honourable gentleman asked me a question, and I gave him an answer.

Mr. TURNBULL.—It is one of the greatest rights of any honourable member to be able to move an amendment on the motion to go into Committee of Supply, and thus to bring up subjects for consideration of the House. The honourable member for Auckland Central has been rather hardly used this session, because measures which he deems of great importance he has not been able to get before the House at all. I think the honourable gentleman should have the fullest facilities for bringing on a subject of this kind, and he should be able to do so without being spoken to by the Premier of the colony as the honourable gentleman has just been spoken to. I hope the House will not forego its privileges, but that, when an honourable member wishes to bring forward a subject of public interest, he will be allowed to do so.

Mr. TAYLOR.—I think the motion of the honourable member for Auckland Central is one deserving of the greatest possible consideration. Although I have often to disagree with the honourable gentleman, I must admit that, in my opinion, his sympathy is always with those who are being oppressed, and therefore I say, if he deems it his duty to bring forward a resolution of this kind, I cannot conceive why the Premier should threaten the honourable gentleman.

Major ATKINSON.—There was no threat at all. Will the honourable gentleman allow me to explain? This is not an ordinary motion to go into Committee of Supply, of which honourable members ordinarily take advantage, and very properly, for bringing forward matters which they consider of interest to the country. The House has now consented to go into Committee of Supply simply for the purpose of granting funds to carry on the government of the country; and therefore it was that I could not agree to the interception of the motion by the resolution of the honourable gentleman, or any other.

Mr. TAYLOR.—I understood the honourable member for Auckland Central to say distinctly that he would support the Government in getting supply; and therefore I cannot conceive why the Premier adopted the tone he did in speaking to the honourable gentleman. The oftener the subject is brought forward by the honourable gentleman the better it will be for the country. Sir, what do we find to-day? The Radical Reform Association are writing up to honourable members, protesting against this power being placed in the hands of the Government to dissolve whenever they like.

Mr. SPEAKER.—The honourable member cannot now speak on the Representation Bill.

Mr. TAYLOR.—Sir, I will endeavour to keep in order. We see that the papers throughout the country are showing that the people are beginning to see that, if we give any honourable gentlemen occupying those benches the right to send people about their business,—

An Hon. MEMBER.—We shall be unemployed.

Mr. TAYLOR.—Yes; a great many honourable members will find themselves unemployed—these radical reformers will find themselves not here again, because, in my opinion, they are sacrificing the best interests of the people. At the last election the great objection raised to me was that I was a blind supporter of the late Government. Sir, I would not follow any Government blindly. I am surprised at honourable gentlemen like the honourable members for Te Aro, Thorndon, and members of that kind,—

An Hon. MEMBER.—Marsden.

Mr. TAYLOR.—Oh, I do not know anything about Marsden. I am referring more to honourable members for city constituencies, because I believe when they come before their constituents we shall find they will apologize, and turn right-about face;—that is what they have got to do. I say this: I support no Government against my conscientious convictions. I was exceedingly amused at what has occurred recently; and I hope the honourable member for Te Aro, at any rate, will be able to satisfy the minds of those who put him here as to his action. I cannot conceive of an honourable member voting one way one night and in the exactly opposite way the next.

Mr. SPEAKER.—I must again remind the honourable gentleman that the Representation Bill is not under discussion now.

Mr. TAYLOR.—Sir, I will try to keep in order; but I understood that on an occasion of this kind we could traverse the whole policy of the Government.

Mr. SPEAKER.—Honourable members must not debate subjects that are set down as orders of the day. Debate on orders of the day or notices of motion cannot be now anticipated, as the House has fixed another time for their consideration.

Sir G. Grey

Sir J. VOGEL.—Sir, I rise to a point of order. Unwilling as I am to see any question raised, I cannot help thinking that on a motion that you do leave the chair it is open to honourable members to discuss any question. Although the honourable member is referring to a question on the Order Paper—that is, the Representation Bill—he is not referring to the merits of the Bill so much as expressing his admiration at the conduct of certain honourable members. I contend that that is within his right on an occasion of this kind.

Mr. SPEAKER.—The rule is absolute that honourable members cannot, on this motion, speak to the orders of the day, as the House has already fixed a future time for their consideration, and that time cannot be anticipated on the motion for going into Committee of Supply.

Mr. TAYLOR.—I will leave the honourable gentlemen to their constituents. And now I am going to deal with a little matter in connection with the honourable member who is interjecting that he cannot hear me;—I am sorry he is rather deaf. Sir, the Premier the other night complained that some honourable members are all “talkee, talkee, talkee;” they are everlastingly talking. During his election the honourable member for the Hutt was spoken to thus by the electors: “Why, you were in the House, certainly; but what did you do? Did you open your mouth?” and the honourable gentleman had to admit that he did not do so, but promised that if they elected him again he would do better for the future, so that he might gain their confidence before the next election. It is evident to me, therefore, that honourable members who can talk have their advantages. Take the Premier himself as an illustration. If he could not talk, would he be Premier of the colony? Certainly not. And I want to see honourable members on this side of the House able to get up and talk as well as the Premier does repeatedly. I am not going to be charged with wasting time, but I must enter my protest against what I consider to be an undue insult to the honourable member for Auckland Central. Now, I have a very great respect for that honourable gentleman, and I regret that the Premier should have spoken to him in the way he did. I do not consider that the honourable member for Auckland Central has in any way threatened the Government.

Mr. KERR.—Sir, I also regret the way in which the Premier answered the honourable member for Auckland Central. I am quite sure the honourable gentleman provokes and prolongs debates by the answers he gives to honourable members. If he were more courteous he would be dealt very much better with. I believe that the honourable member for Auckland Central was not aware that there was an arrangement between the Premier and the honourable member for Christchurch North, or perhaps he would not have moved his motion; and I think the Premier gave him a very curt answer, and one that was sure to provoke discussion; whereas if he had given a civil answer not a person would have spoken. Therefore I think that all the “talkee, talkee,” in this House which has been referred to is on account of the answers given by the Premier.

Sir G. GREY.—Sir,——

Mr. SPEAKER.—The honourable member has already spoken, and he cannot speak twice on an amendment.

Sir G. GREY.—I only asked a question.

Mr. SPEAKER.—The honourable gentleman seconded the amendment.

Mr. SEDDON.—I move the adjournment of the House, in order to give the honourable gentleman an opportunity of speaking.

Sir G. GREY.—Sir, the amendment I moved is couched in language which, I think, should appeal to every feeling heart in this House. All know the distress prevailing in this colony; and, in inviting the House to take that distress into consideration, did I ask the Premier to perform a benevolent action, or did I threaten him? What threat was there in asking that person upon whom all power of benefiting these classes rests to consider how best he could do it, and to take into us his confidence and ask us for our advice? I had no intention whatever to hold out a threat, and cannot imagine the nature of that disposition which can distort a just and reasonable request into a threat. Well, Sir, the honourable member said, with certain expressions of wonder, that he thought if I had consulted him upon this subject all might have been settled. But I ask him this: Did he recently, in the presence of this House, say that I have never done anything for the working population of New Zealand? Did he repeat that, with strong affirmations? and yet, at the very time he said that, did he not know in his heart that throughout this session no chance had been given to me to move in this direction? Has he not carefully, for some weeks past, kept from us the financial debate? Has he offered any opportunity whatever of bringing a motion forward? The only motion I put upon the Order Paper was never allowed to come up, and was struck off from it; and I believe that very few honourable members ever got a motion on except one kind of motion, which is called an uncontested motion—that is, a motion for the production of some ordinary papers. I say that this opportunity offered by going into Committee of Supply is my only chance of raising my voice in defence of the miserable, and, in some instances, the suffering, the overtaxed, and, I must say, oppressed people of this colony. And, now, why am I to be reproached with wrong action when I avail myself of the first opportunity of bringing this question forward? I think the course the Premier ought to have pursued was this: When I put to him a reasonable request that he would name a time when this question would be discussed without any interference taking place with other public business, with the whole range between this time and the end of the session at his disposal he would have acted more in conformity with public interest if he had thanked me for my offer; and then he could have allowed the Imprest Supply Bill to go through, and have named a day when full attention could be given to the condition of all industrial classes of this colony. The request that I made was a reasonable one — one which ought, I think, to have been complied with, and one which would have left this House more time and liberty and, I think, inclination to go into this question than it is possible for me to get on the present occasion. I say that the farming interest requires some attention to be paid to it before this House breaks up. I say that a large portion of the farmers of the country are in a situation in which they should not be left to continue for an hour longer than is necessary. In the case of those who are tenants of the Crown, and who owe sums of money to be paid to the Crown, their fair rent ought immediately to be adjusted. In the case of debtors to the Crown through having been forced, by the system of auction, and by the small number of pieces of land put up to sale, to bid inordinate prices for the land, and become responsible for sums of money which they cannot discharge, they were entitled to instant relief from this Parliament—a relief which should have reached them within a very short period of time from the present date. And not only that; this question arises: Is any relief to be afforded to them in reference to the severe competition to which they are likely to be subjected? That is a question which should receive immediate attention and should be dealt with before we return again to our different destinations in the Colony of New Zealand. I now pass to the labouring-classes, and I think there it is necessary that some instant steps should be taken. What things have we seen done this session? We have seen, in point of fact, a new debt of one million two hundred thousand pounds imposed upon the country; because it really amounts to that. Land is taken away which is the security for the payment of the money which we owe at the present time; and this land is taken from them. We take from the poor of this country a portion of the land by which they might discharge their debt. In point of fact, it is imposing a new debt upon them, and compelling them not only to pay the capital of the debt, but the annual interest it is necessary to pay on it. That is what we see. Not only is the land taken from them in that respect, but it is taken from them for ever. They have no chance. They have to pay their debt; and they cannot recover that land again, except at some enormous price, from those into whose hands it has passed. Then, I ask the House fairly to deal with this question. I ask them, if possible, to dismiss all party spirit from their minds, and to ask whether, in the late negotiations which passed, as it were, between the Government and this House with reference to an agreement to be entered into with a great railway company, the proper information was put before us. I did not ask that the House should be put in possession of information which we ought to have before being compelled to vote a resolution on the subject; but was that information given to us in the full and proper manner that it ought to have been given before a single step was taken by this House? And when was it given to us? Absolutely, when the thing was completed in this House; and then only a portion of the information was brought down, and that was brought down as if the whole information was given to us. I say that the most important part, relating to nearly half the land, and the amount paid for the additional runs, was withheld from us until we had passed the resolution we were required to pass. Was that necessary information not also withheld from the Legislative Council until they had passed the resolution? And was it not given to us only at the very last moment, when we were settling our differences—if I may say so—with the Legislative Council on the subject? Was that fair to this House? Was it fair to the country? Was it fair to those whose land was to be taken away from them? No, Sir; I think it was not so; and I cannot help feeling a pity that I can hardly express that the population of the colony has suffered so great a loss, not only in the present time, but one which is to be inflicted on their posterity for generations to come. I cannot help thinking that it was cruel that, at a time when the people of the colony, the inhabitants of New Zealand, were only allowed to go on small blocks of land, not exceeding fifty acres, upon the condition of continually paying an augmented rent on that land for themselves and their descendants for ever, upon the condition of residing perpetually for ever upon that one spot, upon the condition of never expecting to have the freehold tenure given to them—that, whilst the poor of this country had no resources left open to them, and were treated on such hard terms, this great company was to be given millions of acres in freehold, subject to no conditions of responsibility, to be given to them simply to raise money on the land, and to have the disposal of it until they were to construct a railway, which railway was to be their own property. I ask the House, will it separate without doing some justice on this subject? Will it separate, being told that this act has been committed to give employment to the poor of New Zealand in the construction of this railway? Will it separate, saying that those who are in distress, without food and without means of subsistence, are to go forth to labour on that railway, to be paid so much a day of money raised by the sale of their own land, paid by their own money for their own labour, and to lose that land for ever, and to know that they and their children must probably become tenants of distant proprietors? I cannot help thinking that the House will see that I am right in asking them to give some assistance to the poor under these circumstances. Let them tell the men who are in poverty, who can only subsist by public work being given to them, that the work shall be given to them somewhere else than upon their own land, which, by their labour, they are to render of great value to others and then lose it for ever. Do not subject them to such degradation—hopeless degradation, I may say. In fact, I can hardly find terms strong enough to characterize it—that they should be compelled, in order to live at all, to go and work upon lands which were their own, and have been taken from them—to be paid by their own money raised by the sale of their own land. It is a terrible picture. I am sure that the more it is analysed the more it will strike honourable members' minds as something that ought not to have been done; and that it ought not, even now, to be carried out, if any arrangement can be made to prevent it. I think that it might be possible to repay the company any expense that they have been put to, and to purchase back from the contractors what they have obtained from us. Then, I further say, another wrong has been done about this, because I know that it was never made manifest to us that the lands to be given up to this company were in great part lands occupied for years, not as waste lands of the Crown in the ordinary sense, but as land on which rentals had been paid for years, and were still being paid—rentals of about £21,000 a year. I believe that with many persons the real reason for making this railway was to put certain persons in possession of runs, which they have occupied for many years, at an unfairly low price. Were we told that? Does anybody hardly in the colony know it? I think not. I therefore say that, on that ground alone, the poor of New Zealand have a great claim upon this House. But they have a further claim, which I represented the other night. They cannot go to other lands to obtain work. They cannot go, for instance, to Australia, when they have wives and families, because the cost of passage is so heavy. That is an additional claim on their behalf for consideration at the hands of the House. Flight is with them an impossibility. To me it seems that their position is one of slavery. You may put it as you like. They are on an estate from which they cannot move. They have no power to escape, if they are poor. They have no lands of their own to go upon, because you unfairly give them to the rich, or to friends; no lands are offered to them on fair and reasonable terms. There is no proper system at the present time under which the poor may obtain land. What hope, therefore, is there for them? No such hope as they would have in any other country. If they were Australian colonists it would be different. Even if they were in Europe there would be a better chance for them; for in Europe, bad as is the condition of the poor there, their position would be better than it is likely to be here for some years to come. We hear of Ireland. But Ireland was never threatened with such distress as we are here threatened with, except in the time of famine; and Ireland never had a larger non-resident proprietary than New Zealand has at the present time. I do not know whether the honourable member for Timaru has had his return printed yet, so that we can all get at it; but from what I hear of that return I am sure that it shows New Zealand in a worse aspect than Ireland ever occupied. Then, we have an enormous debt which oppresses the poor of this country—something unknown elsewhere in proportion to the population. How is it possible that they can discharge that without great suffering? I ask honourable gentlemen to look into the figures. I will not trouble the House with details. But let them ascertain what the labouring population have to pay, and see if it is not enough to press any man down. And what must be the mortification to them to know that the money which has been spent, and from which they only got the return of work for the time being, has mainly had the effect of giving an increased value to the lands of a few—too often unfairly taken. The masses have to pay the interest; the few get the benefit of the expenditure. Yet, knowing of the distress of the poor, this House has not yet passed a single day in considering the position of the people. I say that we should insist on something being immediately done in this matter. Then, I will speak of the industrial population. I ask many of the members who are here present, knowing the pledges many of them gave that this subject should be taken into consideration, and that something should be done, how have they kept their pledges? What has been done during the session? Has any voice been raised to insist upon the promised step being taken in this matter? What is the position of those who have not fulfilled their promises? They may say that the Premier is the cause, because it is with him that the matter should have originated, and that, by preventing the financial debate from coming forward for such a length of time, he has cut off all opportunity, all power of our calling attention to the matter. But, I may ask, why have these members constantly followed the Premier, instead of insisting upon his doing his duty? Will they, tonight, agree to the motion I have submitted to them, and force from the Premier that attention to the subject which it is his duty to give to it? Is it much to ask him to allow us to consider this important matter? The whole matter could be settled in a day or two. It is the question above all others which we are bound to consider. I ask for no complete revision of the tariff. I believe there are two or three things that we might do that would have a good effect in relieving the distress, if due consideration were given to the matter. Now, I say this: A great fall in wages is likely to take place. There is no doubt that the passing of this Railway Bill that is to come on will greatly tend to bring that about. I feel certain that the meaning of introducing three people, independent persons, into the Railway Department, and putting them at the head of the department to do exactly as they please, is to do nothing more or less than what is commonly called to put a buffer between the Government and the public. That is the manner in which it is spoken of by those who understand the question and know what is to be done—that the Government will relieve themselves from a certain amount of unpopularity by letting the odium fall upon other persons. They will give up to careless people the consideration of the wants and circumstances of those who have the greatest possible claim upon the care—I would say upon the loving care—of the Government. I cannot, in my own mind, believe that, at a time of difficulty, a really loving parent would relinquish his authority, would escape from the duty of doing that which is right, simply to avoid the unpleasantness, perhaps the temporary unpopularity, which would follow from the reductions which are really necessary, forgetting that, if justice were done and only unnecessary excrescences were touched, a few months would restore not only popularity but also a feeling of admiration and reward for the man who had not hesitated to do his duty, and had done it with fairness and ability, and in a manner which redounded to the welfare of the whole community. I believe that a statesman really desirous of doing his duty would accept the opportunity of doing the good he might achieve by making these necessary reductions, and would gladly embrace the opportunity of seeing that none were unnecessarily injured, and that only what the public good required was done. I could not conceive that he would think it an unenviable task, and that he would, at such a moment, desire to put it in the hands of strangers who would care little for the inhabitants of New Zealand, nor have their interests at heart, but whose sole object would be to make money out of them. I cannot believe—and I have considered that subject—that the example of other colonies should influence us in this respect, because in New Zealand none of the difficulties with regard to our railways have yet arisen which have occurred in other colonies. There has been perfect freedom from accident of any kind. There has been an admirable management of railway affairs. The only complaint has been as to the tariff imposed, and the unwise regulations made in reference to that. But there has been no complaint of mismanagement such as required so drastic a change as is proposed, and I think the House would do well to consider this point, if the Premier will allow us to take the whole of these questions into consideration. Now, passing to another point connected with this, I would say that there is no hope for the poor in New Zealand getting either remedies or redress unless this Parliament does it, because I defy any Government during the recess to carry out instantly measures that may be necessary. It requires that the Parliament should be sitting at the time that the difficulties are considered, and in that way instant relief might be given in any direction that the Premier thinks proper. It requires that he should have advisers and assistant Committees sitting upon these different subjects; and I say, let us now, or the next day, when the Premier has got his imprest supply, deliberate upon this matter, and form such Committees—a Committee to consider each interest—three great Committees to consider the three interests I have spoken of. Let the Committee make recommendations, and let us pass resolutions, assuring all the necessary sums of money for the carrying-out of any recommendations they may make. That might be done at once; and why not? What reason is there to the contrary? Is it necessary that we should spend days upon the Representation Bill, which, after all, is not to come into force for three years—is it necessary that we should do that, whilst at our doors lies so much of misery, of distress, of anxiety of heart, of hopelessness for the future? I say it is absurd to waste the energies of this Parliament, keeping us night after night upon a question which does not concern us for three years to come; and yet that there should be misery, poverty, uncertainty, and distress in every part of New Zealand which we are not permitted to consider or assuage, and that, whilst there are in this House the talent, the energy, the will, to deal with these questions at once, nothing of the kind should be done. I could continue for a great length of time to urge this question upon the House; but the House is too greatly exhausted by its previous labours now to attend to it, although I apprehend that they might vote, as I believe they will, in the direction of the recommendations I have made for their consideration. I will now leave it to others to treat of the subject more at large, and I am confident, if they discharge the feelings of their hearts, there will be some who will speak and who will raise their voices in favour of the motion I have made. If I speak alone I cannot help it;—at least it will be seen that the taunt made the other night by the Premier to myself, that I had made no effort to relieve the working population of the country, was not justified. I have done all I possibly could do to rouse attention to it, and on me no greater blame lies than this—I hardly know whether it is blame at all or not, but no greater blame will lie than this: that I have not strength sufficient now, or energy sufficient, to argue out this question as I might have done had it not been for my fear of causing embarrassment by trying to lead others to agree to support me before I came into the House, and thus causing unnecessary delay and working, as it were, against authority. My unwillingness to take that step might have led me to stand in a less forcible position than I might have occupied. Yet I still rely upon the love of their country which is in the heart of honourable members; I rely upon the promises they made to their constituents; I rely upon their feelings that they ought to do something at such a time and in an emergency such as this; I rely upon their knowledge of their duty to their fellow-men generally; I rely upon all these things, that yet some voice will be raised in support of the appeal I make, and that perhaps the Government itself might yield to my request, or that, if it does not, there may be yet found a band sufficiently strong to force and compel them to do their duty.

Sir G. Grey

Sir G. Grey

Major ATKINSON.—Sir, I would only just say, with regard to the honourable gentleman's speech, that all these matters are exercising the attention of the Government and of this House. In fact, the whole reason for this session has been to relieve the country of its distress; and we are taking the first steps, in a practical form, to give effect to the proposals which the honourable gentleman is making. That is the actual and real position.

Am Hon. MEMBER.—Which is the first step?

Major ATKINSON.—The first step is retrenchment, in the opinion of the Government, and in the opinion of the House. I do not propose to make a long debate of this. I do not think that any good would come of it. But I say this: that these matters are as near to the heart of the Government as they are to that of the honourable gentleman, and that the Government, to the best of their knowledge and ability, are taking the most effectual steps to restore prosperity to this colony. If the honourable gentleman can suggest any practical means to the Government, in addition to what they are doing, we shall be very glad to consider them. But we claim that we must exercise our own judgment in doing what we think right. We cannot adopt measures which we think would not be effectual. We must adopt those which we believe will give effect to what we desire, and to what the honourable gentleman desires—that is, the prosperity of the country. And, Sir, I submit that the House is doing its utmost. Why I object to the honourable gentleman bringing the motion on at the present time is that it seemed clear to me that this is not the opportunity for a general discussion of this nature. The House never does discuss great questions upon such a question as going into Committee of Supply upon an occasion of this kind. Within a few days we shall require to go into Committee of Supply, and the honourable gentleman will have an opportunity of bringing forward any resolution he likes. "The whole question can be settled by consideration in two or three days." Those are his words. If he thinks that, we shall have more than two or three days to consider the financial position; and I say that every member of the House—and I speak this with the utmost confidence—that every member of this House is bent upon doing his utmost to restore prosperity to every class of people. As I said, we may differ as to the means; but there is no help for that. We must pursue the course that we think right and proper; and I submit, further, that we ought to give one another credit for our motives, and not be accusing each other of trying to do wrong acts.

Mr. FISH.—I do not intend to endeavour in any shape or form to prolong this debate, because I agree with the Premier that at the present time it is quite inopportune; and I would suggest to my honourable friend the member for Auckland Central that he should take another opportunity for discussing the very important question he has brought up. I would point out to the honourable member, also, that it is hardly fair to the House that he should bring a question of so much importance before it when he has given no previous intimation to his friends that such a question was going to be brought up. We can hardly expect that a matter of this kind can be discussed, even by those who most earnestly think with the honourable gentleman, unless he pays them the compliment or the courtesy of letting them know he is going to have the question discussed. I therefore trust that the honourable gentleman will be content, in the meantime, with what he has said, and that he will let us proceed with the business.

Dr. FITCHETT.—I should like to say just one word about this. This is my first session in Parliament, and the procedure of the House has struck me with a certain sense of strangeness and astonishment. It seems a curiously complete contrivance to prevent anybody doing anything. I fear that in time I shall get used to it, but at present I suffer under it. I have very great sympathy with the amendment which the honourable member for Auckland Central has moved. Of course I accept the Premier's assurance that he and his Ministers are devoted heart and soul to restoring prosperity to the colony; but it would appear that he considers the first essential to the attainment of that end is his secure possession of the Treasury benches, and he is so careful to secure that that everything else melts into the dim vista of the future. Whatever comes up or whatever is wanted to be brought up of a practical nature is to be considered during the recess or in the future. The result of all this is that, during the whole of this session, I venture to say, we have not done one thing in any way tending to restore prosperity to New Zealand. I am very sorry that it is inopportune to discuss this question raised by the honourable member for Auckland Central. The curse of party government seems to blight every effort made by any one in this House to do anything practical to remedy the very great evils under which the colony is now suffering.

Mr. TURNBULL.—I am sorry, for one thing, that the honourable member has brought this forward, because, after the meeting that took place this afternoon, honourable gentlemen who attended it are bound not to offer any opposition to the House going into Committee of Supply. I should very much like to support the honourable gentleman's motion, but my hands are completely tied. It would not do for honourable members who make arrangements to run from them, and it was decided that the Government should have supply without debate. I therefore just state the reason why I shall not debate this subject.

Mr. W. D. STEWART.—I do not wish to say anything beyond this: that in a letter I received from Dunedin yesterday the statement is made that there are very pronounced evidences of distress there, to such an extent that those persons who can leave are leaving for Melbourne. We find that artisans and workmen, afraid of starving in the colony, are leaving it; and I do implore the Government to give, as I have no doubt they will give, this matter very immediate attention. There is very decided necessity throughout the colony for some mode of administration or reform which will bring about prosperity, which we all so sincerely desire, but which none of us seem able to accomplish.

Mr. TAIWHANGA.—I wish to say a few words to defend ourselves from the honourable member for Kumara for supporting the Government. I do not think we are ashamed of doing that, because the Government agreed to leave our number the same as it was before; and therefore, consequently, we shall vote for the Government. The people in my part of the Island sent me here in the interests of the Maori people, not in the interests of the honourable member for Kumara. The whole four of us were returned in the interests of the Maoris. I have two Bills here in the Maoris' interests, and, if the honourable member for Kumara can force them through to become law, I shall say he is a very good man; but of course we know that he only wants to support his own ideas. Therefore, as I said before, whether this Government or that give us good laws for the Maoris, I will support them. I do not care which side it is. But, then, the Premier promised that he would leave us the whole four, and that is the reason we stood by him.

Motion for adjournment negatived.

Mr. MOSS.—At the request of the honourable member for Auckland Central, I beg to move, That the debate be adjourned. This is a subject on which we feel very strongly, but I do not wish to say anything to-night, because it would have the appearance of interrupting Supply.

Mr. E. RICHARDSON.—What would be the effect, Sir, of the adjournment of the debate?

Mr. SPEAKER.—That you would not go into Committee of Supply to-night.

Mr. MOSS.—Perhaps the better course would be to move the adjournment of the House, on the understanding that it may be negatived. It is right that the honourable member for Auckland Central should have the opportunity of speaking in reply on the important question he has raised; but he does not wish to obstruct going into Committee of Supply. The honourable gentleman tells us he could not have any other opportunity of bringing it forward; and I think he has really great claims upon the Government. There is no doubt about that. The Government have been treated very generously, and were allowed an adjournment of three weeks to prepare their policy. I do not think the policy they framed at all approaches completeness in any shape or way. I can only say that the admirable frankness of the honourable member for the Northern Maori District might very well be emulated by all of us. He has told us very plainly the arrangement he made with the Government which has secured the support of the four Maori members; and if the secrets of the prison-house were all disclosed in the same way it would be a great advantage. I do not wish to say anything further to-night, as it might have the appearance of obstructing going into Committee of Supply. I have no desire to do that, but simply move, That the debate be adjourned.

Mr. LEVESTAM.—I think it is a great pity

Mr. W. D. Stewart

that honourable members should waste time now. There will be another opportunity whenever there is a motion made for going into Committee of Supply.

Motion for the adjournment of the debate negatived.

Sir G. GREY.—I now move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER.—The honourable gentleman cannot move it, as he has already spoken.

Mr. GOLDIE.—I move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER.—This motion is in order, and will enable the member for Auckland Central to speak to the question.

Sir G. GREY.—Sir, I simply wish to make a few observations. It must be patent to honourable members that I had no other opportunity of bringing this matter forward this session, because I feel perfectly sure, from what I have seen of the tactics pursued in the House, that, when I should attempt to move that the Speaker do leave the chair, some one else would jump up and move something first, and prevent me from having any chance of bringing a motion forward. In several sessions I have tried to bring matters forward on the motion for going into Committee of Supply, but my attempts have never succeeded. There are various obstacles, which I need not allude to, and various arrangements are made which prevent an honourable member under such circumstances from bringing a motion forward. The plan I have now pursued is the only way in which I could gain my end. I leave it to the House to say whether what I ask is not something different from what the Premier has done with regard to considering the circumstances of the country. He has brought forward a Representation Bill which is certain, from its obnoxious features, to provoke much resistance, and prevent us from giving time to the consideration of what are the real interests of the country. The Government had a right to pursue their own line of policy, and did pursue it. Every candid man will admit that I had no other opportunity afforded me than that which I have taken to-night, nor was I likely to have any other. Unfortunately, it appears that arrangements have been made which prevent honourable gentlemen from assisting me, and I cannot think any arrangement should be made which would interfere with a debate of this kind. When I made this motion, such a thing could have been in no one's contemplation. I put it to the Premier to drop for a time this motion of mine, and take the debate on the Imprest Supply Bill at once, resuming the debate on my motion at any time he might fix. I think I released every individual from any promise he might have made; because the Premier had a fair offer made to him and he certainly declined to accept it, in the presence of the House. I say that no fair consideration of the condition of the people of New Zealand has taken place. Will any one say that reducing the Governor's salary to a trifling extent was relieving the people of New Zealand from their present state of misery?

And it is only three years hence that Bill is to take effect! Will any one say that a trifling reduction of the honorarium will relieve the population from the great distress that presses upon them?

Mr. MONK.—It is a commencement.

Sir G. GREY.—The honourable gentleman is always fertile with excuses for the present Government. I say it would be better for him to recollect what his constituents were led to expect. We are told that the reduction of the honorarium to this trifling extent is "a commencement" in taking the misery off the shoulders of the people; and this trifle from the Governor's salary, and this trifling reduction of the Ministers' salaries! Here is the work of a session, while there is a suffering population on every side, extending over hundreds of miles in every direction. Was that what they were led to expect? Was that what was to restore New Zealand to prosperity? Was that a sufficient atonement for taking away 2,500,000 acres of land from the people, burdening the country by the loss of a territory, and making large numbers of its population beggars for the future? This is what has been achieved! And I ask honourable members if we have been taken into consultation as to how reductions were to be carried out. Is there time left now? I say the only chance left is to form Committees forthwith on various branches of the public expenditure, and let them bring up recommendations. Is it not enough to grieve a man's soul to be told, "Do allow the business of the country to go on; let me pray you not to stop it;" whilst he is trying to raise a spark of pity for people who are suffering all over the country? I am told that I might delay the business of the country, and that therefore I cannot have my motion considered. If the Premier had accepted my suggestion the Imprest Supply Bill might have been passed, and this debate might have been taken at another time. What evil spirit can have got into the Premier's mind to prevent him acceding to the request, which, I submit, I put to him in a most respectful manner? And that, then, I should be told I used a threat! Is that the way one is to be encouraged to fight against injustice done to a large and suffering population? I think not. The debate can be raised in another way hereafter by some other amendment or change; but I do hope honourable gentlemen will speak out this night, and that some other voice beside my own will be raised: and I hope I shall not sit down with the melancholy reflection that, having one chance of bringing this matter forward, they allowed me to sit down unaided and alone, hopeless and miserable at the thought that I can do no more to help my suffering countrymen. And, then, I shall have the taunt repeated that I have done nothing for the people of New Zealand! I care not; but all I will say is that it is as hard a fate as ever man had to meet on this earth.

Mr. LEVESTAM.—I can assure the honourable member for Auckland Central that he shall not stand alone in this matter. We cannot help him now, because we are pledged, as it were, to allow the Government to get supply, and, if we go on with this debate now, the Government cannot get supply to-night. The honourable member will have another opportunity of bringing on his motion, on the next occasion of moving for Committee of Supply; and I can assure him that not only myself but many other members of this House will assist him most willingly.

Mr. BLAKE.—I also can assure the honourable gentleman that he will find me assisting him when he has another opportunity of bringing the matter forward. I will be more true to my promise than some honourable gentlemen on the other side of the House. I promise the honourable gentleman that I will assist him to my utmost; and I will stick to that promise.

Mr. MONK.—I must make one or two remarks in reply to the honourable member for Auckland Central. That honourable gentleman, by his talents, his position in the colony, and his age, commands from me nothing but the very highest respect; but I must say that I hardly expected an honourable gentleman of his position to charge honourable members with breaking their election-pledges, without being able to show in the least how they had done so. I defy the honourable gentleman to show a single instance of any kind wherein I have forgotten the pledges I gave my constituents. I came here to try to do my best for the colony by insisting on retrenchment. I came here to do my very best for those for whom the honourable gentleman has pleaded to-night. The honourable gentlemen, the Ministers on those benches, have given pledges that they will accomplish certain retrenchments, and I contend it is my duty religiously to maintain them in the position they occupy, in order that they may have a reasonable time in which to show to the country how far they are sincere or not in their promise to carry out those pledges; and I think in assisting to keep them in that position I am doing my very best to bring about those results for which the honourable member for Auckland Central has pleaded this evening. If there is any man in this House working and striving in the interests of the artisans and working-men of this country it is myself; I can thoroughly and conscientiously assert that. Sir, my political career is short, and it may soon close, even while in its swaddling-clothes; but, at any rate, it is without the stain implied by the taunt of the honourable member for Auckland Central, and I defy the honourable member or any other honourable member to prove one single instance of my having broken a pledge I gave to my constituents. Every pledge I have given I have fairly and sincerely kept. I have pledged myself to the present Ministry; but the moment they show they are unfaithful to the pledges they have given to this House, and are no longer worthy of my trust, then I shall stand up and vote against them. I wish to avoid saying anything that would be unpleasant. I do not want to disturb the good-feeling of this House by reciting any of the many grievances that have been heaped upon me as a citizen of the colony by the administration of the last few years, but I think I could fling out an apple of discord if I mentioned a few of those political measures that, because of the evils they have inflicted on the colony, are now ranking in my breast. But, Sir, I am not going to sit in this hall and silently listen to charges that I have broken pledges I have given my constituents. The honourable member for Auckland Central has complained that a large area of land has been given to land-monopolists by the present Government, and that I am fertile in finding excuses for them. I am as strongly opposed to land-monopoly as any honourable member could possibly be, and on every occasion on which that subject has been brought before the House I have voted against the proposals that have been made in regard to it. I shall probably continue so to do. I refer to the Midland Railway. But what has been done in regard to that question is not the work of the present Ministry. It is a legacy left to them by those who preceded them, and they have shown their conscientiousness in regard to it by doing their very best in the interests of the colony: they are performing a very disagreeable task, thrown on them by their predecessors, and they have taken away much of the venom that was lurking in that measure, by making it more favourable to the country than it was before it came into their hands. I am afraid that if we were to follow too closely the suggestion made by the honourable member for Auckland Central it would plunge the affairs of the country into confusion, by again placing them in the control of those who have left such a hard task to the honourable gentlemen now in office, and who, we believe, would carry out the great work that has to be done in the interests of the colony in a less efficient manner than the present Ministry will do. I shall thank the honourable member for Auckland Central if he can show one single instance in which I have been unfaithful to my pledges; and if he does so I will fully acknowledge my wrong. But to be accused wrongly of doing so I cannot possibly submit to. I trust I shall be pardoned for occupying the time of the House for a few minutes. I have spoken but little, and I think I have been best serving the interests of the country by maintaining silence on many occasions when I could have spoken. I have spoken a minute or two now because I feel that to have kept silent would have been doing an injustice to myself by allowing a grave charge to pass unnoticed.

Mr. TAYLOR.—I think the honourable gentleman who has just spoken has been very discourteous to the honourable member for Auckland Central. The honourable member for Waitemata has owned that he has pledged himself to support the Government, right or wrong, simply for the purpose of keeping one man out of the Administration.

Mr. MONK.—I did not say so.

Mr. TAYLOR.—The honourable gentleman implied that, I think. It is time we had less of this preaching on the other side of the House, as though all the morality in the country was there. I think there is as much morality on this side of the House as on the other. I cannot understand any member pledging himself blindfold to support any Government. I would not do it if I never set my foot in the House again. If members have not the courage to vote according to their opinions they are not worth consideration. I think if the honourable member for Waitemata, and the honourable member for Auckland West too, were to learn a little more from the honourable member for Auckland Central they would much better carry out the wishes of their constituents. We have heard a great deal about the Financial Reform Association in Auckland; but do we not find now that the influence of the honourable member for Auckland Central is being used by the radical members of that Association? I am quite sure, if the country had time to listen to the arguments of the honourable member for Auckland Central, whom I regard as one of the greatest word-painters in the House—Honourable members may smile, but I should like to have that said of myself. I do not think the honourable member for Waitemata, who, I admit, is great on timber, should have spoken in the way he did of the honourable member for Auckland Central. If the present Government hold their seats another twelve months I shall ask for a return showing the concessions that have been made to the timber industry, and then we shall see the honourable member's disinterestedness. I do trust we shall have no more of this assumption of morality, and treating us on this side of the House as if we were outcasts. I thought the honourable gentleman had more charity—which, as we know, covers a multitude of sins. I hope when the honourable gentleman next addresses us he will, at any rate, not attack one of the ablest men in the colony in the way he has done to-night—an honourable gentleman who is doing his utmost in the interests of the working-men of the colony.

Motion for adjournment negatived.

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to, and Imprest Supply Bill read a first, a second, and a third time.

REPRESENTATION BILL.

On the question, That the consideration of the amendments in the Representation Bill be postponed till after the order for Committee of Supply.

Mr. KERR said,—My constituents will expect me, when I go to them, to tell them what retrenchment the Government are going to make, and I shall be only able to tell them that I protested that the Government should bring its retrenchment proposals down. The little retrenchments that have been made in my district have raised the ire of the public; but if I had known what they were going to do I could have saved the Government a lot of trouble, and put them to no additional expense. If I knew what the Government were going to do I could save the country a good deal of money, and therefore I hope and trust that the Government will, before we leave this session, bring down their policy of retrenchment, and let us know what they are going to do. My constituents would put blame upon me if I did not do everything in my power to get the Premier to bring down his retrenchment policy, so that I could tell my constituents what the Ministry mean and what they are doing. I do not wish to take up the time of the House; but I do want to say that it will save honourable members much trouble if the Government will only tell them what they are going to do in the districts they represent. I, for one, would do my level best to help them with their retrenchment. I was pledged to retrenchment; my constituents asked me to do all that I could for retrenchment. If the Government will tell me what retrenchment is to go on in my district I will tell them how to do it, and how, in making the retrenchment, they may save trouble hereafter. When a candidate goes round, the constituents bind you hard-and-fast to go in for retrenchment in every way; but when you touch their toes they are ready to turn round and blame you for doing so. I wish to have it placed on record that I have done everything in my power to get the Government to bring on the floor of this House their statement with regard to the retrenchment they were making, at all events, in my district. I hope I shall not be told that I am stonewalling or doing anything of that sort. I have done my duty as far as in me lay, and therefore I shall say no more in the matter.

Mr. Monk

Amendment negatived, and amendments made in the Bill in Committee agreed to.

Major ATKINSON.—I move, That the Bill be now read a third time.

Sir J. VOGEL.—I shall not make any lengthy remarks. In fact, I shall simply give a few reasons which I think quite sufficient for moving, That the Bill be read a third time this day three months. I go, first, upon the ground that there is no urgency for the measure, as it is admitted by the Government that it is not intended to use it before we meet next session, and that it is part only of the measures which it is proposed to introduce next session. And, secondly, I protest against the Bill because it is evident from what has taken place, and from the feeling of the country, that the Bill as it is proposed now—indeed, as introduced, although it escaped our notice—gives to the Government a power to the last degree unconstitutional in the way of determining, when it shall so please, that the number of representatives of the country shall be reduced by 25 per cent. Sir, on these twofold grounds I ask the House to agree to postponing the Bill. I do not grudge the Government the triumph it has had during the last two days: not, Sir, I think, triumphs in the way of carrying the measure, but in the influence it has been able to exercise over honourable members in the direction of preventing them from expressing their opinions on the measure. A Government often possesses, very properly possesses, a power of influencing the votes of members; but when that influence is extended in the direction of being able to prevent members from expressing their opinions, of being able, in fact, to order them out of the House when it is not desired they should listen to a speaker, it appears to me that such influence is of great danger. Putting that on one side, leaving honourable members to answer to their own consciences, as they must, one time or another, how they allowed this Bill to pass as they have done, how they allowed the arguments against it to pass without any answer or rejoinder, I go back to the fact that this measure is not of such urgency that at this period of the session we ought to hurry it through. It is not, I say, of an urgency to make it necessary that it should be passed this session; and we emphasized that many times over when we considered that the Bill passed in a shape which does not represent the opinions of the majority of this House—because we were justified in accepting the opinions honourable members had given when they were unconscious of the pressure which the Government intended to place on them. We had their opinions on the subject. We know, therefore, that they do not approve of the Bill as it stands; and I ask, are they, for the sake of helping the Government, going to consent to this measure being carried, with a full knowledge that it places in the hands of the Government an utterly unconstitutional power? It is utter rubbish to say that there is any urgency for the measure. The other evening we were told it was but one of many other measures to come to alter the electoral system, to affect triennial Parliaments, single electorates, and one-day elections, the grouping of the town districts, and some modification of the Hare system. All these are before us as a contingency, and we are asked to pass this Bill, not according to the Government statement that it is wanted, but as an indication of the power they have over this House. As this measure will not be used until next session at any rate, and as we have before us a number of measures of the last urgency, is it right we should be compelled to pass the Bill under these circumstances? I should like to know, when questions come on, as they must do before the end of the session, how the Government can logically urge that honourable members shall not discuss them at length, when they have occupied so much time over a Bill which, admittedly, will not pass into use before we meet for another session. I avoid making remarks more lengthened, first, because I do not wish to delay the business; and, next, because I am quite certain, although honourable members on the other side have not expressed their opinions, that they are well aware of the facts I state, and that they are only supporting the Government not because they agree with the measure, but because they wish to retain the Government in office. I do not say that is not a legitimate thing. I am not reflecting on honourable members. Honourable members have to consider all through their parliamentary career a choice of whether they will follow a certain course as against the chance of ousting from office those in whom they have confidence. It is not, therefore, upon honourable members I am reflecting; but it is to the Government I am appealing. I ask the Government not to use the force it possesses to compel the House to adopt a measure which, it is not too much to say, is evidently not in accordance with the opinions and feelings of the majority of this House. I move that the third reading be delayed for three months.

Mr. FISH.—Without intending at all to prolong this debate unduly, I do not feel that I should be doing justice to myself or to the constituency I represent were I not to make a last statement to the effect that I trust the amendment of the honourable member for Christchurch North will be carried. I am in this position with regard to a reduction of members of this House: When I appeared before my constituents I gave my pledge—not asked by them, but given by myself—that I thought the numbers could be reduced; and the number I thought it could be reduced to was seventy-five. Therefore, Sir, unless I altered my mind considerably on the subject, or thought the opinion of the country had changed, I should have been bound, I think, in honour to have voted for a Bill as nearly as possible giving effect to the views I expressed on the hustings. But when I came up to this House and read this Bill I thought the Bill contained all the policy of the Government with regard to this question of representation. But, Sir, as the debate on the Bill progressed I found that this is a mere bagatelle in the policy of the Government with regard to the representation of the people, compared with what they propose to bring forward next session. And, Sir, I say, and say it with all earnestness and sincerity, it is not fair to the country, to myself as a member, or to other members of the House to ask them to pass a policy of this kind in detail. It is, as it were, seeking to get a whole carried in a fragmentary manner—a whole which, if it were proposed at one and the same time, would be rejected by a large majority. I find that, in all probability, by the passing of this Bill city electorates will be seriously interfered with next session, because it is quite patent to my mind that an attempt will be made by the country members next session to increase the quota with regard to cities and country districts in such a way as will materially lessen the representation of cities. Therefore, as the representative of a city electorate, it is my bounden duty to refer this matter again to my constituents before giving a final voice upon it; and, when I recognise that there is no urgent necessity for the Bill passing this session, I feel justified in asking the Government to delay it, and in giving my vote in favour of such delay. We have another question still before us in the future, the amalgamation of city electorates; and, among the other subjects coming up for discussion, are these: the amalgamation or grouping of districts, the interference with triennial Parliaments, and the altering of the system now in vogue of holding elections on one day. If all these questions are brought up—and it appears they will be—in the amending Bill of next session, I say all these facts combined irresistibly call for delay in the final dealing with this Bill until the whole of these great questions are before us. Is it not one of the biggest questions we could be called upon to discuss—the propriety or otherwise of undoing legislation which it has taken this colony years and years to perfect, as we believe, in the most perfect way for a democratic community? Is it not reasonable to say that we should have the whole of the policy down before we are asked to determine on it piecemeal? With regard to retrenchment, I do not deny that the Government are anxious to retrench; but I say this, without fear of contradiction: that the passing of this Bill this session or next cannot interfere in the slightest degree with their proposals of retrenchment. There is another fact in relation to this measure, and which I feel bound to refer to—that is, the really shameless way in which the Maori members of this House have been induced to vote for the Government. I do not wish to hurt their feelings, or to say anything I would not say to Europeans, but they have shown conclusively in this debate that they are unfit to be present in this House at all, when they openly declare that the principle of the measure is nothing to them—that their votes can be given one way or another in accordance with how it affects themselves personally. It is one of those things that I think are quite shocking; and it leads me to believe that the sooner we do away with the special representation of the Maori race the better it will be for the legislation of this country. We have, outside of this, another fact, and, if there were nothing else which should lead honourable members in the direction of postponing the making of this Bill law at present, it is the fact that a majority of this House has said that the Bill should not become law in its present shape. I do not, as I said this afternoon, altogether blame those honourable members who voted against the Government the other night for receding from that position, so far as they have gone; but I say to those honourable gentlemen that, the Premier having had the words added to the Bill deleted, they can, with perfect faith and honour to themselves and to the party, even now vote for the postponement of this measure for three months; and I say that, at this late period, the Premier could, without any derogation from the position he has taken up, consent to the proposition. It is not for me to personally blame the Premier; I can only do it in my position as a member of this House; but I do say that I think he is riding the high horse in regard to this measure in a way that is not necessary for party purposes or retrenchment purposes, or any purpose whatever, except, as it appears to me, the gratification of his own strong will and determination that he will have this done, right or wrong. I trust, at any rate, that this amendment will be carried; but, whether it is or not,

Sir J. Vogel

I feel it to be my duty, in the interests of my constituents, to protest against this Bill being passed now. I trust every member on this side of the House, at least, will take that view, and I call the attention of my honourable colleagues in the representation of Dunedin to it. One of my colleagues, like myself, has pledged himself to retrenchment; but I urge that honourable member to consider what the result of passing this measure now will be to ourselves as city representatives, and to the people we represent. When we remember the legislation that will be put before us next session we cannot but be very apprehensive. We shall have a measure then in which the quota for the town and country districts will be dealt with, and every town member knows as well as I do that a majority of the House will be against us, and that our districts will materially suffer as the result of that legislation. Therefore, I say, if there is any chance, by the shelving of this Bill, of making the representation of the country fair and equal to all parties, we should all, irrespective of party, unite and vote for the amendment of the honourable member for Christchurch North. I have no desire whatever, nor, I believe, has one of our party, to embarrass the Government in a party way. We have no desire, in any action we take on this Bill, to seek office for our party; I am sure the Premier and his colleagues will believe me when I say that we have no desire of that kind. I am sorry that there should have been a single party vote in connection with this Bill, which is not one that should be made a subject for party struggles. Sir, I have said what I have said not with any wish to delay business, but simply to take the opportunity of entering my last protest against this Bill being passed on the present occasion.

Mr. FITZHERBERT.—I feel bound to enter my protest against this Bill being now passed. I am not an obstructionist, and in the proceedings on this Bill I have taken no part except to vote; but I do object most strongly to it. The honourable member for Sydenham has accused me of speaking too seldom, and has said something about a promise I made to my constituents.

Mr. TAYLOR.—No; I did not charge you with speaking too seldom. I said that during your election your constituents asked you what you had done in the House, and said that, though you were there, you never opened your mouth; on which you said you would try to improve in the future: and I notice that since the beginning of the session you have improved.

Mr. FITZHERBERT.—I am very much obliged to the honourable gentleman; but he is entirely mistaken. My constituents said nothing of the kind; but I told them this: that, being a young member, I spoke but seldom, not like some other young members—and some old members—who spoke on every possible subject. My constituents approved of the course I had taken, and said they hoped that, in the future, I should only speak when I thought fit. No doubt I shall learn from the eloquence of the honourable member for Sydenham to speak more often, for I always listen with great pleasure to his classical and logical speeches, and we know that directly he begins to speak the House becomes crowded. No doubt I shall learn in time to be as eloquent and logical as the honourable gentleman himself, if I do not afford the House an equal amount of pleasure. But I did not get up to address the House on the honourable gentleman's eloquence, or his wonderful qualities, but to say a few words on this Bill before giving my vote. It is quite clear that if all honourable members were to vote as freely and as conscientiously as they would wish to do there would be a strong majority against a portion of this Bill. I, for one, support a reduction to seventy-four members; but I do strongly object to the way the Bill is framed, giving the Premier power to bring it into force when he chooses. If the Premier is defeated next session, as he probably will be on some matter, he will ask the Governor for a dissolution, and, as dissolutions are very seldom refused, he will, no doubt, get it, and he will then go to the country and have the reduction made, or, if he does not go that length, he will keep honourable members trembling under the fear of dissolution, and will be able to carry whatever he desires, no matter what honourable members' wishes may be. The other night a number of honourable members voted for a certain amendment in the Bill, because they believed it a proper thing to do, and they were not aware the Premier was going to take the stand he did. After doing so they said, when talking to us, "We are going to be stiff in the back, whether the Government resign or not." But the next morning the Premier had his whips calling them together, and he took them upstairs and talked to them, and they came down like lambs. There were a few honourable exceptions, but most of them came down like lambs, and said to us, "We must support the Government—everything the Government propose." Now, to that procedure I object most strongly. When honourable members, who have convictions of their own, will do exactly as the Government wish, whether it agrees with their convictions or not, I think it is a matter that is deeply to be regretted. The honourable member for the Northern Maori District has told us very frankly to-night that he and the other Maori members voted with the Government because they have retained the four Maori members. But I ask that honourable gentleman, who proposed to take away one of those members? Was it not the Premier himself who proposed to take one Maori member away? That concession was made simply to get the four Maori votes, and if they had voted against the Government the Ministry would be in a very different position from what they are in. The Government knew that perfectly well, and they arranged matters so as to retain those four votes. And what will the Government probably do with those honourable members? Supposing some very important measure affecting the Maoris comes up next session, to which the Maori members object strongly, and say they will vote against the Premier and thereby turn him out, the Premier will say, "You pledged yourselves to me, and if you do not vote for me I will dissolve, and very likely you will lose your seats." That is the threat the honourable gentleman will hold over them, and those honourable gentlemen, if they think the Bill a very improper one and it is against their convictions, were very foolish indeed to pledge themselves as they did to vote with the Government in the last division. Now we have heard no argument whatever from Ministers why this Bill should be passed—not a bit of argument has come from them for it, and especially has there been none for the provision to which there is so much objection. The Premier has spoken and lost his temper several times, but the other Ministers have not spoken, and have rarely been in the House even during the discussions. When they have been here they have simply sat in their seats without saying a word. I think such an important measure, so long under discussion, should have been spoken to by the members of the Ministry themselves. Several Government supporters have expressed their views very candidly; and one of them, the honourable member for Manawatu, has said that the Bill is a very improper one, that he is dead against it, and that it is everything that is bad; but, although he condemned it in that strong language, he said he would vote with the Government, because he had an objection to the honourable member for Christchurch North getting into power—he was prepared to sacrifice his constituency and the country for the sake of gratifying his own personal animosity towards the honourable member for Christchurch North. Is that a proper frame of mind in which to deal with a measure of this great importance? I say it is a most improper one. One argument we have heard urged was that in Great Britain the average quota is about twenty thousand, whereas here it is only seven thousand. Now, things are very different at Home from what they are here. In England you have a very thickly populated country, and, whether the population of the electorate is twenty thousand, thirty thousand, forty thousand, fifty thousand, or sixty thousand, or whatever number it may be, the electors are all close together, and on a very much smaller area than the population in the electorates in this colony. Things are totally different in the two countries. Although the quota may be only seven thousand people here, you may have that number spread over hundreds of miles of country. One honourable gentleman from the North has told me that he had to ride over seven hundred miles to address his constituents, having no fewer than fifteen different polling-places. Now, how would any constituency in England compare with that in area? There is no comparison. Numerical strength must not at all be the only consideration with us; we must look also at the importance and size of a district; and I must say, for myself, that, although I vote for reduction of members on the score of retrenchment, I do not think the present number is too many, considering the circumstances of the country. That number was fixed in 1881, when the population was much smaller than it is now, and I do not see why we should make so large a reduction now. However, I will not discuss that, because we have already affirmed the principle that the number of members shall be seventy-four; but I do ask the Premier to do this. We might have obstructed him, and prevented him passing his Imprest Supply Bill just now. The Premier never listens to what any one says. He is the most discourteous Premier I have ever seen. If there is anything which makes this side of the House object to the honourable gentleman's measures, and to anything done on those benches, it is the absolute want of courtesy shown to honourable members on this side of the House, and often even to the supporters of the Government, by the Premier. I recollect the time when we had Premiers in this colony like Sir Frederick Weld, Sir Edward Stafford, and others of that stamp; but we did not see any of this discourtesy then. We look to the Premier for the tone of the House, and if he will not give it a good tone we shall sink into the condition of a debating society, or become little better than a bear-garden. I hope the Premier will be kind enough to listen to my remarks. We have not opposed him in the passing of his Imprest Supply Bill, and I think he might, for once, be courteous enough to allow us some little privilege with regard to this Bill, and let it stand over for a time. We have all been very warm on the subject, and are not in a position to approach it in that spirit which its importance demands, and, if any one has approached it in a spirit not calculated to produce a proper result, it has been the Premier himself. Therefore I ask him to give us another opportunity to discuss the Bill, and, if he will not, I shall feel compelled to vote for the amendment of the honourable member for Christchurch North. I do so because I think it is a most improper Bill in this respect—and it has been mentioned several times this evening—that it places most extraordinary powers in the hands of the Premier. I do not believe that there has ever been a Bill introduced into this House before in which the time at which it should come into force was left almost at the discretion of the Premier. This Bill is to come into force at some indefinite period—that is to say, that it rests very much with the Premier to say when there shall be a dissolution of Parliament. It is, therefore, not a constitutional measure, and is an innovation to which I very much object. I hope the Premier will see his way to modify this Bill in the direction I suggest, and give us further time to consider it; or, if not, I shall, as I have said, be obliged to vote for the amendment of the honourable member for Christchurch North. That it be read a second time this day three months.

Mr. Fitzherbert

Mr. W. D. STEWART.—Sir, during the late contest I stated to my constituents that I would support a reduction in the number of members of this House; and I mean to carry out that statement, and shall vote in favour of the third reading of this Bill. I wish, however, to express my very strong protest against the attitude taken up by the Premier in reference to the amendment which I proposed, and which was carried. That was not proposed as a hostile amendment in any way; it was supported by a large following of the Government party, and its sole object was to prevent the Bill being used as a species of terrorism over the House for the next two years; and I venture to say that any intelligent man in the colony, recognising the circumstances in which that amendment was proposed and the fact of its acceptance by a large portion of the independent-minded members of the House, will see at once that it was a proper one. I am glad to say that not only the Press, but a large section of the inhabitants of the colony have appreciated that amendment, and have indicated to me their appreciation in a very satisfactory manner. I wish only to state that, having indicated during the elections that I would support a reduction of the number of members, and as this Bill has accomplished that object, I shall support the third reading. However, I hope that the Government, on reflection, will see the desirability of having the Bill amended in the other branch of the Legislature or by message by the Governor. Probably the Premier, who is learning day by day, as most of us are, will realise that the step he has taken is a very unconstitutional one, and one not at all satisfactory to the colony.

Dr. FITCHETT.—I gave a pledge to my constituents that I would do all I could to secure a reduction in the number of members of this House, and, while I recognise the objectionable features of the Bill the third reading of which we are now discussing, yet, after carefully weighing the pros and cons, I do not feel myself justified in doing anything else than keeping my pledge. Therefore, although very much against my will, I shall have to vote for the third reading. As to the objectionable features it is not necessary to say a word. They have been iterated and reiterated by every member who has spoken, and I heartily indorse all that has been said about them. It may be that I am wrong, and that the evils of the Bill will outweigh the good it may do, but, if so, my constituents will, at all events, recognise that I prefer to commit an error of judgment than a breach of faith. I shall therefore vote for the third reading.

Mr. WHYTE.—I desire to say a few words to explain why it was that I voted last night against an amendment of which I myself had given notice with respect to the percentage of advantage which country districts should have as compared with towns in the matter of representation. I considered that it ought to be increased; but I decided to withdraw that amendment for the present, and even to vote against it, because it was very evident it would be used as another means of obstruction, and would certainly lead to a very great deal of discussion, and no doubt assist those honourable gentlemen who were obstructing the business so very persistently. I, however, have by no means given up my intention of fighting this out and obtaining the fair proportion which the country districts should have as compared with the towns in the representation of the country. The proportion which I proposed in my amendment was exceedingly moderate. At any rate, we shall have that out next session, and I have no doubt the House will treat the matter fairly. I have only said these few words in order that it might be understood why I gave notice of an amendment one day and voted against it on the next.

Mr. CARROLL.—I only rise to make a few remarks mainly to disabuse the minds of honourable members of the impression that the Maori members had entered into a compact with the Government, or pledged themselves to support the Government on consideration of being granted four members. I say it is totally untrue. Yesterday the honourable member for the Northern Maori District explained his vote in this way: that his objection to the Bill was that the Government proposed to reduce the number of Maori members to three; and once that objection was removed he voted for the Bill. Sir, if honourable members on the other side of the House would only criticize the action of members of their own party, they would be doing very well; for what do we see, time after time, but a state of thorough disorganization on that side of the House, some of its members voting in the "Ayes" lobby and others in the "Noes" lobby on the same question? Besides that, we are not to take advice from those honourable gentlemen as to what we are to do. Surely we are entitled to have an opinion of our own. What we demanded during this debate was simply justice. We thought it would be unjust on the part of the Government to reduce our number to three, and we objected in strong terms to that action, and the Government saw the justice of our objection. Sir, we were very much edified with the few remarks made by the honourable member for the Hutt, and with the advice he has given us; but I think we should prefer to take advice from more experienced politicians. The honourable gentleman said that we are in the hands of the Government, because they can threaten us with a dissolution at any time. Well, I can only say this: that the Maori members are not afraid to go back to their constituents as the honourable gentleman is; and when the honourable gentleman talks about his constituency being a large one, it does not seem to have entered his mind that the constituencies we represent are very much larger. I represent a constituency extending over one-third of the area of the North Island, and at the last election I had to go round to sixty-four polling-places and address meetings everywhere. Still, I did not grumble, and I am not afraid to go back to my constituents. I believe that the honourable member for Dunedin South said that the Maoris were not fit to be representatives at all—not fit to have seats in this House. That may or may not be true; but I will say this:

that when I see pakeha members taking up the time of the House, abusing the forms of the House, and putting the country to enormous cost by getting up and continuing useless discussions by stonewalling, I feel that, if we are not fit to hold seats in this House, much less so are those pakeha members. I hope honourable gentlemen will not be so free in accusing us of wrong motives when we exercise our votes. We do not say that So-and-so has had his vote bought by the Government, or that another honourable gentleman has been bought by the Opposition. We leave every honourable gentleman to be the judge of his own actions, and we leave him to his constituents, and honourable gentlemen might as well leave us to our consciences and our constituents. We claim to do our duty, and we certainly do not waste the time of the House.

Mr. FITZHERBERT. — The honourable gentleman who has just sat down seems to be very indignant at the remarks I made; but I wish to say, in the way of personal explanation, that I said nothing in the way of reflecting upon the Maori members or their votes.

Hon. MEMBERS. — Oh!

Mr. FITZHERBERT. — "Oh!" says the Premier. That is very becoming of the Premier. What I wished to say was this: that the honourable member for the Northern Maori District distinctly stated in the House that the reason that the Maoris voted with the Government was, that the Government had conceded to them an extra member. That was all I said; and I believe that honourable members will bear me out that it was perfectly true and correct. If that is any reflection upon the Maori members, I am not aware of it. The Maoris who know me will be aware that I would not say anything improper of them. I am almost a Maori myself, having been born in the colony. I am surprised that the honourable member should have spoken as he did.

Mr. KERR. — I must certainly protest against the Premier and other members of this House saying that I am stonewalling or obstructing this measure. I am doing nothing of the kind. I am certainly opposing the Bill strongly, because I am sure that it will injure my constituents, and I am quite willing to be judged by them as to whether I am doing right or wrong. The Premier says he will go into my district and tell my constituents that I am stonewalling the Bill. Well, I do not care whether he goes there or not. But I now tell my constituents, through Hansard, that I am opposing the Bill, and have done all I could to prevent it passing. I know that this matter of representation had been talked about by them for years before I became their representative. They have been twice robbed of their representation, and now they are being robbed a third time, and I object to it; but I altogether disclaim having stonewalled this Bill. But I enter my protest against the Bill as a whole. I did not vote for seventy members, or any less number than ninety-five, the present number, which I think ought to be retained, at any rate, until such time as we have a proper system of local government; and when we get that you may have less than seventy members if you like—I do not care in the least. I say that this is a tyrannical Bill, a Bill that is going to do a great deal of harm to the country constituencies of New Zealand; and I feel that before two years are over the country members will be vexed and sorry for having allowed the Bill to pass the House. I feel satisfied, too, that their constituents will call them to account. If the Bill were a matter of urgency I should not object to it so much; but it is not, and therefore it is the Government who have been wasting time by bringing it down. The only reason that I can think of why the Bill should have been brought down and pushed through this session is that the Premier wants his own district enlarged, for he is afraid that if he does not get some change he will not come back to this House. I must say that I should be very sorry to see him out of the House; but that, I believe, is the reason why this Bill is to be pushed through. I believe another reason why he is so anxious to pass it is that he fears the next session he will be unable to keep a majority. But I would point out that next session, when the tariff is brought down, he may have to come into the cool shades of opposition, and then he will see the inconvenience of this measure. Now as to the Maori members. I say that they have just as much right to do what they think proper as any member of the House; but there can be no doubt that they are now supporting the Bill because they have retained their four seats, and there can be no doubt either that if it had not been for our calling attention to the matter and helping the Natives they would not have kept their fourth seat. They can thank us for keeping the seat for the South Island for them. As to the honourable members who, having voted one way the other night, changed their minds last night, I must say that they broke their promises in a way that was not creditable to them. The honourable member for Te Aro was the most rabid in his objections to the Bill, and proposed the first amendment and voted for the second; but then, last night, he made a very good speech, but said he was going to change his mind and not vote for the amendment again. He would not say that he had done wrong. He knew he had not. But he did not want to see the honourable member for Christchurch North on those seats again, and therefore he would not keep to the vote that he gave on the motion of the honourable member for Dunedin West. I do not care much about the honourable member for Egmont or the honourable member for Christchurch North. I came here quite willing to support the honourable member for Egmont if he would do what was right and bring down a tariff and other measures. If he had done that I would have supported him, and he would not have found me going from one side to the other. I would be one of his most consistent supporters. But I did not like his not bringing a Tariff Bill down, and I did not like his bringing this Bill down. However, I am not going to take up the time of the House longer, but on behalf of my constituents I protest against this Bill being carried.

Mr. Carroll

Mr. DODSON.—It was my intention to give a silent vote on this Bill from beginning to end of it. The reason why I meant to do that was that I was not much enamoured of it. I conceive that we could do without such a Bill as this for a considerable length of time; and I believe now, speaking broadly, that the trouble we are labouring under is not so much the number of members of the House as the quality of those members that we have here, and I am not sure that we shall be much better for a reduction in the number. One reason why I did not intend to speak on the Bill is that it will neither suit me nor my district. That, of course, is taking a very selfish view of it; but if I chose now to take that selfish view, and to vote against it, I am sure that my constituency would back me up, because there is nothing more clear to my mind than this: that they do not believe that the trouble which New Zealand is labouring under arises from the number of members. I have, however, during this discussion, made up my mind to vote consistently with the Government on this Bill. I did so not to please my constituents, or consult my own feeling with regard to the Bill, but rather on the ground of retrenchment. I conceive that this is one of the planks in the platform of retrenchment the Government have put forward; and I quite believe also that it may possibly lead to the saving of some public money in the future. For these reasons I have given a consistent vote on the Bill, and mean to do so till it is finally landed on our Statute Book. There has been an unusual amount of obstruction over this Bill. Perhaps honourable gentlemen who dislike it, and see in it a possible chance of political extinction for themselves, may have a good deal of excuse for that obstruction; but to men who come, like myself, to do the business of the country in a quiet, orderly way, it is very irksome to sit day after day, and, I might almost say, week after week, and listen to a lot of repetitions—I was going to use a hard word, but I will only say repetitions—and to hear the same speech over and over again. Why, Sir, the speech of the last speaker we have had in the pages of Hansard at least twenty times over. There is not an objection that has been raised to the passing of the Bill to-night that has not been given days ago. There is, however, one good feature in connection with the delay, and it is one which quiet members like myself, who do not make long speeches or speak more often than is necessary, can appreciate. I conceive now that there is a possibility of real retrenchment being effected, and I despaired of seeing that when this House first met and for the first few weeks. This latter opinion has been forced upon my mind through the obstruction that has been offered to the Government, for the senseless obstruction that has been offered to them has tended to consolidate a party round the Government that will back them up and enable them to carry those reforms that they have given notice of and that the country so urgently requires. This grievous obstruction has had much to do with bringing about that very good result. The Opposition have now managed, by their mismanagement and their conduct, to consolidate a party prepared to give effect to that retrenchment which the Government have announced, and which I believe it necessary that the country should receive at our hands. I have sat here in this House many sessions, but this Parliament has shown a greater waste of time than any previous one that I have ever sat in. I lay no blame upon any particular individual, but there does seem to me to be a demoralisation going on in the Opposition parts of the House that the honourable gentleman at the head of it will do well to take an account of and a note of.

An Hon. MEMBER.—What part?

Mr. DODSON.—Demoralisation in the Opposition ranks. We shall never have a settled Government unless we have a compact and good Opposition; and, if I chose to draw a contrast between the Opposition of the last three weeks and the Opposition for the three years previously, what an opportunity for so doing is presented! What obstruction for three years was given to the Government? The Opposition then gave every assistance and help to the Government; nothing was done in the way of obstruction: but now there is nothing but delay, nothing but the same speeches over and over again, useless and valueless repetitions of what has been better stated by previous speakers. I shall say nothing more, but shall vote to put this Bill on the Statute Book in the shape in which it has been brought down.

Mr. J. MCKENZIE.—It seems to me that this is availed of as an opportunity for giving explanations why honourable members have voted for or against this Bill; and I shall give my reasons. I do not think that the Government or any member of the House can say that I have wasted the time of the House, or obstructed the measure in any shape or form. I have supported this measure for this reason: that I hold the opinion myself, although it is contrary to the opinions of a number of members of this House with whom I have been working for some years past, that there should be a reduction in the number of members of this House. That that has been my opinion is pretty well known. I know that during the last elections, or at any rate during the first part of the elections, there was a very strong feeling throughout the country that the number of members should be reduced, and it was made, to a certain extent, a test question of the election.

An Hon. MEMBER.—No.

Mr. J. MCKENZIE.—It has been in a good many of the constituencies; but I may say this: that after the boundaries made by the Commissioners under the Act of last session were declared public opinion changed considerably on this subject, when they found the way the districts were cut up, and people found that community of interest had been broken off, and that they had been taken away from old associations and added to new associations. There is not the slightest doubt that, later on in the elections, when these changes were discovered, there was a considerable amount of opposition to them, and public opinion changed considerably. However, my own opinion was that we should have some finality in this matter; and, in the hope that we should not be disturbed too often, I supported the amendment of the honourable member for Dunedin West, and I did so also because, apart from that consideration, I believed it to be a proper amendment. I thought that the Premier said that in Committee those supporting the measure would have an opportunity of amending it in any reasonable way that they thought proper. In supporting the amendment of the honourable member for Dunedin West I was under the impression that those who were supporting the Bill were at liberty to do so, and I thought that it was a proper amendment to make. I hope that we shall have some finality in the matter; but I am afraid, owing to the feeling that has been aroused in the House on the present occasion, that we shall have this subject over again before the Bill can be of any use to the country. So far as I can see, unless a dissolution takes place the Bill will effect no saving to the country for three years; and I do not see why the Premier should be in such a hurry in passing it this session, unless he is afraid that the House and the country will change their minds before next session or the following session. My own opinion is that they will not change their minds, and that the honourable gentleman would be quite safe in bringing this forward next year with the other measures that he proposes to bring forward then. However, he has his own opinions, and, of course, he is perfectly right to hold those opinions, and to push the measure when he thinks there is the best opportunity for carrying it. I give this short explanation as the reason why I am going to vote for the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. PARATA.—I am constrained to speak on account of the charges that have been made against the Native members. It has been stated in this House that they have been bribed to support the Government. I should like to tell both sides of this House that there is no truth in that statement so far as I am concerned. I based my objection to this Bill on the proposal to take away one of the Native members, and also the proposal to include the South Island in one of the North Island Native districts. On account of the opposition made by the Native members, and the support accorded to them by members on both sides of the House, the Government thought fit to change their minds with regard to that proposal. I think the reason why we withdrew our objection to this Bill is quite clear. It was simply this: that the Government withdrew that part of the Bill which was objectionable to us. They withdrew that entirely on account of the opposition which we gave, and which was given by the honourable gentlemen who were supporting us. I do not say that the Government made these alterations entirely out of deference to us, but it was on account of the opposition which was given by several honourable gentlemen on both sides of the House. I should like to express my thanks and gratification to those honourable gentlemen on both sides of the House who admitted the justice of the opposition that we made to the Bill, who saw that it was not right, by a clause of the Act, to alter the special representation given to the Native people under another and separate Act. There was no arrangement with the Premier about this matter at all. The Premier came to us and said in a few words that the Government had decided to excise the objectionable portion from the Bill. Honourable members know perfectly well that I am not a supporter of the Government; but I say this: I will support this Government or any other Government in doing what is right. I do ask honourable gentlemen not to make such pointed allusions to the Native members in future. I think the allusions which are often made about us have a bad effect. They prevent work going on in an ex parte manner. An erroneous impression was created in the minds of some honourable gentlemen owing to the statement made by the honourable member for the Northern Maori District. He did not express himself clearly, and I must admit there was some ground for the mistake which was made. I do not feel sore about this matter at all, and I intended to speak in any case, if only to thank honourable gentlemen for the sympathy and support they have afforded us. I have to thank the Government also for having done us justice.

Amendment negatived.

On the question, That the Bill be read a third time,

Mr. W. P. REEVES said,—I am glad to see that this debate is concluding; and if I had any reason to suppose that by my speaking I should cause the debate to be further prolonged I would not now speak, for I am exceedingly anxious the debate should conclude. As there appears to be no danger of the debate being much prolonged, I shall take the opportunity of saying a very few words. I must reply to the accusations which the honourable member for Wairau has thrown out against the Opposition. These accusations are entirely undeserved, and if the honourable gentleman does not know it he ought to know it. Speaking for the majority of the Opposition, I may say there have been very great and persistent efforts to hasten on the business of the session, and that over and over again, both in this House and out of it, many of us have gone to a great deal of personal trouble to endeavour to get discussions shortened and the business of the House gone on with. I will give my word of honour that that is true; and it is not only the case in regard to my own humble and insignificant efforts, but it is the case regarding the efforts of the more important members of our side. The honourable gentleman's accusation against us was totally undeserved, and he certainly had no possible means of knowing that it could be deserved. There has been no organized obstruction whatever since the session began; and, if it is the case that certain honourable gentlemen have spoken rather at length and repeatedly, that has been because of the action which the Government have chosen to take. I do not think that any session could have been more mismanaged than this session has been by the Government; and, as the Government are responsible for the management of the business of this House, and as they have, since the session began, had a most crushing majority, I consider that the onus lies on the Premier and on his party of what has taken place. The first piece of obstruction we had was the unnecessary delay of three weeks, against which many of us protested, but it was granted. And the second piece of obstruction was the way in which the Premier delayed bringing down the vital part of his policy. He was contented first with giving us nothing to do, and, secondly, with throwing firebrands amongst us, which he must have known would cause long discussions. Could he expect that such measures as those—

Mr. J. McKenzie

Major ATKINSON.—This settles the half-past twelve business.

Mr. W. P. REEVES.—In order to show my earnestness in the matter I will sit down.

Major ATKINSON.—You have done it already, of course.

Mr. W. P. REEVES.—Very well, I will go on. He amused himself by flinging firebrands among us. He has over and over again thrown out remarks which he must have known would create ill-feeling and exasperate the Opposition. If he has not done that purposely, I can only say that he has been for some time past in such a state of irritation as to be quite unable to control his demeanour in this House. For these reasons I consider that the remarks of the honourable member for Wairau were entirely undeserved; and I again repeat, in order to put it on record, that the Opposition have, both in the House and out of the House, repeatedly made every endeavour to hasten on the business of the session.

Mr. DODSON.—The honourable gentleman who has just spoken, and many other honourable gentlemen, I am quite aware, have not obstructed the business of this House. The fact, however, remains that from the Opposition benches the obstruction has come.

Mr. W. P. REEVES.—The Premier has said that I aided obstruction by voting with those who obstructed. That is contrary to fact. Whenever an amendment was moved which seemed to me to be anything in the nature of mere delay, I have walked into the Ministerial lobby; and the division-lists will prove that what I say is true.

Mr. O'CALLAGHAN.—As one of those who voted against this Bill from the very beginning, I think I may here say one word as to what has been said as to the obstruction coming from this side of the House. No one can charge me with obstructing this measure or any other. I have voted consistently against this measure, for what I consider good reasons. The Premier cannot charge me with being a bitter opponent to his Government. I have voted against him, for reasons which appear satisfactory to me, on this and other occasions. In this case I voted on the principle of preventing a gross unconstitutional wrong being committed on this colony. That is my opinion, and I shall hold to it to the last. I now make a final protest against the passing of this Bill. It is intended to place power in the hands of the honourable gentleman who wields power with the greatest severity, who is surrounded by a number of almost tiros in politics as Ministers. It is proposed to give the Premier a power over this House and the country for the next three years, by the action he has taken in connection with this measure—that is, by passing that unconstitutional clause enabling him to dissolve the House and thus deprive twenty-five members of their seats. That is a power which no sensible man ought for a moment to place in the hands of any one man. That is the sole reason for my voting against this Bill. Whenever the Premier has brought forward measures which I considered for the good of the country I have gone into the lobby with him, and I am prepared to do so again. I should have voted for this measure, and for the reduction of members, with joy; but I could not, and will not, allow such an unconstitutional measure as this to be carried without protesting once more against it. I warn honourable members who have voted with the Premier on this Bill that the time will come when they will bitterly rue it, and that they will be treated as the Canterbury members were three or four years ago. They supported the Government, and yet, contrary to a resolution of this House, the Ministry levied a grain-tariff on a certain portion of the colony without informing a single member of the party from that part of the colony who were supporting the Government. Without giving us the smallest information, the honourable gentleman threw us over, and imposed this grain-tariff. And why? Because he thought he had obtained sufficient support from other parts of the colony to enable him to do without their vote. This is precisely the action which the honourable gentleman will carry out towards those honourable gentlemen who are supporting him in carrying out this measure, and I warn them that he will use this power with what is called a "hobnailed boot" policy, and that they will yet rue having acted with him in carrying through this Bill.

Mr. BUXTON.—Sir, I have been greatly surprised in listening to the charge made against the members of this side of the House of obstruction. It has been made repeatedly, again and again. I happen to be almost surrounded by several friends of the Government who constantly, whenever any honourable member that is on what is called the Opposition side gets up, will begin to say, "Question, question," and want him to sit down at every moment.

To my mind, we are something like what I once saw in a school. I once was in a school where the master was absent for a few moments: when he came back there was confusion, and he inquired who was the cause of this confusion, and every boy said, "Not me, not me." It is something like that in this House. We do not like to hear the name of "obstruction." Few of us here are free from the charge. I have not been charged with speaking very often. I have been charged with going into the lobby with those who are obstructing the business of the House. I think, as far as I am able to judge, we are more or less guilty of obstruction, from the highest to the lowest; and I do think there has been a great deal of obstruction, and, if I rightly judge, the greatest minds in this House have been the greatest obstructionists. To my mind, those who have the greatest ability and power in this House have obstructed the business in this House the most; and I do think there has been great waste of time, and, rather than that I should be guilty of increasing that waste of time, I beg leave to say no more.

Mr. GRIMMOND.—Even though I am not open to the charge of being an obstructionist, I am one who must enter my protest against the passing of this measure which is now before the House. I do not know that gentlemen coming here and opposing a measure with which they do not agree can be charged with obstruction. I have never attempted to waste the time of the House; but I have a right, on behalf of the constituents I represent, to lodge a protest against this Bill. Not only does it destroy the representation of a great part of the people of this colony, but it places in the hands of the Premier a power that is without a parallel in constitutional government in any part of the world. I ask, has such a thing ever been done in any constitutionally-governed country or colony in the world? If not, why should the people of New Zealand, in this fair country, place themselves in such a position—not only the Opposition, but the gentlemen supporting the Government—in the position of fear and dependence that they are, or may be at all events, in: that they will not feel inclined to vote against the Government as there might come a dissolution? If there was a Government measure on which there was a close division, what position would the members of the Opposition be in if they were to vote in favour of the Government? It would be thrown in their teeth that they voted for the Government in order to prevent a dissolution. The whole thing is surrounded by many difficulties, and it is such a measure as I do not believe that any independent member has a right to vote for; and, for the last time, I enter my protest in the matter, no matter what the consequences may be. It has been said that the man who votes, as it were, in the opposite lobby is an obstructionist; but what will be said of those honourable gentlemen who merely walk out of the House? It takes no longer for a teller to put down a name extra; but some honourable gentlemen feel more keenly and more strongly than others, and therefore there is a greater obstruction from those gentlemen. If I thought I could have any influence or exercise any power which might prevent this Bill becoming law, I would do a great deal more than I have done, because I believe it to be a bad Bill, which would bring on the members of this House the charge of not being free and independent members.

Mr. R. H. J. REEVES.—I regret very much that I have again to lodge my protest against the carrying of this Bill. I think it would have been better if the Premier had taken the second reading of this Bill only, and thus had had the principle affirmed that a reduction of members should take place. I believe in the reduction of members; I have always consistently spoken and voted in the same direction. I think we have got too many members in the House. That is my opinion, and has been my opinion all throughout. From the time this Bill was first brought down, I think the Premier and other honourable members will bear me out that I have supported the Bill; but, when I say that, I do not mean for one moment that I support the placing in the hands of this Government or any Government such an overwhelming power as they will have by the passing of this Act. Had the Premier consented to accept the second reading of the Bill and affirm the principle, that would have been quite satisfactory to me and other honourable members. But the action that has been taken in regard to this Bill by some honourable members is, to my mind, of the most humiliating kind. What did we see? We saw here that the House calmly and dispassionately discussed this Bill. We saw none of the Government supporters go into the lobby against them. It was never intended, as far as I am concerned, to be a party question. It was never, on this side of the House—as far as I know—put in that light at all. We were prepared, in every sense of the word, to assist the Government to bring this Bill up to the second reading, and were supported by nine honourable gentlemen who, by their action yesterday, have stultified themselves, and, to my mind, I will not say brought contempt on the House, though I might say so if it were not an unparliamentary expression. The action of these honourable gentlemen I consider of the most pusillanimous kind. What is the result? I do not wonder that the Premier or any one placed in his position should become a little bit irritable. I myself am perhaps one of the most amiable men anywhere—(Oh!)—it may be egotistical to say so, but, at the same time, I think it is a fact—but perhaps I might have been a little irritable under the same circumstances. The Premier forgot the high position he holds when he spoke to certain honourable gentlemen who believe in him right up to the hilt. He forgot, I say, his high position when he spoke to them on going into the lobby, and told them if they voted for the amendment of the honourable member for Dunedin West he should take it as a vote of want of confidence and should resign. I can hardly imagine how he could have done so, although he has no doubt had very great provocation. He is under the impression that myself, the honourable member for Kumara, the honourable member for Nelson, and the honourable member for Motueka are obstructing the business. But I do not think for one moment we should, in discussing such an important and vital question as this, be accused of obstruction. Every honourable member, let him be ever so humble, has a perfect right to express himself, and show the reason why he votes one way or another. I shall not vote against the Government on this occasion; but I wish to point out the very serious position they are placing this House in, and particularly their own supporters. The honourable gentlemen seemed to me this morning to be like cattle driven into a pen. It was a case of putting down his foot, and saying, "If you do not vote according to your instructions I shall feel compelled to resign; and, if I resign, what will be the result? The result will be most disastrous to the country." If he resigned the result would be that the honourable member for Christchurch North would be sent for to form a Government. Now, Sir, I mean to say there are men in this House who are quite as capable of taking the reins of government as either the honourable member for Egmont or the honourable member for Christchurch North—perhaps, if the truth were known, more so. I contend we want to have new blood. It is all very well to say that the Premier has got new men in the Ministry. I admit he has. I contend there are men in this House who are quite as capable of taking up the reins of government as either of those honourable gentlemen, and perhaps more so. It may be said that the honourable member for Egmont has got a new team along with him; but the new team, with the exception of one or two that have a backbone, are of such a nature as that they are bound to follow whatever course is dictated to them by the Premier. I do not blame the Premier for that. But I say, again, that there are men in this House—I am not speaking of myself—quite as capable of conducting the business of the country as either the honourable member for Egmont or the honourable member for Christchurch North, and I hope the time is not far distant when we shall have a different class of men in the Ministry altogether.

Mr. Buxton

Mr. SEDDON.—Sir, I believe this is the last occasion that I shall have an opportunity of saying a few words on this Bill. I am positive, in my own mind, that there are many members who will say that they are only too thankful it is the last occasion. I hear many honourable members on the Government side say, "Hear, hear;" but let me tell them that, though it may be the last time I shall be able to speak on this Bill, the day will come when many of those who now say, "Hear, hear," and who feel so pleasant at the present time at the passing of this Bill—I am positive, I say, that they will come to regret it. Now, as regards obstruction, I feel proud of what I have done, and regret my inability to do more. Let me tell the Premier that he himself is in a great measure responsible for some of the delay that has taken place in the passing of this measure. This is not the first time I have told him so, and perhaps it may not be the last; but if he saw his way to set aside the fortiter in re and to adopt the suaviter in modo, it would be better in the conducting of the business of the country in this House. I say the Premier does provoke members; and he goes beyond the bounds we have been used to in the past. During the time of former Governments, with other honourable gentlemen at their head, we have at all events had civility.

Mr. FISHER.—From Sir Robert Stout.

Mr. SEDDON.—Yes; and from Sir John Hall. The present Premier has been in the position of having to retire from high positions he has occupied a number of times, including the Premiership; and I had hoped the honourable gentleman would have learned from adversity, and that when we again saw him in the responsible position he now holds we should have from him something different from what we were accustomed to in former times. There are other members in this House having very much the same nature and ways as the Premier; but I should have thought the high position the Premier holds would have had the effect of curbing those undesirable characteristics in him. The honourable gentleman is irritating and quarrelsome on the slightest pretext, and his manner and language to honourable gentlemen are sometimes very provoking indeed. I believe that any honourable gentleman in the position of head of the Government and leader of the House must be firm, and unless he is firm it is quite possible that he may not lead long; but it is one thing to be firm in a gentlemanly and courteous way, and another thing to be obstinate and irritating. If it would not be too strong a term, I would say that the honourable gentleman at the head of the Government has been often, during the last few days, somewhat offensive; and that recoils on himself in this respect: that the business of the House does not proceed very rapidly. The honourable gentleman attributes to other honourable members base motives, and tells them that they are conducting themselves in a disgraceful manner; and, if he expects such terms to pass unchallenged when applied to honourable members on this side of the House, I must tell him that he must not judge of honourable gentlemen on this side by the meek and lowly followers he has on that side. There is a spirit on this side of the House that will upon every possible occasion resent treatment of that kind. Sir, on this particular question I am consistent, and have been consistent. The Premier has known that ever since I have been in the House I have taken a deep interest in the question of representation, and have always tried to prevent any alteration being made to the detriment of the sparsely-settled districts of the colony. The honourable gentleman, in 1881, by the passing of the Representation Act injured

Westland to the extent of taking away one-third of its representative power, that Act abolishing the Totara District. The Premier was a member of the Government that did our district that wrong. By the same measure the neighbouring Provincial District of Nelson lost two of its representatives. Every time the honourable gentleman has made a change in the matter of representation he has done an injury to the west coast of the Middle Island—he has deliberately and, I believe, intentionally so framed the measures that we have been deprived of part of our representation. The honourable gentleman must know that if you take away the representative power of a district you are taking away that which is of the utmost importance, because without representation people do not get justice done to them. And would it be right, or fair, or just for me in my position as a member of this House to see this done time after time by the honourable gentleman and by Governments he is connected with, without raising my voice? If I kept silent at such a time I should not be doing my duty. Under adverse circumstances, and without help, I have done my best. I brought forward an amendment providing that there should be a census taken before redistribution, so that we should have justice according to population. On the west coast of the Middle Island there has been a great increase of population, and without a census we should not get justice. The Premier admitted it was right that there should be a census taken before redistribution, and that we had suffered injustice by the passing of the last Representation Act; and yet, in the face of that injustice, he refused to allow that small amendment regarding the census to be made. The honourable gentleman admitted that the electoral districts ought not to be re-formed before a census is taken, and he said something must be done; but, if it is necessary and right to do it, why should it not be done at once? Why trust to the future when it is quite possible that there might have to be an early election under the Act, and when, if no census could be taken, we should lose part of the representation we are entitled to? Then, the Premier himself admits, as to the quota, that there should be an increase proportionately, in view of the reduction made in the number of members, to equalise the relative position of the country districts and the towns. He admits that there should be an increased quota given to the country districts, but he refuses to allow an amendment to be made to that effect. The honourable gentleman has a large majority of followers who are country representatives, and no doubt they are satisfied in their own mind with what is to be done next year. I do not say that any arrangement has been come to, because the Premier has denied that; and whatever faults I find with the honourable gentleman I always give him credit for being straightforward in his statements to us, and not knowingly trying to mislead—

Major ATKINSON.—You said the very reverse yesterday.

Mr. Seddon

Mr. SEDDON.—If that is really the impression on the mind of the Premier of what I said, I take this early opportunity of saying that I never intended it. I may have been somewhat irritated, and conveyed a meaning by my words that I never intended; and I think it is only fair and manly on my part to disabuse the mind of the honourable gentleman, and to say that I regret if I said anything that could cause an impression that the Premier would wilfully mislead us in any statement he might make, because, during all the time I have known the honourable gentleman, I have known him, in that respect at all events, to be always straightforward. He has told the House that there is no arrangement between himself and the country members in this respect; and all I would say is this: that the country members who are supporting the Government may be relying on their being able to bring sufficient pressure to bear on the Government next session, and so compelling the Government to allow an increased quota to the country districts. But when I moved an amendment that 25 per cent. should be added to the country districts, we found the country members who are on the Government side refusing to vote for it. The honourable member for Woodville interjects that my amendment did not go far enough. Well, I hope the town members on both sides of the House will remember the ejaculation of the honourable gentleman, and will be prepared for what is coming when the country members on the Government side of the House wish, perhaps, to have 33 per cent., or perhaps 50 per cent., of increased quota given to them. Then, I moved another amendment, that in the mining districts the quota should be increased 25 per cent.; and that was negatived: and I then, as a last resource, moved a further amendment, that the Bill should not apply to the electorates in the Provincial Districts of Westland, Nelson, Marlborough, and Taranaki. I think the Premier will admit that the four provincial districts I thus took in are now labouring under difficulties that no other parts of New Zealand are labouring under. We have, in Westland, a vast and valuable estate that requires to be developed, and it requires money to do that; and the less representation you have for that part of the country the less chance there will be of getting justice done to that estate. In the southern part of Westland there is a vast tract of country that only requires a little money to develop it, and it is so full of mineral wealth that in a very short time you will find there a home for the overpopulation of the older-settled districts. But you have denied us money for this purpose; and, when we have asked for roads and tracks to open communication there, you have denied us that also; and when we asked for a railway to connect us with the rest of the colony, as was promised when Westland was separated from Canterbury in 1868—although since then you have spent between £14,000,000 and £15,000,000 in public works in other parts of the colony—we have been left out in the cold, treated as stepchildren, and looked upon as if we had no relationship to you. When this position of affairs was brought before the House, a statement was prepared by Sir John Hall, the then Premier, which showed that very nearly half a million of money was owing to Westland, if it was to be placed in the same position as other parts of the colony with respect to the expenditure of borrowed money. Now, the Parliament has done us some justice, because it has decided that we are to have railway communication: but we have there to submit to what has not been done in any other part of the colony; the whole of our landed estate has to be handed over to a foreign syndicate, and it is in the womb of the future to see whether that syndicate will be a boon to us or not—whether they will allow those who come to Westland to enjoy the benefit of that estate, or whether they will act the same as other absentees, and either increase the tariff on us in the price of the land, or, instead of spending money on that estate to develop it, hold it back and keep it for sheep-runs and timber-licenses. I say we have been treated wrongfully in this respect, but there was nothing else for it if we were ever to have railway communication. I should prefer to have the half-million which is due to us from the Public Works Fund of the colony, and make the railway as others have been made. But it is want of representation, want of votes in Parliament, that has kept us back from having our fair share of the public money. I do not wish to throw blame on those who have passed away, and who at that time represented that part of the colony, but I say that the few pounds which were spent there on water-races were wasted through a want of knowledge on the part of the head of the Public Works Department. Had those who represented that part of the colony insisted on railway communication when the Act was passed, in 1868, private enterprise would have done all the rest as regards developing our mines. I say, if you still further take from the representation, the chances will be that we shall have less opportunity of making our fair claims on this Parliament, and getting justice done to us. Then, I would say again that the opposition which I have shown to this measure has not been factious opposition. I have not gone beyond what I can answer for to my constituents. I may tell the Premier, without disclosing party secrets or doing an injustice to those who have been working with me, that members of the Opposition have asked me to withdraw my opposition to this Bill: they deserted me, and refused as a party to indorse the steps I have taken. What I did I did on my own responsibility. Now, let me say that I regret the Opposition did not take the proper constitutional course with regard to this Bill; for I believe it to be constitutional, where you find that a majority of the House have come to a conclusion after due deliberation, and then that the Government, by threats on resigning, has caused men to go back on what they did deliberately—I say it would be thoroughly constitutional, and would have been indorsed by the country, if the Opposition had used their power, and said, "We will use every means in our power and every form of the House to maintain the decision of the majority." If that had been done, we should not now see a complacent smile on the face of the Premier. I knew there was something more than the Representation Bill troubling the Premier. To-day the honourable gentleman had to tell us he was wanting money, and must have it. Well, if you are in difficulties, and the purse is empty, that is the greatest power the Opposition possesses. The Premier did not tell us that it was want of money as well as not having his own way with regard to the Bill; but, if the Opposition had used the forms of the House, and had stopped the Bill going through Committee, the Premier would have had to tell us that he was in want of money, and he would have had to make terms with the Opposition, because there are thirty-nine or forty honourable gentlemen who cannot be called Government supporters, and who, I believe, would be well justified, under those circumstances, notwithstanding that a large number of them are supporters of the Bill, in opposing any further progress being made with it, especially when by that means they would be supporting a decision come to by a majority of the House. The Premier has now had his supply granted to him, and is on the point of carrying this measure, no doubt, by a large majority. At the same time, I would say to him that he is insisting on carrying this measure through in, I think, even a worse manner than the Bill was carried through in 1881; and those who have read the history of that occurrence have come to the conclusion long ago that the privileges of the House were invaded and the Bill pushed through in an unconstitutional manner. Again history repeats itself. The Premier has forced this through in an unconstitutional manner, and he is asking for an unconstitutional power under the Bill. I hope it will not be used by him or by any other Premier to the detriment of the people of New Zealand; but still the power is in the Bill. Then, there are some honourable members whom I cannot understand supporting this Bill, who, when you meet them outside this Chamber, tell you that they are opposed to the Bill. There is the honourable member for Wairau: that honourable gentleman does not disguise the fact that he believes the Bill will do a serious injury to his district. Is it that he comes into this House representing a minority, and because a majority would not support him this is the means of punishing them? If that is the position he has taken up, no more cruel punishment could be inflicted on the people he misrepresents. I will undertake to say he could not defend his conduct in this respect on any platform in the district he misrepresents. The honourable gentleman gives as an excuse that his reason for voting as he has done, against his conviction, was because of the obstruction of the Opposition; and when the explanation was made by the leader of the Opposition, and by the honourable member for St. Albans and other honourable members, that the Opposition had refused to be parties to the obstruction to the measure, he said, "You belong to the Opposition, and because two or three members of the Opposition thought fit, on their own account, to oppose the measure, you are just as bad as they are; and that justifies my vote." Last evening I moved, as an amendment in the Bill, that the Province of Marlborough should retain its present number of members and be excluded from the Bill; but, though the honourable gentleman knew full well that there were forty or fifty honourable members going into the lobby against me, we find him joining that large majority. If he wished to do his duty to the people that he misrepresents in this House he, at all events, as a protest, and with a view of carrying out his convictions, should have gone into the lobby with those who wanted to see excluded from the Bill the Districts of Westland, Nelson, Marlborough, and Taranaki. I think upon this question, when the first election takes place under this Act, when the division of electorates is made, among the names of those honourable members who will be found absent, and who "never will be missed," will be the name of Dodson, the honourable member for Wairau. I was taunted by the Minister of Education, in an early part of the debates on this Bill, that I had, when the late Government were in office and were passing a Representation Bill, forced the House to reverse a decision that it had previously come to.

Mr. FISHER.—Hear, hear.

Mr. SEDDON.—The honourable member says, "Hear, hear." Sir, does the honourable gentleman desire to pay me a very high compliment? It is true that I obstructed—if he will have that objectionable phrase—it is true that last session I objected to the Bill going further when, on a snatch-division, a decision was arrived at which did not express the feeling of the House. The Minister of Education knows as well as I do that it was done at half-past seven. A number of honourable members in the lobbies, without any notice to those who were not there, suddenly decided that they would take a division, and they rushed into the House and a division was taken, and by this means it was carried that the number of members should be seventy-one. There were thirty honourable members absent on that occasion. Some were in the lobbies, and thought the bell was ringing for "a house"—were not aware that it was for a division on the main question; and only two-thirds, or not much more, of the House voted. It was because the division was taken in the manner that it was taken that I used every power that I could use to insist upon the House having an opportunity of reviewing that decision. The result was that in the next vote all the members in the House voted or were accounted for, and the numbers were equal; and, on the casting-vote of the Chairman, the Committee gave its decision in favour of an increased number of ninety-one European members, besides the four Maori members. The Minister of Education knows very well that another attempt was made to reduce the number of members, but that it was negatived by a large majority. The Act providing for ninety-five members was placed upon the Statute Book and became law. He cannot say, therefore, that the last Parliament declared that there should be a reduction in the number of members. And what thanks do I get from the twenty-five members now in this House who, according to the dictum of the Minister of Education, owe their political existence to the honourable member for Kumara? If that decision had not been reversed, and the number had not been allowed to stand at ninety-five, there are twenty-five members in the House who would not be taking part in the politics of New Zealand at the present time; and therefore these twenty-five members, if they agree with the Minister of Education, will think they have no right to be here. If so, why do they not resign or allow this measure that we are passing now to have effect at once? That would cut short their political existence, and they should have no objection to that. Why should they sit and vote in this House if, as they think, the last Parliament never intended them to sit and vote? But they will not do this, and the Government will not allow them to do it. The Government do not say to these twenty-five members, "You are not wanted here." What they say is, "If you do not vote for us and behave as good boys should do we will send you about your business." I think those honourable gentlemen ought to thank me for their seats.

Mr. Seddon

Mr. FISHER.—A public man never receives thanks until he dies.

Mr. SEDDON.—Then I hope that thanks, as far as I am concerned, are a long way off. Perhaps it is political death that the Minister of Education means. Well, at all events, I do not wish to see his political death.

An Hon. MEMBER.—Ministerial death.

Mr. SEDDON.—As soon as you like; but "political death" I would not say, because I think an honourable gentleman possessing his ability, and who has done the work that he has done for the country, should have the confidence of those who send him here, and I hope that he will live long to have a seat in Parliament. Now, my chief objections to this measure are three. One is that it gives the Government power at any time to say that twenty-five members shall be wiped out of political existence. The second is that the Government does not take power to order the boundaries to be fixed at once, so that each district and those representing it would know where the boundaries were. The third objection I take is that the passing of this Bill means that the wealthy men—the landed proprietors, and the importers, and the representatives of absentees, and all property-owners—will obtain a power we have no right to give them. A decrease in the number of members, and the retention of the property vote—these two things co-existent are bound in the long-run to prove detrimental to the people of the colony—the mass of the people; and on this ground I have used my best endeavours to prevent this Bill from passing. However, it goes to another place; and if those who are in that place desire the good wishes of the people of this colony they will prevent the measure from becoming law. They always refuse to be parties to retrospective legislation, and I hope that they will refuse to be parties to legislation which is only to take effect three years hence, if we are to believe what the Government say are their intentions as far as this Bill is concerned. We do not know what position the colony may be in three years hence, and why we should waste a whole week in forcing this Bill through is a matter that I cannot understand. I am reminded by an honourable gentleman that the party is likely to suffer because I have spoken on this subject in the way I have done. Seeing that the party alluded to has refused to have anything to do with the course I have taken, I cannot be expected to recognise the party, or to care very much whether it is injured or benefited by the step I have taken. I have belonged to a party of one, and that is the member for Kumara. I have taken my own course; I have done what I have done from a conscientious conviction, and the day will come when those who would not join in the course I have taken will regret that they have not done so, and when those on the other side will regret that I have not been successful. However, there is yet time. I believe that there will be an opportunity of reviewing what has been done. I believe that when the people fully understand and are aware of the effect of the measure there will be a request on the part of the people to have the measure repealed. What I have done in this matter will let the people know that they are being deprived of their rights; because I hold that the life or death, the adversity or prosperity, the weal or the woe of the community depends upon the representation of the people. The wider the franchise the more the people can use their votes and execute the functions of free-men, the greater will be the prosperity, and the greater a country's progress. I say this is a retrograde step. We are going back twenty years. In 1881 the honourable gentleman now at the head of the Government said there should be ninety-five members. At that time we had a population of 450,000, and now that we have 600,000 it is proposed to have seventy-four members. The thing is clearly inconsistent; but it is done for a purpose. The Government know the full effect of it, but it is a question whether the Government can blind the people so that they cannot see through it. I think there is sufficient intelligence in the colony to see through the Bill.

Major STEWARD.—I have listened to the whole of this debate, and I am one of a number of honourable members, on this side of the House, who remained silent, and did their best to secure that we should be able to proceed with new business this evening; but, as that opportunity has been missed, I shall say a few words on this subject, though, as the hour is so late, I shall not detain the House more than a couple of minutes to explain the course I intend to take. During my speeches this session, and during the recess, I have clearly indicated my own view: that it is desirable for the number of members of this branch of the Legislature to be considerably reduced. I have consistently voted for this Bill up to the present stage; but I have been placed in a position of very great difficulty, because of the refusal of the Government to accept what I believe to be the very reasonable and necessary amendment of the honourable member for Dunedin West. I recognise clearly that the Bill as it stands contains a power which ought not to be intrusted by any Legislature to any Government; and it is not because the honourable member for Egmont is at the head of the Government that I say that. I say the power should not be intrusted to anybody, and there is a power in the Bill now that may be used to the injury of the independence of this Legislature. I should have only been too happy, if I could have seen my way, to support my honourable friend the member for Kumara on this point; but, having consistently supported the reduction of the number of members in the House, I do not wish to place myself in a false position, whereby my vote might be misunderstood; and therefore I cannot oppose the third reading, although I strongly protest against the unconstitutional power which is contained in this Bill, which would have been removed by the reasonable amendment of the honourable member for Dunedin West, and which I understood was such an amendment as the Premier himself invited. By the removal of the safeguard provided by that amendment I am placed in a position of great difficulty. Still, I shall vote for the third reading of this Bill, because I look to the whole question of representation laws being brought before us when we next meet—probably in April next. And I believe that in such a Bill as we may then pass we shall undo any mischief that may have been done in the present measure. I protest against the form in which it stands, and I must express my sincere regret that the honourable gentleman at the head of the Government has not seen his way to accept the amendment.

The House divided on the question, "That the Bill be read a third time."

AYES, 38.

Allen	Hamlin	Pearson
Anderson	Hislop	Stewart, W. D.
Atkinson	Hobbs	Taipua
Barron	Jackson	Taiwhanga
Bruce	Larnach	Tanner
Buchanan	Lawry	Thompson, R.
Cadman	McGregor	Thompson, T.
Dodson	McKenzie, J.	Ward
Fergus	Monk	Whyte
Fisher	Moss	Withy.
Fulton	Ormond	Tellers.
Goldie	Parata	Carroll
Graham	Peacock	Rhodes.

NOES, 13.

Blake	Guinness	Levestam
Grimmond	Joyce	Mackenzie, M.

Marchant	Vogel	Tellers.
O'Callaghan	Walker.	Feldwick
Taylor		Seddon.

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Beetham	Fish
Cowan	Buxton
Fitchett	Fitzherbert
Hall	Macarthur
Hodgkinson	Jones
Izard	Perceval
Mackenzie, T.	Reeves, W. P.
Mills	Duncan
Moat	Seymour
Newman	Loughrey
O'Connor	Samuel
Pyke	Fraser
Richardson, G. F.	Kerr
Ross	Turnbull
Russell	Smith
Steward, W. J.	Richardson, E.
Valentine	Reeves, R. H. J.
Wilson.	Lance.

Majority for, 25.

On the question, That the Bill do pass,

Mr. WHYTE said,—I wish to say a very few words just now; and I do so for two objects. The first is to me agreeable, and the second decidedly disagreeable. I wish to say in the first place a few words with regard to what the honourable member for Dunedin West stated regarding the motion which was carried last night, and which was afterwards reversed. That honourable gentleman said he had received a communication from several of the leading men of the colony highly approving of the amendment. I believe that to be true to this extent: that he has received a telegram from Sir Robert Stout on that subject, and to the effect stated. Now, we all know that there is no doubt he is a very high authority on constitutional matters; and we also know, from three years' experience of him, how little his opinions were influenced and guided by his wishes in such matters. So much for that; but in the second place I wish to say that I am sorry for the behaviour which we have seen throughout this debate, more especially from the honourable member for Kumara and the honourable members for Nelson and Motueka; and I also regret the conduct of that amiable young man the honourable member for St. Albans. I believe this conduct is regarded with such feelings of exasperation by even the most reasonable and moderate men in the House that I have heard it has been threatened to retaliate by blocking the Midland Railway Bill when it comes on. I earnestly trust that they will think better of this before that time comes; but I mention it now to show the effect which the obstructive conduct of those honourable members has on even the most reasonable and moderate men of the House, and to warn them of the consequences which they may thereby bring upon themselves and upon their constituents.

Mr. SEDDON.—I am sure that anything coming from the honourable gentleman will have very little effect. When I go back to Kumara they will want to know who the honourable member for Waikato is, and I shall explain that he is a nonentity. When there are occasions that the Government want work done of a nature not over-clean, he takes up that situation.

Mr. SPEAKER.—I would ask the honourable member not to make remarks of that kind.

Mr. SEDDON.—Well, if the remarks are offensive I withdraw them. But I say that the honourable member has endeavoured to cast ridicule on other members to an extent that was reprehensible. Who was it, Sir, who on another occasion made a remark that had to be withdrawn? Who is it that has endeavoured occasionally to play a funny part? Sometimes we know that those honourable gentlemen who endeavour to be funny are not altogether consistent or successful; and sometimes a would-be funny man is somewhat deficient in intellect. I would like to know, is it in good taste, to say nothing more, for the honourable gentleman to refer to a private telegram from Sir Robert Stout? How does the honourable gentleman know the contents of the telegram when the same was confidential? Has he been communicated with by Sir Robert Stout? To do what he has done is a course some honourable gentlemen would not pursue. If I were to use the term "ungentlemanly" it would be improper, and perhaps a little too personal, and so I will simply say that it is not in good taste. I suppose that if we are to act as gentlemen we should accept the statement of an honourable gentleman if he reads a telegram and says that it is from a number of gentlemen in Dunedin. That statement was made in the House, and we must take it for a fact. Perhaps the honourable member for the Waikato has been round the lobbies—I will not say eavesdropping, because that might be also objectionable; and I question very much whether there is another gentleman in the House who would have taken the course that honourable gentleman has taken in the matter. The honourable gentleman does not conduct himself in the manner in which other honourable members do, and I think he should be the last to say that the members for Kumara, Nelson, and Motueka abused the forms of the House to obstruct the passing of this measure, and that consequently he and other honourable members will endeavour to stop the Midland Railway Bill. Let him do his best; let those who wish to retaliate do so if they like, because other honourable members used the forms of the House to try to prevent the Government from forcing through an unconstitutional measure. If there is to be this retaliation, I say at once, do it. I defy the honourable member. I do not think that any honourable member besides himself, because of the action taken by certain honourable members in opposing one measure, would stand up in his place and oppose another. I trust honourable gentlemen are a little above doing what he says. I regret having, on these occasions, to use these terms. Perhaps I have been over-severe, but I should not have said this if the honourable gentleman had not been so personal. I am responsible to my constituents, and so are the members for Nelson and Motueka to their constituents. We are under no responsibility to the honourable member who represents the Waikato—that plague-spot of former years. Every acre of that land is sodden with blood, and it is worth very little. Every inhabitant of the colony has to pay about £1 a year for that accursed spot—a spot costing, as it has done, about eleven millions of money. It has cost, I suppose, about £50 an acre; and what does it produce? What is the use of it? What is its good? An honourable gentleman says it has produced, at all events, a representative: I hope they are—save the mark!—proud of him. I hope this is the last time we shall ever hear in this House that, because one honourable member sees fit to vote against the passing of a measure, other members will retaliate on that part of the colony from which he comes.

Mr. FISH.—I am not altogether surprised at the indignation of the honourable member for Kumara; and I think my honourable friend the member for the Waikato was a little indiscreet in saying anything at this stage of the debate, when everybody, I think, is agreed. We have fought this out fairly, and, at any rate, those who have voted against the measure have, I think, been actuated by a sincere desire to do right, according to their convictions. I do not think we need go any further with this discussion. I am sure the honourable member for the Waikato did not intend to wound anybody's feelings, and that the honourable member for Kumara has only done what he has a right to do in vindicating himself. If we stop now I think we shall please everybody. My honourable friend the member for Motueka is primed, I know, to make one of those slashing speeches of his; but I feel sure he will pay some regard to my request, and will restrain himself on this occasion, or, at any rate, not say more than three words. The time for bitterness in this matter is passed.

Mr. TAYLOR.—I would like to ask the Government this question: Is it right of them to put up a prominent member of their party to insult us?

Mr. WHYTE.—Nobody put me up.

Mr. TAYLOR.—Well, I do not know what you mean by "putting up." All that I know is that the honourable gentleman is a prominent supporter of the Government; and I take it that he expresses their views. I cannot understand why he should have made use of such injudicious remarks, so far as I am concerned. This side of the House has been charged with delaying the business of the country; but what do we find? At nearly half-past one o'clock in the morning a prominent supporter of the Government gets up absolutely insulting and threatening this side of the House. We are told that if we do not behave ourselves the Midland Railway Bill will never go through. I am sorry to hear the Government insinuating anything of that kind. Why, the Midland Railway will cause this Government, if they carry it out, to exist. They cannot borrow money,—we know that; and I shall oppose their borrowing proposals at any rate until we get a fair share over our way; and we shall not get it unless it is from the Midland Railway. If we do not get the expenditure from the Midland Railway, then I pity the occupants of the Treasury benches. What do they think we are made of? Do they think we are to be frightened by threats of this kind? Why did not the honourable member for the Waikato get up at the early stages of the debate and state that that was the intention of the Government? That would have been the fair way of doing it. If the honourable member for the Waikato, or the members of the Government, think they are going to gain anything by threatening us they are mistaken. As I said a month ago, I am not opposing the Government, except in what you may call a fair opposition. But we are not going to be threatened. I have never said one word against any one member of the Government. If the honourable member for the Waikato will withdraw the injudicious speech he made, I will withdraw my remarks; but I think there is a principle at stake, because the Canterbury members are not going to be frightened or intimidated by the honourable member for the Waikato, or by any members on the Government benches, because if we cannot get justice in one way we will have it in another way. I am sorry that the remarks were made by the honourable member for the Waikato that have created all this disturbance and waste of time.

An Hon. MEMBER.—It is not a waste of time.

Mr. TAYLOR.—Well, it is not a waste of time, because we are here for the purpose of talking. At any rate, we are here for the purpose of trying to enlighten those who are in ignorance; and my few remarks—

An Hon. MEMBER.—Apply to the honourable member for the Waikato.

Mr. TAYLOR.—Just so, and I do trust now we shall go to a division.

Mr. R. THOMPSON.—I would just remark that I think this debate has been a very good lesson to the young members of this House, and that in a very short time the younger members will be trained in the art of obstruction, because I think you will admit, Sir, that obstruction is reduced to an art in this House. But I should be sorry for the young members to copy the example set them by the older and more experienced members, so far as obstruction is concerned; and I trust that they will not be led into fighting these battles over and over again when they come to the House in subsequent sessions. During this debate it has been patent to every one that a great deal of time has been taken up by the leaders of the House on both sides simply fighting their old battles over again, and I am certain that not one of the young members of the House wishes to have them fought again. I trust that a division will be taken. We wish to go on with the work as business-men should, to forget all the unpleasantness that has arisen during the debate, and to do our business in the manner which our constituents expected us to do it in when they sent us here.

Mr. W. D. STEWART.—I do not know why the honourable member for Waikato should have spoken as he has done. He says he was not put up to do so. If he was not put up to do so I cannot give him credit for very good judgment, because I must say that the speech was pointless, beyond displaying questionable taste in referring to a telegram which I read in the House, and which telegram I stated was from certain old citizens of Dunedin. The honourable member, for some unexplained reason, referred to some telegram from Sir Robert Stout. I can only say that if the honourable member considers that good taste I hope he will in future take the lesson which he has received this evening. I think his speech was the most unaccountable speech which I have ever listened to in this House. I cannot understand why he got up at all.

Mr. KERR.—The honourable member for Dunedin South has asked me not to speak. Why does he not do what he preaches? He has no right to dictate to me what I should do. If he had done his duty he would have helped us. However, this is to be the last occasion, and it is only the first on which I have stonewalled, and I am only sorry that I did not know last night what I do now. I feel quite satisfied that if I had stopped the business for another three months I should have been doing my duty to my constituents. The honourable member for Wairau stated that he has consistently voted with the Government. Has any one accused him of doing anything else? So long as I have been in this House he has never been known to give a vote against them. I do not believe he would vote against the present Government even if it cost him the loss of any quantity of money to his district. I know that the honourable gentleman has stated, both in the House and out of it, that he detested the Bill as brought down; yet he is supporting it. I have done what I consider my duty to my constituents; and I am sure if he had spoken the true feelings of his heart, and what he has stated before, he would have spoken on our side and helped us. I am quite sure that what will suit my district will suit his. I think it was very ill-becoming of the honourable gentleman to say what he did as regards me and those working with me. However, we are not crushed; we have plenty more fight left in us. If we had taken the course I have indicated, I am sure that both the House and the country would have been obliged to us before twelve months were over. I am sorry we have been beaten: but we have not been beaten by fairness or intellect, but by brute force. I consider that what has happened has been a disgrace to this House. I am satisfied that before twelve months are over honourable members will say, "Kerr, you were right." The fight is over, and we are beaten, but not fairly beaten. I shall now do what I consider right for the country, and I will help the Government when I think they are right; but when I feel they are in the wrong I shall vote against them.

Mr. R. Thompson

Sir J. VOGEL.—It almost seems that the remark of the honourable member for St. Albans, that there has been a settled purpose to throw an apple of discord on this side of the House, has been literally realised. I do not know what object the honourable member for Waikato could have had at this late hour to make remarks which he must have been aware were calculated to open up another debate. However, I wish to say half a dozen words in quite another direction. The honourable gentleman at the head of the Government stated the other day that he was only anxious to see the number of members fixed. It is quite wrong to say that the Opposition have been acting in an obstructive manner over this question. Honourable members who saw the division this evening must see that there is a division of opinion upon the subject of this Bill. In fact, as far as I can gather, some honourable members are favourable to reducing the members even to so low a number as the Bill provides; and some honourable members are discontented with the Bill not on account of the number, but on account of the provisions in the Bill, which leave it so uncertain how the changes are to be effected, consequent upon the reduction of members. I believe, if this Bill had dealt only with the number of members, the views of the majority would have been accepted readily; and it seems to me that this is a question which the House has a right to settle, and which the minority are bound to accept—that is, the question of the number of members. But the provisions which leave it to the Government to decide when and how the Act is to come into force give powers which I believe are very much objected to by honourable members on both sides of the House. I put it to the honourable gentleman whether he might not, in another place, cause the Bill to be so altered that the numbers might be fixed, and that the mode of determining the distribution might be decided upon at a future time. As the Bill stands now, it is a very dangerous Bill. It took four months to carry out the provisions of the Act of last session, and then we suspended the operation of the clause which provided that objections might be made to the decisions of the Commissioners before they made their final award. Those provisions are not suspended under the present Bill. After the Commissioners have decided the divisions of the districts they have to submit them to the constituencies to receive objections; and I think I do not exaggerate when I say that it might take some five or six months to make the divisions under the present Act. There are contingencies in the way of a dissolution. There is one which one can hardly refer to without feeling that the whole nation would be plunged in grief; but there is a contingency to which all mortals, of course, are liable—the death of the Sovereign, which dissolves Parliament; and there are other contingencies of the same kind. In what position would the colony be? It would be in the position, if this Bill passed, that it could not obtain another Parliament in less than five or six months. Surely it is not a safe or constitutional position to be in, if this Bill passes, that, if anything should occur to cause a dissolution, a fresh election cannot take place unless all the provisions of the Act of last session are carried out, including the provisions of the clause which makes it necessary that reference should be made to the constituencies before a final award is made by the Commissioners. Honourable members must agree that it is neither good nor wise for us to determine by Act of Parliament virtually that there cannot be a fresh election without five or six months' delay. The honourable gentleman has gained a very decisive victory in the lobby this evening; and I hope he will consider whether he will not simply decide the question of the number of members, and leave the whole of the rest of the matter until next session, and that he will have the necessary alterations made in another place.

Major ATKINSON.—I feel very sorry to trouble the House at this time, but my patience has been sorely tried. I have refused to reply several times, and very little has been spoken on our side of the House. We are told by the leader of the Opposition that he is powerless; but we see by the division-lists that he paired for those who were obstructing the Bill. I wonder that some honourable gentlemen are not ashamed to say that there has been no obstruction to this Bill. We have been told by more than one honourable gentleman that he opposed this Bill as he did because he felt it was his duty. I am not going to call that in question. If an honourable member feels that he is doing his duty in acting as some honourable members have acted, we must submit to it, however painful. But I say the experience we have had in connection with this measure shows that we must stop such honourable gentlemen, for I say the public business cannot be carried on. I say the leader of the Opposition deliberately encouraged it.

Sir J. VOGEL.—No.

Major ATKINSON.—Yes; by his vote being found paired every time by the honourable gentlemen who are doing this. There is no getting from this; and it must be taken that the party must be responsible for its members. We were told that the Opposition have had a meeting, and that they have determined to offer no more opposition to the Government. We were told that the other day; and yet the leader of the Opposition gets up and talks, his followers get up and talk, the honourable member for Waimea gets up and talks, repeating the same idle talk over from beginning to end, without any idea in it—repeating, repeating, repeating it. Some honourable gentlemen have deliberately taken up the time of the House in delaying business. I shall never be a party to stopping fair and honest discussion. One honourable gentleman has told us that, had he known last night what he knows tonight, we should have been kept here for three months. That shows the spirit with which the work of the country has been obstructed by these honourable gentlemen. We have had speeches from the honourable member for Lincoln and the honourable member for St. Albans, and three or four speeches from the leader of the Opposition. They said that we did this and we did the other. Sir, I say the honourable gentleman is responsible if important legislation is not got through this House. I say he has produced such a feeling of irritation on this side of the House that it may be impossible to do things that I should like to see done. All our patience has been tried out of measure. They would try and make us believe that they have been carrying on fair and honest discussion; but I say that it has been a most outrageous waste of time, looking at the important measures that are now before the country.

An Hon. MEMBER.—Rubbish.

Major ATKINSON.—The honourable gentleman will understand about the rubbish presently, and we will see what his constituents say. He and those working with him are responsible for what has taken place, and I say that the time that was wasted last night was not honourable to him. He was responsible to his constituents, and not to me. Sir, I want it to be distinctly understood that, if these honourable gentlemen choose to carry on the business in this way, the country should understand their actions. I say that they have obstructed us in every possible way. What have we seen to-day? My honourable friend got up opposition after opposition. He seemed as smooth-mouthed as possible; but what was that? Even before the honourable member for Kumara got up and spoiled their little game we were assured that they were anxious to get through the debate. I will mention what they did. They continued with the discussion up till a quarter past twelve; and this prevented any further business being proceeded with.

An Hon. MEMBER.—Who caused us to do that?

Major ATKINSON.—The Government did not cause the honourable gentlemen to adopt the course they have taken. The Government were anxious to proceed with the business if they had been allowed to do so. The honourable member for the Hutt has described me as a person unfit to be in the House, and besought me to do what was reasonable and right. If I was the person he describes, it would be impossible for me to be in the position I now occupy.

Mr. FITZHERBERT.—I said you were not fit to lead the House.

Major ATKINSON.—I shall not worry the honourable gentleman's feelings by further reference to him; but I see through all this, Sir, and it will be impossible for us to take the statements of these honourable gentlemen if they act as they have acted now—

An Hon. MEMBER.—You are mistaken.

Major ATKINSON.—How can I possibly be mistaken? How many gentlemen on my side of the House spoke to-night? On no occasion at any stage of the Bill have I replied to the remarks of the other side. I have kept perfectly still; and yet the honourable gentlemen opposite decline to leave me a sufficient time to reply. What was their reason? It is evident. It was contrived so that it should be said the Opposition was quite ready to go on with the work at half-past twelve o'clock, but Major Atkinson would take up the time, and thus prevent new business being gone on with. That was the consideration—the help they were prepared to give to the Government. Is that the sort of help we are to get? I say I do not want such help. I say it is best we should understand each other and fight it out, and let the country understand us. I have gone to the utmost limit, even to weakness, to meet the honourable gentleman, and to get the business forward, by concession after concession. The honourable member for Christchurch North has done more in the way of obstruction than the honourable member for Kumara. The latter gentleman has done it on conscientious grounds, and I understand he was prepared to break away from his party.

Mr. KERR.—The leader of the Opposition did everything he possibly could to keep me from talking, and I would not be dictated to by him or other members of the party. The honourable member for St. Albans came to me and asked me not to speak, and I told him to go and mind his own business.

Major ATKINSON.—I saw the honourable gentleman going in and out of the Opposition whips' room, and until he has declared that he does not belong to that party I must consider that he is one of its members. If he does not belong to that party he ought to have told us that he had ceased his connection with it. Sir, I have been obliged to make this statement in self-defence. I say that if honourable gentlemen will look through the debate they will see that we have been obliged to hold our tongues simply to get through the business, because those honourable gentlemen opposite would not debate the question, but would indulge in talk which parliamentary usage will not permit me properly to describe. It is all very well saying the Opposition are not responsible for it; but, if they did not wish for it, division after division they backed up those honourable gentlemen who were obstructing the business. Now, I say, if they were sincere in what they told us, the leader of the Opposition would have got up and said that he did not approve of their proceedings; and the junior members might also have done the same thing. I refer particularly to the honourable member for St. Albans, who did make one or two half-and-half statements in that direction. I say these honourable gentlemen would have got up in their places, if they had wished to help the business of the country forward, and said, "We shall vote steadily with the Government on every division, right or wrong." They may have mistaken the honourable gentleman, but I say that if they are prepared, by their votes, to support such obstruction of business they must be charged with being parties to it, and there is no escape from it. The constitutional course would have been for the leader of the Opposition to have dissevered himself and have told his followers, "On no account walk into the lobby with those who are obstructing the business. If there is such obstruction as this we will support the Government." I am quite prepared to admit that the honourable member for St. Albans went quite as far, and perhaps a little further; and I will give him credit for that. My complaint is not so much against him. It is the leaders I take, and I say that they are responsible for allowing this obstruction to continue. Of course the honourable member for Motueka cannot go into the Opposition whips' room, after this.

Major Atkinson

Mr. KERR.—But I do go.

Major ATKINSON.—Well, all I can say is that, if he came into our room, under the circumstances we should turn him out at once. I presume the honourable gentleman is a member of the party of which the honourable member for Christchurch North is leader, and the latter was therefore responsible for the obstruction which the honourable member for Motueka offered to the progress of business. It is still worse now, because we might have excused some weakness or tenderness to a member of one's own party, but, when acting in opposition to the party, it makes it all the more inexcusable to be dragged into the lobbies by those who obstruct. Now, I want to say a word or two about the Bill itself. I was not going to say anything but for the last speech of the honourable member for Christchurch North. About Maori representation I say this: that those honourable gentlemen, the Maori members, are quite as capable of knowing what is right or wrong as many of those honourable gentlemen who object to them. I venture to say that if their lives were examined, and if their moral nature were looked into pretty closely, they would be far above many of those honourable gentlemen who have been so particular about their moral state.

Mr. KERR.—My moral character will compare with yours or that of any one else.

Major ATKINSON.—I have not referred to the honourable gentleman at all. I am defending the Maori members. I think the honourable gentleman was one of those who found fault with their moral nature.

Mr. KERR.—Nothing of the sort. I said they had as much right to do what they did as anybody else.

Major ATKINSON.—I am sorry the honourable gentleman thought my remarks applied to him. What happened with regard to the Maoris? The Government proposed an equal reduction of the Maoris with the Europeans. The Maoris seemed very much affected, and representation was made to me that the Maoris would very much prefer that they should retain four members, which was about the right proportion, and not vote in the European elections. Under the Act of 1870 they have a right to a member for between nine and ten thousand of population. The Maoris at present have the double right of voting for European and Native members, and it was represented to me that they would very much prefer retaining their four members—one member to every ten thousand of population—and to be taken off the European rolls. When that was represented to me it seemed a very reasonable proposal—a better proposal than that of the Government. I myself object very strongly, in the present stage of Maori civilisation, to see them mixed up with the Europeans in voting. It does not affect my own district, but might, very materially. The reason is that the majority of the Maoris think differently from the Europeans: their objects in life are not similar; and the time has not come, it seems to me, when we should mix up the two races in election matters. The reasonableness of the proposition presented itself to my mind at once. I said, "Certainly, if you are prepared to abandon your present right to interfere in the election of some eight or ten Europeans, it is quite fair and reasonable you should have the special representation of four members." Surely there was no bribery, corruption, or anything unreasonable in that! The honourable member for the Northern Maori District has not the same facility of expression as European members. He expresses his views in much broader language, and all he meant to say was that he had got what he thought a fair and reasonable concession. He did not mention what he had given up. But there was nothing like bribery or corruption in the transaction. The honourable gentleman who has referred to the subject will excuse me for saying that he must know very little about the inhabitants of various northern electorates, or he would not say anything. He would know the Maoris can affect some five or six seats, and that a little organization on their part could win three or four of the seats. Now I have disposed of that, and come to what fell from the leader of the Opposition. He has two objections to the Bill—first, that it was not wanted now; and, second, that it reduces the number of members. Well, I will take the second first. The honourable gentleman told us, when the Bill came down—

Sir J. VOGEL.—I said that the Bill is not an urgent necessity at this time, and that it places in the hands of the Government too large a power by allowing them to make the division when they like, instead of our fixing a date. I have always admitted that the question of the number of members was an open one to the House.

Major ATKINSON.—I am much obliged to the honourable gentleman for correcting me. But the provisions which the honourable gentleman objects to now so strongly were in the Bill when he said we should pass it.

Sir J. VOGEL.—I said I would not oppose the second reading.

Major ATKINSON.—Well, Sir, and what is the second reading of a Bill? It is admitting its principle; and the principle of this Bill is that the number of members should be reduced.

Sir J. VOGEL.—You said, before the second reading, that if you got the number fixed you would be content—that you would not want anything more.

Major ATKINSON.—No, Sir, I did not say anything like that. I said—until the honourable gentleman turned round—that, supposing we should get the principle of the Bill affirmed, I was prepared to receive any reasonable suggestions in Committee, and that I would invite honourable members to discuss the various points in Committee in a friendly spirit; but the honourable gentleman rendered that course impossible by the action which he took afterwards, and so obliged me to take a very different stand. But what the honourable gentleman objects to now was in the Bill as the honourable gentleman assented to it on the second reading. The honourable gentleman said he was prepared not to oppose the second reading, which, of course, in the case of an honourable member in his position, means that he was prepared to support the second reading. Then, the honourable gentleman said the Bill was not wanted. Why did he not find that out before? He did not tell us that when it first came down, but he admitted, indeed, that the country demanded it by a large majority. There is no getting over these statements of the honourable gentleman. Now he tells us it is one of the most terrible Bills from a constitutional point of view ever brought down to the House. Well, I have shown now that the Bill as it stands at this moment contains the very same provisions in that respect as it contained when I moved the second reading. Then, Sir, how is it possible for the honourable gentleman to take up the attitude he does now, if there is any consistency in him, if it is not true that his only object is to delay the business of the House with a view to bringing the Government into discredit, and with a view of showing that the Government is not able to do its work? Sir, I have cut all the ground from under the honourable gentleman's feet: he has nothing to stand on. I ask, what other reason could there be for it than the reason which has been made so manifest to-night, and after the declaration that no opposition would be given to us? What can be more manifest than the desire of the leader of the Opposition to delay the business with a view of bringing the Government into contempt in the country? Then, the honourable gentleman discovers—and, mark this, it is after he assented to the general principles of the Bill—that it is going contrary to the liberal principles that we have been building up so long. Fancy the honourable gentleman speaking for liberal principles! No wonder honourable gentlemen laugh, and did laugh when they heard the honourable gentleman say that. We were compelled to smile in our sleeves, those of us who have been behind the scenes and know what the honourable gentleman's principles are. I can well excuse honourable gentlemen for laughing, and I can imagine what their feelings are when the honourable gentleman endeavours to talk about liberal principles. Then, the honourable gentleman said this is the thin end of the wedge for doing away with the system of all the elections being on one day, triennial Parliaments, single electorates, and so forth.

Sir J. VOGEL.—I suppose the honourable gentleman does not wish to misrepresent me. All these remarks I made referred to the statement of the honourable gentleman that this Bill is the forerunner of a number of alterations, some of which he mentioned specifically.

Major ATKINSON.—No, it is not a forerunner in any sense of the term; but I will tell the honourable gentleman what the Bill is, as he does not seem to know, although he knew very well when he agreed to the second reading. The object of the Bill is neither more nor less than to reduce the number of members to be returned to the next House. That is what the Government say the country has demanded.

Mr. SEDDON.—And it gives the Government the whip-hand over those who are in.

Major ATKINSON.—Of course the honourable gentleman can discover that it does all sorts of things; but I am not dealing with him now. I was coming to that point, and was about to refer to the honourable member for Dunedin West, who, I am sorry to see, is asleep.

Mr. W. D. STEWART.—No, I am not asleep.

Major ATKINSON.—I am glad of that. I was about to try to wake up the honourable gentleman; but I know he usually sleeps with one eye open. No doubt he was in a reverie, incubating some of those wonderful amendments he is always making. The bane of the honourable gentleman's life is that intellectual activity which is always causing him to try to introduce amendments in measures, whether they are reasonable or not. I do not think the characteristic to which that habit is due was implanted in the honourable gentleman by nature; but I think his training has had a good deal to do with it. The honourable gentleman is great on amendments; and, when he sees an opening for one, it is very amusing to see how honourable members—especially those who like a joke—crowd round the honourable gentleman, urging him to move his amendment; and then presently he comes up the room to me and says, "A great many members have advised me to move this amendment. What do you think of it?" I say, "Oh! it is rubbish." But the honourable gentleman, after going back for a little, again marches up to the table—sometimes on the other side of it—and assures me that a number of members insist on his moving it. Then he moves it, and sometimes gets it put in, but the thing usually ends as the honourable gentleman's amendment has ended on this occasion. The House wastes an evening discussing it, and ends by rejecting it, because it is quite unfitted to the Bill. We have had torrents of eloquence about this alleged unconstitutional power given to the Government by the Bill; but, if it is so unconstitutional, why have such large numbers of Opposition members supported this terrible Bill? We have had all sorts of big majorities, up to twenty-five, in the various divisions on this Bill, and I regarded that as a complete answer to the talk about unconstitutionality, and I did not intend to say anything at all in reply. I was merely going to say that I regarded a majority of twenty-five as quite sufficient answer in the eyes of the Government: and no doubt it will be a sufficient answer. But, as I have said, the repeated speeches which have been made by the honourable gentleman, the leader of the Opposition, made it necessary for me to get up and speak. But, even then, I should not, probably, have attempted to speak if—

Major Atkinson

Mr. KERR.—You dared not have done it if it was not so far into the night.

Major ATKINSON.—No, I dared not have done it some hours earlier, because I have too much respect for the business of the country. But some honourable gentlemen opposite have taken care that no more business shall come on to-night, and therefore my tongue is loose, and I feel that our side has a right to put our side of the question into Hansard, and let our views be explained to the country. I was content to leave it out if we could have got on with other public business; but, as some honourable gentlemen opposite determined that no more business should be done, I thought it better, at the expense of one hour's sleep, to put this on record.

Mr. SEDDON.—We can talk yet.

Major ATKINSON.—Oh, I have no doubt of that. I have no doubt the honourable gentleman can talk to any extent, and repeat every word of what he has said to us four or five times already. No doubt he can, and will do it; but I should advise honourable members not to listen to him, but to go home to bed. I shall sit here as long as the honourable gentleman likes; but I hope the rest of the House will not submit to it, for they have had enough. Well, Sir, the honourable member for Christchurch North says there is no urgency for the Bill. There is great urgency for the Bill; and the reason is this: We want the public to understand at once and for all that the next election, whenever it takes place, will only return seventy-four members instead of ninety-five. Now, that alone is sufficient to make it urgent. The honourable gentleman says there is no marked economy in that, because it does not come into operation at once. But it does mean economy, because it says that under no circumstances shall another House be elected with a larger number than seventy-five. No one can tell when we may have another election; and I say the people of the country have spoken in no uncertain way, saying, "We will not have more than seventy members returned to the House of Representatives in future." The Government, therefore, desire to place this Bill on the Statute Book, to show that the country will not have more than seventy members. And now what does this Bill do? It simply substitutes the number seventy-four for ninety-five members now constituting this House. There are exactly the same powers under the existing Act that are taken in this Bill. There is no difference whatever in this respect; the same power of dissolution exists there, the same power of fixing the districts. Therefore I fail to see where there is any constitutional power sought in this Bill. Some honourable gentlemen seem to think that, if a dissolution came about, we should have a tremendous power over the House, because we should get rid of twenty-one members. But is there any reason whatever to suppose that these twenty-one would all be Opposition members? What does this election teach us? It teaches us that the leading men of this House are more subject to defeat than the men of less standing. It may be the fate of the Government at the next election to lose five of its own members, instead of two, as the last Government lost. Practically, therefore, the only difference between this Bill and the Act now in existence is that it makes a House consist of seventy-four members instead of ninety-five. That is all it does; and yet there is all this constitutional talk, and this foretelling of the terrible wrongs which the country is to suffer under this measure. Sir, I did admire my honourable friend the member for Dunedin West, when I saw the earnest way in which my honourable friend protested against this unconstitutional measure. I thought to myself, What a terrible disability a legal education must place a man under! You know, Sir, when the honourable gentleman moved that amendment, and afterwards when he was defending it in such eloquent terms, honourable gentlemen would almost think that my honourable friend was heartily desirous of putting that amendment in the Bill.

Mr. KERR.—And so he was.

Major ATKINSON.—So he was! The honourable gentleman disbelieves in the reduction of members; but, unfortunately, his constituents take quite a different view. Well, there comes in the lawyer. He can get up with quite a serious face, put in the amendment that he knows will destroy the Bill, and yet at the same time he gets all credit for voting for the reduction of members. When I saw the honourable gentleman preparing this amendment I did regret that I had not the same fertile mind and legal training as he has; and I venture to think that many of us would feel a great pleasure if we could go to our constituents and say, "We have reduced the number of members to seventy, and at the same time we have prevented a tyrannical Government doing any harm to the country." It was really ingenious; and I did admire—and do admire—the honourable gentleman's earnest manner. I am very sorry that the honourable gentleman has been defeated. I want to know how it is that, notwithstanding the terrible effects of this Bill, the honourable gentleman still thought it necessary to vote for its third reading. I have done with the honourable gentleman.

Mr. LEVESTAM.—What about the honourable member for Te Aro, who first moved the amendment which was the cause of the trouble?

Major ATKINSON.—Yes; the honourable gentleman did. There was no mistaking his views. He did not appear for one side in the case now, and for the other shortly after.

Mr. W. P. REEVES.—But he did not fight for his clause on the second day.

Major ATKINSON.—No; he took the constitutional course. He accepted the lesser evil. He thinks the present Government is a useful one to the country; and I agree with him that this Government is very useful to the country. Perhaps my honourable friend opposite does not agree with me in that; but the honourable member for Te Aro did, and therefore took the course he did on the second day. I was going to say, before I leave my honourable friend, that the country need not be uneasy as to the effect of the Bill, because we are quite sure that if terrible effects were likely to follow the honourable gentleman would not have been found voting for the Bill that could bring such dire calamity on the country after its adoption. Therefore honourable gentlemen can reassure themselves, if there are any honourable members on this side who still think that something terrible is going to come out of the Bill. The great constitutional leader of the House has actually voted for the Bill as it stands, and therefore it cannot be so terrible as has been attempted to be made out. I shall be very much interested, when the time comes for us to address our constituents, to receive from my honourable friend a report of his address. He is generally very kind in that respect, and sends me a copy of his address. I thank him for it, and shall be glad indeed on this occasion to receive from him—as I should be from other members if they were kind enough to send them to me—a report of his address. I shall read that address with great interest. That he will make out a good case for voting for this terrible Bill I have no doubt; but I shall be very much interested to know how he gets out of the difficulty. Lord John Russell was celebrated for the aptitude he had for getting out of difficulties, and I remember reading in a book published for private circulation only, being the private correspondence of Earl Aberdeen, an amusing account of what took place with regard to his Lordship on one occasion. There was a very difficult question coming on in the House of Commons, and Sir James Graham and others wrote to one another, asking how Lord John Russell would get out of the difficulty. They had not the slightest idea themselves how it was possible: still, every one felt confident that Lord John Russell would get out of it. I am in the same way with regard to my friend. I feel I do not know how he is going to get out of this, but I have not the slightest doubt that he will get out of it with flying colours. I am very sorry I have detained the House so long. I have a good many more notes, but my supporters are hinting that it is nearly bed-time, so I do not think I need trouble the House further. I will only say, in conclusion, that one object the Government has in getting this Bill placed on the Statute Book—the one object, I say, and the only one—is to make it clear to the people, both at Home and in the colony, that under no circumstances shall the House of Representatives be again returned with more than seventy-four members. All the objections raised about altering the electorates and so on are entirely outside this Bill. I venture to say that every one of us who has gone through a contested election lately is prepared to say that our electoral laws must be altered. We know that the amalgamation of city electorates is exercising the minds of a large number of people. That is a matter which we should consider, and there are other matters of the same sort, but they have nothing whatever to do with this Bill. Whether this Bill becomes law or not it would be our duty to take steps in that direction, and therefore connecting this Bill with some terrible innovation by the Government is an utter mistake. I hope we shall now finish our fight, and that to-morrow we shall set steadily to work. I have submitted to several severe lectures to-night. The honourable member for the Hutt told me that I should behave better, and was not fit to sit in the House. I submitted to it all, and I have no doubt I shall profit by the advice; but I will say this: I do hope—and if I understand the Opposition aright I think there is ground for that hope—that we are now going to address ourselves to business. Let us debate everything fairly and fully. I need not tell the House that the Government have no wish whatever to press or rush business forward. We wish everything to be fairly considered; but we have only a limited time at our disposal. Honourable gentlemen should remember that there are ninety-four members in this House who may have a few words to say on each measure, and that if two or three members persist in taking up all the time there will be little chance of our getting on. Honourable gentlemen should, I think, help each other in this respect, so that we can have a reasonable discussion. I hope to-morrow we shall start with that idea. I apologize for troubling the House at this late hour; but on our side very little was said on this Bill. I felt bound to make this speech in answer to the many speeches which have been made on the other side.

Mr. KERR.—I wish to disabuse the Premier's mind of the idea that the leader of the Opposition has had anything to do with the course I have taken in this matter.

Major ATKINSON.—I quite understand that.

Mr. KERR.—I can safely say this: that if the Premier had done his talking in the same tone as he has spoken during the last half-hour it would have been a great advantage to the House.

Major ATKINSON.—That is the way I always talk.

Mr. KERR.—When it suits yourself.

Major ATKINSON.—I am much obliged to the honourable gentleman, and will try to be better for the future.

Mr. FITZHERBERT.—The Premier has stated that I said he was not fit to sit in the House. I never made use of any such expression, and should be very sorry to do so. What I said was that the Premier had shown a great want of courtesy to the House, and that if he had not been so discourteous he would not have had so much trouble. I also said that we must look to the Premier for the tone of the House, and if he did not give it a good tone it might become degraded into a bear-garden. I should be very sorry to see the Premier out of the House. We should always retain him not only for his political ability, but for the bravery he displayed in the earlier days when he was fighting against the Maoris, who were doing great harm to the colony. I have the highest respect for the honourable gentleman, and I never said anything of the kind he thought I did; but I do say again, as the honourable member for Motueka says, that if the Premier had treated the House in the conciliatory manner he has done during the last half-hour this trouble, possibly, would not have occurred. I spoke not in any way as an Oppositionist, but because I thought that he was not doing right in regard to this Bill.

Major Atkinson

Mr. W. P. REEVES.—I, too, wish to say a word or two in personal explanation. An honourable member charged me this evening with doing a thing which, if it could be accurately charged against me, would show that I had been guilty of a most ungentlemanly action. He said that, though I had said that I was most anxious to expedite matters so as to get the Bill through by twelve o'clock, yet I had tried to block it. Now, if I had been guilty of that, I should have been doing a most ungentlemanly action, and I wish to assure the honourable member on my honour that I did not try to block other business coming, but that, on the contrary, I did my best to prevent the discussion going beyond twelve o'clock.

Sir J. VOGEL.—I should like to say a few words in explanation. The Premier has charged me with trying to obstruct the passage of this Bill. Now, I wish to state the facts, to show how entirely mistaken the honourable gentleman was. When the second reading of the Bill was moved I spoke very briefly, and said that I should not oppose the second reading. I did not obstruct the Bill going into Committee, and when the Bill was in Committee I took no part in the discussion, and left the House at an early hour. It is true that I left a pair; but the honourable gentleman chooses to attach a significance to a general pair never before, so far as I am aware, attached to it. Yesterday I offered the honourable gentleman, if he would adjourn the matter until the evening, to endeavour, by means of using what influence I had, to save time; and this afternoon, Sir, I made a similar offer to the honourable gentleman, which would, had he accepted it, lead, as I believe, to a considerable saving of time. At any rate, I may say this: that I was engaged during the whole of the afternoon—and I am sure honourable members will bear me out in saying this—in doing what I could to hurry on the business, because, as I said to honourable members, and as I feel to be really the case, we want the Public Works Statement, and other business of an urgent character that must be disposed of, to be brought before us, and it was our proper course to assist the honourable gentleman to carry the Imprest Supply Bill through all stages this evening, so that we might get at other business as soon as possible. And I may say this: that I have never known, on any previous occasion, the leader of the Opposition to take this course without the honourable gentleman in charge of the Bill making his acknowledgments to his opponent for allowing such a thing to be done. As to this Bill, I then endeavoured to get the discussion ended by half-past twelve, so that we might go on with other business. I made a short speech this evening, protesting against the Bill, but I did what I could to get the measure through quickly; and the honourable gentleman, in charging me with delaying the progress of the Bill, is entirely mistaken. But I say now, as I have said previously, I cannot hope to control honourable members on this side of the House if the honourable gentleman will throw out such accusations as he does. The honourable gentleman will, I am sure, help business forward if he will be less free in his accusations against members on this side of the House. Certainly it is a very unfair accusation to make against me that I have been obstructing the Bill, when, as honourable members know, I have taken considerable trouble during the whole of the week to endeavour to get the business through, and have made special efforts to assist the honourable gentleman with reference to this particular Bill. And I am sorry the honourable gentleman should have made these remarks, when, as he thought, I should have no opportunity of rebutting them.

Mr. O'CALLAGHAN.—The Premier has twice said that I refused to believe his word. I can assure him that it is not my intention to dispute his word at all. What I said was that I had my doubts, not as to the honourable gentleman's statement, but as to his ability to carry out his assurance. I never doubted his word: that no one in the colony would doubt for a moment; and I am sorry that he should have twice made use of the remark that I refused to believe his word.

Major ATKINSON.—I am obliged to the honourable gentleman for that assurance. I certainly understood him to doubt my word.

Mr. WHYTE.—After listening to the very earnest tones of the honourable member for St. Albans, disclaiming all intention of obstructing this measure, I feel convinced that I was wrong in saying what I did about him, and I have great pleasure in being able to say so. My only regret is that I cannot say the same as regards the other honourable members to whom I have referred.

Mr. LEVESTAM.—I should like to say this: The honourable member for Waikato directly charged me by name as one of those who obstructed the Bill. Now, I say that I refrained from speaking the whole evening; I refrained from speaking on the committing of the Bill, and I refrained from speaking in Committee. I moved one or two amendments; it is true, without making any long speeches; and if it is obstruction to move an amendment and to vote in a certain direction—of course my opinions are against the Bill—then I have been guilty of obstruction; but I venture to say that that is a misuse of the term. Certainly I have not done anything in any way to obstruct the progress of business.

Major ATKINSON.—I am very much surprised at what has fallen from the honourable member for Christchurch North, because I did not know that there was anything unusual in the leader of the Opposition giving the fullest facilities to the Government to enable them to get a Supply Bill through. I should have thought that the honourable gentleman would have recognised it simply as his duty to the public to assist in a matter of that sort. However, if the honourable gentleman expected acknowledgments, I am sorry that I did not give them to him, and I tender them to him now. The honourable gentleman, I may say, never thanked me for such action when I was in his present position, and I am sure that I never looked for thanks; but I do at once thank the honourable gentleman if I am indebted to him. But I apply to him the treatment I should expect to have applied to me. I take it that I did my duty, and I take it that the honourable gentleman has done his duty. As to assisting me in regard to other business, I am very much obliged to the honourable gentleman if he has been endeavouring to do that, and I am bound to believe him when he says that he has done so. I can only say that I wish he had better control over his party, for the course of events—not unnaturally, I think—led me to believe that there was some sort of collusion about the obstruction that has taken place. However, I receive his positive assurance that he has been endeavouring to assist me; I have to thank the honourable gentleman, and I hope that tomorrow we shall come to an understanding and get on with the necessary business.

Mr. SEDDON.—I would simply say this: that the tone of the latter part of the Hon. the Premier's address somewhat prevents me from referring, as I intended to refer, to the first and somewhat objectionable part of his speech. As to a great many of the honourable gentlemen to whom he has referred, I would merely say it is what they might have expected, and that it serves them right. I only wish he had given it to them a little more warmly; because, if they had done their duty as an Opposition, we should have been in a better position now. As for myself, I am perfectly satisfied with what I have done. I do not regret having obstructed the Bill.

Major ATKINSON.—You had better take it out of the Opposition, by way of a change.

Mr. SEDDON.—No; I will not retaliate on my friends, although they deserted me: it is quite bad enough to have to deal with the Premier. Now, I am quite prepared to take the whole of the blame for what has occurred to-night, and I do not wish to see him blame others. The Premier knows very well that I was out of the chamber nearly the whole of the evening. I came back at twelve o'clock, when the motion for the third reading was about being put. It was just the last stage of the Bill, and I was determined to have my say. I can only say now that I regret that my efforts have not been more successful. If the Opposition had worked with me, instead of the Premier crowing—if I may use that term—about having carried the Bill successfully, the position would have been reversed. To that extent I say that the honourable gentlemen on the Opposition side who have been referred to by the Premier fully deserved all they got.

Major STEWARD.—It is only fair to the leader of the Opposition that I should say, from my own knowledge, that he has this evening been making every effort towards enabling the Government to go on with the business. I may say that we, all of us, on this side of the House who had desired that other business should go on, sincerely hoped that the discussion would end by twelve o'clock; and certainly it is no fault of the leader of the Opposition that circumstances developed themselves in a different way. I have no doubt that honourable gentlemen opposite will bear testimony to this fact: that I myself went up to one speaker who was addressing the House, and tried to induce him to sit down. I know the honourable member for Ashburton went to another, with the same object; and it is not the fault of the Opposition as a party that we were not successful in securing the opportunity of proceeding further with business to-night. I thought it right to say this to clear the leader of the Opposition from the blame which has been cast upon him.

Mr. O'CALLAGHAN.—As this is a sort of general washing-up and wiping-away of bad feeling, I should just like to say that if the Premier had adopted during the last few days the more conciliatory tone he has displayed during the last half-hour he would have got on much better with the business of the country than he has done. This evening we have seen a great change in him. He came in like a lion, and I felt myself squirming in my seat when he was speaking in the manner in which he commenced. But he went out like a lamb, and I could not help entertaining a kindly feeling towards him during the latter part of his speech. I hope the honourable gentleman will add to his experience by the course of events during the last few days, and that he will find it desirable to adopt a more conciliatory tone towards members of this House. If he does that, I can promise him this: that he will find the thinking members of the Opposition, of whom I claim to be one, very glad to support him in pushing on the public business as rapidly as possible.

Sir J. VOGEL.—I do not wish to say that it is the duty of the Government to employ any effusive expressions of gratitude to me for what I may have done, but it is usual for Ministers to acknowledge the services which one renders to them in the public interest in carrying on the business of this House. I am quite sure that whenever the honourable gentleman has given me assistance in passing a measure through I have always acknowledged his services. In this particular instance I had great trouble over this Bill. In fact, I have had great trouble during the whole of the session in assisting the honourable gentleman; and during the rest of the session I shall do what I can to assist him. I cannot profess that I am acting in the honourable gentleman's interest. What I do profess is this: that I want to see the business of the country proceed, because, as I have said to many of my followers, "Every minute you spend upon this Bill is robbing us of opportunities of criticizing other Government measures which the Government are trying to carry through this session." That is the line I have taken up, and that is the line of conduct which the honourable gentleman, if he had a spark of gratitude, would have recognised and acknowledged. It is very difficult to help the honourable gentleman, because he cannot restrain his temper and be conciliatory. For instance, if the honourable gentleman had used the smallest amount of conciliation with the honourable member for Auckland Central this evening we should not have had the delay that took place in passing through the Supply Bill. I have been accustomed to look upon the honourable gentleman's colleague, the Minister of Education, as being inclined to be rough, and that sort of thing, but I cannot help thinking that by comparison he is not rough, and that if the Minister of Education were in charge of business we should see that what I am apt to look upon as roughness on his part was mildness itself as compared with what we have had to put up with from the Premier himself during the last few days. I cannot understand why the honourable gentleman should find it necessary to be so bellicose—if such a term is not unparliamentary. In order to expedite business honourable members were urged by several on this side to put a restraint on themselves, and for this the honourable gentleman is ungrateful. The goddess who presided over the honourable gentleman's birth I believe gave him every good quality under the sun except one—that was gratitude.

Mr. Seddon

Major ATKINSON.—I do not know how the honourable gentleman, after announcing that he was working not for me, but for himself, ought to expect any gratitude from me.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at thirteen minutes to three o'clock a.m.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

Friday, 9th December, 1887.

First Readings—Second Reading—Third Readings—
Dairy Produce—Municipal Corporations Bill—
Parliamentary Honorary and Privileges Bill—
Irrigation and Water-supply Bill.

The Hon. the SPEAKER took the chair at half-past two o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Imprest Supply Bill (No. 3), Representation Bill.

SECOND READING.

Imprest Supply Bill (No. 3).

THIRD READINGS.

Imprest Supply Bill (No. 3), Governor's Salary and Allowances Bill, Ministers' Salaries and Allowances Bill, Akaroa Borough Council Reserves Vesting and Reclamation Bill.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

The Hon. Mr. MENZIES, in moving the motion standing in his name, said,—Attention has been drawn already to the subject of dairy-farming in this country, and the subject is of such great importance as to have induced the Council to appoint a Committee to inquire into the matter and ascertain whether anything could be done to give any relief to a class which is in an especial manner suffering very seriously from the general depression that prevails, and from the low prices of all kinds of agricultural produce. The Committee found that a great deal of information was available on the subject, and selected extracts from various works which are to be found in the General Assembly Library, in order that they might form part of the Appendices. These afford a great amount of information respecting dairy-farming, and if issued in pamphlet form and circulated would accomplish much good. It is with this object I move the motion. As I have stated, the subject is one of large importance for the colony, because the industry is eminently suitable to New Zealand, inasmuch as the colony is peculiarly favoured in climate, in excellence of soil, and in all the other causes that conduce to the establishment of a prosperous industry of this character. The subject has attracted attention in various parts of the colony during the last two or three years. Factories have sprung up for the manufacture of cheese. They are finding, however, that that product is glutting the market, and many of these factories are turning their attention to the production of butter, and if milk could be prepared in other ways a ready market would be found for the same, provided it could be turned out of only the best quality. We should find a ready market in England especially for butter, cheese, and milk, either in the form of condensed milk or as Swiss milk, which is a new preparation. The statistics relating to dairy produce in the United Kingdom show us that in the year 1884—and this I quote on high authority—the amount of butter imported into the United Kingdom was of the value of £13,000,000; five million pounds' worth being from America, and a little more than that from Holland. The total quantity of dairy produce, in the form of milk, butter, and cheese, consumed in the United Kingdom was worth about £62,000,000. Now, seeing that the imports amount to as much as £13,000,000, it is clear enough there is a large field for this colony, if it could only produce goods of the best quality. I see no reason to doubt that it can; and, as one of those steps which can help our producers to produce the best quality, we should lay before them all the best information. We find, from the information obtained, that this subject has attracted the attention of various European Governments, and that the State fosters the industries. I believe Denmark has obtained a high reputation for its butter. The butter supplied from Denmark brings the highest price in the market in London. The importance which is attached at Home to this industry may be inferred from the fact that the leading quarterly magazine in Great Britain, the Quarterly Review, has thought it worth an article in the last number. Now that industry is at present struggling, I think this Parliament should show its sympathies with the efforts of the sufferers. I believe it will be found that some assistance in the way of starting a school of technical instruction would be found necessary. At present, however, all I ask of the Council is to agree to the printing of the report of the Committee in the Appendices, in order that it may be circulated and convey a great mass of information to the settlers.

Motion made, and question proposed, "That the report of the Dairy Produce Committee, and the attached appendix, be printed."—(Hon. Mr. MENZIES.)

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS.—Before the question is put, I wish to say I was under the impression that my honourable friend was going to bring up this subject in a different form—That the Council agree with the recommendations of the Committee; because one of the recommendations of the Committee is that the report—in fact, all these papers referred to—should be printed in book-form, with a view to their being sold to the public at a very low price—6d. per copy to the public, with a discount of 50 per cent. to any booksellers who would purchase them in quantities and sell them to the public. It appears to me it would be better if my honourable friend would agree to alter the form of the resolution so as to give effect to the recommendations of the Committee in that respect; otherwise double expense will be gone to. These papers will appear in the parliamentary records in a printed form. That is one expense. Then, the same expense will have to be gone to in order to give effect to the recommendation of the Committee; and that would be very undesirable, and, in fact, useless, because several copies of the work can be kept in the General Assembly Library, if necessary, so as to answer the purpose of reference by honourable members. I would suggest that words of this kind might answer the purpose of everybody: to add to the motion the words "in book-form, so that the recommendation of the Committee, that the same be printed and sold to the public, should be given effect to." I understand that that is quite in conformity with the views of the Committee, and I hope my honourable friend will accept it.

The Hon. Mr. MENZIES.—I would accept it if my honourable friend would add some further words—namely, “at cost price.” I think we should endeavour to assist settlers to obtain information. If this course is adopted the expense will be recouped to the Assembly. I thought information should be provided gratis; but, if my honourable friend desires that it should not be provided in that form, I have no objection to accept the additional words, if others were added that it should be provided at cost price.

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS.—I prefer it in this form, in order that the views of the Committee may be entirely given effect to. It was the desire of the Committee that these books should be sold at 6d. per copy, and I understood my honourable friend concurred in that view.

The Hon. Mr. PHARAZYN.—As a member of the Committee, I may say that I moved substantially what has fallen from the Hon. Mr. Stevens, the intention being to allow the wholesale purchaser to take these works at cost price, and sell them to the public at a price not exceeding 6d. The cost price is estimated at 8d. per copy; and if these books were sold wholesale at 6d. per copy, with a discount of 50 per cent., that would bring it to the cost price, an agreement being made with the purchaser to sell to the public at not more than 6d. If you give away books of that sort they are much less appreciated than if they were bought at a very small sum; and no one at all interested in the subject will be unwilling to pay 6d., and if he pays that amount he takes care to read the work. I hope the honourable gentleman will accept the proposal of the Government.

The Hon. Mr. HOLMES.—I move that the papers be published in book-form, so that the recommendation of the Committee may be given effect to. It was intended that the pamphlet should be published at 6d., but that the booksellers should pay 8d. I think it is well worth 6d. Its compilation engaged the attention of the Committee for many days, and the Hon. Mr. Menzies has spent a good deal of valuable time over it—in fact, it is his work almost altogether—and I think it would be a very good bargain to acquire information of this sort for the money. It contains an account of most of the discoveries in the manufacture of butter and cheese for the last half-century. I beg to move the addition to the motion of the words, “in book-form, for sale to the public.”

The Hon. Mr. MENZIES.—I wish to say I desire to add to that that it should be sold at the cost price. I do not think the Government should try to make a profit out of it. My own idea, as I have said, is that the pamphlet should be distributed gratis; but that was not the view of the Committee, and I so far concur with the view of the Committee as to support the books being sold at the cost of production. I do not know that I can move an amendment to my own motion, but perhaps some other honourable gentleman would do so.

The Hon. Mr. PEACOCK.—The only means of circulating these books is through the booksellers, who will only sell at a profit. If the books were sold to booksellers as proposed, the pamphlets would find their way all over the colony; but, if they could only be procured from the Government Printing Office in Wellington, they would not.

Words added.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

Clause 2.—Amendment of Act.

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS moved to strike out subsections (1), (2), and (3).

The Committee divided on the question, “That the words be retained.”

AYES, 6.

Barnicoat	Pharazyn	Stevens
Peter	Shephard	Whitaker.

NOES, 26.

Acland	Kenny	Pollen
Bonar	Lahmann	Reynolds
Brett	Mantell	Richmond
Buckley	Martin	Scotland
Dignan	McLean	Shrimski
Fraser	Menzies	Swanson
Hart	Miller	Wahawaha
Holmes	Oliver	Waterhouse.
Johnson	Peacock

Majority against, 20.

Amendment carried.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 3.—Certain expenditure authorised.

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS moved to strike out subsection (4), enabling Borough Councils to contribute to athensæums, &c.

The Committee divided on the question, “That the subsection be retained.”

AYES, 18.

Acland	Lahmann	Miller
Barnicoat	Mantell	Richmond
Bonar	McLean	Stevens
Grace	Menzies	Whitaker.
Hart

NOES, 19.

Brett	Martin	Scotland
Buckley	Oliver	Shephard
Dignan	Peacock	Shrimski
Fraser	Pharazyn	Swanson
Holmes	Pollen	Wahawaha
Johnson	Reynolds	Waterhouse.
Kenny

Majority against, 6.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 4.—Special expenditure on vote of majority of Council for retiring-allowances or in relief of sufferers.

The Hon. Mr. SHRIMSKI moved to strike out the clause.

The Committee divided on the question, “That the clause be retained.”

AYES, 10.

Bonar	Mantell	Shephard
Hart	Menzies	Stevens
Kenny	Richmond	Whitaker.
Lahmann

Hon. Mr. Menzies

NOES, 23.

Acland	Johnson	Pollen
Barnicoat	Martin	Reynolds
Brett	McLean	Scotland
Buckley	Miller	Shrimski
Dignan	Oliver	Swanson
Fraser	Peacock	Wahawaha
Grace	Peter	Waterhouse.
Holmes	Pharazyn

Majority for, 13.

Clause struck out.

Bill reported.

PARLIAMENTARY HONORARIUM AND PRIVILEGES BILL.

On the order of the day for the committal of this Bill being called on,

The Hon. Dr. POLLEN said,—Sir, before you leave the chair in order that the Council may go into Committee on this Bill, I desire, if I may be permitted to do so, to call the attention of the House to a question of privilege which, without attempting to traverse the motion, applies to it, as I think honourable gentlemen will admit. Yesterday, when it was a question of the adjournment of the debate, I asked you to be good enough to say what your view was as to the character of the Bill then before the Council. You said, Sir, I think, that it was a money Bill, in your view; but you also said—you will correct me if I misapprehend what you said—that of itself and by itself it might not be strictly considered to be a money Bill, but that, regarding it as a portion of the financial policy of the Government, you were constrained to decide that it was a money Bill, and of a character which, under the rules by which we are at present guided, it was not competent for the Council to touch. While your mind is still, as I hope, not absolutely pronounced upon that subject, I would like to call your attention and the attention of the Council to the fact that, although we have submitted, rather than perhaps agreed, to be guided in the conduct of our business by regulations which we have not ourselves had a hand in making, the old statutory power which was given to this Council has not been abrogated, and it still remains in its full force. The relations between the two Houses have been settled by the Constitution Act. The power of either House with respect to money Bills, and to all other Bills, was and is, according to statute, absolutely equal, with this exception: that Bills purporting to appropriate money must be originated in another place and upon a message from His Excellency the Governor. We are governed very much by precedent in these matters. We have a reverence, and a proper one, for the wisdom of our ancestors, and when we are at a loss to find our way in a difficulty we search for precedents. I am about to show that this Council has made for itself a precedent for its action in dealing with money Bills. It has dealt in that way without hesitation with an Appropriation Act; and, having taken, so to say, the bull by the horns, a fortiori this right exists to deal with any Bill which has less certain pretension to be called a money Bill than the Appropriation Act itself. So long ago as the year 1854 this particular question of the right of the Council to deal with money Bills was raised in the Council itself, which was then sitting in Auckland. The Appropriation Bill of that session was introduced at a very late period, and considerable dissatisfaction was expressed by members of the Council, not only as to the fact of the lateness at which the Bill was introduced, but as to the character of the Bill itself, and as to the manner in which certain appropriations were made in globo instead of being set out in detail. I hold in my hand the Journals of the Legislative Council of Friday, the 15th September, 1854, and I will read the entry made in the Journals. The Appropriation Act had been read a second time, and it was then in Committee of the Whole:—

“Mr. Whitaker moved, That the following words, after ‘out of the,’ in the first line, be erased: ‘revenue arising from taxes, duties, and imports levied within the said colony, and which are hereby declared to be raised under an Act of the General Assembly, except such portion thereof as shall by an Act of the General Assembly be declared to be otherwise applicable.’”

This was an amendment upon the Appropriation Bill, and a very important amendment. The motion was seconded by the Hon. Mr. Salmon, and agreed to. There was afterwards the usual Conference between the two Houses upon this Bill, an agreement was come to, the amendments were accepted, and the whole question was settled in the usual course. No question was then raised as between the two Houses as to the right of the Legislative Council to exercise its statutory power in dealing with money Bills. On the same day the Hon. Mr. Whitaker moved a series of resolutions, among which was this one:—

“That, in consenting to pass the Appropriation Bill for 1854–55 without alteration of any of the sums voted by the House of Representatives, the Legislative Council have regard solely to the maintenance of the Civil establishments of the colony, and desire in no way to prejudice any right to alter or amend the annual Appropriation Bill, or any other measure for raising or disposing of the public revenues.”

In moving these resolutions, the Hon. Mr. Whitaker—I am quoting from the Hansard report, compiled from authentic sources, of the debates of that period—said,— “Looking to the British Constitution and judging from analogy they were not enabled to make amendments in money Bills; but it must be recollected that this had become so settled in England from usage founded on resolutions of the House of Commons of long standing. The Constitution of New Zealand rested entirely on the Act of Parliament granting representative institutions. The 54th clause of that Act merely enacted that ‘It shall not be lawful for the House of Representatives or the Legislative Council or for the Governor to assent to any Bill appropriating,’ &c.

Nothing was said as to the power or the duty of the Legislative Council in respect to such Bills. The power of the Council as a branch of the Legislature was not restricted. . . . Strong opinions were held by some eminent men that in this respect the two branches of the Legislature should be upon an equality. Lord Brougham especially spoke very decidedly in favour of this view. . . . On the other hand, if the Constitution really not only gave the Council power but imposed it on them as a duty to deal with money Bills as with other Bills, it would be wrong, in this first session, to abandon that right and neglect that duty, and thus set a precedent for future sessions."

It is true that upon that occasion, and subsequently when disputes arose regarding the powers of the two Chambers, we had recourse, as of old, to an outside tribunal for guidance and instruction in the matter. We, as was done of old, consulted the Delphic oracle, and, after the usual ἐγκοίμησις, the words of wisdom were delivered by the high priest. That was an oracle, like all oracles, that was difficult of understanding; its utterances were so abstruse, its rules so founded upon circumstances the memory of which had long since died out, that it, not unnaturally, became a subject utterly beyond the capacity of οἱ πολλοί to understand; and the consequence has been that we have been obliged to establish a hierarchy for purposes of expounding and interpreting these oracles. Rules which are for the conduct of public business ought not to be complicated: they ought to be in the most simple and easily-intelligible form. There is an old Roman story which comes to my mind, of one who had betrayed the Capitol, and who, asking for the reward of her treachery, was instantly crushed to death under the shields of the intruding barbarians. It has appeared to me that, having, on our side, betrayed, so to say, the privileges and rights which were intrusted to this Council, we have, like the betrayer of old, been simply overwhelmed with the bucklers constructed in old times to guard the privileges of the House of Commons against dangers which then threatened them, but which no longer exist there, and cannot by any possibility occur on this side of the globe. Sir, it would be extremely convenient in every respect, and might save a good deal of difficulty, if you could see your way now, having still the doubts which you were pleased to express yesterday, to permit this Bill to be committed, not as a money Bill in the strict sense, but so as to allow the Committee, if a majority of members so desire it, to deal with the Bill in the terms of the resolution moved by myself, and which was carried by a considerable majority yesterday. The other alternative, however, is one which I think none of us would desire to contemplate—that we should refuse to pass the Bill altogether. I think it would be very much better to act in the way I have suggested, seeing that in doing so we should in no sense be travelling beyond what I insist upon now, and have always insisted upon, as being the statutory authority of this Council. I have no desire to oppose the passing of the Bill into Committee; but it would be a very great relief to me and to other honourable gentlemen, I am sure, whose convictions have urged them in the direction of opposing this Bill, to be spared the necessity of rejecting it altogether if we cannot alter it in Committee. I await, Sir, your decision with much anxiety.

Hon. Dr. Pollen

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—I ask permission of the Council for a few words before you, Sir, give your ruling on the question, as to whether we have a right to alter an appropriation or any other money Bill. That is a matter that has been definitely settled more than once—on at least two occasions. It was settled by Sir Erskine May at the time it was referred to him, and it was also settled by the opinions of the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General in England; and, I believe, it has been entirely laid at rest for many years. I do not propose to renew the matter, because, as I say, it has been definitely and conclusively settled; and the only thing I rose for is to say this: that my honourable friend has not quite fairly quoted from Hansard. The circumstances—and I have refreshed my memory by these reports—were these: When the Constitution Act was brought into operation I noticed that there was no provision as to whether the Council could deal with money Bills. The power seemed to be given to the Legislature generally, and there did not seem to be any limits to the Council dealing with them. I had misgivings whether that would be a correct view or not, and I thought, under the circumstances, that the Council should exercise that right, as I thought, or, rather, what was supposed to be its right, in connection with a money Bill then before it, and this would raise the question whether or not the Council had a right to alter money Bills. I proposed an amendment to the Bill under these circumstances. There was an egregious error in the Bill. I recollect that it was due to an oversight altogether on the part of the House of Representatives. They had done something that certainly they did not intend to do, and which, if not rectified, would have created a great deal of mischief. I proposed an amendment in the Bill, which was sent back to the House of Representatives with the amendment. They objected to our action altogether. It was quite clear, however, that the Bill would have to be altered. The position of the Council not being definitely settled, it was agreed that the matter should stand over, without prejudice to the question in any way. That is what appeared in Hansard. There was a Conference on the subject, which reported afterwards to the House, and also to the Council, and the report was concurred in by both, but it was decided that this should not be treated as a precedent. My honourable friend has read the first resolution.

The Hon. Dr. POLLEN.—The second one.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—But there were four resolutions, as follow:—

"1. That, as the Bill for appropriating the public revenues was not introduced into the Legislative Council until the 15th instant, and as the Assembly is to be prorogued on the 16th instant, this Council has no alternative but either wholly to reject the Bill or to agree to it in the form in which it has been transmitted to them by the House of Representatives.

"2. That, in consenting to pass the Appropriation Bill for 1854-55 without alteration of any of the sums voted by the House of Representatives, the Legislative Council have regard solely to the maintenance of the Civil establishments of the colony, and desire in no way to prejudice any right to alter or amend the annual Appropriation Bill, or any other measure for raising or disposing of the public revenues.

"3. That, although the Act for granting a representative Constitution to the Colony of New Zealand contains no provision for limiting or restricting the power of the Legislative Council to alter or amend any legislative measure whatever which may be submitted for their consideration, the question has, nevertheless, been raised whether the Legislative Council would be justified in making any alteration in a measure of supply, or whether, by analogy to the British Constitution, the Legislative Council of New Zealand must not either wholly accept or wholly reject every such measure.

"4. That, in order to avoid the evils which would result from any conflict of opinion between two of the branches of the General Assembly as to the nature and extent of their respective constitutional rights, all doubt upon the subject should be at once and authoritatively set at rest; and that, with a view to that object, His Excellency the Officer Administering the Government be respectfully moved to bring the question under the consideration of Her Majesty's Imperial Government."

These resolutions, I should say, were proposed by myself, and they were carried without any dissentient in the Council. According to the best of my recollection, the subject was brought under the consideration of Her Majesty's Imperial Government—I am speaking entirely from recollection. I have not had an opportunity of looking up the question, but my recollection is that Her Majesty's Imperial Government pointed out to us that, as a Legislative Council, we had nothing to do with the appropriation of money. Since that, as you are aware, Sir, the question has been raised more than once; but it was raised most strongly when the question of privilege was raised by the Hon. Mr. Menzies, and the question was referred to Sir Erskine May, and the decision has invariably been that we had no right to alter or amend money Bills. I have no doubt whatever, myself, that we are precluded from dealing with these Bills in any way whatever; and as for this decision in 1854 being a precedent for this, if honourable members will read it through they will see that it leads the other way. I thought at the commencement of the first session of the Assembly that there were doubts about it, and there was an opportunity of altering a Bill which contained clauses which everybody knew could not stand; and we thought it proper to raise the question, and it was raised and discussed, and decided that it should not be a precedent on either the one side or the other, but that both branches of the Legislature should remain in the position that they were in before the question was raised. I thought I ought to make this explanation because my honourable friend did not give us altogether a very correct view of what was really done on that occasion, and I thought it was desirable that I should put the Council in possession of what the facts were. It is entirely now for your decision, Sir. I will not argue the question further, because it appears to me that it has been so conclusively settled that it would only be a waste of time to discuss it over again.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—I have the greatest possible respect for the arguments brought forward by the Hon. Dr. Pollen, as this Council always has with regard to his opinion on constitutional questions. But when he appeals to me to rule to the effect of giving permission—I think those were his words—that the Council, in regard to the Honorarium Bill, should have the power of amending it, he is asking me to do that which I find it impossible to comply with. Nor would he think I was acting consistently with my position as Speaker of this Council if I were to give such a ready assent. I have no doubt whatever, myself, without entering into a long argument upon the question, which the Council would not expect me to do—though, if it be the desire of the Council that I should do it, I shall obey their will, and produce them a careful opinion on the subject, supported by references; but I think the Council will not require that from me. If it did it would have to give me time to do that till the next sitting-day. But I say, without hesitation, that, in my opinion, the Council cannot deal with money Bills; and that this is essentially a money Bill. There might perhaps be a question if this Bill stood alone; but it forms an integral part of the financial proposals of the Government, and, as such, it is quite impossible for me to look upon it in any other light than that of a money Bill. Therefore it is impossible for me, by any ruling of mine, to give the Council permission to alter it. I say, with every possible respect, and with a determination to protect the privileges of the Council so far as my experience and ability go, and with a determination to do my duty towards the Council, which I shall always be prepared to do, yet, having these opinions, I should fail in my duty if I did not on this occasion assure the Council that I think I should take up a position and occupy ground which would not be tenable if I were to rule that the Council could alter this Bill. I hope I have expressed myself clearly, and that the Council will pardon me for presuming to advise it in all seriousness to abandon all idea of altering money Bills.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE.—May I request, Sir, if it is competent for me to move, That your ruling be entered in the Journals?

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—The question is, That the ruling of the Speaker be entered in the Journals.

Motion agreed to.

IN COMMITTEE.

The Hon. Mr. MANTELL moved, That progress be reported.

The Committee divided.

AYES, 14.

Brett	Mantell	Scotland
Buckley	Martin	Shephard
Hart	Menzies	Shrimski
Holmes	Pollen	Wahawaha.
Lahmann	Reynolds

NOES, 14.

Acland	Kenny	Stevens
Barnicoat	McLean	Swanson
Bonar	Miller	Waterhouse
Dignan	Pharazyn	Whitaker.
Grace	Richmond

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN gave his casting-vote with the "Noes."

Amendment negatived.

The Hon. Dr. POLLEN moved, That the Chairman report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The Committee divided.

AYES, 13.

Brett	Martin	Scotland
Buckley	Menzies	Shephard
Hart	Pollen	Shrimski
Holmes	Reynolds	Wahawaha.
Lahmann

NOES, 15.

Acland	Kenny	Richmond
Barnicoat	Mantell	Stevens
Bonar	McLean	Swanson
Dignan	Miller	Waterhouse
Grace	Pharazyn	Whitaker.

Amendment negatived.

Bill reported, and read a third time.

IRRIGATION AND WATER-SUPPLY BILL.

The Hon. Mr. BONAR, in moving the second reading of this Bill, said its object would be found in clauses 2 and 14. It was simply to enable those districts in which the Counties Act was not in operation to have the benefit of irrigation-works and water-supply. Clause 2 provided that the Governor in Council should proclaim districts. In clause 14 it was provided that the Boards should have the powers a County Council have as to irrigation and water-supply. The rest of the Bill was simply the machinery laid down in the Counties Act. If any alterations were suggested, he would be happy to consider them in Committee.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE confessed he would like a little more information as to the purport of the Bill than that which was afforded by the Hon. Mr. Bonar. He would like to know what was the object of the Bill. It was introduced by his honourable friend from the West Coast, and apparently for the purpose of promoting irrigation; but he thought that a country which had an annual rainfall of from 120in. to 160in. could not require a water-supply. He would suggest to his honourable friend that he should not go on with the Bill this session. It was a very imperfect measure indeed. He had devoted a whole evening to the consideration of it, and he found it took him all that time to master it. The impression that was created in his mind was a desire to know who was the drafter of the Bill, and he came to the conclusion that it had been drawn by the village blacksmith, it had been drawn in such a clumsy manner. They would be parting with their functions as a Legislature by adopting the last clause of the Bill, for it handed over full and complete power to the Governor to remedy defects. He noticed that there was no power in the Bill to make by-laws. There was no sufficient provision in regard to the appointment of officers. Very great power in this respect was given to the Commissioners under the Counties Act. Nor was there sufficient provision as regarded the accounts and mode of auditing. There was no provision for offences—a provision absolutely necessary; and, with regard to expenditure, the powers under the 19th clause were of too ample a character. They simply provided that all the moneys raised should be at the disposal of the Board, to be applied by them as they thought fit; and, under that clause they might send members to see the Government, as was proposed in the Municipal Corporations Bill, and which was, in his opinion, very properly thrown out. He referred to these as being some of the great defects in the measure. It was proposed by this Bill that trustees should be appointed, and be elected triennially. He trusted his honourable friend would content himself with the second reading of the measure this year, and allow it to drop for the present. At this stage of the session, moreover, it was scarcely likely that it would find its way through the other branch of the Legislature. The Bill required much further consideration, and he was satisfied it ought to be delayed for some months, in order that these defects might be remedied.

The Hon. Mr. BONAR said that perhaps he had been too curt in his remarks in moving the second reading of the Bill; but had he thought it necessary he could have easily amplified them. He ought to have stated that this measure had nothing to do with goldfields. It related to a portion of the east coast of the South Island; that was, where the Counties Act was not in operation—in the County of Ashley—and it was to enable the plains there to be supplied with water. With regard to the appointment of officers, the 12th clause provided for the appointment of a Chairman and Treasurer, and such officers, as collector of rates, or in other capacities, as were thought necessary. Then, with regard to the application of moneys, the 19th clause provided for this; the 20th, for the keeping of accounts, and the regular publication of accounts; and the 21st clause provided for auditing of accounts by an auditor to be appointed by the Governor, and for the accounts to be properly published. The power to make by-laws was contained in section 14, which re-enacted all the provisions in the Counties Act bearing on the subject. These provided for making, altering, and repealing by-laws for a number of purposes, as contained in the nine subsections. He was afraid, as had been suggested, that there was no prospect of getting this Bill through the other branch of the Legislature at this late period of the session; but if the Council would grant him the second reading, and perhaps, a committal, he should be very glad. He had a hope that the Bill might become law, as it was very much wanted, and would prove a great boon to the district. As to rating, there were the same powers as contained in the Counties Act.

The Hon. Mr. JOHNSON asked whether this was not a local Bill, as it was intended to apply to one district only.

The Hon. Mr. BONAR said it was intended to apply to all parts of the colony where the Counties Act was not in operation, and was to give them the right to carry out works for irrigation and water-supply.

Bill read a second time.

The Council adjourned at twenty minutes past ten o'clock p.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, 9th December, 1887.

Leith Valley-Blueskin Road—Tobacco License—Maori Hansard—Hohepa Karetai and Others—Horomona Fatu and Others—Canada Tariff Treaties—Australasian Tariff Treaties—Mines and Geological Departments—Immigrants—Government Loans to Local Bodies—"The Unemployed and the Remedy"—Tax on Absentees—"Araetaki Post-office—Glenham Tunnel Accident—Waimate, Oamaru, and Timaru Freights—Foreign Vessels in Coastal Trade—Rabbit Nuisance—Act—Seab—Matheson Brothers—Kaiapara Firewood Freight—Kaiapara Steam-tug—Obscene Language—Brunnerton Borough Endowment—Brunnerton Courthouse—Greymouth—Brunnerton Fares—Ararua River—Teremakau River—Addington Workshops Manager—Maketu Township—Otago Central Railway—Hillsdale Workshops—"Hinemoa" and "Stella"—Parua—Whangarei Telephone—Government Printing-office—Wairarapa Timber-freights—Payments for Land—Military Training-school—J. Hudson—Rotorua Township—Despatch of Business—Distilleries—Whalers—Walton Park Coal—Normal and Training Schools—Waitotara Election—Rates on Land—Engine-drivers on Wellington Railway—Shannon Mails—Wellington—Pitone Railway-fence—Eketahuna and Richmond Line—Burnham, Norwood, and Selwyn Railway Traffic—Government Business—Land Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER took the chair at twelve o'clock noon.

PRAYERS.

LEITH VALLEY-BLUESKIN ROAD.

Mr. W. D. STEWART asked the Minister for Public Works, Whether he will cause a sum to be placed on the estimates to complete the formation of the road from Leith Valley to Blueskin? This was a road that had been under the consideration of the House in former years, and a sum of money was on one occasion placed upon the estimates for the purpose of forming the road. He was not sure whether any portion of that money had been expended; but he believed, at any rate, that a large portion of it had not. He had received by the mail that morning a letter from a gentleman, stating that the unmetalled portion of the road was in a very bad condition; and, having ridden over it about eight weeks ago, he could say that it must now be in a very deplorable state. He believed it would pay the country to have the road properly formed.

Mr. MITCHELSON said it was quite true that a large sum of money had been spent upon this road by the Government in former years, the amount expended being £3,257. In the year 1883, the last year upon which a vote was asked for, a sum of money was placed on the estimates for this particular road, and the balance of the money unexpended was handed over to the local body, which at the same time took over the road. The road having been placed under the control of the County Council, the Government considered their liability for it ceased, and therefore could not agree to place any further sums upon the estimates for the purpose mentioned in the question.

TOBACCO LICENSE.

Mr. R. H. J. REEVES asked the Government, If it is their intention to introduce a Bill this session for the purpose of imposing a license-fee on tobaccoists, in accordance with several petitions presented to this House by the dealers in tobacco and cigars in the colony? He asked this question at the request of a number of patriotic tobaccoists, who were anxious to be taxed, and to contribute to the revenue for the privilege of selling tobacco and cigars.

Mr. FISHER replied that numbers of petitions had been presented not only to this but to preceding Parliaments on this question. There was, however, a little difficulty in the way of issuing licenses, because of the difficulty experienced in making the Act general, so that it might apply to the country districts. He hoped it would be satisfactory to the honourable gentleman when he said that he did not think it possible, in the crowded state of the business, to introduce a Bill this session, but that the matter should be taken into consideration during the recess.

MAORI HANSARD.

Mr. TAIPUA asked the Government, If they will direct that the Maori Hansard shall be issued at the end of each session, and not be kept back for many months after the session has terminated, as has been the case heretofore? He would like to be informed how it was that there was such delay in the issue of the Maori Hansard. For some years past it had never been circulated until three or four months after the termination of the session. The constituents of the Maori members were constantly sending letters inquiring when these papers would be issued, and when they would have an opportunity of knowing the proceedings of Parliament. As there was a new Government in, he thought there would be a new departure in the method of issuing the Maori Hansard. At the commencement of the present session he found that the Maori Hansard for the previous session was just about to be issued. He could not understand this delay, as the translation of the Maori Hansard was always completed at the end of each session. He hoped the Government would be able to make some arrangement by which this delay would be obviated.

Mr. SPEAKER said he had caused inquiries to be made, and had ascertained that the reason for the delay was that the printing of the English Hansard took up so much time that the Printing-office was not able to take up the printing of the Maori Hansard till the session was over. He would make further inquiries, and do all in his power in the direction of having the Maori Hansard issued more speedily.

HOHEPA KARETAI AND OTHERS.

Mr. PARATA asked the Minister of Native Affairs, What the Government intend to do with regard to the petition of Hohepa Karetai and others, reported on recently by the Native Affairs Committee?

Mr. MITCHELSON said the Government had expended in former years a sum of £880 upon the road which was the subject of the petition, and the information he had been able to gather was to the effect that the road was a very good one at the present time. The Government, therefore, could not see their way to do anything more in the matter.

HOROMONA PATU AND OTHERS.

Mr. TAIWHANGA asked the Government, Whether they will place a sufficient sum on the supplementary estimates to cover Horomona Patu's expenses in negotiating the settlement of his claims for land in the South Island? His reason for asking this question was that Horomona had come here for the purpose of getting his privileges, but he had obtained nothing at all, though he had lost about £1,000 in money in coming to Wellington for the purpose. He hoped the Government would look at the matter favourably.

Mr. MITCHELSON said he regretted very much that Horomona had been put to such heavy expense in coming to Wellington in order to substantiate the claim he had made. At the same time, he could not recognise that Horomona had any claim on the Government for personal expenses incurred while in Wellington, seeing that he came upon his own business, without having consulted the Government; and therefore he (Mr. Mitchelson) could not agree that a sum should be placed on the supplementary estimates for the purpose mentioned in the question.

CANADA TARIFF TREATIES.

Mr. JOYCE asked the Government, If they will, during the recess, communicate with the

Mr. Taipua

Government of the Dominion of Canada, asking if any reciprocal tariff treaties, and the details thereof, have been proposed or entered into between Canada and the United States of America? It would be remembered that at the commencement of the session and on subsequent occasions he had been dealing with this and kindred subjects by notices of motion and otherwise. He found that a few days ago a Government supporter had been following up his suggestions, and had put a question touching reciprocity with Australia. It seemed to him that it would be well if the Government could get information, between the present time and next session, as to what Canada was doing in regard to treaties with the United States. The reply from Canada might be of practical use when dealing with the New Zealand tariff next year, so that when we were endeavouring to foster local industries we should be warned how we treated New South Wales, whose markets might be of great wealth to the farmers and other colonists of New Zealand. He believed that our own Agent-General had been in treaty with France, and he thought that all information we could get from foreign sources in the way of finding out markets for the natural products of the colony would be a great benefit to every man, woman, and child in the colony.

Major ATKINSON said he could not make any pledge upon this question, but he would consider it, and if there was no great difficulty in obtaining information it should be obtained.

AUSTRALASIAN TARIFF TREATIES.

Mr. JOYCE asked the Government, If there have been any communications, during the past three years, between this colony and any one or more of the colonies of Australasia suggesting reciprocal tariff treaties; and, if not, will the Government, during the recess, open up a correspondence with those colonies advocating such proposals? He believed there was very great necessity that reciprocal treaties should be entered into between New South Wales and New Zealand. He believed that, consequent upon a motion for putting a duty on coals from New South Wales in New Zealand, action was taken by the Government of New South Wales, who imposed additional duties on products that came from New Zealand; and he had no doubt that the result would be that New Zealand would suffer. He thought that some action should be taken, if it were possible, to have treaties entered into whereby our products would have a good market in that colony, for this would be of great benefit to this colony.

Major ATKINSON replied that no correspondence had taken place, and he was not able to promise the honourable gentleman that there would be any. If the Government thought it possible to effect such an arrangement there would, of course, be communication on the subject; but there was no use in entering into a correspondence that would only be thrown into the waste-paper basket.

MINES AND GEOLOGICAL DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. SEDDON asked the Minister of Mines, If it is the intention of the Government to have the Mines and Geological Departments worked together, and placed in charge of Sir James Hector, Director of the Geological Department? At an earlier period of the session it was announced by the Hon. the Minister of Mines to be the intention of the Government to work the Mines and Lands Departments together. Now there was a rumour current that the Government intended to work the Geological and Mines Departments together; and that Sir James Hector, Director of the Geological Department, was to be at the head of both departments, and that the Inspectors of Mines would, hereafter, be under the control of Sir James Hector. He wished to set the matter at rest, by asking whether there were any changes contemplated in the direction indicated in the question.

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON might inform the honourable gentleman that the Government had no intention to work the Mines and Geological Departments together, under the control of Sir James Hector. There was a rumour current to that effect, but it had no foundation.

IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. VALENTINE asked the Minister of Immigration, If, in view of promoting the immigration of desirable settlers and their families, he will take measures to insure, as far as possible, their arrival at their intended destination in the country by permitting them to travel on their passage-tickets to the nearest railway-station to where they intend to settle, instead of simply allowing them to look after themselves immediately they leave the vessel at the port of arrival, and so, in many cases, only swelling the ranks of the unemployed in the large towns?

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON said nominated immigrants were always sent free by steamer or rail from the port of arrival to their friends. If any private passengers sought assistance from the Immigration Department to enable them to get out into the country, it was invariably granted. The Immigration Officer at Wellington made a practice of going on board all steamers which arrived direct from England, in order to make himself acquainted with the second- and third-class passengers and their wants.

GOVERNMENT LOANS TO LOCAL BODIES.

Mr. SMITH asked the Colonial Treasurer, When the amounts becoming payable to local bodies for their second year's loans, authorised under section 13 of the Government Loans to Local Bodies Act, will be available for payment? The reason he put this question on the Order Paper was that a great many of the local bodies were anxious to know when the second year's payment would be received, as many of them were letting contracts on the strength of this money, and they would therefore like to know when it would become payable.

Major ATKINSON replied that he had not had time to look into this matter. He understood that the interpretation put upon the Act by the Audit and the Treasury was, that the year ran from March to March; but he would endeavour to relieve the local bodies, especially if they got work done in the summer season.

"THE UNEMPLOYED, AND THE REMEDY."

Mr. STUART-MENTEATH asked the Minister of Lands, If it is true that the entire issue of a pamphlet entitled "The Unemployed, and the Remedy," by Gavin M. Park, published by Smith and Hogg, of Masterton, has been purchased by the late Government? If so, from whom and at what price has it been purchased, and under what head of the public expenditure has the price been debited; also, what has been done with this public acquisition?

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON replied that 1,500 copies of the pamphlet were purchased on the 12th November, 1886, from Mr. T. E. Price, of Masterton, at a cost of £18 15s. They were charged to "State Forest and Agricultural Department: Contingencies, Vote 70, Item 20." They were distributed to nearly all newspapers, all public libraries, and officers of the department. A considerable number still remained on hand.

TAX ON ABSENTEES.

Mr. TURNBULL asked the Colonial Treasurer, Whether, having in view the large amount of real and personal property held by absentees—nearly one-tenth of the whole taxable property of New Zealand—he will make such provision in the Property-tax Bill about to be submitted, or by other means, that absentees shall be made to contribute a proportionate share of the burdens of the colony?

Major ATKINSON said the question raised was no doubt one of very considerable importance, and would be considered by the Government; but, as the honourable gentleman knew, there were very great difficulties surrounding the question. He thought, however, from some remarks made the other day, that the honourable gentleman was under a misapprehension. Nearly the whole of this five millions was money lent on mortgage, and it was very difficult to make out the amount that was not in that form, but half a million would cover such amount. The rest was all money lent.

MARAETAI POST-OFFICE.

Mr. LAWRY asked the Postmaster-General, If he will, at an early date, cause a post-office to be opened at Maraetai, in the County of Manukau?

Major ATKINSON was afraid the Government would not be able to do what the honourable gentleman wanted. The Government would hardly be justified in spending so large an amount as would be required for the purpose; but, if it could be shown that a more reasonable sum would suffice than he had been led to understand, he should be very glad to reconsider the matter.

GLENHAM TUNNEL ACCIDENT.

Mr. FELDWICK asked the Minister for Public Works, If he has received any official report regarding the causes that led to the late fatal accident at the Glenham tunnel, on the Edendale-Fortrose line; and, if not, will he cause inquiry to be made? He had put the question on the Order Paper in consequence of a letter he had received from Southland, in which the writer expressed an opinion that an adequate inquiry was not made into the cause of the accident, which led to two men losing their lives and others being injured.

Mr. MITCHELSON said no official report had been received with reference to the accident; but he understood that an inquest had been held. He should cause inquiries to be made, as he thought it was the duty of the Government to see that all works that were carried on under its supervision should be carried on in such a manner that men's lives should not be endangered through neglect on the part of the contractor or overseer.

WAIMATE, OAMARU, AND TIMARU FREIGHTS.

Major STEWARD asked the Minister for Public Works, Whether he has considered the representations submitted to him as to the expediency of reducing the railway-freight charges for firewood between Waimate and Oamaru and Waimate and Timaru, and whether he will be prepared to give effect thereto? Also, whether, in view of the fact that the railway-freight charges for general merchandise, as between Oamaru and Waimate, a distance of thirty miles, are double the freight charges by steamer from Dunedin to Oamaru, a distance of ninety miles, he will take steps to remedy so anomalous a state of things? He hoped to hear from the Minister that he would be prepared to revise the rates with a view to their reduction.

Mr. MITCHELSON said the firewood-rate question was one that was giving the department a good deal of worry, as reductions in freight charges were continually being asked for. The whole question was now under consideration. With reference to the merchandise rates between Oamaru and Waimate, they were exactly the same as those charged in other parts of the colony for similar distances; and, with reference to the latter part of the question, he might say that he was aware that the freights by steamer were much lower than those charged on the railway, but they could never hope to compete with the sea unless they were prepared to sacrifice a large amount of revenue.

Major STEWARD.—Then I understand that the question of reducing the firewood rates will be favourably considered.

Mr. MITCHELSON.—Yes.

FOREIGN VESSELS IN COASTAL TRADE.

Mr. T. THOMPSON asked the Government,

Major Atkinson

If their attention has been drawn to the fact that the coastal trade of our local shipowners is being seriously interfered with by foreign vessels; and, if so, is it the intention of Government to take the matter into consideration with a view to granting them relief? He had been induced to ask this question by those engaged in the coastal shipping trade, who complained that the trade was very seriously interfered with by foreign vessels trading on the coast. For instance, a foreign vessel arriving at Otago discharged her cargo there, and then came up the coast to load at Auckland, taking in cargo at the various ports on the way. The vessel's hands did the work; and there was an interference with the shipping trade of the colony, which was alleged to be very injurious. He wished, therefore, to know whether the Government intended to consider the matter.

Mr. FISHER replied that so long as foreign vessels complied with the regulations there could be no ground for interference on the part of the Government. On the English coast foreign vessels were allowed to trade in just the same way as English vessels, and the law of New Zealand on the subject was exactly similar to the law of England in that respect.

RABBIT NUISANCE ACT.

Mr. PYKE asked the Minister of Lands, Whether the Government will take into consideration the advisability of amending the Rabbit Nuisance Act, so as to invest Magistrates hearing cases laid under such Act for breaches of its provisions with discretionary powers when dealing therewith? He might explain that this question had reference to section 10 of the Act. Under that section it was provided that if, in the opinion of the Inspector, rabbits were on the land the Magistrate must inflict a fine, no matter whether or not it was shown that every effort had been made to destroy them. Cases had occurred in which it was clearly shown that the parties summoned had done all that was possible to extirpate the rabbits; but the Magistrate was compelled to inflict fines because, "in the opinion of the Inspector, it had not been sufficiently done." What he wanted was that a discretionary power should be given to Magistrates in these cases.

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON said, as the honourable gentleman had pointed out, it would require an amendment of the Rabbit Act before effect could be given in the direction he desired; and the honourable gentleman must be equally aware that it was quite out of the question to carry any such measure this session; but the Government would, in the meantime, consider the matter.

SCAB.

Mr. LANCE asked the Government, Whether their attention has been directed to the case tried at Blenheim in respect to the manager of several station properties, said to have concealed for some months the existence of scab; and whether full inquiry will be instituted, and information afforded to the House thereon?

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON said copies of all correspondence in connection with the Court cases under section 24 of "The Sheep Act, 1878," against the manager of Tophouse and Mount Patriarch Runs for concealment of scab would be included in the Return No. 78—on motion of Mr. Buchanan for copies of all correspondence relating to the presence of scab on the Greenhills and Mount Patriarch Runs—now ready for the House.

MATHESON BROTHERS.

Mr. FISH asked the Minister for Public Works, Whether the Government will give effect to the recommendation of the Public Petitions Committee in the case of Matheson Brothers, of Dunedin? It was only necessary to say that he was thoroughly convinced, from a statement of facts made to him, that a great wrong had been done to these individuals; and they now asked simply for power to right that wrong by means of the law-courts. He need not point out to the Minister the very serious responsibility the petitioners would undertake in bringing a lawsuit against the Crown, which would be exceedingly expensive, and unless they were thoroughly convinced of the right of their case they would not take it into Court. But, if they had a good case, he felt sure the honourable gentleman would not interpose technicalities to prevent them from obtaining justice in the matter.

Mr. MITCHELSON said the Government had no objection to the report of the Public Petitions Committee; and if Messrs. Matheson Brothers would agree to pay into Court the costs that would be incurred, or guarantee them, the Government would not object to the case being taken into Court; but, before consenting to do so, it would be necessary that the award paid to the contractor should be refunded, and it should also be borne in mind that the reopening of the case would mean the reopening of the whole question, including the penalties.

KAIPARA FIREWOOD FREIGHT.

Mr. MONK asked the Minister for Public Works, Whether he will reduce the rate now charged for firewood-trucks on the Kaipara line? There were large quantities of firewood on this line, but the rate of freight prevented its being sent to a market. If a reduction were made, it would enable wood to be sent to a market, and enable the settlers along the line to increase their means of livelihood. There were some anomalies in the rates on that line. A horse-truck, for instance, from Helensville to Auckland was taken for 16s. the same distance that a truck of firewood was charged £1 9s. for. He (Mr. Monk) had no desire that the cost of a horse-truck should be increased—just the reverse;—but he saw no reason why there should be such a great difference between the two. A load of firewood, being taken to be sold, did far more good to the needy than the carrying of a horse from one place to another, especially in times like these, when employment was so scarce and the getting of a livelihood often so difficult.

Mr. MITCHELSON said this question was under consideration, and an effort would be made to remove some anomalies in the freights.

Mr. MONK begged to thank the honourable gentleman for his answer.

KAIPARA STEAM-TUG.

Mr. MONK asked the Government, Whether, in the interests of economy, they will arrange for the steam tug-boat on the Kaipara to do the work for which the Government now employ a steam-launch? He had been asked to bring this matter under the attention of the Government. There was a steam-tug there, which towed out fifty-six vessels last year, and twenty-six others went out exempt from pilotage-dues, so that there was not much work for the launch to do. The proposition of those who asked him to move in the matter was that the tug should be allowed to do the work now done by the steam-launch, which, he was assured, would result in a considerable saving. Of course, in that case the services of a launch would not be necessary, and those connected with the tug could do all such work as cleaning buoys, &c., at a low charge. He was informed, and believed, that if the suggestion were adopted it would result in a considerable saving to the Government.

Mr. FISHER said the honourable gentleman did not say how much it would cost to employ the steam-tug. The steam-launch was placed there at the request of the people of the port, and it was a very great convenience to the port. It had to cover about forty miles of pilotage waters, and the only cost to the Government of the launch was the wages of the engineer, the coals, and stores. The launch having been put there at the request of the people of the place, there was no intention of acting in the way suggested by the honourable gentleman. The owners of the tug-boat had never offered to do this service for any specific sum, so that he was unable to say as to whether any economy would result from carrying out the proposed arrangement. As a matter of fact, he doubted whether they would do the service for any less sum than it now cost the Government; and it would have to be done for a very great deal less to make it worth while to try the experiment, as he had grave doubts as to whether the plan would work.

OBSCENE LANGUAGE.

Mr. IZARD asked the Government,—(1.) Whether it is their opinion that, in charges before a Resident Magistrate or Justice of the Peace for using obscene language, it is necessary the exact words charged should be publicly stated in open Court, or whether the same may not be written and handed up to the Court? (2.) If the Government think it necessary that the words should be publicly stated, whether they will next session introduce a short Act to render unnecessary the public statement of such obscene language? Some Magistrates insisted on obscene words that had been used being repeated aloud in open Court, no matter how filthy they were; while others spared the feelings of witnesses and hearers somewhat by allowing them to be written and handed in. He hoped the Government would see their way to effect some change in this respect.

Mr. FERGUS said the Government were entirely in accord with the honourable gentleman, and, if effect could not be given to his suggestion in any other way, they would be prepared next session to take some action in the matter.

BRUNNERTON BOROUGH ENDOWMENT.

Mr. GUINNESS asked the Minister of Lands, Whether the Government will reserve three thousand acres of land as an endowment for the Borough of Brunnerton?

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON said the Government had no power to grant to boroughs endowments of land outside those boroughs, though unsold lands within boroughs might be so granted. The law was specific on the point.

BRUNNERTON COURTHOUSE.

Mr. GUINNESS asked the Minister of Justice, Whether the Government will place a sufficient sum of money on the estimates to erect a Courthouse at Brunnerton?

Mr. FERGUS said the Government regretted very much that, owing to the state of the finances, they would be unable to do this at the present time.

GREYMOUTH-BRUNNERTON FARES.

Mr. GUINNESS asked the Minister for Public Works, Whether he will take steps to alter the passenger fares charged on the Greymouth-Brunnerton Railway, so as to reduce the fares to the same rates as those charged on the Dunedin-Port Chalmers and Christchurch-Lyttelton lines? The great bulk of the passengers on the first-named line were miners, who were not generally wealthy people, and therefore their request to be allowed to travel at the same rates as people on other lines was a reasonable one, and he hoped it would be complied with.

Mr. MITCHELSON said the Government would consider the question of reducing the passenger fares on this line; but it must be borne in mind that, if such was done, the loss of revenue would be considerable, and, as the whole of the revenue obtained from this line was handed over to the Greymouth Harbour Board, any reductions that might be made would be depriving this Board of a good portion of their revenue.

ARAHURA RIVER.

Mr. SEDDON asked the Minister of Mines, Whether the Government have definitely decided to issue, as soon as the law will permit, a Proclamation in terms of section 154 of "The Mines Act, 1886," declaring the Arahura River a river or stream into which tailings and mining débris may be deposited? There was a great deal of uncertainty in the minds of the people there as to whether, if objections were lodged, the river would not be declared, or if fair compensation would be paid to those objecting, and the river be declared. The present uncertainty as to what would be done was very unsatisfactory to the miners, and one company in particular, he believed, was prepared to expend about £20,000 to £30,000 on their property if they could be assured that the river would be declared; and, if the Government would say the river should be proclaimed, he believed they would go on with their works at once.

Mr. Izard

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON said he thought the Government had shown their intention by issuing the usual notification. They were proceeding in the way prescribed by law, by giving the statutory ninety days' notice. Whether at the end of that time the river would be actually proclaimed would depend on the number of objections lodged; and he might say that already objections were being sent in.

TEREMAKAU RIVER.

Mr. SEDDON asked the Minister of Mines, Whether the Government have definitely decided to issue, as soon as the law will permit, a Proclamation in terms of section 154 of "The Mines Act, 1886," declaring the Teremakau River a river or stream into which tailings and mining débris may be deposited? The answer given to the last question was somewhat indefinite—that the proclaiming or not proclaiming would depend on the number of objections lodged. But in this case, as far as the river was concerned, the Government knew the exact extent of the liabilities of the colony. The Government were very largely interested themselves in this matter, because, unless the river was proclaimed, it would mean a stoppage of £12,000 of revenue to the colony yearly, and the stopping of the whole mining community from working. He hoped the honourable gentleman would be able to give a completely satisfactory answer in this respect.

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON would have thought that his last answer would cover this question. It might be that in the one case fewer objections would be sent in than in the other; but in this case, unless the objections were more than were anticipated by the Government, the Proclamation would be carried out.

ADDINGTON WORKSHOPS MANAGER.

Mr. TAYLOR asked the Minister for Public Works, Whether he is aware that the manager of the Addington Workshops—Mr. Scott—is engaged as a lecturer on engineering at the School of Arts, Christchurch, at a salary of £150 per annum, he still retaining his position as manager of the workshops? He hoped the answer that would be given now would not be the stereotyped one that used to be given by the late Minister for Public Works, because if so he should have to ask and ask until he got something like a fair and satisfactory answer. He had put the question at the request of professional gentlemen who could scarcely obtain a livelihood, while a Government official in a permanent position, and receiving a large salary, was depriving them of private work which they ought to have. He was desirous of placing the matter fairly before the Minister for Public Works. He had a great amount of confidence in that honourable gentleman, and trusted he would not be led away by interested persons in this matter, but would deal fairly and honestly with it. That was all he asked him to do.

Mr. MITCHELSON had made inquiries into this, and found that Mr. Scott was engaged on Government work, and that the work which he performed for the Canterbury College was done after hours. It was a matter for the consideration of the Board of Governors. If, as the honourable gentleman stated, there were professional men in Christchurch able to undertake the work, it was their duty to interview the Board of Governors on the subject, and then for the Board of Governors to see what ought to be done. He really thought that the Government could not interfere in the matter.

Mr. TAYLOR said he might explain that the position was this: Last year it was put on the ground that there were no other gentlemen in Canterbury able to carry out the duties to which this gentleman was appointed. That was now shown to be incorrect, and he thought it was an unfair thing to allow a person in Government employ to compete with persons who had not that advantage. He would like to say, in further explanation, that the result of the question put upon the Order Paper the session before last was this: They could not deny that diagrams had been used for the purposes of these lectures which had been prepared at the expense of the people; and he (Mr. Taylor) trusted there would be no more of that kind of thing.

MAKETU TOWNSHIP.

Mr. KELLY asked the Government, if they will consider the advisability of purchasing a portion of the Maketu Settlement, in the Bay of Plenty, so that a Government township might be laid off near the mouth of the harbour, on the Kaituna River?

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON said the Government would cause inquiries to be made as to what portion of the land had passed through the Court, and, having obtained that information, if it were found that the Natives would dispose of the land at a reasonable price, there would be no objection to the course suggested by the honourable gentleman.

OTAGO CENTRAL RAILWAY.

Mr. FISH asked the Minister for Public Works,—(1.) If he can explain the reason which induced the department to inflict a fine for overtime in the contracts for work on the Otago Central Railway performed by Messrs. Matheson Brothers and J. Black and Co., such fines amounting to £100 and £200 respectively, whilst no fines were inflicted upon two other contractors—namely, Messrs. Gore Brothers and R. Meikle and Co.? (2.) Will he, in order that equal justice may be meted to all, return the fines imposed upon the two firms referred to? He wished to point out that in those two cases the contractors had been fined; while Messrs. Gore had incurred penalties in one case to the amount of £800, and in the other case to the amount of £300 or £400, but in neither of these cases was the fine inflicted. It seemed to be unjust that two firms should be fined, while others should get off. He thought he could give a reason, but not a good reason, why the fines in the other cases were not inflicted. He had no doubt that the Minister would know the reason for it without his mentioning it to the House. He might mention that he understood, with regard to the case of Messrs. Matheson, that it was the intention of the Government to remit the fine.

Mr. MITCHELSON said this question was connected with one that he had already replied to, and had reference to the same subject. If the honourable member would inquire of Messrs. Matheson Brothers whether they would accept the remission of the fine imposed upon them in preference to taking the case into Court, he would be prepared to meet them in this way if acceptable to them, as he had a desire to see the question definitely settled.

HILLSIDE WORKSHOPS.

Mr. BARRON asked the Minister for Public Works, Whether the management of the railway workshops at Hillside is controlled by an officer stationed at Addington, and, if so, why; and whether he will give such instructions as will release the workshops at Hillside from a subordinate position such as, in consideration of their location in connection with the railway system of the Middle Island, they should not continue to occupy; and, further, whether he will endeavour to adhere to the understanding formerly arrived at in connection with the allocation of work to such workshops?

Mr. MITCHELSON replied that it was true that the Hillside workshops were controlled by an officer stationed at Addington, where he had his office; but a competent manager presided over each shop, one at Addington and the other at Hillside. This practice was adopted seven years ago, and it appeared to have acted very well indeed. It would be too costly to have an Inspector for each shop. With reference to the latter part of the question, he had already said, in reply to a similar question, that he would issue instructions that in future all stock required should be manufactured in the workshops within the district where such stock was required, provided, of course, that the machinery available was sufficient to enable such work to be carried out. Although so much had been said about this matter, there was not such a great difference in the number of men employed in each shop. The numbers were, at Addington 261, and at Hillside 195. He trusted that they would, under the new arrangement, get rid of further complaints.

Mr. FISH said this matter referred intimately to a question which he had placed upon the Order Paper; and he must detain the House for a few minutes to refer to the matter a little more fully, and therefore he would move the adjournment of the House. The return which was laid on the table, on the motion of the honourable member for Auckland West, showed distinctly that there had been great unfairness in connection with this expenditure in the workshops. The expenditure at Addington had amounted to the enormous sum of £45,000 in two years, whilst in other shops there had scarcely been anything expended in the same direction; and he had no doubt that the Hillside workshops would have been entitled, under ordinary circumstances, to an expenditure of at least half the sum which had been expended at Addington. In view of the information given by that return, he was not surprised at the great number of empty houses now to be found in the district where the Hillside workshops were situated, because, so much work having been done at Addington which ought to have been done at Hillside, it had necessarily withdrawn the population from the neighbourhood of the latter workshop. He could only say that, had he known that any member of the late Government had been guilty of diverting work from one district to another in the way which had been done, he should not have found it within his duty to make as many eulogistic remarks in reference to the administration of the late Government as he had made at various times. He thought it was his duty to call attention to this matter on this occasion. He was quite willing to believe that the late Ministry, as a whole, did not know what was being done in the department of the Minister for Public Works, but it seemed to him that that honourable gentleman had been favouring the particular district in which he lived, and which he represented, at the expense of other districts. That was exceedingly unfair, and, whether it had been done by the late Government or any other Government, he should still say that a more glaring piece of injustice could not have been perpetrated. And, while on the subject, he might call attention to another piece of injustice which had been perpetrated by the same honourable gentleman. He referred to the expenditure of a sum of £20,000 that was voted by the House during the last Parliament in aid of the unemployed. Out of that sum, Dunedin received £6,000, while £13,000 was expended at Hagley Park and in the neighbourhood of Christchurch City. In fact, the vote, which was made for the unemployed in the South Island, was expended in the neighbourhood of the district in which the Minister for Public Works lived, and which he represented. No Government was justified in showing such undue favouritism to one part of the colony because the Minister who had charge of the expenditure happened to be resident in or represented that place.

Mr. BARRON might say that he cordially agreed with what the honourable member for Dunedin South had said on this subject. He could only hope that they had now taken a new departure in these matters, and that they would not see a continuance or repetition of the partiality and injustice suffered under the past administration.

Mr. Fish

Mr. MITCHELSON said honourable members must bear in mind that a very large amount of money had been expended in supplying the various parts of the colony with machinery and appliances for constructing and manufacturing railway stock, and if the work needed in each district were to be absolutely restricted to that district it meant that sometimes a large number of men would be left idle, and that expensive machinery would also be kept idle. This would necessarily be the case owing to the large expenditure which had been made—improperly made, as he thought. However, he had already given a pledge that the work should be fairly distributed over the country, and that pledge would be carried out, although he must point out that it would frequently happen that money expended in purchasing this machinery would not be earning interest.

Mr. FISH at once admitted that the expenditure of the money could not be divided with mathematical precision—that there must be work done at one place which would be useful for another place. All that he asked was that there should be a fair endeavour to give each place its proper proportion of expenditure.

Mr. GUINNESS wished to call attention to circumstances which showed improper action at Addington. He did not say who was to blame—it might be that the permanent head of the department was at fault; but the fact was this: that some time ago the Greymouth Harbour Board had to obtain a hundred iron trucks for the purpose of carrying coals from the mine to the port. The Government were asked to make them, and they said they would make them at these Addington workshops, and that they would cost £120 each. When the Board discovered this they made inquiries, and found that the trucks could be made at the local foundry for £10 less than at Addington. But, notwithstanding that fact—which was represented to the department—the Government insisted upon having the work done at Addington, and charged the higher price. Such administration as that was scandalous; and he hoped the Minister for Public Works would give him an assurance that if trucks were required in future the Government would not perpetrate such a monopoly as that to which he had called attention.

Mr. MARCHANT hoped that the Minister would not lose sight of the interests of the smaller workshops. Some time ago there was a workshop in full swing at Sentry Hill, which did very good work and turned out the work at a cheap rate, as he believed. But the late Government removed the whole of the works to Wanganui, and for no very good reason, so far as he could understand, because, as he had said, the work was done well at Sentry Hill, and it was done economically. He hoped that the Minister would give attention to the small workshops as well as the large ones.

Motion for adjournment of the House negatived.

“HINEMOA” AND “STELLA.”

Mr. SEDDON asked the Minister of Marine,

—(1.) Is it the intention of the Government to have the new boilers now being made placed in the steamship "Hinemoa" at an early date? (2.) Is it the intention of the Government to sell the steamship "Stella," and to place the "Hinemoa" again in commission? (3.) Is it the intention of the Government to dispose of the steamship "Hinemoa" after the vessel has been fitted with new boilers? (4.) Is it true that the main front plate in the new boiler-frame intended for the steamship "Hinemoa" was discovered, some time after arrival, and after being paid for, to be cracked and useless? The reason he asked this question was this: that he believed that Captain Fairchild, who had charge of the "Stella," said he could make a considerable saving to the colony if the "Hinemoa" were placed in commission and the "Stella" disposed of. If the Government were not going to dispose of the "Stella," would they dispose of the "Hinemoa"? As regarded the latter part of the question, he might say that it was clear to him that there had been gross carelessness or gross incompetence, because any man who knew anything of his business could not but see the flaw which existed, and it was one of so serious a character that had the boiler been placed in position a very serious loss of life might have ensued, through an accident caused by this flaw. He thought there had been gross neglect or incompetence, or perhaps both, and he wished to know whether the Government would take steps in regard to the matter.

Mr. FISHER said the new boilers were here, but there was no great hurry about putting them into the vessel. There was no intention on the part of the Government to dispose of these two vessels, for the reason that they were not adapted to mercantile purposes, and only a very small price could be obtained for them. It was quite true that a flaw had been found in the boiler-plate, and the Government had sent to the manufacturers in England asking them to substitute another plate at their own expense. The plate was "passed" in England, and inquiries would be made as to how it came to be passed.

PARUA-WHANGAREI TELEPHONE.

Mr. R. THOMPSON asked the Minister for Public Works, if it is the intention of the Government to extend telephonic communication to Parua Bay and Whangarei Heads?

Major ATKINSON thought this could be done, but he had not full information on the subject yet, and would like to consult with the honourable gentleman on the subject.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING-OFFICE.

Mr. SEDDON asked the Colonial Secretary, if it is the intention of the Government at an early date to procure an engine and the necessary machinery for the new Printing-office at Wellington?

Mr. MITCHELSON replied that tenders had been called for the construction of a boiler and engine for the Printing-office. The tenders had been received, and the lowest had been in his hands for some considerable time; but he did not feel himself justified in accepting such tender until the House had an opportunity of passing the amount which he had put upon the estimates for the completion of the Printing-office.

WAIRARAPA TIMBER FREIGHTS.

Mr. BUCHANAN asked the Minister for Public Works, whether he will consider the question of reducing the railway freight on timber from the Wairarapa district?

Mr. MITCHELSON said the matter was under the consideration of the Government.

PAYMENTS FOR LAND.

Mr. BUCHANAN asked the Government, whether they will take steps to arrange that the periodical payments under our several systems of land-tenure can be made through the Post Office? The House last year was led to expect that action would be taken in this direction, and he wished to know whether anything had been done?

Major ATKINSON was sorry to say he had no information on the matter. A great deal of consideration had been given to it by the last Government, and some difficulties which he had not yet had time to look into had been found. He would look into the matter during the recess, and if effect could be given to the arrangement—and he believed it could—it would be done.

MILITARY TRAINING-SCHOOL.

Mr. WARD asked the Minister of Defence, if he considers that the services rendered to the colony by the Military Training-school at Wellington are sufficient to justify the continuance of the expenditure incurred for its maintenance?

Mr. FERGUS replied that the Government did not think that the services rendered by this Military Training-school justified the expenditure on it, and they intended to do away with it.

J. HUDSON.

Mr. CADMAN asked the Premier, if, in accordance with the recommendation of the Public Petitions Committee, he will make provision on the supplementary estimates to refund John Hudson, of Parawai, Thames, the amount of property-tax paid by him in error? It appeared that Mr. Hudson had paid some £10 or £15 property-tax in error, but the Commissioner said that he had no power to refund it. Mr. Hudson had consequently petitioned the House, and the Petitions Committee recommended that the amount should be refunded.

Major ATKINSON would make further inquiries into the matter, and if those inquiries showed that this was property-tax for the year before last the Government, on the general principle, could not refund it. Each year's transactions must be closed with the end of the year; and, if they were to open up matters connected with previous years, there was no saying where it would end. This arose entirely out of Mr. Hudson's own fault. No explanation was given in the statement, and no reduction was made; but next year—1886-87—when Mr. Hudson made an amended statement, the extra tax was refunded to him. It was impossible to go back beyond the current year.

ROTORUA TOWNSHIP.

Mr. CARROLL asked the Minister of Lands, What amount of rent-money for the Rotorua Township is in the hands of the Government, and when the said amount is to be paid to the Native owners?

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON replied that there was a sum of £233 18s. 4d. in the Treasury to credit of the account. Of this amount, £120 had been expended by Mr. Tole, on the authority of the late Native Minister, as an advance to certain Natives who wanted to visit the Hokianga district. The Audit Department had refused to grant credit for the £120, and that department would not authorise any further payments on account of rents until a list of the names of the individual Natives who were to participate in the rents was supplied. Mr. Clarke was appointed some time ago to ascertain the names of the Natives interested in the rents, and the share of each; but he had not yet reported. Until Mr. Clarke's report had been received the balance of the amount to credit of the rent account—namely, £113 18s. 4d.—could not be paid to the Natives.

DESPATCH OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAIWHANGA asked the Government, Whether they will propose alterations of the Standing Orders of the House so as to facilitate the despatch of business, and providing that, if the House is counted three times during the speech of an honourable member, his remarks shall be deemed to have terminated?

Major ATKINSON thought the suggestion was a very good one. There was no doubt that the Government must take into consideration the whole question of the Standing Orders, and this seemed a practical suggestion, and the Government would give it careful consideration during the recess.

DISTILLERIES.

Mr. VALENTINE asked the Commissioner of Customs, If he will take steps to amend the Excise Duties Act, so as to encourage the re-establishment of distilleries in the colony, with the view of helping to remove the depression which exists in the farming industry of the country? This was a very important matter to the farming industry of the colony. No doubt the distilleries had been abolished because the Government of the day wished for an increase in the Customs revenue; but, now that so much was said about encouraging local industries, he thought if there was any industry requiring encouragement it was the farming industry, because there was no doubt it was the backbone of the country. In Victoria there were several distilleries, distributing a large amount of money amongst the farmers; and so it would be here if distilleries were established again. There would be an extended local market for farmers' barley and wheat; and that description of wheat known as damaged, which was at present only used for fowl-food, could be utilised in a better way. He hoped the Government would give the matter their serious consideration.

Major Atkinson

Mr. FISHER said, whatever the desire of the Government in the matter might be, the honourable gentleman must see that it would be quite impossible to deal with a large question of policy such as this at this period of the session. The honourable gentleman was aware that some ten years ago it cost the colony £27,000 to buy up the distilleries because they materially affected the revenue. The question was a very serious one, and he could give the honourable gentleman the assurance that it would receive the consideration of the Government before next session.

WHALERS.

Mr. HOBBS asked the Government, Whether they are aware that whaling ships are now subject to light-dues, from which they were formerly exempt; and that, as a consequence, whalers are deterred from calling at the Bay of Islands and other New Zealand ports to refit and get supplies, thereby causing considerable loss to the traders and settlers who were in the habit of supplying these vessels?

Mr. FISHER said that, in passing the last Merchant Shipping and Seamen's Act, through some mistake the exemption which formerly applied to whalers was not included. It was not intended that whalers should be subject to these dues, and the honourable gentleman could accept the assurance that an exemption would be made in their favour.

WALTON PARK COAL.

Dr. FITCHETT asked the Government, Have they promised to use the Walton Park coal on any of the southern lines, and, if so, are they aware that, when it was used before, engine-drivers, in running through the Chain Hill Tunnel, have been rendered absolutely insensible through the sulphurous and other fumes given off?

Mr. MITCHELSON said the Government had called for tenders for the supply of coal to the Railway Department, and the Walton Park Company, amongst others, tendered; but, as the tender of the Walton Park Company was in excess of the others, it was not accepted: consequently their coal was not to be used. With reference to the latter part of the question, although the fumes from the coal were rather overpowering when used in passing through the tunnels, yet they were not in any way so dangerous as stated by the honourable gentleman.

Dr. FITCHETT would suggest that the Government should make further inquiry in the matter, as he knew positively that engine-drivers had been found insensible after coming out of tunnels when this coal was used.

NORMAL AND TRAINING SCHOOLS.

Dr. FITCHETT asked the Minister of Education, Whether the Government intend to abolish any, and, if so, which, of the existing normal schools and training colleges?

Mr. FISHER replied that the Government had intimated to the various Education Boards that it was not their intention to propose the vote for £8,000 for the normal and training schools. The whole subject would, of course, come under discussion when the education vote was before the House, and it would be for the House then to say whether it would agree to the proposition to abolish these training schools.

WAITOTARA ELECTION.

Mr. SEDDON.—I desire to make a statement to the House, because it affects the honour of an honourable gentleman who has a seat in this House. I have received a telegram from Wanganui, stating that the honourable member for Waitotara retains his seat, the petitioner having signally failed to prove the allegations in his petition.

RATES ON LAND.

Mr. MARCHANT asked the Premier, Whether he will bring down a Bill this session to fix the minimum amount of rates payable on any section of land? He asked this question because in the scattered parts of this district there were many little township-sections of such small value that the rates only amounted to 2d. or 3d. The collection of these rates cost the local bodies a great deal of trouble and expense, and it would be very desirable to have a minimum amount of rates fixed.

Major ATKINSON thought the suggestion a very good one; but he regretted to say it would be impossible to deal with it this session.

ENGINE-DRIVERS ON WELLINGTON RAILWAY.

Mr. FITZHERBERT asked the Minister for Public Works, If it is true that a railway labourer named Kirby, who has lately been sent to Wellington from Christchurch, has been made an engine-driver on the Wellington-Masterton Railway-line, to the exclusion of several firemen on the same line?

Mr. MITCHELSON said it was perfectly true that a man named Kirby had been appointed temporarily as an engine-driver. He had been occupying a similar position in the South Island; but since being in Wellington he had occupied the position of a labourer. He (Mr. Mitchelson) was making inquiries as to whether Kirby had been appointed over the heads of those more entitled to the position. If by seniority Kirby was entitled to hold his present position, nothing more could be said; but he would see that justice was done.

SHANNON MAILS.

Mr. WILSON asked the Postmaster-General, If, on the three days a week on which the mail does not reach Foxton until seven p.m., he will make arrangements to have the mails carried to and from Shannon, a distance of twelve miles?

Major ATKINSON was unable to give the honourable gentleman a decided answer. The Post Office officials were making inquiries into the matter. It was considered desirable that it should be done if it could be done at a reasonable rate; but the amount demanded was more than the Post Office felt justified in giving. Further inquiries would be made, and if it could be done at a reasonable rate it should be done.

WELLINGTON-PITONE RAILWAY-FENCE.

On the motion of Mr. HAMLIN, it was ordered, That a return be laid before the House showing the cost of removing the four-rail-and-post fence on the Wellington and Pitone line of railway and replacing the same with a seven-wire-and-iron-post fence.

EKETAHUNA AND RICHMOND LINE.

On the motion of Dr. NEWMAN, a return was ordered showing—(1) the number of chains between Eketahuna and Richmond; (2) the estimated cost of constructing the railway-line from Eketahuna to Richmond, including the cost of a flag-station at the latter place.

BURNHAM, NORWOOD, AND SELWYN RAILWAY TRAFFIC.

On the motion of Sir J. HALL, it was ordered, That there be laid before this House a return showing the comparative amount of goods-traffic at the Burnham, Norwood, and Selwyn stations during the last two years.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

Major ATKINSON.—Before the orders of the day are called on, with the permission of the House I will make the statement which I yesterday undertook to make. The Government propose that the Public Works Statement should be delivered at half-past seven on Monday evening. We hope to be able to resume the financial debate on Wednesday, and to proceed with the estimates. The four Bills which may be considered policy Bills, and which the Government consider essential, are the Land Bill, the Government Railways Bill, the Crown and Native Lands Rating Bill, and the Australian Naval Defence Bill. These Bills will probably all of them take more or less time. Then, there are these others, which the Government think necessary for the general government of the country: Bills to relieve persons who are suffering under certain grievances. No less than four of them have already passed this House, some of them more than once. There is the Naval and Military Settlers Bill, giving power to issue Crown grants to persons declared to be entitled to them. Then there is the Civil Service Reform Bill. That is a Bill not of any importance, but it is a Bill to remedy defects which exist in the present Act. At the present time it is impossible to appoint a cadet at all, whether he has passed the best Civil Service examination or not; and we cannot, under any circumstances, appoint a temporary clerk. The consequence has been that we have not been able to reappoint policemen as clerks to Courts to which they have hitherto been acting as clerks. If policemen are removed from one place to another they cannot be appointed clerks to the Courts in the districts to which they have been removed. It is to remedy defects of that kind that the Bill has been introduced. The Wellington Girls' High School Bill we propose to drop, also the Auckland Girls' High School Bill and the High Schools and Colleges Rating Exemption Bill. Then, there are the Government Loans to Local Bodies Bill and the Loans to Local Bodies Bill. These Bills passed this House last year. They are of great importance to the local bodies, and therefore I hope to be able to pass them. The Public Reserves Sale Bill we propose to abandon; also the Industrial Schools Bill. Then we come to two very important Bills, also to do justice to localities: they are the West Coast Settlement Reserves Bill and the South Island Native Reserves Bill. These Bills both passed the House during last session. Many tenants are suffering very considerably under the present state of the law. I hope the House will see its way to pass these Bills. The Coroners Act Amendment Bill we propose to abandon. The District Railways Purchasing Act Amendment Bill we wish to pass if possible. There seems room to fear that we may lose the power to collect not only the rates for this year, but also the arrears. If that is so, then it may be a serious matter, and it may be necessary to ask the House to pass that Bill. The Municipal Corporations Bill (No. 2) we propose to strike out. That is a Bill coming to us from another place, and we hope there may be time to pass some necessary amendments contained in that Bill. We are disposed to abandon any provision of importance in the Bill that is likely to receive much opposition; but there are some amendments which ought to be passed. We propose to abandon the District Courts Bill. The Public Bodies' Leaseholds Bill is a necessary measure. It gives relief to local bodies that have land to let. The present Act is not workable in a satisfactory way, and we propose to remedy the defect and grant relief to a large number of tenants of local bodies. We propose to abandon the Coal-mines Bill and the Coroners' Juries Bill. The Public Works Bill we hope to get through, if possible; if we find it is impossible in the time, of course we shall have to abandon it. The Christchurch Hospital Bill is on the second list. We shall get it through if we can. We hope there will be time to get through the Slaughterhouses Bill. I do not look on the Bills in the second list as absolutely necessary, although it is very desirable that they should be passed. Although it looks rather a formidable list, really the only Bills which are likely to take time are the Bills which I first mentioned. The Pharmacy Bill will be in the second category. Bills have to come down from another place relating to Native lands; but they are practically machinery Bills, with the exception of a provision to repeal the Native Lands Administration Act. The Natives universally wish, as far as we understand, to see the provisions of the Act repealed.

Major Atkinson

Sir G. GREY.—Not in the form in which it is proposed to be done, I think.

Major ATKINSON.—I think the honourable gentleman will find that the proposals are such as to meet the approval of the House and the Natives.

An Hon. MEMBER.—What about the Pharmacy Bill?

Major ATKINSON.—The Pharmacy Bill we also hope to be able to pass. It cannot be described as a policy Bill. There is no principle in it, except that of doing justice to individuals. That is the general course of business which the Government hope to follow.

Mr. TURNBULL.—I understood the Premier to say that he would take the four policy Bills first.

Major ATKINSON.—I am not quite sure that I should do that. I shall probably ask the House to agree to the reading of some others about which there is not likely to be much discussion. I should like to get them advanced a stage, so as to send them to another place. I shall propose, if we get on with these Bills, to continue the financial debate and the estimates; and, if we make considerable progress with them, I shall interrupt them occasionally, if we have not got through those Bills. I wish to say also that the Government hope that, if we go on as I trust we shall do, we may be in a position to finish our business by Tuesday week, so as to give honourable members plenty of time to be home by Christmas.

Sir J. VOGEL.—Am I to understand that the Loan Bill has been abandoned?

Major ATKINSON.—No; that has not been abandoned.

Sir J. VOGEL.—Then, one question has escaped attention—the cable question. The position of the matter is this: The late Government declined to propose any fresh subsidy; but the Agent-General arranged that the question should remain in statu quo until Parliament had an opportunity of discussing it. We could not give Parliament that opportunity last session; but the same state of things exists now with regard to this Parliament. The honourable gentleman will, I think, require to give the House an opportunity of discussing it.

Major ATKINSON.—I am much obliged to the honourable gentleman for mentioning it. I had quite forgotten that we propose, if possible, to bring that in at the end of the week, together with a motion about the San Francisco service.

Sir J. VOGEL.—The Westport Harbour question has fallen out altogether.

Major ATKINSON.—I do not know; but the Government are waiting for the report of the Committee to come up. Then we shall make proposals. We shall also see how the business progresses.

Sir J. VOGEL.—I should like to ask the honourable gentleman if he will bring down, in order to facilitate the discussion on the Naval Defence Bill, a statement as to how the calculation is arrived at that it would only cost £20,000. My impression is that it would cost somewhere about £25,000. I would point out that there is an omission to provide in the Bill that the remaining colonies shall not be liable for any colony or colonies which may withdraw, as was stipulated should be insisted upon when the subject was under consideration.

Major ATKINSON.—Yes, Sir; I shall be glad to see to that.

Sir J. VOGEL.—If the honourable gentleman would bring down the calculations, I think it would save a great deal of discussion.

Major ATKINSON.—The cost, according to the calculations of the Government, is between £21,000 and £22,000. But I can lay the calculations on the table.

Sir J. VOGEL.—There is only one other question, and that is as to an opportunity for discussing the alterations in the education vote.

Major ATKINSON.—Yes; I look upon that as part of the estimates.

Mr. SMITH.—The Premier does not mention anything about the Property-tax Bill. Is the House to understand that he does not intend to bring in one? I hope he will not.

Major ATKINSON.—I omitted that; but I think the House can have no doubt about it. The Financial Statement says what we shall require to a penny. I shall have to ask the House, most certainly, to impose that tax.

Dr. NEWMAN.—I should like to ask the Premier if he will try to find time to pass the Wellington College and Girls' High School Bill. It does not affect any other place whatever; it has not the remotest connection with the Addington workshops or anything in the South Island. It affects Wellington and Wellington only. I believe there would be no stonewalling of the Bill, and that it would run through very quickly. I would point out that it is of very great importance that the Government should get this Bill through, because arrangements have been made which require it, to enable the contractor to be paid. If the Bill is not passed the College Governors will be unable to raise the money to pay the contractor; and not only is it a question of getting the capital under this Bill, but the Bill would provide an easier method of arranging for the payment of interest. I think there would be no discussion on the subject, and that the Bill would pass in twenty minutes.

Mr. PEACOCK.—I hope the Premier, if he answers that favourably, will give a similar reply in regard to the Auckland Girls' High School. The Bills are in the same position. The Board is unable to complete the necessary school-accommodation without having the Bill passed.

Mr. IZARD.—With regard to the Wellington school, I would say that the building has been constructed on the written promise of the late Minister of Education that a Bill similar to the present would be introduced. At the present time there are no funds to pay with, and there will not be any if this Bill is not passed.

The Board already have borrowing powers, but they cannot put them in force. The building is already up, and the Board of Governors want to pay for it. The building was erected by the contractor on the faith of the Minister's promise. The Bill is a simple one, and does not contain any fresh legislation. It merely enables the Board to carry out what it was previously authorised by Act to do. I cannot conceive that there would be any obstruction to the Bill.

Mr. GOLDIE.—I think the Auckland Bill is of very much more importance than the Wellington one. The Wellington Girls' High School is already constructed, but the lease of the Girls' High School at Auckland terminates during next year, and unless this Bill is passed the Board will be compelled to take a new lease of the building. If the Wellington Bill is important, I think the Auckland one is much more so.

Major STEWARD.—Before the Premier answers, I would like to say that, very naturally, every honourable member considers his own Bill the most important matter. Now, I say that to the district I represent the Hospital and Charitable Aid Bill is of first importance, and it strikes me very forcibly that, if anything is done giving the honourable member for Thorndon special facilities for his Bill, there will probably be a long discussion.

Major ATKINSON.—I am very sorry if anybody suffers inconvenience; but, of course, our time is very short. By the permission of the House I will make a statement of the business the Government is going to do. There is no question, I understand, before the House, and I am giving honourable members information, so far as I am able to do so, as to the reasons for the action the Government propose. I was not aware that anybody would suffer inconvenience in consequence of the Wellington College and Girls' High School Bill not being gone on with. I understand that an arrangement was made to put up the building; but, if anybody will still suffer inconvenience, the Bill should be dealt with, and we will certainly endeavour to deal with it this session. But I cannot make an absolute promise. There is a good deal of difference between the two schools, because in one case the school-building is up, I understand, and the objection that the honourable member for Thorndon makes to dropping the Bill is that certain engagements have been entered into with a contractor, who has spent his money, and who will seriously suffer if he cannot get his money. Of course, if that is so, the House should look favourably upon relieving anybody who has got into difficulties under a promise from the Government. As to all these measures, the Government would only be too delighted, if we got through the business, to pass them.

Mr. PEACOCK.—I merely wish to say that, if the Wellington Bill goes on, the Auckland Bill should also go on; because the reasons that apply to the one apply to the other also.

Major ATKINSON.—No, they do not at all. I have explained the difference. The Well-ton College is built, and there is the liability to the contractor, who has spent his money upon the faith of the Government getting this Bill through.

Mr. PEACOCK.—I wish to express the opinion—with all deference to the Premier—that, if there is any difference, it is in favour of the Auckland one, because the Board there have not a building, and, in order to provide one, must be enabled to use the endowment.

Major ATKINSON.—I see a very great difference between a pledge on the part of the Government to enable a Board to pay a man a certain sum of money, and the carrying-out of a measure to enable the Board to use endowments: the former is simply an act of justice. As I have said, the Government is only too anxious to get all through, if possible; but I think honourable gentlemen will agree with me that a contractor ought not to be ruined or put to enormous inconvenience because he has relied upon the pledge of the Government.

Sir G. GREY.—I venture to ask this question: Does the Premier think it right that a vast number of girls should have their prospects in life injured for want of proper education, because they have no building to be educated in? It appears to me that that is infinitely the most important case. They can both be attended to, but surely the education of the girls is a much more serious thing than the other question. They are both great questions, and, I submit, both Bills ought to go on.

Major ATKINSON.—Well, of course there is no doubt I do not consider it desirable that a number of young girls should be ruined for want of education. I think just the other way. But, Sir, the Auckland Board of Governors could do just as the Wellington Board of Governors have done. I have no doubt there is a contractor there who would be willing to build the school on the same terms as the contractor here accepted, so that the work could go on in that way. But, as I have said, this is a very different affair. I did not compare the questions, they are both important questions, and I cannot admit that there is any justification for the honourable gentleman implying that I thought nothing of the girls not being educated. I said that was a matter of great importance, and that I would do my utmost to get both Bills through.

Mr. SEDDON.—The honourable member for Motueka and myself have been moving in the direction of giving effect to the recommendation of a Royal Commission which was appointed with reference to the South Island Native reserves. I submitted a question the other day to the Premier, and he promised to ask the Public Trustee whether there would be any objection to carry out the recommendation of the Commissioner in giving the right of renewal to the tenants on the Motueka and Arapura reserves, and the readjustment of the rents under the existing leases, as promised by Mr. Commissioner Mackay. I ask whether these two points will be taken into consideration.

Major Atkinson

Major ATKINSON.—They are both in the Bill.

Mr. M. J. S. MACKENZIE.—I wish to ask the Premier a question. I am in the unfortunate position of having no Bill of my own to say anything about; but I notice on the Order Paper one Bill that partakes very much of the nature of a question of public policy—the Fair Rent Bill. Would it not be wise, in view of the importance of the subject, to have that Bill brought up? The subject is exceedingly important, and there are floods of petitions coming in on the question.

Major ATKINSON.—The Bill is of very great importance. The Government regret that they do not see their way to proceed with the Bill. They do not consider it is a workable Bill, and have not had time to consider a question of so large importance. I myself am of opinion that we shall have to establish a Court, but I think it would probably have to take wider scope than the honourable gentleman gives it. Looking at the importance of the measure, we should make a great mistake if such a Bill as this were not fully considered, and, in view of the lateness of the session, the Government consider it would be wiser to wait till next session. In the meantime, we propose to have a clause inserted in our Land Bill to provide that none of the present tenants should be unduly harassed. We propose to give the local bodies power to deal with other cases. We have made all the provision that it is possible to make in our Land Bill on this subject. We should have been glad to take up the Bill if it were a workable measure; but, after careful consideration, we find that it is not at all workable. We were told that the matter was to be introduced into another place,—that this Bill was to be abandoned, then introduced in another place, and brought down here. When I heard that stated I said I should be glad to take it up if it could be got into a workable shape. But the Government have not time to deal with it this session in a way that would satisfy the country.

Sir J. VOGEL.—I should like to make a few remarks on the statement made by the honourable gentleman. I understand that he proposes to conclude the financial debate, and then to deal with the whole of the estimates, including the supplementary estimates. It appears to me that in order to get through these estimates we should require to go into Committee of Supply several times. We have then the Public Works Statement, which is to be made on Monday, and which will include questions relating to the loan. It may or may not propose to provide further funds for the Westport and Greymouth harbours; and that question must be considered this session, as the money is running out. Then, we have the debate on the Public Works Statement, which could hardly come on until two or three days after it is delivered; and the Bills to be indicated by the Statement—Loan Bills, if any—will have to be considered. The honourable gentleman wishes us to carry the Land Bill; but we are not aware whether he accepts the amendments which have been made by the Waste Lands Committee. Then, there are the Naval Defences Bill, the Railway Bill, the Crown and Native Lands Rating Bill. Then, there is the discussion on the education question; and there are, I understand, a number of other Bills which the honourable gentleman wants carried, and which will involve great consideration. I agree that the Native reserves, both in the North and South Islands, need to be dealt with. Then, there is the question relating to municipal expenditure, and as to whether Mayors shall be elected in a different way from what they are at present. Then, there is the discussion on the San Francisco service; and two measures of great importance are to come before us from the Legislative Council, relating to Native lands. These are the heads of the questions we have to consider, and how the honourable gentleman thinks it possible to deal with those matters between this and Tuesday week I am at a loss to understand. Without any obstruction whatever, and with the most limited discussion that we can give them, it appears to me impossible for honourable members who think strongly on the questions raised by these various measures to abstain from expressing their opinions on them. In fact, we are asked to do in ten days a volume of work which would be very heavy work for a whole session. I shall be glad to assist the Government to the utmost to push on business; but I cannot accede to accepting important measures which are not properly discussed or considered. As the honourable member said of the measure of the honourable member for Auckland Central, that it was an important measure and required consideration, so also with regard to nearly all of the measures to which I have referred. And, as regards the estimates, it must be borne in mind that the whole question of retrenchment, about which we have heard so much in the House and in the country, practically remains to be discussed; for, excepting the Governor's Salary Bill, the Honorarium Bill, and the Ministers' Salaries Bill, the question of retrenchment has practically not yet received any consideration from the House. I have every disposition to hasten the business; but I fear it would be impossible, consistently with the duty of honourable members, to carry out the whole of this business by Tuesday week.

LAND BILL.

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON.—Sir, I beg to move, That you do leave the chair presently, in order to go into Committee on the Land Bill.

Mr. J. MCKENZIE.—I hope the Minister of Lands will not push this measure on to-night, and that the House will see its way to postpone it until Monday. The Land Bill was only reported yesterday from the Waste Lands Committee, and was only circulated this morning, and, seeing that honourable members have been in the House until after three o'clock this morning, back to Committees at eleven, and to the House again at twelve, they have not had time to study the amendments. For my own part I know the purport of those amendments; but honourable members should have an opportunity of considering the effect of the amendments in connection with the Bill as originally brought down and as amended by the Waste Lands Committee. I think the honourable gentleman would do well to postpone going into Committee on this Bill until Monday, so that honourable members may have an opportunity of knowing what the amendments really are. I am sure such a course will facilitate the passing of the Bill.

Mr. KERR.—I hope the House will go on with this Land Bill. It is one of the necessary works of the session. It will really be for the benefit of the colony at large if this Bill is put through the House as soon as possible.

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON.—I simply wish to say that, far from wishing to press the Bill on the House, I would ask honourable members in Committee to carefully consider and discuss every point of the measure. With regard to the amendments referred to, the honourable member for Waihemo knows what they are; and if other honourable members did not know what they are they would say so. The amendments are of a very simple character, and we have plenty of time to consider them to-night, taking the Bill clause by clause.

The House divided.

AYES, 58.

Anderson	Hobbs	Reeves, R. H. J.
Atkinson	Hodgkinson	Rhodes
Barron	Izard	Richardson, E.
Blake	Jackson	Richardson, G.
Bruce	Jones	Ross
Buchanan	Joyce	Steward, W. J.
Buxton	Larnach	S.-Menteath
Cowan	Lawry	Taiwhanga
Dodson	Loughrey	Tanner
Feldwick	Mackenzie, M.	Thompson, R.
Fergus	Mackenzie, T.	Thompson, T.
Fisher	Marchant	Turnbull
Fitchett	Mitchelson	Valentine
Fitzherbert	Monk	Vogel
Fraser	Newman	Walker
Goldie	O'Connor	Withy.
Graham	Ormond
Grimmond	Peacock
Hamlin	Pearson
Hislop	Pyke

Tellers.

Allen
Kerr.

NOES, 5.

Fish		Tellers.
Grey		Levestam
Smith.		McKenzie, J.

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Taylor	Beetham
Ward	Seddon
Wilson.	Duncan.

Majority for, 53.

Motion agreed to.

IN COMMITTEE.

Clause 2.—Governor, by notification in Gazette, may decide all rural lands open for selection for cash.

Sir G. GREY moved, That the words "Parts

V. or VII." be struck out, with a view to inserting in lieu thereof, "under the provisions for special settlements, village settlements, or small grazing-runs."

The Committee divided on the question, "That the words be retained."

AYES, 41.

Allen	Jones	Ross
Anderson	Lawry	Russell
Atkinson	Macarthur	Seymour
Bruce	Mackenzie, M.	Steward, W. J.
Buchanan	Mackenzie, T.	S.-Menteath
Cowan	Marchant	Taiwhanga
Fergus	Mills	Thompson, R.
Fisher	Newman	Turnbull
Fitchett	Ormond	Walker
Fulton	Peacock	Whyte
Graham	Pearson	Wilson.
Guinness	Pyke	Tellers.
Hislop	Rhodes	Kerr
Hobbs	Richardson, G.	Valentine.

NOES, 21.

Beetham	Kelly	Smith
Blake	Levestam	Taylor
Fraser	McKenzie, J.	Thompson, T.
Goldie	Parata	Vogel.
Grey	Perceval	Tellers.
Grimmond	Richardson, E.	Izard
Hodgkinson	Seddon	Reeves, W. P.
Joyce

Majority for, 20.

Amendment negatived.

The Committee divided on the question, "That clause 2 stand part of the Bill."

AYES, 49.

Allen	Kerr	Richardson, G.
Anderson	Lawry	Ross
Atkinson	Levestam	Russell
Barron	Macarthur	Seymour
Beetham	Mackenzie, M.	Steward, W. J.
Bruce	Mackenzie, T.	S.-Menteath
Cowan	Marchant	Taiwhanga
Dodson	McGregor	Thompson, R.
Fisher	Mills	Turnbull
Fitzherbert	Moat	Walker
Fulton	Monk	Ward
Graham	Newman	Whyte
Hislop	O'Connor	Wilson.
Hobbs	Ormond
Hodgkinson	Peacock	Tellers.
Izard	Pyke	Buchanan
Jones	Rhodes	Valentine.

NOES, 18.

Buxton	Kelly	Thompson, T.
Feldwick	Moss	Vogel
Fitchett	Perceval	Withy.
Fraser	Smith	Tellers.
Goldie	Stewart, W. D.	Blake
Grey	Taylor	McKenzie, J.
Joyce

Majority for, 31.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 3.—Price of land to be stated in notification: Ordinary land, 20s. per acre; second-class land, 10s. per acre; third-class land, 5s. per acre.

Sir G. Grey

The Committee divided on the question, "That the words be retained providing that land may be sold at less than the foregoing prices in districts where the minimum fixed by the Act of 1885 is below prices herein fixed."

AYES, 37.

Allen	Izard	Perceval
Barron	Jones	Smith
Bruce	Joyce	Stewart, W. D.
Buxton	Larnach	S.-Menteath
Feldwick	Lawry	Thompson, T.
Fisher	Mackenzie, M.	Turnbull
Fish	Marchant	Ward
Fraser	McKenzie, J.	Wilson
Fulton	Moat	Withy.
Goldie	Monk
Graham	Newman	Tellers.
Grey	Parata	Buchanan
Hislop	Peacock	Fitchett.

NOES, 28.

Anderson	Kerr	Russell
Beetham	Levestam	Seymour
Blake	Macarthur	Steward, W. J.
Cadman	Mackenzie, T.	Thompson, R.
Cowan	O'Connor	Valentine
Dodson	Ormond	Whyte.
Fitzherbert	Pearson
Hobbs	Pyke	Tellers.
Hodgkinson	Richardson, G.	Duncan
Kelly	Ross	McGregor.

Majority for, 9.

Words retained.

Mr. SEYMOUR moved, That in the Counties of Marlborough, Nelson, and Wellington the price of second-class land may be fixed at any price not less than 5s. per acre.

The Committee divided.

AYES, 39.

Anderson	Levestam	Richardson, G.
Beetham	Macarthur	Ross
Blake	Mackenzie, M.	Russell
Bruce	Marchant	Steward, W. J.
Cadman	McGregor	S.-Menteath
Cowan	Moat	Tanner
Dodson	Monk	Thompson, R.
Fergus	O'Connor	Valentine
Fisher	Ormond	Whyte
Fitzherbert	Parata	Wilson.
Guinness	Peacock	Tellers.
Hobbs	Pearson	Buchanan
Hodgkinson	Pyke	Seymour.
Kerr

NOES, 25.

Allen	Grey	Richardson, E.
Barron	Hislop	Stewart, W. D.
Buxton	Joyce	Thompson, T.
Duncan	Kelly	Turnbull
Feldwick	Lawry	Ward.
Fish	Mackenzie, T.
Fitchett	Mills	Tellers.
Fulton	Mitchelson	McKenzie, J.
Goldie	Newman	Reeves, W. P.

Majority for, 14.

Words inserted.

Mr. J. MCKENZIE moved, That the clause be erased.

The Committee divided on the question,
"That the clause be retained."

AYES, 43.

Allen	Hobbs	Richardson, G.
Barron	Hodgkinson	Ross
Beetham	Jones	Russell
Blake	Kelly	Seymour
Bruce	Kerr	Steward, W. J.
Buchanan	Lawry	S.-Menteath
Cadman	Levestam	Thompson, R.
Cowan	Macarthur	Thompson, T.
Dodson	Mackenzie, T.	Valentine
Fisher	McGregor	Whyte
Fitchett	Mitchelson	Wilson.
Fitzherbert	Moat
Fulton	Monk	Tellers.
Guinness	Ormond	Anderson
Hislop	Peacock	Ward.

NOES, 10.

Buxton	Joyce	Tellers.
Feldwick	Parata	Duncan
Goldie	Smith	McKenzie, J.
Grey	Withy.

Majority for, 33.

Clause retained.

Clause 5.—Applicant for land to have choice of tenure.

Mr. J. McKENZIE moved, That only one-third of available lands be open for sale for cash.

The Committee divided.

AYES, 20.

Buxton	Guinness	Smith
Duncan	Hutchison	Thompson, T.
Feldwick	Jones	Wilson
Fitchett	Kelly	Withy.
Fitzherbert	Mackenzie, T.	Tellers.
Goldie	Newman	McKenzie, J.
Grey	Parata	Reeves, W. P.

NOES, 34.

Anderson	Kerr	Steward, W. J.
Beetham	Lawry	Stewart, W. D.
Blake	Levestam	S.-Menteath
Buchanan	Macarthur	Tanner
Cadman	McGregor	Thompson, R.
Cowan	Mitchelson	Valentine
Dodson	Moat	Ward
Fisher	Ormond	Whyte.
Fulton	Richardson, G.
Hislop	Ross	Tellers.
Hobbs	Russell	Barron
Hodgkinson	Seymour	Peacock.

Majority against, 14.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. JONES moved, That only two-thirds be saleable for cash.

The Committee divided.

AYES, 15.

Allen	Hutchison	Smith
Buxton	Moss	Thompson, T.
Duncan	Perceval	Tellers.
Feldwick	Reeves, W. P.	Jones
Fraser	Seddon	McKenzie, J.
Grey

NOES, 43.

Anderson	Izard	Parata
Barron	Jackson	Peacock
Beetham	Kelly	Pearson
Blake	Kerr	Richardson, G.
Bruce	Larnach	Ross
Buchanan	Lawry	Seymour
Cadman	Levestam	Tanner
Cowan	Mackenzie, M.	Thompson, R.
Dodson	Mackenzie, T.	Valentine
Fisher	Marchant	Ward
Fitzherbert	McGregor	Wilson.
Fulton	Moat
Grimmond	Monk	Tellers.
Hobbs	Newman	Graham
Hodgkinson	Ormond	Macarthur.

Majority against, 28.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. J. McKENZIE moved, That clause 5 be erased.

The Committee divided on the question,
"That the clause be retained."

AYES, 42.

Anderson	Hobbs	Parata
Barron	Hodgkinson	Peacock
Beetham	Izard	Pearson
Blake	Jones	Richardson, G.
Bruce	Kelly	Ross
Buchanan	Larnach	Seymour
Cadman	Lawry	Thompson, R.
Cowan	Levestam	Thompson, T.
Dodson	Macarthur	Valentine
Feldwick	Mackenzie, T.	Ward
Fisher	McGregor	Wilson.
Fitzherbert	Moat	Tellers.
Fulton	Monk	Graham
Grimmond	Newman	Tanner.
Hislop

NOES, 7.

Buxton	Hutchison	Tellers.
Duncan	Smith.	McKenzie, J.
Grey		Reeves, W. P.

Majority for, 35.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 7.—Definition of "simultaneous application" for surveyed land.

Mr. J. McKENZIE moved the insertion of the words "and unsurveyed."

The Committee divided.

AYES, 10.

Buxton	Mackenzie, T.	Tellers.
Duncan	Reeves, W. P.	Hutchison
Grey	Smith	McKenzie, J.
Kelly	Thompson, T.

NOES, 37.

Anderson	Fitzherbert	Levestam
Barron	Fulton	Marchant
Blake	Graham	McGregor
Bruce	Grimmond	Moat
Buchanan	Hislop	Monk
Cadman	Hobbs	Parata
Cowan	Hodgkinson	Peacock
Dodson	Izard	Pearson
Feldwick	Jones	Richardson, G.
Fisher	Lawry	Ross

Seymour	Ward	Tellers.
Tanner	Wilson.	Allen
Valentine		Thompson, R.

Majority against, 27.

Amendment negatived.

Clause 10.—Limitation of cash purchases. No person to select more than 640 acres of first-class land and 2,000 acres of second-class land in any land district.

Mr. T. MACKENZIE moved, That the words "six hundred and forty" be struck out, with a view of inserting "five hundred" in lieu thereof.

The Committee divided on the question, "That the words be retained."

AYES, 27.

Anderson	Hobbs	Ross
Barron	Jackson	Seymour
Beetham	Lawry	Tanner
Blake	Levestam	Thompson, R.
Buchanan	McGregor	Valentine
Dodson	Moat	Wilson.
Fisher	Peacock	Tellers.
Fulton	Pearson	Buxton
Graham	Richardson, G.	Cowan.
Hislop

NOES, 21.

Allen	Hutchison	Parata
Bruce	Izard	Reeves, W. P.
Cadman	Jones	Smith
Duncan	Kelly	Ward.
Feldwick	Marchant	Tellers.
Fraser	McKenzie, J.	Fitzherbert
Grimmond	Monk	Mackenzie, T.
Hodgkinson

Majority for, 6.

Words retained.

The Committee divided on the question, "That the clause stand part of the Bill."

AYES, 36.

Allen	Graham	Moat
Anderson	Grimmond	Parata
Barron	Hislop	Peacock
Blake	Hobbs	Pearson
Bruce	Hodgkinson	Richardson, G.
Buchanan	Izard	Ross
Cadman	Jones	Seymour
Cowan	Kelly	Tanner
Dodson	Lawry	Wilson.
Feldwick	Levestam	Tellers.
Fisher	Mackenzie, T.	Valentine
Fitzherbert	McGregor	Ward.
Fulton

NOES, 5.

Buxton	Tellers.
Hutchison	Duncan
Reeves, W. P.	McKenzie, J.

Majority for, 31.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 27.—Waste Lands Boards abolished.

Mr. WARD moved, That the clause be postponed.

The Committee divided.

AYES, 17.

Beetham	Bruce	Cadman
Blake	Buchanan	Duncan

Feldwick
Fitzherbert
Jones
Kelly

Mackenzie, T.	Richardson, G.
McKenzie, J.	Tellers.
Moat	Smith
Reeves, W. P.	Ward.

NOES, 20.

Allen	Grimmond	Seymour
Anderson	Hislop	Tanner
Dodson	Jackson	Thompson, R.
Fisher	Lawry	Wilson.
Fraser	Marchant	Tellers.
Fulton	McGregor	Hobbs
Graham	Monk	Valentine.

Majority against, 3.

Motion negatived.

Mr. W. P. REEVES moved, That progress be reported.

The Committee divided.

AYES, 20.

Beetham	Fraser	McKenzie, J.
Blake	Fulton	Moat
Buchanan	Graham	Smith
Cadman	Jones	Ward.
Duncan	Lawry	Tellers.
Feldwick	Mackenzie, T.	Kelly
Fitzherbert	Marchant	Reeves, W. P.

NOES, 15.

Allen	Jackson	Valentine
Anderson	Monk	Wilson.
Fisher	Richardson, G.	Tellers.
Grimmond	Seymour	McGregor
Hislop	Tanner	Thompson, R.
Hobbs

Majority for, 5.

Progress reported.

On the motion, That the House do now adjourn,

Mr. J. MCKENZIE said,—I wish to take this opportunity of stating my opinion of the action of the Government during the night that has just passed,—for now we have it broad daylight. This Bill, which we have been discussing all night, was reported from the Waste Lands Committee at three o'clock on Thursday afternoon. The House, at its rising on Thursday, adjourned till eleven o'clock on Friday morning, this Bill was put into Committee at half-past two o'clock, and here we have been ever since discussing it. That is the way that the Bill has been forced through, although it has only been distributed after being reprinted an hour or two before we went into Committee on it.

Mr. SPEAKER.—The honourable gentleman must not refer to past debates on the motion for adjourning the House.

Mr. J. MCKENZIE.—I want to refer to matters which took place in Committee.

Mr. SPEAKER.—The honourable gentleman will not be in order in doing that at the present time, but will be when the Land Bill is further considered.

Mr. J. MCKENZIE.—Well, I will confine myself to the question of the adjournment of the House, and I mean to take action which will show the people of the colony how many of the members whom they send here stick to their duty in the House. We have been discussing a question of the most vital importance to the colony, and it is only right that the people of the colony should know who are here on this occasion. Therefore I shall call for a division, so that it may be shown who are here.

Mr. MONK.—I wish to call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that some honourable gentlemen have been strenuously exerting themselves during the night upon matters in which they are personally interested—striving to preserve institutions from which they derive large fees, and for which the country is of opinion that it has received no adequate compensation.

Mr. R. THOMPSON.—And I should like to remark that, had it not been for the opposition of honourable members who are members of Land Boards, the business of the Committee could have been got through long before this.

Mr. SPEAKER.—The honourable member is out of order, in discussing the question of the adjournment of the House, to allude to matters which have occurred in Committee on the Land Bill.

Mr. R. THOMPSON.—I think I am in order in placing on record the reasons why we have been kept here.

Mr. SPEAKER.—No; you are referring to matters with which we have nothing to do now, when the business is the adjournment of the House. On Monday, when the Bill comes up again, will be the proper time for such observations as you are now making.

Mr. WARD.—I think it is much to be regretted that the honourable member for Waitemata should have made the general allusions of the kind he has thought proper to make, and which are calculated to do a great deal of harm. I think the honourable gentleman should have stated to whom he was referring. I have taken part in the debate in Committee, and I desire to say that I am not connected with a Waste Lands Board, and never have been.

Mr. MONK.—I did not allude to the honourable member for Awarua.

Mr. W. P. REEVES.—I, like the honourable member for Awarua, regret the remark which was made by the honourable member for Waitemata; but I trust that the honourable member for Waihemo will push this matter to a division, so that we may express our opinion on the state of the House. There can be no doubt that this is by far the most important measure of this session, and that it is being considered in a House such as I now see before me shows that honourable members are not attending to their duty in the matter. No measure of policy which has been brought down this session—

Mr. SPEAKER.—I hope the honourable gentleman will not proceed in his references to the Bill. An order has been made as to when the Bill shall come on again for consideration, and I cannot permit the Bill to be discussed now.

Mr. HOBBS.—I wish to say that it is well known that, although many members are away, they paired on the Bill, or on particular clauses of the Bill, and so have expressed their opinion. I do not see why there should be a complaint about the condition of the House. Honourable gentlemen have paired, and the pairs will be recorded in Hansard.

Mr. T. MACKENZIE.—I hope we shall not continue this debate, and I can see no reason why reflections should be cast upon members who have been present here attending to their duties all night.

Mr. DUNCAN.—I should like to call your attention, Sir, to an expression used by the honourable member for Waitemata. I think it must have escaped your attention at the time, or you would have checked him.

Mr. SPEAKER.—I did not hear what the honourable gentleman said.

Mr. DUNCAN.—I am not going to repeat what he said, if he will re-state it himself. I would prefer that he should say again what he said previously, and then he could not accuse me of misquoting him.

Mr. MONK.—The impression which I wish to convey was just this: that the night has been very much occupied by honourable gentlemen debating this question while the country will regard them as being personally and pecuniarily interested in obstructing some of the provisions of this Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER.—Honourable members have a right to discuss matters in which they may be pecuniarily interested; but they are expected to abstain from voting, or they may be subjected to having their votes disallowed, if challenged.

Mr. DUNCAN.—Well, I think the honourable member for Waitemata should have left that unsaid. He has not told us all he said previously, either. He stated before that honourable members had drawn a lot of money from the country that they had not given adequate services for.

Mr. MONK.—I admit all that. I wanted to confirm my previous remark; but I put it in another form.

Mr. DUNCAN.—As far as I am concerned, no one can accuse me of delaying the House. I do not believe that I have occupied the time five minutes all night. I would just refer to the remark made by the honourable member for the Bay of Islands. He says that honourable members are all paired; but I do not think he knows anything about it. I now ask him how many are paired, and he cannot tell me. That is just like many of the rambling statements of the honourable gentleman, for which he has no foundation in fact.

Mr. HOBBS.—If the honourable gentleman will ask the whips he will see.

Mr. VALENTINE.—I simply wish to say that I am not one of those individuals to whom the honourable member for Waitemata refers. I have sat here all night expressly for the purpose of saying a few words on this particular clause—

Mr. SPEAKER.—I hope honourable members will bear in mind the ruling I have given.

I cannot permit this matter of the proceedings in Committee on the Land Bill to be debated now on the motion for adjournment of the House.

Mr. JONES.—May I say that I think that no honourable member should make such serious reflections upon those who have taken a part in discussing this Bill? I have been taking my part in it, but certainly I do not belong to a Waste Lands Board, and I have no personal interest in the matter.

Mr. MARCHANT.—Sir, it is now five o'clock in the morning, and after sitting up all night and doing good work we should now be getting home. Perhaps in the earlier part of the evening there was some time wasted, but for several hours everything has gone very smoothly, and I hope we shall have no more of these personal reflections to disturb the good feeling that has been prevailing.

Mr. J. MCKENZIE.—After what the honourable member for Waitemata said, I must protest—

Mr. SPEAKER.—If I had heard the honourable member use unparliamentary language I should have called him to order, but, it having gone by, it cannot now be referred to.

Mr. J. MCKENZIE.—Sir, I was only about to say one word, and—

Mr. SPEAKER.—The honourable gentleman has already spoken.

Mr. BLAKE.—Sir, I do not think we need discuss the Land Board question any more at this hour. I am not a member of a Land Board, and therefore anything that has been said does not apply to me, but I think it is high time we let the subject rest and got home to bed.

The House divided on the question, "That the House do now adjourn."

AYES, 14.

Blake	Hislop	Valentine
Cadman	Jackson	Ward.
Fraser	Jones	Tellers.
Grimmond	Moat	Buchanan
Hamlin	Richardson, G.	Marchant.

NOES, 12.

Allen	Mackenzie, T.	Thompson, R.
Anderson	McGregor	Tellers.
Duncan	Monk	Feldwick
Fitzherbert	Reeves, W. P.	McKenzie, J.
Hobbs

Majority for, 2.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at five minutes past five o'clock a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Saturday, 10th December, 1887.

Second Readings—Third Readings—Waimea Riverworks Bill—Waitotara Election—Australian Centenary—Christchurch District Drainage Bill (No. 2)—Order of Business—Otago Central Railway Extension and Construction Bill—Fair Rent

Mr. Speaker

Bill—Kaimo and Kawakawa Railways Connection and Construction Bill—Count-out.

Mr. SPEAKER took the chair at ten o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SECOND READINGS.

Invercargill Waterworks Reserve Bill, Christchurch District Drainage Bill (No. 2), Nelson Foreshore Reserve Bill, Opunake Harbour Board Bill, Wairoa Harbour Endowment and Borrowing Bill, Waimea Riverworks Bill.

THIRD READINGS.

Wairarapa North County Council Empowering Bill, Otago Harbour Board Bill, Pukekohe Borough Bill, Gisborne Harbour Board Bill, Invercargill Waterworks Reserve Bill.

WAIMEA RIVERWORKS BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

Major ATKINSON moved, That progress be reported.

The Committee divided.

AYES, 27.

Allen	Lawry	S.-Menteath
Anderson	Mackenzie, M.	Taiwhanga
Atkinson	McGregor	Tanner
Beetham	Moat	Thompson, R.
Bruce	Monk	Thompson, T.
Cowan	Newman	Valentine.
Fergus	Ormond	Tellers.
Graham	Peacock	Barron
Hislop	Rhodes	Fulton.
Hobbs

NOES, 23.

Blake	Joyce	Reeves, R. H. J.
Cadman	Kerr	Samuel
Feldwick	Lance	Steward, W. J.
Fish	Levestam	Stewart, W. D.
Grey	Marchant	Ward.
Grimmond	McKenzie, J.	Tellers.
Guinness	Mills	Fitchett
Hutchison	Moss	Seddon.

Majority for, 4.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

WAITOTARA ELECTION.

Mr. SPEAKER.—I have received a letter from the Chief Justice on the election petition just tried, which I will read to the House. It is as follows:—

"Judges' Chambers, Wellington,

"10th December, 1887.

"SIR,—I have the honour to forward to you the certificate of the Judges appointed to try a petition presented against the election of George Hutchison as a member of the House of Representatives for the Waitotara Electoral District.—I have, &c.,

"JAMES PRENDERGAST.

"Hon. Sir G. M. O'Rorke, Speaker of the House of Representatives."

The following is the certificate which accompanies the letter:—

"To the Hon. the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

"We, the undersigned, two of the Judges of the Supreme Court appointed to try an election petition presented by John Bryce, David Peat, and Joe Reginald Somerville against George Hutchison, who had been elected to serve as a member of the House of Representatives for the Electoral District of Waitotara, having duly tried the said petition, do hereby certify our determination that the said George Hutchison was duly elected.

"And whereas in the said petition charges were made of divers corrupt and illegal practices alleged to have been committed at the election referred to in such petition, we do hereby report as follows, that is to say,—

"That no corrupt or illegal practice has been proved to have been committed by, or with the knowledge or consent of, the said George Hutchison :

"That the said George Hutchison has not been guilty, by his agents, of any corrupt or illegal practice in reference to such election :

"That there is no reason to believe that corrupt or illegal practices have extensively prevailed at the said election.

"In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands this tenth day of December, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven.

"JAMES PRENDERGAST.

"JOSHUA STRANGE WILLIAMS."

Major ATKINSON.—I have to move, That the certificate be entered in the Journals of the House.

Motion agreed to.

AUSTRALIAN CENTENARY.

Mr. SPEAKER.—I have to inform the House that I have received, from the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, the following telegram :—

"The Speaker, House of Representatives,
"Wellington.

"Have the goodness to inform honourable members of the House of Representatives of New Zealand that invitations for the State banquet to be given in this city on the 26th January next, in celebration of the first one hundred years of Australian settlement, will be sent to each of them.

"JAMES HENRY YOUNG,

"Speaker, Legislative Assembly.

"Sydney, 9th December, 1887."

Major ATKINSON.—With the permission of the House, I will move, in regard to the message just read, That Mr. Speaker be requested to convey to the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales the thanks of the members of this House for his invitation to the State banquet at Sydney on the 26th January next, in celebration of the centenary of Australian settlement.

Mr. R. H. J. REEVES.—While on that subject, as this is an event which, of course, only occurs once in one hundred years, I wish to ask if the Government will place the services of the steamer "Hinemoa" at the disposal of honourable members.

Major ATKINSON.—There are very excellent boats provided by the Union Company that go over regularly—in fact, they are the finest in the colony; and I have no doubt that those honourable gentlemen who desire to be present—and I hope there will be many of them—will be only too delighted to go at their own cost.

Mr. TAYLOR.—I hope there will be no vote passed in the direction of assisting members to go over. They ought to be prepared to pay their way over, seeing the present state of the colony.

Motion agreed to.

CHRISTCHURCH DISTRICT DRAINAGE BILL (No. 2).

On the motion for the third reading of this Bill,

Mr. TAYLOR said he had had no opportunity of speaking on this Bill before, in consequence of the action of the Government; and he trusted that when the Bill reached another place that branch of the Legislature would do their duty to the country and throw it out. This was a Bill to legalise an illegal borrowing of money on the part of the Christchurch Drainage Board. He was exceedingly sorry that the Bill had been dealt with this session, because it was a very great injury to the ratepayers throughout the colony, not only on account of the vicious example which had been set by allowing the Board to get into debt and then, together with the banks, which lent the money knowing they had no authority in law to do so, to come to the House and get whitewashed; but it meant also taxing the ratepayers of the colony without their sanction. He hoped honourable gentlemen would understand that. If honourable members would look at the Act of 1875 they would find that all the necessary powers required by the Board were given there.

Mr. FISH quite agreed with every word which had fallen from the honourable member for Sydenham. He thought the Bill proposed to do a thing which was most improper and unheard-of. So far as he understood, it sought to give power to a bank to do a thing which he had never seen done by a bank or institution before. The Bill appeared to be an undesirable one, and therefore he would move, That it be read a third time that day three months. This showed the impolicy of allowing Bills to be rushed through in the hurried manner in which this one had been. If he had known the position he should have opposed the Bill in Committee. A few days ago honourable members were under the impression that these Bills had not the slightest chance of coming on again this session, and therefore they did not avail themselves of the opportunity of looking into the Bill as they would otherwise have done. This Bill proposed to give some extraordinary powers to a banking institution—powers which, in his opinion, should not be granted.

Dr. FITCHETT would second the amendment. He had no idea, when the Bill was in Committee, that it was for so extraordinary a purpose as had been stated—namely, to legalise retrospectively what originally was illegal. The Bill as originally drawn was explicitly in favour of the bank, and subsequently there had been added the words "no other creditor." These words were superfluous, for the "creditor" must be a legal creditor; and he would have the power to appoint a "receiver" conferred by the original Act; so that this was a Bill to benefit the bank alone. It gave a sort of precedent to any banker or money-lender of influence to override the provisions of the Act—to lend moneys, and so enable a Board or other body to incur liabilities, with a sort of assurance that it could come here and legalise the thing by an Act such as this. He had supported the Bill before in utter ignorance of the real position.

Mr. W. D. STEWART said, as he happened to have special knowledge of this matter, being Chairman of the Local Bills Committee which considered this measure, he thought it only fair to the honourable gentleman in charge of the Bill to state what he knew of it. Before this Bill was introduced there had been no power possessed by a creditor of the Drainage Board of appointing a receiver at all—a power which was common to municipal bodies and Road Boards. Therefore this Drainage Board could not get credit, so to speak, to the same amount as ordinary municipal bodies and Road Boards. The Drainage Board, at the instigation, probably, of some of the creditors, possibly the bank, found it necessary to apply for the ordinary powers possessed by other bodies. The Bill was introduced for that purpose; but it seemed to him to limit the right too much in favour of the bank, so the Bill was altered in order to give all creditors the same power. He understood that the bank was likely to be the only creditor, because all the other debts were floating debts, and were likely to be paid off at once. It was obvious that the bank, if it found this security taken away from it, would not advance the money which the Drainage Board required. Unless the power proposed to be given in the Bill was granted the bank would take up this position: "We are under no obligation to make advances, and we shall not make advances if we are hampered in the matter of getting security." The bank was the only creditor, so far as he could see, which would ask for the appointment of a receiver. Subsection (8) of section 2 stated, "All moneys received by the receiver shall be applied as follows;" and then part (c) of the clause said, "In payment of all debts due and payable by the Board at the date of the appointment of the receiver;" and the receiver, under section 6, was not discharged from his responsibility until he had satisfied all the debts owing by the Drainage Board. He really thought a very great injustice would be done if this Bill were not allowed to pass. He understood that the Drainage Board itself wanted an alteration of section 3, and for this reason: that they might be able to go to the bank and say, "We want an overdraft of £7,000;" and they would thus get it on better terms than they otherwise would. The honourable member for Dunedin South was probably not aware that formerly the Board had authority to obtain advances to the extent of its current revenue—which was £20,000—and here it was limited to the amount of £7,000.

Dr. Fitchett

Dr. FITCHETT said it was to be regretted that the honourable gentleman in charge of the Bill did not correct the statement made by the honourable member for Sydenham. His (Dr. Fitchett's) sole reason for seconding the amendment was that he understood the Bill was a Bill to legalise expenditure that was illegal. As this was not so, he would support the third reading.

The House divided on the question, "That the Bill be read a third time."

AYES, 30.

Allen	Hislop	Steward, W. J.
Anderson	Hobbs	Taiwhanga
Atkinson	Lance	Tanner
Barron	Lawry	Thompson, R.
Beetham	Mackenzie, M.	Valentine
Bruce	Mackenzie, T.	Vogel
Cowan	McGregor	Whyte.
Fergus	Mills
Fitchett	Moat	Tellers.
Grimmond	Peacock	Rhodes
Hamlin	Ross	Stewart, W. D.

NOES, 8.

Fulton	Ormond	Tellers.
Marchant	Richardson, G.	Fish
Newman	Ward.	Taylor.

Majority for, 22.

Bill read a third time.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Major ATKINSON.—I beg to move the motion standing in my name, and, if the House see fit to carry the motion, I will afterwards propose that the Kamo and Kawakawa Railways Connection and Construction Bill be postponed till after the consideration of the Otago Central Railway Extension and Construction Bill.

Motion made, and question proposed, "That the orders of the day preceding the Kamo and Kawakawa Railways Connection and Construction Bill and the Otago Central Railway Extension and Construction Bill be postponed, in order to proceed to the consideration of those Bills."—(Hon. Major Atkinson.)

Mr. HOBBS.—I simply wish to say that I not only have no objection whatever to the course proposed, but, on the contrary, should be very glad to give way to the honourable gentleman in charge of the Otago Central Railway Extension and Construction Bill, so that that measure might be proceeded with first, the promoter being anxious to get the Bill through. I have therefore great pleasure in waiving my right.

Sir G. GREY.—I now beg to move the amendment to the motion of the Premier standing in my name, as follows: That Nos. 37, 39, 40, 46, on the Order Paper of the 9th December be taken into consideration at eleven o'clock this day, in the order in which they stand on the Order Paper of Friday, the 9th December. Taking to-day's Order Paper, I move the numbers 10 and 12 on the Order Paper, the first being a Bill to provide for the acquisition of freehold tenure, and the second a Bill to provide for fixing fair rents to be paid by occupiers of public lands. I may say I have had no opportunity of bringing forward a single measure or motion this session, and I think that the House will admit that I have done nothing to forfeit a right of this kind. Great misfortunes have been entailed on those in whose favour I move the Bills, and which these measures will be the means of removing. I ask that the House should do justice to an old member. I do not think it fair that the Premier should have placed in his hands the power of inflicting a punishment of this kind upon me, and of giving a reward of the kind he is about to give to others. What I have done to deserve this punishment I cannot say; but I throw myself on the consideration of honourable members, and beg them not to treat this subject as a party question, as it is one justly for the consideration of the whole House.

Mr. SPEAKER.—I understand the honourable gentleman only desires to move in reference to the two Bills he has named.

Sir G. GREY.—Yes. I purposely refrain from dealing with the others, so as to save the time of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER.—In that case it would be better to put the amendment in this way: That the words "Freehold Tenure Acquisition Bill" and "Fair Rent Bill" be inserted before the words "Kamo and Kawakawa Railways."

Major ATKINSON.—If the honourable gentleman wishes to do so, he could take his other Bills after these two. I should have no objection to that course. For my part, I have no objection, either; to Order No. 11—the Law Practitioners Bill—being added to the motion.

Mr. SAMUEL.—I shall have a great deal of objection.

Mr. SPEAKER.—Order, order.

Sir G. GREY.—Do I understand this: that, supposing these two Bills are not disposed of to-day, the Premier will give me another day?

Major ATKINSON.—I could not make a promise of that sort, I am sorry to say.

Sir G. GREY.—Then it is impossible for me to accept this. I think the House would think that I should be degrading myself in doing so. I ask the House to do me justice. I ask no favour, and I pray the House not to be led to do an injustice to a fellow-member on an occasion like this.

Mr. SPEAKER.—The original question was, That the notice on the Order Paper be agreed to; since which it has been moved, as an amendment, That, before the words "Kamo and Kawakawa Railways Connection and Construction Bill," there be inserted the words "Freehold Tenure Acquisition Bill and Fair Rent Bill."

Mr. FISH.—I submit to the honourable member for Auckland Central that he might fairly accept the offer of the Premier in this matter. I understand the honourable member for the Bay of Islands merely wishes to get the second reading of his Bill and the Otago Central Railway Extension and Construction

Bill through; so that there is plenty of time to do that to-day.

Mr. SAMUEL.—I agree with the honourable member who last spoke. I hope the honourable member for Auckland Central will allow his Fair Rent Bills to come on after the other two. Although they are not local Bills, they are Bills which people are clamouring to have passed. I would also mention that in my case I am giving up something for the convenience of honourable members. I have a Divorce Extension Bill, a Bill of very great importance indeed, and looked forward to by thousands of people in the colony with considerable expectations; but I am willing to omit a purposeless discussion on that Bill in order to have these other important measures discussed and possibly passed.

Sir J. VOGEL.—I have been looking at the two Bills the honourable member for Auckland Central asks to have considered, and I have come to the conclusion, as regards both of them, that it is desirable they should be proceeded with; and, as regards one of them, it seems to me that the House is bound to proceed with it, unless it determines not to proceed with the West Coast Reserves Bill. The Fair Rent Bill is a Bill to enable relief to be given to those who are paying larger rents than they can afford to pay. I have over and over again asserted in this House that the time would come when application would be made to the Government for relief by a large number of tenants of the Crown and other persons under arrangements with the Government. That time has come more quickly than I anticipated. We now find that the perpetual-lease system is no more perpetual than other things which are supposed to be perpetual, and already proposals are made for exchanging perpetual leases for other tenures. The present position is this: that the Government now exercise all sorts of discretions, and are placed in a position to exercise privileges in a manner perfectly unconstitutional, and destructive of the good government of the country. It is quite true that the same state of things existed during my time, and it is equally true that I very much disapproved of it. At the present time there are thousands and thousands of pounds owing to the Government, and it entirely depends upon the action of the Government in instructing the local Boards whether the moneys are to be recovered or the persons are to remain owing the money. That is a vast discretion, and such a privilege is destructive of proper government. I do not say that this Government, any more than the late Government, will use the power in a corrupt manner; but I say that such a thing is exceedingly improper; and, as the honourable member at the head of the Government has come down with a measure for giving the people of his own district the means of reducing the demands upon them by the West Coast Reserves Bill, he has no right to deal in so partial a manner with persons under obligations to the Crown as not to allow the same thing all over the colony. Therefore I am decidedly of opinion that either we should postpone—and I think it would be possible to postpone—giving relief to the West Coast reserves tenants, or else we should do the thing completely and apply it all over the country. I am not prepared to say that all the provisions of the honourable gentleman's Bill are judiciously framed, especially that one which selects the Judges of the Supreme Court to act in this Court, for I am afraid that the Judges have not time to devote to the duties. But that is a Committee matter. In my own opinion, if we have to spend the whole of this day up to a very late hour to find means by which persons under obligations to the Crown for their occupation of lands, whether as deferred-payment settlers, as Crown tenants, or as pastoral tenants, should be given relief, we should not grudge the sacrifice of this leisure-day. As regards the Freehold Tenure Bill, it does not appear to me to be so imperative as this other measure, especially as the Land Bill proceeds in some degree in that direction. The question now comes as to whether we should consider these Bills before the Bills for the Otago Central and Kawakawa railways. For my part, I believe those Bills are exceedingly admirable and important; and, as honourable members have agreed to sacrifice their liberty to-day to consider these measures, I think that we can consider the whole four Bills, and I should like to see them passed through. If honourable members hold to that view, I think it makes very little difference in what order they are taken. Supposing the honourable member for Auckland Central assents to his Bills being taken after the other two Bills, will the honourable member at the head of the Government undertake to keep the House?—because if he does not undertake to keep the House it is simply deceiving the honourable member for Auckland Central to propose to take his two Bills after the other two. If the Government undertake to keep a House—and I think that is a thing the Government might well undertake to do—it is of no consequence in which order the measures are taken.

Major ATKINSON.—The Government cannot pledge themselves to the honourable gentleman at all. The honourable gentleman seems to change from side to side in any way that suits him, and it is evident to the House what his object is. I cannot at all give in to him in this matter.

Mr. FULTON.—I quite approve of the principle of the Bill which the honourable member for Auckland Central has introduced, and I shall be happy to support it, if he will accept the proposal made by the Government; but, if he does not do that, and insists on taking his first, I am sorry to say I shall have to vote against him.

Mr. J. MCKENZIE.—I think that one of the Bills that the honourable member for Auckland Central has on the Order Paper is of far more importance than the Otago Central, and that is the Fair Rent Bill. This morning I received a letter from a tenant who will be very much affected by the Bill, and he is a tenant on land where this Otago Central line would go; and to him the question of fair rent is of far more importance than the making of the Otago Central Railway—as now proposed by the Bill of the honourable member for the Dunstan—from Taieri Lake to the interior. I do not see any reason whatever why the honourable member for Auckland Central should be treated in this manner—that his two Bills, which are before the others on the Order Paper, should be put below them. I object to this, and I shall vote with the honourable gentleman.

Mr. BARRON.—The matter could be very easily arranged. With the large number which the honourable member for Auckland Central claims to have in favour of these two Bills, he should not have any difficulty in keeping a House. The leader of the Opposition even could find him a House, if he has that influence with his party which a leader ought to have. Besides this, the honourable gentleman has a great number of friends on both sides of the House, and, if he will only accept the promise of the Premier, and let the business go on as arranged, and then try to keep a House together, his own Bills must receive consideration.

Mr. MOSS.—I intended to support the Otago Central, for one; but, if it can only be done in this way, I shall certainly oppose it. By the Government an attempt is being made to reward their supporters and punish their opponents, and it is not proper that any Government should have the power to act in this way. With one of the Bills of the honourable member for Auckland Central we must all heartily sympathize—the Fair Rent Bill. There are numbers of tenants in every part of the country, tenants of public bodies and tenants of the Public Trustee, who require this relief. We were told last session that there were two hundred tenants of the Public Trustee on the West Coast, and the most pathetic picture was drawn by the Premier himself of the condition of these tenants. We were told that they were induced, at the time of inflation, to lease Maori lands at high rates, which were now ruinous; that they were working their very hearts out to pay these high rents; and that, as there was no authority in the Public Trustee to effect a reasonable arrangement, either they must abandon everything they possessed and be utterly ruined, or relief must be given by this House. We were told that everything they had must go to the benefit of the Natives on whose behalf the Public Trustee had leased these lands, and that settlement must be ruined. Surely an important Bill like this is not going to be shelved.

Major ATKINSON.—Which Bill?

Mr. MOSS.—The Fair Rent Bill.

Major ATKINSON.—That does not touch it.

Mr. MOSS.—I understand that it does. However, it can be made to touch it. It establishes a Court, and that Court will have the authority to arrange between public bodies of all kinds; and the Public Trustee may be easily included. But whether it applies to that particular case or not is a secondary question. The Court would be created, and before that Court cases of this kind can be brought, instead of being brought before Parliament to be settled on mere party-lines, as they otherwise might be. To propose that the other Bills should be taken first of course means that this Bill is to be shelved. It is impossible that it can be carried if it comes subsequently to the other Bills. The Otago Central Bill has many friends—the honourable gentleman in charge of it has lobbied magnificently. I myself intend to vote for it, but I think the honourable gentleman should allow the Bill of the honourable member for Auckland Central to be brought forward in a fair manner. The Bill cannot take up much time. Nobody wants to debate it very keenly. Why not let them all go in their proper order?—and the honourable member in charge of the Otago Central will find numerous friends rally round him to carry his Bill.

Major ATKINSON.—Some honourable members, I think, do not see the effect of the Bill that has elicited most expressions of support—the Fair Rent Bill. Practically, it will do very little, if anything at all; it cannot do much. A Bill of this vast importance ought to be dealt with after most careful consideration; and now the Government have more work than can be overtaken. I am surprised at the honourable member for Christchurch North, that he should deliberately propose now going on with such a measure as this, which is a measure that should not be brought on without the most careful consideration by the Government of the country. It certainly should not be rushed through at the end of a session. I say that the Bill as it stands is practically unworkable. I say there is not time to consider it. I am not prepared to submit what would be workable; I am not prepared to submit the principles upon which rents should be fairly fixed. None of these is provided here. These Courts would be absolutely unworkable. What would Resident Magistrates and Judges of the Supreme Court know about rent? Then, the tenants on the West Coast could not be relieved at all under this Bill, for they are practically the tenants of private persons, the Public Trustee merely acting for the Maori owners as an ordinary trustee, with certain legislative restrictions. He is in the position of trustee. Relief has been given to these people—not to a large extent, but still some relief—under the regulations which the late Government prepared. That relief will be extended, although it is not all that could be expected. But you cannot touch these people, because they are in the position of ordinary parties. The amendment to the West Coast Settlements Act we have before the House does not touch this question at all. Evidently the honourable gentleman has not read it. There is no clause in it relieving the tenants. It is merely a Bill for governing the lease; and it is a question of existence, and not rent. These persons are satisfied with their position. We passed a Bill last session of a nearly similar character to this with regard to these same persons, upon whose case the honourable member for Parnell is so very eloquent. I say the Bill of the honourable member for Auckland Central, comparatively speaking, assists no one. In the Land Bill it is proposed to assist the tenants of the Crown, because authority is given to the Crown not to press where the rent is too high. Therefore in this respect it does all that this Bill could do. If the House insists upon this Bill passing before the Government has had time to carefully consider it, it will be doing a work against which I must protest as the greatest mistake that could be committed. In the meantime, the non-passage of the Bill will not affect a single tenant throughout the country; and we have to look at the larger question if we touch the West Coast leases. As I have already said, it is proposed next session to hand the land there back to the Maori owners, and to allow them to deal with it as private persons would, so that we shall not be able to interfere with them. In the meantime, all this cry of relieving persons from oppression and misery is raised under misapprehensions of the nature of the Bill. And I say the House is not justified in passing this Bill unless the Government itself says that it ought to be passed. I think the honourable gentleman should be content with my proposals. I shall be quite willing to allow the Bill to be read a second time, so as to affirm the principle; and I have gone even further than this, for I was asked the other day whether, if a Bill were introduced in another place and put into a proper shape, I would oppose it. I said, Certainly not; but, on the contrary, if it were put in a practical shape I would do all in my power to help it through. When a statement of this kind is made by the Government I do not think that the House should go on with this Bill, under the impression that it is going to do great good.

Sir G. GREY.—I wish to make an explanation as to something the Premier said. He says he has always been in favour of the Bill, but I say that I brought it forward years ago, and he opposed it most bitterly, and had it thrown out.

Sir J. VOGEL.—The Premier says that he is surprised at my action. In reply to this, I have to say to him that, when he offered to take the two Bills of the honourable member for Auckland Central after the two Bills which it has been proposed to go on with, it seemed to me that he was inviting the House to consider these Bills, and my remarks were made on this basis, and the honourable member has no reason to be surprised. It is for me to be surprised.

Colonel FRASER.—The friends of the Otago Central Railway Bill are taking an entirely wrong course in not allowing the Bill of the honourable member for Auckland Central to be proceeded with in proper order. It seems to be a matter of injustice, on the face of it, that two Bills promoted by the supporters of the Government should be taken out of the proper order, and that other Bills should not be allowed to come on. I came here ready to support the Otago Central Railway Bill; but, if these honourable members persist in their conduct towards the honourable member for Auckland Central, I shall feel it my duty to do all I can to prevent that Bill passing, until justice has been done.

Mr. TAYLOR.—In order that the honourable member for Auckland Central may have the opportunity of speaking, I beg to move, That the House do now adjourn.

Sir G. GREY.—I desire to say, in order to give as little trouble as possible, that, if one of my Bills is allowed to be gone on with, I will drop the other until after the Bills which it was arranged to take to-day have been disposed of. I shall be contented if the Fair Rent Bill is brought on now. I desire to say, with regard to the statement of the Premier just now that he had always supported these fair-rent proposals, that I brought it forward several years ago, and upon that occasion I was accused of being a man who would not only do what was quite unfair, but encouraged my fellow-colonists to violate their engagements; and the Premier then said that the language used was justified by my proceedings; and the consequence was that the measure was thrown out. This occurred about eight years ago, I think; and, if this measure had then been adopted; an enormous amount of misery, which I foretold was about to fall on the country, would have been avoided. I have never since had a chance to bring this forward, but now I have the means of doing a vast amount of good, and I believe it is jealousy and nothing more which has prevented my seizing a just opportunity of conferring a great benefit on New Zealand. I have made this offer; and I further say, with regard to the measure for the Otago Central Railway, that I will offer no factious opposition to it: I will simply express my opinion strongly against it. But I declare that, if this injustice is done to me, I shall do my utmost to prevent that bad Bill being carried through the House at all. It is a bad measure, in my belief, and I have a right to prevent a bad measure from passing by every means in my power; and I shall certainly exert myself to carry out my impression with regard to that Bill. I still cannot think that the House will do me the injustice which is proposed to it. Why, the very colleagues of the Premier are opposed to what he has been stating to the House. He knows this perfectly well. I believe the Minister of Lands, who is the most interested in the question, thinks that it is a wrong proceeding. Did the Premier tell the House that? I think he must have led honourable members to think that there was a consensus of opinion on the part of the Ministry with himself. I do trust that this new House will not set the example of what I may call boycotting a fellow-member; because it becomes nothing less. It was with great regret I heard the honourable member for the Taieri say what he said; for he must have known that I was making a large concession on the subject. I myself have not assisted to rob any individual of his rights or do a wrong to any member of this House. I desire that all should have their free and just privileges, and I simply stand up and pray that the same justice may be granted to me, particularly when it is remembered that the question is such a momentous one as it is, and on which the Ministry are divided. I hope the House will feel some pity for me, and determine, notwithstanding any efforts of party, that justice shall be done to myself. Sir, I offer to give up two of these measures in which I am specially interested. I have already given up one of them, because, beneficial as it is, I thought it would cause embarrassment and prolong discussion, and create opposition on the part of some honourable members. Then, I offer to give up another, because its object is partially, although insufficiently, provided for in another Bill—very insufficiently provided for; but, still, in my desire to gain something for the country, I will give it up. This is the same persecution at the hands of the Premier which he has shown throughout this question, and which has followed me for long years. His object is to prevent my doing anything. By the rules of this House, by the Standing Orders, with which I am not well acquainted and am not able to deal with them equally, or use the advantages with regard to them which he can avail himself of, he has for years pursued this course, and is pursuing it now. I hope honourable members will not lend themselves to so great a wrong as is now proposed. I have done my best to give expression not only to my own views, but to those of many others who know what will be my vote. I shall try and bear this as best I can; but, still, I trust and hope. I am under the firm belief that the House will grant me that justice which I have done nothing to forfeit. I contend that what I have offered to do to-day is more than should be expected of me, and the Premier should not have entered on the course he has done.

Mr. PYKE.—The honourable member for Auckland Central talks of "boycotting." Sir, I say there has been nothing but "boycotting" going on all the morning with reference to the Bill with which I am charged. The honourable gentleman asks us for justice to himself; but will he not do justice to others? He says he is willing to let the Otago Central Bill come on when his own has been passed through. Why should it not? If he asks why my Bill should come on and be considered before his, I will answer the question at once. Because his Bill was later in its introduction to the House. The Otago Central Railway Bill was introduced on the 14th October, and the Fair Rent Bill was introduced on the 2nd November; therefore, notwithstanding its position on the Order Paper, my Bill has preceded the Fair Rent Bill. And I have this to say, also: that my Bill has been read a second time. The principle of it has been conceded. When the honourable member for Auckland Central talks about it being a bad Bill, does he know what he is talking about? No, Sir; he is utterly ignorant of the circumstances, or he would not say that. There are hundreds of settlers whose ruin will be effected if this Bill is not passed; they will be driven from their homes, and they will have to join the ranks of the unemployed, and give over their holdings to the moneyed people and capitalists. The honourable member for Auckland Central does not know what he is doing. As to the people who will be affected by this Bill, there are hundreds whose desires are centred entirely on the passing of the Bill, and if it is not carried I declare, before the House and before God, that these people will be ruined—a dastardly thing! The honourable member for Auckland Central calls himself the friend of the unborn millions, and may call himself that. Let him try and do good. I cordially agree with the principle of the Fair Rent Bill, and would do my best to assist him; but I will not consent to a Bill being delayed which has been before the House for the last twelve years, and a Bill of such vast importance as that I am in charge of. I say, again, that if this Bill is not passed the centre of Otago will become a wilderness, and the people will be driven from it.

Colonel Fraser

Mr. SAMUEL.—The honourable member for the Dunstan and the honourable member for Auckland Central are equally emotional, and each ought to be equally moved by the arguments of the other. One or the other ought to give way. If neither will give way, I hope the House will agree to the motion of the honourable member for Sydenham, and adjourn. There is nothing else for it. The House cannot be kept here while two sides are determined each to prevent the other from getting their Bills on.

Sir J. VOGEL.—It is a very difficult position to be placed in between the supporters of two Bills who are so opposed each to the other Bill. Now, in my opinion, in the present state of the colony, it is of great importance to pass the Otago Central Railway Bill. I will do all I can to help its being passed. With regard to the Fair Rent Bill, the arguments of the Premier have not convinced me. Since he spoke I have recollected why he is not bringing down relief in his Bill to the tenants of the West Coast reserves. The question was, whether some half-dozen or more gentlemen should be ruined or not; and I therefore did by Order in Council what was proposed to be done by the Bill last year, which passed its third reading, and then, I think, was thrown out in the Upper House. By Order in Council power is given to the Public Trustee to give relief to the tenants of the West Coast reserves. That is why the Premier does not want to bring down the provisions in this Bill, and therefore, honourable members will see, my arguments are intensified. It is not the question whether this House will give relief; but this power has been given to the Public Trustee—the power to give relief; and, if the West Coast tenants are to have such relief, why should it be withheld from other parts of the country? Although I did not know the gentlemen concerned in the matter, yet I felt that it was exceedingly inconvenient and undesirable that I should have to do with a number of gentlemen who either had to be ruined or I should hold the hands of the Public Trustee against them. The result is that indemnification will, sooner or later, have to be given to the Public Trustee for what has been done. The question was, whether they should be ruined, or the provisions altered on which they had taken their leases. My colleague the Hon. the Minister of Lands had a great number of cases to deal with of this kind; and it is very undesirable, in my opinion, that any Minister should have to consider individual cases. This would, I believe, be a good Bill to put on the Statute Book, and it could be amended next session if necessary. It is a Bill which will carry through the country so much happiness and relief that it is not to be spoken of lightly. And, even if it is to be amended next session, it should be put in force in the meanwhile, so as to give relief to a very great number of persons. I think this Government are just the same as ours, and do not want such patronage as they now have to exercise in individual cases. It is a question whether the Government should exercise their judgment with regard to individuals, or allow those individuals to be ruined. I do hope that the honourable member for the Dunstan and the honourable member for Auckland Central will make some arrangement by which this Fair Rent Bill shall be considered during the afternoon. Would it be possible that their order of priority should be decided by ballot? However, let some understanding be come to by which both Bills can be dealt with.

Mr. SEDDON.—There can be doubt whatever that the honourable member for the Dunstan has a very large influence in this House. First of all, we have the Government consenting to his Bill. Then the leader of the Opposition, Sir Julius Vogel, consents to it, and pleads strongly in its favour. Now, I like consistency. Where was the leader of the Opposition when he was a member of the Stout-Vogel Government? Why did he not then introduce a Bill? Why is it? Sir Robert Stout still says that this is not a desirable measure. I like honourable members to be consistent. If this measure is to have the effect it is said it will have, it should have been passed last session or the session before. I want to know what assurance there is that any company will take up the construction of this railway if we pass this Bill. Has there been any assurance by the movers in this matter that there is some one behind who is willing to take up the same position as the Midland Railway Company, and do the work? The House should have some assurance on that point; otherwise we are passing legislation and trusting to some one to take it up. Are we to pass this Bill hastily? And is the time of two or three sessions to be taken up in rectifying mistakes that have been made, the same as in the case of the Midland Railway? That is the point that must be taken into consideration. Is there any objection to taking the Fair Rent Bill of the honourable member for Auckland Central and the Otago Central Bill as well? If there is any objection to that course, if I were not incurring the ire of the honourable member for the Bay of Islands, I would suggest that these honourable members who have each a little Bill, and who each wish their little Bills to have precedence, should toss up coins as to whether they should take the Fair Rent Bill, the Kawakawa Railway Bill, or the Otago Central Bill. My honourable friend the member for the Bay of Islands has no objection to toss. If so, I hope he will be brought under the lashes of his own Act—the Gaming and Lotteries Act.

Mr. HOBBS.—I did not say so.

Mr. SEDDON.—Well, if the honourable gentleman declines to toss, let him have a “shake in the hat” or draw cuts.

Motion for adjournment of the House negatived.

Mr. SPEAKER.—Am I to understand that the honourable member for Auckland Central wishes to withdraw his motion regarding the Freehold Tenure Acquisition Bill?

Sir G. GREY.—My proposal is to withdraw two Bills, and then ask that my Fair Rent Bill should be allowed to go on in its turn. Why the Bill of the honourable member for the Bay of Islands should be put before mine I cannot conceive. There could be no excuse for that. I ask that my Bill—my Fair Rent Bill—shall come before the Otago Central Railway Bill. In that case I will do my best to get the business on. I wish to be allowed to bring the Fair Rent Bill on first.

The House divided on the question, “That the words ‘Fair Rent Bill’ be inserted before the words ‘Kamo and Kawakawa Railways Connection and Construction Bill and the Otago Central Railway Extension and Construction Bill.’”

AYES, 21.

Blake	McKenzie, J.	Taylor
Cadman	Moat	Turnbull
Duncan	Monk	Vogel
Feldwick	Newman	Whyte.
Grey	Peacock	Tellers.
Grimmond	Reeves, W. P.	Seddon
Hodgkinson	Steward, W. J.	Thompson, T.
Hutchison

NOES, 35.

Allen	Hamlin	Parata
Anderson	Hislop	Pearson
Atkinson	Hobbs	Pyke
Barron	Izard	Rhodes
Beetham	Jackson	Ross
Bruce	Joyce	Samuel
Buxton	Lance	Taiwhanga
Carroll	Levestam	Tanner
Cowan	Mackenzie, M.	Valentine.
Fergus	Mills	Tellers.
Fisher	O'Connor	Fish
Fulton	Ormond	McGregor.

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Guinness	Buchanan
Marchant	Graham
Richardson, G. F.	Stewart, W. D.

Majority against, 15.

Amendment lost.

Mr. Seddon

Mr. SEDDON.—Sir, I was a teller for the “Ayes.” I found in the lobby the honourable member for Parnell, and his name is not on the division-list. He did not come past the tellers, but he was in the lobby.

Mr. SPEAKER.—Will the Serjeant-at-Arms ask the honourable member for Parnell to come in and give an account of why he did not come through the lobby past the tellers?

Mr. MOSS entered the chamber.

Mr. SPEAKER.—Was the honourable member for Parnell in the House when the question was put?

Mr. MOSS.—I was in the lobby when the division was taken, but I was not in the House when the question was put.

Mr. SPEAKER.—In that case the honourable gentleman will not be allowed to vote.

Mr. MOSS.—I was very anxious to vote on the question, and I managed to get in the lobby, but it was after the question was put. When I came to reflect that I was not in the House when the division was called for, I determined that I had no right to vote; therefore I did not vote.

Mr. SPEAKER.—The honourable member cannot vote if he was not in the House when the question was put. I have no doubt the honourable member himself will see that he has committed an impropriety in getting into the division-lobby when he was not in the House when the doors were locked; but, as the honourable gentleman made no attempt to vote, I presume that, under the circumstances, the House will pass over the offence.

Resolved, “That the orders of the day preceding the Kamo and Kawakawa Railways Connection and Construction Bill and the Otago Central Railway Extension and Construction Bill be postponed, in order that the House may proceed with the consideration of those Bills; and that the Fair Rent Bill be also considered after the Otago Central Railway Extension and Construction Bill.”

OTAGO CENTRAL RAILWAY EXTENSION AND CONSTRUCTION BILL.

Mr. PYKE.—I beg to move, Sir, That you do now leave the chair, in order that the House may go into Committee on the Otago Central Railway Extension and Construction Bill.

Sir G. GREY.—I am afraid that that will give rise to some short discussion. I wanted to say a few words, but do not wish to detain the House. But, this being a case of taking land for the purpose of constructing a railway, I simply wish to say that, if I had the power to prevent that being done, I should certainly do so. I desire to put on record my protest against the passage of this Bill.

Mr. J. MCKENZIE.—I wish to say that I intend to move, as an amendment, That the Bill be committed this day six months; and I intend to give my reasons for so moving.

The House adjourned from one o'clock to half-past two o'clock.

HOUSE RESUMED.

Mr. SPEAKER resumed the chair at half-past two o'clock.

Mr. J. McKENZIE.—Sir, I feel it my duty on the present occasion to move the amendment that I gave notice of before the House adjourned: That this Bill be committed this day six months. I entirely disapprove of this measure. I think that the honourable member for the Dunstan, who has introduced this Bill, seems to be under the impression that I am opposed to the construction of this railway. I am nothing of the sort. I am not opposed to it up to a certain point; and in my district during the election I advocated its construction—that is, from Middlemarch to the Taieri Lake or the Maniototo Plains; but I have no hesitation in saying that the railway should not go beyond that for many years to come. I am quite prepared to support the construction of the railway up to the point named; but to take it further would, in the present condition of the colony, be, in my opinion, madness. I know something about the country where this railway is to be made, and my opinion is that the railway should never have been constructed by the route it has been—that is, by the Taieri River. It should have gone through the Shag Valley to the Maniototo Plains; and the money that has been spent on it up to the present time to make the railway through the Gorge to Middlemarch would have made the line as far as the Taieri Lake. I should have no hesitation in saying, further, that, in the interests of settlers, it is necessary that the railway should be made up to that point. But the honourable member commences at the Taieri Lake, thus leaving a gap of twenty-five miles. In the first place, we are told by the Premier that the Government can only make it as far as Middlemarch, and the distance between Middlemarch and the Taieri Lake is twenty-five miles; and I suppose the honourable member for the Dunstan means to leave the Government to construct that portion themselves, because the Bill proposes to commence at the Taieri Lake and go on to Lake Wanaka, leaving a gap of twenty-five miles. That will take a considerable sum of money to make, and it will be found that the colony will have to make a line over that gap of twenty-five miles in order to connect the railway between Middlemarch and Taieri Lake; and I am sure that everybody who knows anything at all about the country will know that the railway will be of no use till this connection is made. Now, what I object to in this Bill is, first, that there is no provision made for the connection, as I have stated. Next, I object to the land-concessions to be granted under this Bill, and I ask the House to consider the responsibility that is thrown on their shoulders at the present time in supporting a Bill which is to give away so much of the Crown lands of the colony. If this concession is made the railway company would naturally take the valleys and leave the hill-tops, and those who are pastoral tenants at the present time would very likely, at the end of their leases, have to deal with one proprietor for the low-lying land and another for the high-country land. I think that the Bill ought to have gone before the Waste Lands Committee, and that evidence should have been taken on this particular subject: how far it would affect the Crown lands in Otago, and also how far we should go in the direction of giving away a very large portion of our estate. It is not my intention to detain the House long, but I wish simply to point out that my main objection to the Bill refers to the concessions of land to be given. And, Sir, I think that every member of the House should consider that too. In the case of the Manawatu Railway the company was granted large concessions of land to construct the railway. We absolutely gave to the Manawatu Company sufficient lands and concessions to make a railway to benefit their own lands; and that is exactly what we are asked to do on the present occasion. I will just give to the House an idea of what has been done in connection with the Manawatu Railway Company. According to a return I have got, there were 210,502 acres given to the company, and that was valued at £96,571 in the contract. Let us see what the company valued that land at when they wanted to raise money in London. They stated to the persons from whom they wished to borrow money that the value of the land was £458,151. Then there was a printed circular issued to persons whom they wished to invest in their bonds in London, and in it they state that they have got land reclaimed on the beach in Wellington valued at £90,000, and other concessions, amounting to £48,000 in the way of partly-constructed railways and material, and bridges £6,000, making a total of £597,151, which they have got for the construction of the Manawatu Railway, according to their own showing. And they say there are 65,000 acres which they yet claim. In the contract that land is valued at £29,000; but in London the value is put down at £130,000. These land-concessions grew in value £100,000 between the time of leaving New Zealand and the time that they reached London. I find that the subscribed capital of the company was only half a million of money; and they have actually got, according to their own showing in their printed circular—issued by themselves to the people of England when they wanted to borrow money—concessions from the colony worth £597,151. That is a sum of money sufficient to make the railway and to leave a balance of over £97,000. Now, knowing and seeing, as we must do, that this has been done in the past, what may we not expect in the future! If we go on with this sort of thing, it simply means that we are going to ruin the colony; and I protest most strongly against land being given for the making of railways. It would be far better that the colony should borrow the money at any price, and make the railway itself, instead of giving away large tracts of land to companies in this manner. As I said before, I am not opposed to the construction of the Otago Central Railway up to the Taieri Lake, and I am quite prepared to support a vote for that at any time the Government brings it down; but I am opposed to making a line by land-concessions. Another objection is this: The honourable gentleman has not made provision for bridging this gap of twenty-five miles. I say, if the Bill is worth anything, seeing that the support of the Government has been given to the honourable member for the Dunstan in the matter, the Government ought to take upon themselves the responsibility for the Bill. I say, Sir, it is trifling with the House when the Government allow a private member to come before the House and bring a Bill before it giving away such a large area of Crown lands. What does it mean? It means that, at some future day, when the evils arising out of this Bill are pointed out in this House, the Premier will get up and say, "I did not do it; the House did it." He wants to shirk the responsibility for this measure. I say, if the Government believe in it—and that they do believe in it is shown by the assistance they have given to the honourable member for the Dunstan—they should take the responsibility for it upon themselves and make it a Government measure. I am not going to detain the House any longer; but I intend to press my motion, That the House commit the Bill this day six months, for the reasons I have just stated, and to lodge my protest against the measure.

Mr. PYKE.—I quite concede the right of the honourable member for Waihemo to oppose this Bill; but he has uttered two or three fallacies, which I will briefly refer to. In the first place, he spoke about the gap between the Taieri Lake and Middlemarch. Well, it may be within his recollection that the late Ministry insisted upon their right to make the railway up to the Taieri Lake, and therefore it is not for me to take upon myself the responsibility of proposing that it should be made by the company any farther. I am quite willing to take it to Middlemarch; but I desired to avoid anything that was likely to create opposition. I would remind the honourable member that when the matter was first dealt with in this House a Select Committee was appointed and sat to determine between seven different routes to the interior, and the Strath-Taieri route was unanimously selected. Amongst the witnesses examined before the Committee was Sir Dillon Bell, whose property is in Shag Valley, and he strongly recommended the Strath-Taieri route as the best, much to his own detriment. There were many who thought then that the Shag Valley route would be preferable in some respects; and, so far as the construction of the first part of the line is concerned, I am pretty much of the same opinion; but he will have the goodness to remember that the point at which the line is to stop is the Taieri Lake, and that is twenty-five miles from Middlemarch. I propose to stop there, and it is possible that the honourable member for Waihemo's wishes may yet be carried into effect, and the line continued to Dunback also. I do not interfere with that, and therefore I hope to disarm all opposition.

Mr. J. McKenzie

Mr. J. McKENZIE.—We do not want it at Dunback.

Mr. PYKE.—Well, the honourable member has said that it ought to have been taken that way. But he will have the goodness to remember this: that it was not I who insisted that it should go by this direction, but that it was decided by a Select Committee of this House that it should go by way of Strath-Taieri, and not by way of Shag Valley. This House came to the same decision, and the Bill afterwards went to the Legislative Council. A Select Committee there considered it, and they came to the same decision also as to the route. My proposal is to take up the railway at the point where there is no opposition, and I think that should disarm my honourable friend. Now, with regard to the argument used as to giving up Crown lands, what did he say? He said that when the Manawatu lands were given up they were of very low value, but when placed on the London market their value was much increased. Is not that the necessary sequence to making the railway? Does it not show the desirability of railways? I know that this land, which at the present time is not worth £5,000 a year, will, by making the railway, become worth £50,000 a year. It is simply a case of cause and effect.

Mr. J. McKENZIE.—Then the colony ought to do it.

Mr. PYKE.—The colony will not do it; it is of no use talking about that. The making of the railway enhances the value of the land. That accounts for the difference between the price of the land in the London market and its value in the colony. Before the line was commenced the gap of twenty-five miles could be easily got rid of. If it is the will of the House I would agree to the amendment; but I prefer to have it to the Taieri Lake, so that it may go to Dunback or Ngapara, and so leave that open to be settled afterwards. I trust that no further opposition in the matter will be offered, and I will ask my friends not to talk, but simply to vote.

The House divided on the question, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question."

AYES, 40.

Allen	Hamlin	Pyke
Atkinson	Hobbs	Reeves, W. P.
Barron	Jackson	Richardson, E.
Beetham	Jones	Ross
Blake	Kelly	Steward, W. J.
Bruce	Kerr	Tanner
Buchanan	Lance	Taylor
Buxton	Levestam	Turnbull
Cowan	Mackenzie, M.	Vogel
Dodson	Marchant	Wilson.
Feldwick	McGregor
Fergus	Moss	Tellers.
Fisher	O'Connor	Anderson
Graham	Pearson	Fitchett.

NOES, 5.

Cadman	Tellers.
Grey	Duncan
Newman.	McKenzie, J.

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Perceval	Thompson, T.
Seymour	Peacock
Stewart, W. D.	Richardson, G. F.
Valentine	Hislop
Ward.	Mitchelson.

Majority for, 35.

Amendment negatived, and Bill committed.

IN COMMITTEE.

* New clause.

Mr. SEDDON moved the following new clause:—

"No land that shall be, in the opinion of the Governor, required for machine, business, or residence sites, or for the construction of dams or reservoirs, races thereon, or tunnels thereunder, shall be deemed to be Crown lands under this Act."

The Committee divided on the question, "That the new clause be read a second time."

AYES, 13.

Blake	Hutchison	Rhodes.
Feldwick	McKenzie, J.
Fitchett	Mont	Tellers.
Fraser	O'Connor	Duncan
Grey	Parata	Seddon.

NOES, 32.

Allen	Fisher	Ross
Anderson	Graham	Steward, W. J.
Atkinson	Hobbs	Taiwhanga
Beetham	Jackson	Tanner
Bruce	Kelly	Taylor
Buxton	Lance	Thompson, R.
Cadman	Larnach	Turnbull
Carroll	Mackenzie, M.	Vogel.
Cowan	McGregor	Tellers.
Dodson	Pyke	Barron
Fergus	Reeves, W. P.	Pearson.

Majority against, 19.

Clause negatived.

Bill reported to the House, and read a third time.

On the question, That the title be agreed to,

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON said,—I exceedingly regret that you, Sir, did not consider it necessary that this Bill should be referred to the Waste Lands Committee, for at present there are very serious defects in it, and certainly clause 7 will have, in another place, to be entirely remodelled. I think, also, that a few words will have to be added to the amendment which I made in subsection (8) of section 8. The amendment then made was in these words: "or which, in the opinion of the Government, may be required for mining purposes." I think the following words ought to be added to that: "as interpreted by 'The Mines Act, 1886.'"

Mr. SPEAKER.—I intimated to the Hon. the Minister of Lands, when he drew my attention to the circumstance of the Bill not having been referred to the Waste Lands Committee, that it would be quite competent for him to move that the Bill should be referred to the Waste Lands Committee before it was committed to a Committee of the whole House; and he declined or omitted to do so. I had no desire to keep the Bill from being referred to the Waste Lands Committee.

Mr. CADMAN.—I only desire to say that, where matters connected with the gold-mining industry crop up in Bills which come before this House, it would be well that they should be referred to the Goldfields Committee. The arguments used in the House on goldfields matters are unintelligible to almost three-fourths of the members of this House, and can scarcely be understood except by members who are connected with the mining industry, or have spent portions of their lives in mining districts. Arguments about tail-races and sludge-channels are not understood here, and ought to be brought before the Goldfields Committee, where we have more time to argue such matters in detail, and where there are many experts. I am sure if that course were pursued it would tend to much better legislation.

Mr. COWAN.—I desire to say that a Bill of a similar kind was considered by the Waste Lands Committee of last Parliament. I was a member of that Committee; and now I notice that a peculiarity in that Bill, in subsection (2) of clause 7, is still continued in this Bill, notwithstanding the very adverse evidence which the Surveyor-General gave with regard to it—that is, the peculiar shape of the blocks of land. It was in that Bill provided that each of these blocks should have a mile frontage to the railway and a depth of fifteen miles. The Surveyor-General was asked his opinion as to the shape of the blocks, and he said that the proposal was perfectly preposterous, and that if the Bill were carried at all it must be altered in this respect. I am glad the Minister of Lands has had his attention drawn to this peculiar clause, and I hope, in another place, he will have the matter rectified.

Sir G. GREY.—I wish to say, before the Bill finally quits this House, that I feel confident it will inflict a very great blow indeed on the prosperity of the colony. The honourable gentleman in charge of the Bill stated this morning that I had apparently misunderstood him, and that there was a necessity to provide labour for the people of the colony. I say that no necessity of that kind justifies a Bill of this sort; because arrangements might have been made by which the Government could have carried on the work, and have given labour to those who want it, without robbing the people of their land. I believe that all the legislation of this kind passed this session has been in a retrograde direction, and has carried us back to the point from which we thought we had finally departed. I endeavoured on several occasions, by means of divisions, to prevent the Bill from being carried on; but, of course, my efforts were of no avail, and I shall always regret that I was present at the passing of a measure which, I am satisfied, strikes a blow at the whole of the inhabitants of Otago, and especially at the labouring-classes. I believe they are robbed of land absolutely necessary for their welfare and for the welfare of their descendants; and, if this Bill passes in another place, a very bad future lies before the people of this country and those who come after them.

Mr. SEDDON.—I desire to put on record this fact: that to-day the Otago Central Railway Bill has passed, and I will undertake to say that honourable members are fully cognisant of the fact that there are some very serious defects in it, defects just the same as those which exist in the East and West Coast Railway Act of 1884, and which led the colony into such serious difficulties. I believe that, if this Bill is passed by the other branch of the Legislature as it stands now, matters will be left in exactly the same position; and I hold the Government responsible for the consequences. The Minister of Mines himself admitted that such would be the case, for he pointed out that this Bill in no way provides for what is indispensable to the mining industry. I should have thought that the honourable member for the Dunstan, who is in charge of the Bill, would have preferred to protect the mining industry; but, instead of doing that, he hands over all this power to a company in a way which will be to the detriment of the mining industry, as he has refused to vote for a proposal to put the matter right, and which was in accordance with the advice of the Crown Law Officers. I cannot help thinking that we are doing what is not correct to those who live in that part of the colony by allowing the Bill to pass as it is, especially after the views expressed by the honourable member for Waihemo. He has told us that all the streams running through this land are auriferous, and at no distant date will give occupation to a large mining population. However, there is another place to which the Bill has to go, and I say the responsibility rests with the Government to take steps in that other place to have the defects in the Bill remedied. They may be remedied in two ways: by the Legislative Council insisting upon the amendment which has been negatived here, or by negativing the Bill altogether, which perhaps will be the most preferable course.

Major ATKINSON.—I would point out that we are not now considering the compact, but a Bill, and nothing can be clearer than the advantages laid down in the Bill. With regard to the mining industry, it must be the duty of any Government, after the experience we have had with regard to the Midland Railway contract, to make proper provision for protecting the mining industry, and the honourable gentleman may depend upon it that the Government will take great care in that matter.

Mr. J. MCKENZIE.—I wish to enter my protest against the passing of this Bill; and I think that the amendment moved by the honourable member for Kumara was a very fair one. I know the streams that run through this land, and there is not the slightest doubt that they are more or less auriferous, and will be wanted for tailings and so forth hereafter. I cannot help thinking that there is some secret, underhand work in connection with the passing of this Bill which is unknown to members of this House. So I wish once more to enter my protest against the Bill.

Mr. FERGUS.—I regret, in the first place, that a discussion has arisen on the title of the Bill. If honourable gentlemen had any objections to urge against the passing of this measure, they should have urged them on the second reading, and not now. In the second place, I deprecate the casting of any insinuations such as have been thrown out by the honourable member for Waihemo—that there has been underhand work in connection with the Bill. I deny such an insinuation altogether. I think that those who have supported this Bill are just as much above any underhand work as the honourable member for Waihemo himself is. I have supported the honourable member for the Dunstan in the matter, not because I altogether approve of the measure, but because I see it is the only way in which we can get a large and important work constructed in the Province of Otago. I believe this Bill will very considerably ease the burdens on the colony in future. I believe it is essential to the well-being of the whole of the interior of Otago, and especially to the mining interests, that this work should be proceeded with at an early date; and I see no prospect of the Government being able to proceed with it at an early date. I hope, therefore, that the House will give a very speedy decision on the matter. If the work is delayed much longer we shall be unable to do it at all.

Mr. DUNCAN.—It seems to me that perhaps the exigencies of the time have caused, to some extent, the passing of this Bill. I cannot help thinking that the honourable member for the Dunstan was keeping facts from the Committee which he ought to have made known as to the nature of this country through which this railway is to pass. He is as well acquainted with it as I am, and he must know that every flat and gully of it is of an auriferous character. I am well aware of this fact, through the knowledge gained by personal experience, and I have been in almost every gully and creek of this part. I cannot understand how the honourable gentleman could say that there is no gold in that country. In fact, wiser men than the honourable gentleman could not tell that. I say most certainly there is gold in every creek, and in many of the terraces and gullies. I think it is a pity that a Bill like this should be put through the House at the end of a session, when we are just on the eve of leaving for our homes. I should have a good deal to say on this Bill, but I do not wish to take up the time of the House. I am glad that we got the amendment into the Bill that we did; but I should have liked to see the Bill still further amended by more clearly defining what are "gold-workings." I think if the honourable member for Wakatipu had read the Bill he would have seen that, in its original shape, the mining interest was not sufficiently protected.

Sir G. Grey

Mr. FERGUS.—I may say that I went through the Bill very carefully, and was quite satisfied that it provided for the protection of mining. I went through the Bill very carefully with the honourable member for the Dunstan and arranged the matter, and I was perfectly satisfied that the measure made every protection for mining, or I should have most certainly given it my most strenuous opposition.

Mr. DUNCAN.—If the honourable member takes the trouble to read the Bill he will see that, without the amendment we have put in the Bill, it would have been in the power of the railway company to shut up mining in the whole of the district—that is, if the Bill had been passed as it was brought in. I am quite sure of that. I desire, however, to record my protest against the passing of the Bill.

Title agreed to.

FAIR RENT BILL.

Sir G. GREY.—I have to move, That the Fair Rent Bill be now read a second time. The name of the Bill sufficiently declares its object, which is to relieve a large number of inhabitants of New Zealand from the burdens under which they are at present sinking. It provides a perfectly equitable machinery for adjusting those burdens in a fair manner. It will be inexpensive in its operation; it is perfectly simple in its form: and I do not believe it would be possible to provide any measure more likely to restore prosperity in a multitude of homes throughout the Colony of New Zealand than the measure I hold in my hand. I need not occupy the House by making any lengthy remarks on the Bill, because its provisions are so perfectly clear that any explanation of them is altogether unnecessary. One amendment is suggested to me—namely, as to the constitution of the Court which is to hear the cases on which the future of this country depends. That, Sir, may be of importance; but, nevertheless, if a Judge was available, I think it would have been much better to have a judicial decision, and in that manner to follow more closely the laws now prevailing in Great Britain, of which this is almost a copy.

Mr. COWAN.—I have much pleasure in rising to support this Bill. This is one of immense importance, and should be passed during this session of Parliament. I shall be very brief in the remarks I have to make. The principle on which this Bill is based is not a new one. It has been in existence in Scotland for hundreds of years, and it has given immense satisfaction. The machinery there is known as the Fairs Court, under which rentals of agricultural lands are fixed from time to time according to the value of produce for the time being. And I take it to be the principle at the bottom of this Bill, the necessity of which is forced upon us by the adverse circumstances through which our colony has been passing for several years now; and these circumstances will still continue, and will increase in urgency, unless an increase of the value of our products takes place: until that increase takes place, depend upon it, the bad times we are passing through will continue. The result of these bad times is known to all private landholders in the country; and the same results which private landlords have had forced upon them are now being felt by the Crown. The other day I stated that the Crown tenants in arrear in March of this year were in arrears to the extent of £28,000 under the deferred-payment and perpetual-lease system. Now, what I wish to point out to the House is this: that it is impossible for the Crown to expect the payment of a large portion of those arrears so long as bad times continue. Moreover, there is necessity for some such Court as is provided for in this Bill, to take into consideration not only this question of arrears, but also the fixing of future rentals. I believe the only true principle of fixing these rentals is to do it upon the basis of the value of produce out of the land for the time being. My opinion is that the Court proposed to be established by this Bill is of too expensive a character; and when the Bill is in Committee I will endeavour to have this Court changed from what is proposed in this Bill to that of a Resident Magistrate and two assessors, which, I believe, will be the cheapest form of Court that we could make use of. The Resident Magistrates living in localities from one end of the colony to another will have the local information that is necessary, and these Resident Magistrates can nominate as assessors gentlemen in whom the whole locality will have confidence as to their knowledge of such matters. Another alteration which I would suggest in Committee is in regard to the clause which provides that the tenant who feels that he has a grievance in respect to his rent being excessive should be relieved. The same privilege ought to be granted to the landlord, who feels that his rent is not sufficient. I think the same privilege ought to be given to the landlord as is given to the tenant in this clause. There are a few other alterations in the Bill which I will suggest in Committee, with the view of making this Bill workable in the direction of giving relief to Crown tenants; and I trust that this House will give its unanimous assent to it.

Mr. TAYLOR.—I am astonished to see the thinness of this House when an important measure like this is under discussion, when we have been dealing all the afternoon and morning in the direction of looking not after the interests of the masses, but after the interests of the capitalists; and I should not be doing my duty, at any rate, while I have a seat in this House, if I did not speak on this subject. Although I may sometimes disagree with the honourable member for Auckland Central, I am prepared to say this: that, above all men in the House, I believe he is trying to benefit the great bulk of the people of this colony. Possibly, by-and-by I shall be dealt with in the same manner as the honourable gentleman has been dealt with because I take an interest in the people of the colony. I want nothing. My sympathies are distinctly with the masses of the people, and during the few years I have got left I shall advocate their interests so long as I am here. I shall certainly support the honourable member for Auckland Central in every measure, especially a measure like this, calculated not only to relieve one or two individuals, but hundreds in this colony. And I cannot for one moment understand the Premier. I put a question distinctly last session when the honourable gentleman was in opposition. I asked the Premier and the late Minister of Lands a question with reference to the appointment of a Board of Reviewers. The question I put was this: "Am I to understand that the Premier and the late Minister of Lands are in favour of appointing a Board of Reviewers not only to review rents, but to review the interest paid on mortgages, and other things?" And what did the Minister say? He said, distinctly, "Yes"—he was in favour of a Board of Reviewers in that direction; and I cannot understand for my life why this Bill, which, in my opinion at any rate, will do a great deal of good to a large number of suffering people in this country—

Mr. TURNBULL.—Then let us get at it as soon as we can.

Mr. TAYLOR.—I am astonished at the honourable member for Timaru. I shall have to put him, I am sorry to say, in the category of those who are elected here to do one thing and who do another.

Hon. MEMBERS.—No.

Mr. TAYLOR.—I will withdraw that. The honourable gentleman must know that this Bill is a most beneficent one.

Mr. TURNBULL.—I am afraid you will lose it; the time is getting short.

Mr. TAYLOR.—I do protest against this way of burking the question. What have we heard to-day? We have seen members getting up in order to burke the Bill of the honourable member for Auckland Central; but his mouth is not to be closed. He is like myself: he stands upon a sure and solid foundation—that is, the interests of the people of the colony; and so long as he stands upon that he will always have my vote and sympathy. And I will guarantee this: that when I go back to my constituents they will never complain of my supporting measures brought forward by the honourable member for Auckland Central in the interests of the people at large.

Mr. M. J. S. MACKENZIE.—I wish to say, while supporting the Bill—and I do so very cordially—that I recognise that this is a serious step which is about to be taken. It is a Bill which should be treated very seriously, because it proposes to disturb contracts entered into between the Crown and its tenants. Under ordinary circumstances I should hesitate to support such a Bill; but I recognise that the circumstances are not of an ordinary kind. In the first place, it appears on the face of it absurd that, while all over the world landlords are reviewing the terms on which they stand with regard to their tenants, the Crown alone should be excluded from the privilege of doing so—that the tenants of the Crown in this or in any other of the colonies should be the only persons excluded from the privilege of a review of contracts entered into under what then appeared favourable circumstances. I feel, however, that the circumstances are not ordinary, because the tenants of the Crown—and I am alluding mostly, all through, to the small tenants of the Crown—entered into contracts at a time when the conditions of trade in this country were subject to an unprecedented inflation—an inflation that arose out of circumstances that cannot possibly be expected to occur again; an inflation that was the consequence of two sources of wealth coming into this country—namely, an increase in the price of our produce in 1871–72, and the extraordinary quantity of borrowed money that, under the public-works policy, poured in at the same period. The two circumstances together caused this inflation, and the tenants took lands at prices that entailed rents quite impossible for them to pay. If I could see any other way of relieving them of their difficulties I would not support a Bill containing these provisions; but I can see no other way of doing it. The Bill appears to me to be a fair one, and so long as a fair rent is all that is wanted I think no person can possibly object to it. It may be that the composition of the Court should be altered. Perhaps the Surveyor-General and two Magistrates should constitute the Court, instead of a Judge of the Supreme Court. I think, probably, that section 8 will have to be struck out; but, beyond such alterations, I think the Bill is a reasonable and fair one; and I support it with a great deal of pleasure, believing that it will do good to the country.

Mr. MARCHANT.—I also have very great pleasure in supporting this Bill, in the interest of the tenants on Native reserves. Many of these unfortunate people are in a very sad condition indeed.

Major ATKINSON.—But this Bill will not touch that class of tenants.

Mr. MARCHANT.—I intend to get it altered in Committee so as to include them.

Major ATKINSON.—Unfortunately, I think there will be no chance of that.

Mr. MARCHANT.—If this is the ruling of the Government, I have very little more to say on the subject, except that the Bill goes partly in the direction in which I should like to see it go. I am sorry to see that there will be no time to so alter the Bill as that its provisions may apply to the class of tenants to whom I have referred.

Mr. CADMAN.—I sincerely regret the position which this Bill has been allowed to drift into this session. It appears to me to be a sort of forlorn-hope altogether, and, even though it passed its second reading now, it cannot become law this session. Last session the Premier spoke of the necessity of relieving some of the settlers in his district; but, seeing the apathy which he evinces now he is in power, I can only say that the honourable gentleman does not seem to me to carry out the promises he has made many times on the floor of this House. One honourable gentleman told us of tenants paying as much as 12s. and 14s. an acre as rent on land worth £20 per acre, which it was utterly impossible for them to pay in these depressed times. I may say that in a portion of my own district men are paying rent to the Crown of 1s. 6d. an acre for land which is not worth 5s. an acre for the fee-simple. It is time that the Government look'd seriously into this matter, if they wish people to remain on the land. If the Government enforce these rents, it simply means that people must leave the land. Our object is to maintain the people on the land; and in order to carry out this we must now be prepared to see the rents reduced. I hope that the Government will next session deal with the matter seriously, or else offer facilities to the honourable member for Auckland Central to do what he can for the suffering tenants.

Mr. Taylor

Major ATKINSON.—I shall be very glad to support the second reading of this Bill, because I think the principle of it is a very right one. I have said that two or three times before, but, as there is a debate on the subject now, I may repeat it. The Government, as the House well knows, has so much work to do that it is impossible to turn its attention to this Bill at this period of the session and pass it in a way which they would think satisfactory. The Bill as it stands, in my opinion, is quite unworkable, and it is quite impossible to pass it. Speaking with a sense of responsibility and not with the freedom of an honourable member who has nothing to do but get political capital out of it—I am not referring to the honourable member for Auckland Central; I am referring to other honourable members—I say that you would do nothing satisfactory with this Bill; it is an utterly unworkable measure. I have given the matter some little thought, and I am not speaking egotistically, but I venture to say that I could give instructions for the drafting of a much more satisfactory Bill than this, and one which would be really workable; but it is out of my power at this period of the session. If you take the number of cases, you will see that it is simply ridiculous to talk of one Court dealing with this matter. Two Courts, at any rate, would be needed; and I doubt very much whether three could do the work. Think of the large number of tenants. What are we to do with the tenants of the lands of the Maoris? As my honourable friend has pointed out, they are quasi-Government tenants. If we were to propose to give these relief, we know that the Maoris would be up, and that all the friends of the Maoris would be up, and would say, "You are robbing the Maoris and favouring the Europeans." Any one who knows anything about it knows that to relieve them would be merely an act of justice; but it is quite impossible to get it. Why? Because of the strong feeling in this House with regard to this question of ownership, and also because of the resistance which would be offered by the friends of the Natives on the ground that we should be doing an injustice to the Natives. What I want to say to the honourable gentleman is this: I shall be very glad to give him the second reading of this Bill so far as I can; it was through my action that the honourable gentleman had the chance offered him of having the Bill read a second time this day. The House was evidently not disposed to deal with it; but the Government withdrew all opposition to the Bill, and it was allowed to come in now after having been defeated by a considerable majority. The honourable gentleman is under the impression—I am sorry that he is so incapable of reading character, but the honourable gentleman is under the impression that out of jealousy I am refusing him this Bill; that I want the honour of it. I will say publicly what I am prepared to do. I am prepared to get a Bill which I think will be workable—speaking with the responsibility which I have—prepared during the recess dealing with this matter, and shall be happy to hand it over to the honourable gentleman, and will assist him to pass it through next session, so that his name will then be connected with it, and not mine. I can never consent to a Bill going through which I am certain will not effect the object in view. If the honourable gentleman likes to work the Bill himself entirely, well and good; I will not interfere: but, when it comes up next session, if I see it is not satisfactory I shall have to point this out to the House, for I can never consent to let a Bill of this kind go into Committee and trust to Committee amendments to get it put right. I shall have very great pleasure in supporting the second reading of the Bill, as I have already said. I would point out again, however, that the relief granted cannot be very much during the next few months. The Government have undertaken to put a clause into their Land Bill—if there is not authority to deal with the matter otherwise—providing that no person shall be pressed for his rent during the few months between this and the next session; and the House can then deal with the whole matter in a thorough way, and in such a way that it may be proud of the work when it is done. I do hope the honourable gentleman will be contented with this—that he will take the second reading; and then I shall be willing and happy to assist him in passing a fair Bill next session.

Sir J. VOGEL.—Does the honourable gentleman propose that there shall be no rent collected during the next six months?

Major ATKINSON.—All I proposed to do is that, in those cases where it is shown to the satisfaction of the Government that there is undoubted hardship, I will see that there shall not be pressure put on those persons.

Sir G. GREY.—Sir, I am anxious to reply to some of the statements that have been made in reference to this Bill. The Premier was good enough to state that I was indebted to him for having had an opportunity given me of bringing forward this Bill for the second reading. On that I desire to remark that I really think the honourable gentleman tried to prevent me from having that opportunity. An examination of the Order Paper will show that his motion expressly excluded my Bill from an opportunity of getting a second reading, and it was only by an amendment of mine which the House indulged me by entertaining that I was enabled to move the second reading. The Premier also said in the course of the discussion that he had always been in favour of this measure. Now, that I deny; and I am anxious to trace the history of this Bill and show what it had its origin in. It will be found that in the year 1882 I brought forward a Bill absolutely identical in wording to this, the Deferred-payment Settlers' Relief Bill. On that occasion a very animated debate took place in this House, and very strong language was used in regard to myself for having brought such a Bill forward. The Bill came on for its second reading on the 6th of July, and this language was used in regard to my proposal:—

"It was a temptation to people to repudiate their bargains. That was the true purport of the Bill. The spirit of self-reliance was broken down amongst many of the people, and this Bill would tend to break it down still more. It would destroy all independence of character. . . . He was sorry to have to say that the Bill was totally unworthy of the high reputation of the honourable member for Auckland East. It would tempt men to become dishonest and servile. . . . The time of the House and the country should not be taken up in considering the Bill. The Government should honestly and fearlessly put their foot down and not allow it to pass."

That was the language on that occasion of one honourable member. The present Premier then said, "He was quite satisfied that the remedy contained in this Bill would not be the one the House would adopt." He agreed with the honourable member from whose remarks I have just quoted, and added that "it would sap the independence of the people, and render government impossible." The honourable gentleman also said, "He himself thought that the principles of the Bill were quite inadmissible, as far as he understood it." Well, Sir, the Premier can hardly be said, therefore, to have been always in favour of this measure. The then Minister of Lands, Mr. Rolleston, who had specially to deal with measures relating to lands, spoke as follows:—

"He would say that the proposals contained in the Bill were not at all such as it would be right for the House to enact. . . . He thought . . . that the manner in which it proposed to deal with the question would not be admissible."

I then stood in the House almost in a friendless position; but one honourable gentleman came to the rescue, whose kindly face and manner have often encouraged me when I have been greatly depressed. He used this language, some of which is exactly the same as the language that has been used to-day:—

"Some speakers have argued that the introduction of the Bill was a step which should not have been taken by a private member; but it was pretty well known that the honourable member for Auckland East had been in the habit, for some time past, of bringing forward measures which had been generally adopted by the Government. Therefore the honourable gentleman was not in any way out of harmony with what had taken place in the past in bringing in this Bill, for as soon as he brought in a Bill it was a guarantee that the Government would take it up."

Now, that is exactly what the Premier proposes to do to-day; and I would ask, if this measure had been introduced into this country five years and a half ago, what would its effect have been? The Government then said it was necessary to introduce something of the kind, and led the House to believe that they would do it, but on a totally different principle—and what that may have been I cannot tell; but I leave it to honourable gentlemen to say, if during the past five years and a half this Fair Rent Bill had been in operation in New Zealand, what the position of this colony would be to-day compared with what its present position is.

Mr. TAYLOR.—It would have saved the country.

Sir G. GREY.—I am certain the position of thousands of families would have been absolutely different from the position they are in at this time. Now, my own language on that occasion was to this effect. I said,—

"That first directed his attention to the state of these men, and he had determined never to lay aside the thought that he might possibly, at some future day, be able to aid the deferred-payment settlers."

And I said,—

"As long as there were proprietors of large freeholds in New Zealand it was quite certain that each generation of freeholders could tax their tenants as they pleased; and if the Government did not begin by clearing out of the way the difficulty offered by these deferred-payment settlers, he did not think they could frame any general system of dealing with rents throughout New Zealand."

I pictured to the House a scene which had taken place in a previous session some years before. On one occasion several hundred persons had assembled in Dunedin at a land sale, when a comparatively very small number of sections were offered, and they consequently had had to give fabulously high prices for the land. I said I recollected an honourable gentleman rising in the House and reading a telegram he had received concerning the sale, and the vast prices which the sections reached; and the announcement was received with cheers, and I then got up and said that I was surprised at the joy exhibited, because, instead of showing a sound state of things in the colony, I considered that it foreboded great disasters. I still maintain firmly that opinion; and it was that circumstance which prevented my making this Bill a general measure, applying to private proprietors, until we had first of all dealt with the deferred-payment settlers. Now, I can tell the House that, notwithstanding my disappointment in 1882, I have never lost sight of the subject; but I have always been baffled if I have attempted to raise a question of the kind, and what has taken place this session must show the House it is almost a miraculous event if a private member should succeed in passing a measure of the kind. A man who devotes himself to a work of that kind must live on for years, often deprived almost entirely of hope. He must be actuated by a spirit of resolute determination. He must often feel depressed in spirits and heart, and sink almost into indescribable melancholy at finding all his efforts to serve his fellow-men baffled by mere rules of parliamentary routine, by what are called "Standing Orders," by machinery which renders it possible for a Government to prevent any man, even of more than ordinary intellect, from coming forward and doing anything for the benefit of his fellow-men, unless he comes forward as their servile slave. Such is a true picture. Some honourable gentlemen may laugh, but I am sure all will feel that such is a perfectly true picture. Honourable gentlemen heard to-day the manner in which the Premier spoke of this Bill as a wholly unworkable measure; and I ask, hearing that, would it be believed that for years I have brought forward laws—laws which have been approved in different nations, laws the benefit of which has been established for years in other countries and recognised with gratitude? I believe that, perhaps, no other living man has received from so many parts of the world expressions of gratitude such as I have received for laws that I have introduced. And yet one individual and his followers can in this country for years cramp all my efforts here, preventing me from effecting anything; and such has been the course continually pursued. And what has been the general result? That all those measures I have proposed have been adopted by themselves. Let me quote some of them if I have time. Who first introduced the Bill that changed the whole system of taking oaths in the colony? And who really took it from me and tried to make it a measure of their own? The very gentlemen who are interfering with me upon this occasion. Who first endeavoured to reform the legal profession, and tried to throw it open when it was in such a dreadful state? Will any one deny that I did that? And, then, who tried to take that out of my hands? Was it not a colleague of the honourable gentleman there, who sits in the Upper House, who endeavoured to rob me of the honour—if there was any—of introducing such a measure as that? It was I who brought these measures forward first, and it was this honourable gentleman who ultimately endeavoured to take the credit for passing them. Many have been the similar instances here.

Sir G. Grey

Mr. TAYLOR.—They did not want you to get the credit for it.

Sir G. GREY.—That is a matter I never troubled about. Then, it was said the other night that some intimation had been made to me with regard to a reform which I wish to see carried out, and that, because I would not accept the intimation that was made to me, I was wanting in patriotism. Was there any want of patriotism in that—that I should avail myself of some offer they made to me to carry it as they pleased? But, in reference to that matter, I can only say this: that I had no idea that any offer was being made to me. Something was stated to me by a gentleman who, so far as I knew, had no authority to come to me at all. Something was said about a clause being put in a Government measure, instead of the Bill which I had brought forward being allowed to be carried. I was asked if I would agree to that; and I said, Certainly not. Why should I? Unless they stated what was going to be done in reference to the matter, how could I know that I should have been right in adopting such a course? That is the only intimation I ever received. No proper intimation was ever made to me—no proper proposal of any kind. Now, why should I accept this proposal which has been made to me to-night? If it is desirable to carry this Bill, why should it not be done at once? Why not by myself now, if it is to be done at all? It is the same in this as in other cases: they have first objected to and spoken harshly of proposals which they have afterwards been glad to see accomplished. I wish so far to defend myself in this matter as to declare that this Bill which I have introduced into the House is sufficient for the commencement of a totally new system by the Government. It is perfectly easy for a Minister sitting upon those benches with a haughty air to say, "With a sense of responsibility upon me, I cannot bring myself to introduce a measure of this kind. It is ill thought out; it is not sufficient for the purpose." That is the way in which it is sought to crush this measure. How do I know that I may have an opportunity of bringing it on again? Why have so many laws which I have succeeded in passing, after discouragement and delays of this kind, elicited the greatest gratitude? The laws have been approved by the people. And how sad that here, in the atmosphere of this House, everything not brought forward by the Ministers is said to be bad and worthless! and yet it has ultimately to be brought forward by the men who have found fault with it in that way. Then, I say this: that in this particular instance I have been working since 1882. In the meantime the tenants of the Crown—the tenants of New Zealand—whom I would then have relieved of their misfortunes, have been subjected to disasters which they ought never to have known; and had they been dealt with, as I understood would be the case, immediately after the session of 1882, after the Bill I had introduced had been rejected, the aspect of New Zealand at the present time would have been totally different from what it is. Immense misery would have been saved, thousands of men would have been spared anxious minds, if the Government who sat upon those benches had only done their duty and had not thrown out a most beneficial measure. Well,

I ask the House to-night to pass this Bill. I stand here again, after five years of expectation, anxiety, and trembling hope, to ask that such a Bill as this may be carried; and I ask honourable members, ought I to be put off in the manner which the Premier proposes—that the Bill should be simply read a second time, and relegated to the waste-paper basket? I say that is a hardship to the people of New Zealand. I ask that it may be passed at once; I do not ask that from want of patriotism, or from the desire to achieve anything for myself. I now offer to hand the Bill over to the Government. I will do so with pleasure; I will help them: I will allow them in any way they like to subject it to any criticism, to any alteration which may improve it. But I do ask, on behalf of the Crown tenants of New Zealand, that there should be no delay in dealing with a measure which will benefit them to an almost incalculable degree. I ask that. There is a "House" here present; there will be no difficulty in assenting to my request: let there be no more delay in the consideration of this measure. They say that they approve of the principle of that which they called by such sad names previously. Let them adopt that principle; let them pass the measure. They could easily do it in a couple of days or less. I am sure that a single day would be sufficient to do this, and that other business might be accomplished at the same time. Let this Parliament separate now, at the end of its first session, with the consciousness that it has done one great and good thing. There is a special necessity for [this being done, because hitherto the aim of this Parliament has been to create great landowners not only in New Zealand, but owners of land in New Zealand who may reside where they please. That has been the one thing to which this present Parliament has devoted itself. One great measure for this purpose has been passed earlier in the session, another has been passed to-day, and a third is to be passed to-night, if possible; and let us meet this great and growing evil by providing a remedy of the kind this Bill applies. Let honourable gentlemen, while, on the one hand, they are indefensibly creating these large estates and these great absentee landholders, give the tenants who are to be plunged into misery the means of extricating themselves from the difficulties into which this House is plunging them. The lands have been taken from the people themselves; those who ought to have been proprietors are becoming, and must become, tenants, probably to be rack-rented by people in distant countries. Let us therefore be able to say, also, that we have provided remedies for the evils which we admit we have called into existence to a greater degree than was ever previously done. That is all I ask. Either let me have the pleasure of carrying this Bill through, or let the Government determine to take it up and carry it through during the present session. I am sure that honourable members will help them; and I shall forget the misery of past delays, the inaction forced upon me, I shall forget all my mental suffering, if they will only join with me in getting passed a measure which, I am sure, will be of great benefit to the whole community.

Sir G. Grey

Bill read a second time.

Sir G. GREY.—I move, That this Bill be committed presently.

Major ATKINSON.—I am sorry that I cannot agree to this Bill being committed, and I am sorry that the honourable gentleman, as it seems to me, is unreasonable. I have no wish to say hard things of him, although I could say some hard things and some just things in regard to the honourable gentleman; but I have said all I wish to say. It is quite unreasonable to expect that a Government pressed with public work as we are could make the Bill workable this session. I say that to the House with a sense of responsibility, and I ask the House not to agree to this Bill being committed. I move, as an amendment, That the Bill be committed next week.

Dr. FITCHETT.—On the understanding that you will fix a day for considering it?

Major ATKINSON.—No; on the distinct understanding that it is not to come on again.

Dr. FITCHETT.—Then why fix for next week?

Major ATKINSON.—I do not wish to express my opinion that the principle of the Bill is not a proper one; but it is quite unworkable as it stands, and it is impossible that Parliament can make it into a workable Bill this session.

Mr. SPEAKER.—It is not customary to make such a motion as that at this stage. The amendment should come on the motion that I do leave the chair.

Mr. SEDDON.—I would suggest that the Premier should move that the Bill be committed next sitting-day; and it might be arranged for it to come on with local Bills that we expect to reach. In the meantime the defects may be considered, and there may be some means found of amending them.

Mr. SPEAKER.—I would call attention to the following passage from May upon this point:—

"When a Bill has been read a second time, a question is put, 'That this Bill be committed,' which is rarely opposed, being a mere formal sequel to the second reading, not admitting of any discussion of the merits of the Bill itself."

When the motion is made that I do leave the chair, then the Premier's amendment will be in order.

Major ATKINSON.—I do not wish to move any amendment. I can avoid it. We may negative this motion. What would be the effect of that? Will the Bill be lost?

Mr. SPEAKER.—Yes. The House will have refused to allow the Bill to proceed to the stage of being committed.

Major ATKINSON.—Then we had better take that course; or I am willing to make it next sitting-day.

Sir G. GREY.—Are you willing to have it committed for the next sitting-day?

Major ATKINSON.—I say I am willing to withdraw my amendment, and let the honourable gentleman have the order for next sitting-day.

Sir G. GREY.—Am I allowed to speak, Sir, on this point?

Mr. SPEAKER.—I have ruled that there should be no debate at this stage; but, should a motion be made that I do leave the chair in order that the House may go into Committee on the Bill, an opportunity to speak would be given to the honourable gentleman.

Sir G. GREY.—I do not wish to debate at all, but I wish to make an explanation. The Premier says that this Bill is absolutely unworkable. I have as great a knowledge of the Bill as the honourable gentleman has as to its working in different countries and places; and I know that his idea that this is an utterly unworkable Bill is an entire mistake. If I am defeated, it will be a defeat in the death-struggle for the liberties of the settlers of New Zealand. But I am not the person who destroys their hopes: it is those who would profit from doing this act. I move, That you do leave the chair.

The House divided on the question, "That the Bill be committed presently."

AYES, 23.

Blake	Hutchison	Taiwhanga
Buxton	Joyce	Taylor
Cadman	Mackenzie, M.	Vogel
Feldwick	McKenzie, J.	Walker.
Fitchett	Parata
Grey	Seddon	Tellers.
Grimmond	Steward, W. J.	Fraser
Guinness	Stewart, W. D.	Moss.

NOES, 26.

Anderson	Hodgkinson	Moat
Atkinson	Izard	Monk
Bruce	Jackson	Pyke
Cowan	Lance	Samuel
Fergus	Lawry	Thompson, R.
Fulton	Mackenzie, T.	Whyte.
Hamlin	McGregor	Tellers.
Hislop	Mills	Barron
Hobbs	Mitchelson	Tanner.

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Duncan	Rhodes
Larnach	Allen
Reeves, R. H. J.	Newman
Thompson, T.	Pearson
Turnbull.	Ross.

Majority against, 3.

Motion negatived.

KAMO AND KAWAKAWA RAILWAYS CONNECTION AND CONSTRUCTION BILL.

Mr. HOBBS.—Sir, in moving the second reading of this Bill, I just wish to remind honourable members that, though I desire to push this matter through the House, I to-day waived my right to precedence on the Order Paper in favour of the Otago Central Railway Bill and the Fair Rent Bill, to oblige the gentlemen in charge of these Bills. In explaining this Bill, I do not intend to keep the House longer than I can possibly help; but I am bound to explain a few of the facts connected with the measure, in order that honourable members may understand it properly. This is not the first time that the Bill has been before the House. It has been before the House for the last ten years, in one way or another; and now it is time that something should be done in the way of providing the railway asked for. I may say that this railway is intended to connect two Government lines, one the Whangarei-Kamo Railway, which has cost the country £60,000; and the other the Kawakawa Railway, which is partly constructed, and has cost £100,000; and it will require a sum of £210,000 to complete and connect these two railways. I may explain that it is intended to carry out the object of this Bill on the land-grant principle, because we have looked in vain to the Government of the day to help us in the matter. And, as the House has recognised that principle in the cases of the Midland Railway, the Manawatu Railway, and the Otago Central Railway Bill which we passed to-day, I feel certain the House will not ignore this measure, especially when I say that when it comes from the Committee I am prepared to let the matter stand on its merits. One great object we have in view is to develop the coalfields about Hikurangi. The reports that are published of former surveys show that the coal is cropping up all along the line of railway, where there are good seams, which Sir James Hector's department and practical men in the district and in Wellington who have tested the coal have pronounced to be of first-rate quality. But this is absolutely useless to us unless we can utilise it by connecting these two railways. There is also a valuable bush close to this railway-line, having an area of seventeen thousand acres. This is not all covered with kauri; but, still, it is a valuable bush, and it cost the Government the sum of £12,000 some four years ago. It will be valued by the Government valuers in connection with this railway, so that there is not the slightest fear of its being undervalued. I mention this because honourable members have spoken about this bush being of such great value, and it would appear that I had some object in moving in this matter other than the good of my district and of the colony at large. But I may say I have never been connected with any company up to the present time; I have always kept aloof. And, while this matter is under discussion, I may say, further, that when this was purchased, four years ago, by the Government there were private parties in treaty to purchase this bush from the Natives, who offered, if I used my influence to effect a purchase for them, that I should have a share; but I treated the offer with scorn, and said I would be no party to it. I wish to see the land utilised for the good of the country, because, however valuable that bush may be, and however valuable the coalfields may be, unless they are utilised they are absolutely valueless. One other point I wish to mention. We are desirous of settling and developing the land in the North; and I cannot understand some persons' objection to this land-grant principle of making railways, because it must be admitted that if a company take this up, if they secure this land, they cannot hold it, or take it out of the colony, or eat it, but they must settle it and put people on the land; and this is what we have to consider. Now, I can easily understand the opposition offered to this proposal by the honourable member for Auckland Central. He is opposed to it on principle. He opposed the Midland Railway Bill, the Manawatu Bill, and the Otago Central. All those he opposed on principle, and therefore I can appreciate his opposition to this Bill; but when honourable members who have voted for the other measures oppose this, without coming to me for information, and who admit that they know nothing about it, I think they are acting very inconsistently. I have all the information at my disposal, and I am willing to give that information. I hope honourable members will not be prejudiced by any one whispering to them that this bush is of fabulous value, and that I have a desire to secure it for a syndicate, or anything of that kind. I have never been guilty of anything of that sort; I would not do it; and I think I am sufficiently well known in Auckland for it to be known there that I should not be likely to do anything of the sort. Then, after the Bill is passed, there is all the trouble to come about floating a company at Home and getting the matter taken up. If I do succeed it is a question whether we shall be able to get a company to take it up and carry it through. I would be the last one to part with the land of the colony, or the forests of the colony, or anything of that kind to strangers, to foreigners or aliens. But I do want to see the country settled. We are talking about the settlement of the land, and this is the way to get the land settled. I am quite sure, if the House will give this measure the consideration which it deserves, as has been done to other measures of a similar kind, the House will agree to the second reading to-night. If it is read a second time to-night, and referred to the Waste Lands Committee, then next session I shall be able to introduce it, and honourable members will know more about it: for they will be able to make inquiries to satisfy themselves as to its bona fides. I can assure the House I have no object in view but the good of the district and the colony at large. I will not detain the House, as it is anxious to get through the business; but, if there is any other information that is desired, I shall be happy to give it. I beg to move the second reading.

Mr. TAYLOR.—I will second the motion pro forma. The latter remarks of the honourable gentleman certainly incline me to vote in favour of the Bill, because I can conceive it possible that between this session and the next session a flood of light may be thrown upon the question; and the honourable member for the Bay of Islands is not inclined to force the measure through now. The Government possibly will kindly accept his views, and not make this another Government measure for to-night. I was gratified to hear the honourable member take such a liberal view. I never thought for a moment that he would be interested in or use his position in this House to float a thing that he did not believe would be for the benefit of the country. And, when he says that he is prepared to take the second reading and let the question stand over till next session, I do trust that at any rate the Government will not oppose that proposal. I may say I am sorry for the Government. I am exceedingly sorry for the Government. They are not only wasting our time, day after day, but they will not take a proper stand upon this question. I am not going to complain about anything affecting myself individually; but what do we find? We find the Government supporters being assisted in order to get their Bills through. Now, although I am opposed to the Government, I have a right to be dealt with fairly by the Government; and the Government will have to deal fairly by me, whether they like it or not. I am not going to either close my mouth or be dealt with offensively by any member of the Government. I want nothing from the Government, but I have a right to defend the people who send me here. I do hope that measures will not be got rid of by side-winds and quibbles. I have listened to the honourable member for Dunedin Central this afternoon, asking whether this means that, and the other means the other thing; and I do trust that the people of this colony will begin to learn, by-and-by, not to send gentlemen here to quibble about words, but to try and apply any ability which they may have for the benefit of the people at large. The honourable member for the Bay of Islands admits that he is simply going to move the second reading this session. I suppose that he wants it for no other purpose than a political purpose. I say that I do not object to the land-grant principle, but I am glad the honourable gentleman is going to give us time to consider it. I would also say this: that I do not think the honourable member for Auckland Central has been fairly dealt with to-night, and I hope he will make another protest against this Bill. I only wish to see us get on with the business. If the Government had taken a proper stand they would not have introduced these Bills by a side-wind, as they have done. There have been a number of Bills passed to-day by what I call a fluke, and I shall do my best to get them put out in another place. Although I disagree, possibly, with the Upper Chamber, there are times, Sir, when they do their duty by throwing out ill-considered and quickly-passed measures, which the Government, in my opinion, has had no right to pass.

Mr. Hobbs

Sir G. GREY.—Sir, I just wish to make one remark to try to remove an impression from the mind of the honourable member for the Bay of Islands. He stated that one of the great advantages of constructing railways by giving land to companies was this: that the land could not go away from the colony—that it was there; and he went on to say that you could not eat it. Well, now, all these discoveries are perfectly true. But what he overlooked is this: that you will have a large absent proprietary. Already that proprietary is large in number, but, unfortunately, its property grows larger in extent, and the property and rentals are immense that it carries away from these Islands. The fact of the matter, therefore, is this: that these people will eat up the substance that comes from the land, carrying away and consuming almost the whole of it, and continually diminishing the quantity which they leave for the tenants who work that land for them. Therefore what you do is this: You change your population from being a small-farm proprietary into a population of tenants, who will gradually sink lower and lower into the depths of poverty. Every year, through long centuries probably, they will fall lower and lower in the scale of civilisation, and their misfortunes will be greater and their difficulties more considerable. Such must be the inevitable result, and in New Zealand it will have a very evil effect indeed from the isolated position of this country. They cannot escape except with difficulty, and you will have here an Ireland reproduced, but in a much worse and more wretched form than Ireland ever presented. If the honourable gentleman would only reflect, I am perfectly sure that he would see that such things as I depict must inevitably take place, and that to answer me that the land is there, and it cannot be eaten, or that the people cannot eat it, is no reply at all to the truth which is terrible to contemplate, and which is certain to come. Therefore I would gladly convert him to the view that I hold: that it is best for us to raise the money upon the land ourselves, instead of disposing of the land to foreigners in the way that he proposes to dispose of it; to create a proprietary of our own in this country, and not to rob the people, as we are virtually doing, of the inheritance which Great Britain gave them. I believe that the work of this session—the work that has been carried on of disinheriting a large portion of the population of New Zealand of lands of the utmost value to them—I believe that that work which we have accomplished will leave its impress upon this country for many years to come; that this is the black session of New Zealand, which has greatly increased its misfortunes instead of benefiting it—a session the memory of which will long live in men's minds, the evil effects of which none of us will live to see die out in this colony. I do hope the honourable gentleman will change his views, and will, during the recess, carefully consider this question. I will give him a list of works which I am satisfied will bring him to the views I have expressed, if he will only consider them; and I hope yet he will come back a benefactor to his country, declaring he will not press this Bill, from the conviction he feels that he ought not to do it, and that he will strive with us to prevent great evils of this kind falling upon the country, which is already pressed upon by so many.

Mr. T. THOMPSON.—I wish to state that I intend to vote against this Bill. I have always been opposed to alienating large blocks of land for the construction of railways. I believe that the principle is bad, and that, sooner or later, the effect will be that the Government will have to purchase these railways at a price which will leave considerable loss to the colony. I simply say these few words as entering my protest against this Bill being read a second time.

Mr. TURNBULL.—I shall move, That this debate be adjourned; because the honourable gentleman has said that the Bill which he seeks to pass has already been some ten or twelve years before the public, and has not yet been passed. The honourable gentleman stated as fairly as he could the position of affairs; but it must be evident that no one in this House except the northern members can know anything about the position of this line, or what advantage it will be to the colony. I think the honourable gentleman, having attracted the attention of the House to the subject, has gone as far as he should go this session with his measure, because, if it passes to the Waste Lands Committee, it will involve the expenditure of a great deal of time. It may go safely through that Committee; but then the House afterwards would require to be satisfied that all the statistics are correct, and that a benefit was likely to accrue to the country from the construction of the line.

Mr. SPEAKER.—I wish to point out to the honourable gentleman that an honourable member, in moving the adjournment of the debate, cannot speak on the general question, but must confine himself to the question of adjournment. If the honourable gentleman wishes to speak to the main question I will consider that he has not moved the adjournment, and will repropose that question.

Mr. TURNBULL.—Then, Sir, I will move, That the House do now adjourn. I do not want to vote against the Bill, because that would rather be to injure the whole affair. I should prefer that the honourable gentleman should withdraw his Bill, having attracted attention to it. I think myself that altogether we have been very lax with regard to these railways, and that the information regarding them which we ought to have had has not been laid before the House. Of course that is not the case in regard to the Bill which we passed this afternoon, because that subject has been before the country for some years. I would also point out that, if we pass the second reading of this Bill, that pledges us to the principle, and it will be used as an argument afterwards, if this measure is brought forward again, that it has already been before the House, and that the House has agreed to its principle.

Mr. SAMUEL.—I second the motion for adjournment, and do so not because I am opposed to the second reading, but because I look upon this as simply a complimentary second reading. We have not gone sufficiently into the matter to vote for the second reading if to do so means to affirm the principle; and, under these circumstances, it would not be right for the House to agree to the second reading.

Mr. MOAT.—Sir, I really think the best thing the honourable member for the Bay of Islands could do would be to drop the Bill. The Waste Lands Committee would certainly not have time to go into it and take the necessary evidence this session, and the whole thing would have to be gone into again next session. The honourable gentleman has stated that it has been before the country for ten years in one way and another. It is quite true it has. It came before the country in this way: that it was proposed to make a railway-line to connect the Kawakawa coal-mine with the port, and it was stated that that could be made part of the North of Auckland Trunk-line. Some time afterwards a coal-mine was opened at Kamo, near Whangarei: parties interested in that coal-mine also said that a line from there to the port could be made part of the North of Auckland Trunk-line. Accordingly the railway was made, and nothing more was heard in connection with it until the session of 1884. The honourable member for the Bay of Islands got the then Premier to consent to the introduction of a clause in the East and West Coast Middle Island Railway Bill, authorising a syndicate to construct a line on similar terms between these two coal-lines, as part of the North of Auckland main line. I may say that the attempt to introduce this clause took us quite by surprise, as no notice had been given to us of it before it was introduced in the House. I then told the House what I knew of the matter, and the honourable member for Auckland Central afterwards came in and assisted me. Hearing what we said, the Premier, Sir Robert Stout, declined to allow the proposal to go any further that session, but promised to make some inquiries during the recess. The argument I then used was that the route by which this line was supposed to go would never form part of the North of Auckland main line, seeing that it would run through a part of the country which was quite unfit for settlement, while there was an immense quantity of good country in another direction. Accordingly, during the recess an engineer was sent up by the Government to examine the country and report upon it. He did so, and his report corresponded with the statement which I had made, and the Premier and the Minister for Public Works declined altogether to go on with the line as part of the North of Auckland Trunk line; and nothing was heard of the line from that day to the present, when this Bill has been introduced by the honourable member. I am not going to discuss the question of whether it is proper or not to give tracts of land to construct railways. The House has already decided on that point, and I am not going to waste the time of the House in disputing its decision. But I say the matter should be very carefully considered before an immense amount of money is spent on the construction of this line, which I believe would be almost useless except to get out the timber from this bush which it is proposed to give to the company—a bush which, I believe, is far the most valuable in New Zealand. It consists of about seventeen thousand acres, and it is valued at present by the authorities of the Forest Department at £13 an acre, or about £220,000. I think it would be a great pity that that money should be spent rashly, and without knowing what benefit is likely to arise from the expenditure. It is quite true, as the honourable gentleman has stated, that coal is cropping out in portions of this country; that it has been tested and has been stated to be of good quality. I have very grave doubts as to whether the quality is such as is stated. It may be so, or it may not, but there is no proof of it; and I do not even know that the coal which was tested actually came from that place. Prospects of coal were got there some time ago, and when they were examined it was found that they were not so good as had been stated. As far as the ordinary coal is concerned, there is no doubt that the coal now being procured at Kamo and another mine nearer Whangarei is not of such quality as to cause any great demand for it; and that the mines at present open can produce more coal of that quality than will be required for many years to come. Therefore the railway, as far as I can see, would be of no use whatever for the purpose of opening up coalfields. I might also say, in connection with this matter, that the present Minister for Public Works—who represented the District of Marsden at the time I speak of, three years ago—declined to be a party to encouraging this line, although his constituents strongly urged him to do so; but he said he would not support it. I believe he is still of the same opinion. I have been inclined to believe that the idea of making this railway is to get in the thin end of the wedge to make it a portion of the North Island Trunk-line. That is my opinion. If this were made it would then be said that the House should never make two lines running parallel with each other; and I think it would be a very wrong thing to do. These are my principal reasons for objecting to the Bill. The statement by the honourable member for the Bay of Islands that he does not intend to push the Bill through this session materially alters the previous state of things. It would be very wrong indeed if it were pushed forward this session, as I was led to believe was intended. I think the best thing to do would be to allow it to stand over.

Mr. Samuel

Mr. R. THOMPSON.—I am not surprised that honourable gentlemen in this House are so little acquainted with the districts north of Auckland; for this reason: that honourable members who have represented that part of the country for a number of years have scarcely ever got up to speak on its behalf, except when they wanted something for that particular part of it to which they belonged. I would point out that the district over which this line is proposed to be constructed is the oldest-settled part of the country. It has been settled for the last forty years. I reside in the district, and am thoroughly well acquainted with it. For fifteen miles north of Kamo, along the route of this line, the land is thickly settled with prosperous settlers: and I would point out that these settlers have no roads—not even bush-tracks. I am not surprised that so little has been heard of this district, because that part of the country was grossly neglected. It is almost unknown to this part of the country. As I was saying, for fifteen miles north of Kamo you go through land settled with prosperous settlers; and there is one continuous seam of coal cropping out all the way, and a large area of that coalfield belongs to the Government. When we pass that, we come to this forest, which, I believe, is a very valuable one. It will be of no value whatever until a railway is constructed to it. It simply stands there, running the risk of being burnt down every summer. Of course there is no intention to hand over that forest or any land to a company to make this railway except on fair and reasonable terms. It is not likely that the Government would hand over that forest or Crown lands except at a fair value. I ask, is it wise to allow that forest to stand there at the risk of being burned down? Would it not be better to hand it over to a company, so that a railway might be made to the country to work it? It has been pointed out that there are coal-mines at Kawakawa and Whangarei. On these a large amount of money has been spent; and the mine at Whangarei has been obliged to close, in consequence of the want of facilities for shipping the coal, because there has not been sufficient influence in this House to get the railway extended to deep water, so as to put the coal on board large vessels. Yet the honourable member for Rodney—the gentleman who has represented that district for six years—has never raised his voice to help that district. He, of course, is not member for that part of the country exactly. But, Sir, I maintain that it is to the interest of New Zealand that that district should be developed. Is it a wise policy to neglect a district like that, and to lock up these minerals and this timber, simply because the financial rings in Auckland want it themselves? I do not say that the honourable member for Rodney is here to represent Auckland rings; but the minerals are being locked up because they do not wish to see anything developed there unless the whole profits go into their own pockets. I have no interest in the coalfields; I have not a sixpence invested in the coal-mines. I am only a settler. But, when we are borrowing money to make the railways, why should the oldest-settled district in the colony be completely ignored? Why has it been ignored? Simply because the inhabitants sent representatives here who did not do their duty; because it was represented by men who have misrepresented them, as the honourable member for Rodney has done to-night. That honourable gentleman and others have for years misrepresented that part of the country, in the interests of parties who wish—

Dr. FITCHETT.—I would ask, Sir, is that a right statement for the honourable gentleman to make?

Mr. R. THOMPSON.—I do not, of course, wish to impute mercenary motives.

Dr. FITCHETT.—Is it fair to accuse an honourable member of misrepresenting his district in the interest of financial rings?

Mr. R. THOMPSON.—Although they represented districts in the North, to my mind they misrepresented that particular district.

Dr. FITCHETT.—The honourable gentleman stated that for six years the honourable member for Rodney had misrepresented the district.

Mr. SPEAKER.—I did not understand him to use the term offensively, but in the sense that the honourable member did not correctly represent the views and interests of his district.

Mr. R. THOMPSON.—I had no idea of using the word offensively towards the honourable member for Rodney. That part of the country seems to be unknown here, and I might state that the country north of Auckland contains a population of thirty thousand people, including Maoris; yet honourable gentlemen in this House seem to know little about it; and I know why. The people there are beginning to open their eyes. The people of that district do not come to this House begging money. There is never any agitation of unemployed from that part of the country. They are hard-working, industrious settlers. They are, to a certain extent, quite independent. They are not paupers. They would scorn to come and ask for anything they were not entitled to. But we should not be doing our duty if we did not make an effort to bring the great mineral resources of that district before the House. The honourable member for the Bay of Islands has no intention of pushing the measure beyond the second reading. That is my wish also. We do not wish to push the Bill or to steal a march on this House. I would be no party to promote this measure if I thought there was nothing in it; I could not recommend it. If the second reading is carried now, we will distribute the Bill among the people of the district, make further inquiries, and collect more information for this House next session. I am not even sanguine of carrying the Bill next session; but our object is to bring the district prominently before the House and the public. We have no intention to sit down and be ignored, as we have been for the last ten or fifteen years. The settlers are determined that their wants shall be heard of in this House—that they shall be no longer ignored. It has been stated publicly that the people of this part of New Zealand are a lazy, idle, thriftless lot of people. They attend to their own business; they are not agitators; but the time has come when they mean to make their voice heard, and honourable gentlemen will find that the people there have at last opened their eyes to the manner in which they have been treated. There is no intention of having this line, as has been stated, constructed as part of the North Auckland Trunk Railway. The route for that railway has already been fixed. I travelled over it myself a couple of years ago with Mr. Mitchelson and Mr. Knorpp. The honourable member for Rodney insinuated that this was the thin end of the wedge to divert the route of the North Auckland Trunk Railway. That statement is absolutely without foundation. We have no intention whatever to bring the railway before the public except to ventilate the matter and place it before the country on its merits; and all I ask the House to do is to deal with this measure on its merits, and to treat the settlers there with justice and fair-play. So long as I am in this House I shall ask that, and nothing more; and I hope the honourable member for Rodney will not consider it his duty to get up in this House and try to prevent the development of the resources of that part of the country which he has misrepresented for so many years. I hope he will not do it again while I am in this House, at all events. I would ask honourable members to deal with this measure fairly, that it may be placed in a position to come before the Waste Lands Committee, so that all the information that it is possible to collect may be placed before the House. We have no intention whatever to force the matter on the country until it is right and fit to take the matter in hand.

Dr. HODGKINSON.—I shall vote for the second reading of this Bill. My object in doing so is simply to affirm the principle of making railways by means of land instead of by loan. That has been the practice followed by nearly all new countries in the world, and it has been attended with most beneficial results. The United States and Canada have got enormous railway systems, without incurring any debt; whereas we, by adopting the principle of making the railways out of loan, have brought the colony to the very verge of bankruptcy, and to a state of most profligate expenditure and very great corruption in all the administrative departments. I vote for the second reading, to affirm this general principle of making railways by means of land instead of by loan.

Mr. MOSS.—I should not have risen to speak on this Bill but for the admirable election address to the electors of Marsden which has just been delivered by the honourable member for Marsden. But for that, and the honourable gentleman's references to one of the most respected members from the Auckland District, I should not have thought it necessary to speak on this occasion. As that honourable gentleman will not have an opportunity of speaking himself, I should like to say a few words. I hardly know how to characterize the attack which has just been made by the honourable member for Marsden. The honourable gentleman was not talking to the House; he did not give the House one single item of information; he did not tell honourable gentlemen about the country. He intimated that this railway would serve thirty thousand people. He knows that it will do nothing of the kind, and that it will only be a by-railway, at the best, between two harbours. I will tell the honourable gentleman that, whatever he may say, there are those who consider that the bush, and not the railway, is the great attraction. He is too innocent to know it. Does the honourable gentleman know that his predecessor is the present Minister for Public Works, and that that honourable gentleman refused, even as member for the district, to have anything to do with this line?

Mr. R. Thompson

Mr. R. THOMPSON.—The honourable member is misstating facts. The present Minister for Public Works, while representing the district, declined to take up this line as a portion of the North of Auckland Railway—he declined to recognise it as a portion of the trunk-line.

Mr. MOSS.—At all events, the honourable gentleman refused to bring it forward. The honourable member for Marsden talks of his district having been misrepresented. The Kamo Railway was one of very few of its kind made at the public expense. We have had no more earnest representative of a district in this House than the honourable member who now represents Rodney. The object of the speech of the honourable member for Marsden is not to enlighten the House, but to prejudice the constituents of the member for Rodney against him. There was one expression which the honourable gentleman used which gave me an insight at once into the object of his speech. He said that the members who represented the district previously had not sufficient influence to get the railway made. Was the object of the honourable member in coming here only to possess influence with the Government in order to get something for his district? I can assure the honourable member that, whatever he may think of other Auckland members, I am proud to say they do not all come here with that as their only object. They come here careless as to what their influence with the Government may be for such purposes, and they are only anxious to have influence in the House to do what is good for the country. The honourable gentleman knows perfectly well that the coal-mine to which he refers is not held by an influential ring in Auckland; it has been a disastrous undertaking to every one connected with it. The honourable gentleman has spoken of only twelve constables and two Magistrates. Does he think that he has told us something new? We have heard the honourable member for Rodney for several years past asking for justice for his district. We have heard the members from the northern part of the Auckland Province, assisted by the Auckland City members, declaring that this district has been neglected. The great fact, that the district contains some thirty thousand people, and that these few Magistrates and constables are the only cost to which the Government is put in administering it—that is nothing new. I venture to say that honourable gentlemen have heard this stated half a dozen times by different Auckland members; but it will look new when it is put in Hansard, and circulated amongst the honourable gentleman's constituents. If a railway is to be made, it should not run along the coast between two excellent harbours. This proposed line would not run through a country so wonderfully rich as the honourable member for Marsden seems to think.

Mr. R. THOMPSON.—We have no paupers there.

Mr. MOSS.—Does the honourable gentleman think there are any paupers in New Zealand? What does the honourable gentleman mean by paupers? I know this: that perhaps there is no part of New Zealand in which there are a greater number of poor and struggling settlers than there are in the North of Auckland.

Mr. R. THOMPSON.—They do not come "loafing" on this House.

Mr. MOSS.—"Loafing!" What does the honourable gentleman mean? The honourable gentleman stands up here as a simple and honest farmer. Has the honourable gentleman always been an honest farmer? Has the honourable gentleman made his money by farming? I do not know, and I do not want to know; but I know that the district is not one of honest farmers alone. There are gum-diggers who could perhaps tell us how money is made. There are people who, unfortunately, have a taste for drink, which very often reduces them to pauperism, and those who supply them with drink in that district very often make large sums of money, and through that money get great influence over honest farmers. The speech of the honourable member for Marsden was not made for the railway. It was an attack upon a gentleman who was well known in that district before the honourable gentleman was heard of. The speech was also an address to the honourable gentleman's constituents. The honourable gentleman says the Bill is to be read a second time, and then it will be circulated throughout the district. The House ought not to be used for that purpose. It is simply an electioneering "move." I am astonished that an honourable gentleman with so sensitive a conscience as the honourable member for the Bay of Islands could have entered into partnership with the honourable gentleman for that purpose. I am an Auckland member, and I hope the Bill will not pass. It took two months to compose this Bill; and, then, look at the printing and all the trouble connected with it! Why, the honest farmers in that district will be so dazzled that they will not listen to any one but the honourable gentleman for many years to come.

Dr. FITCHETT.—After the advocacy of the honourable member for Marsden and the criticism of the honourable member for Rodney and the honourable member for Parnell, I think the honourable gentleman who introduced the Bill would do well to drop it. The advocacy is more damaging than the criticisms. For my own part, I am in favour of the abstract principle of constructing railways by land-grants. That, however, does not commit me to this concrete instance. Though I knew little about this matter when the Bill was introduced, I have listened, indeed, with a favourable mind to the proposal; but all that has come out has rather prejudiced me against the thing. We have learned that the route of the North Island Trunk-line has not been fixed, and that this proposed railway is dangerously near the possible route of that line. I think honourable members cannot fail to see, then, that, if this Bill be passed and the railway is started, it will prejudice the question of the route of the Main Trunk-line. We learn, indeed, that for that very reason a present Minister of the Crown declined to have anything to do with this railway. The Bill, so far as I can judge, is intensely crude. The honourable gentleman who has introduced it does not seem to have profited by the experience gained over the Midland Railway and Otago Central Railway Bills. There is no provision to conserve the interests of the miners or settlers; indeed, the whole thing is a rude shell; and I think it would be little more than a farce if the House passed the second reading. Indeed, that is unnecessary, because the honourable member who introduced the Bill said it was only intended to ventilate the matter.

Mr. HOBBS.—I did not say that.

Dr. FITCHETT.—I understood the honourable member to say that he only wished to secure the second reading for the purpose of ventilating the matter, and that he will bring in the Bill afresh next year. Why, then, ask the House to commit itself to the principle? The only persons speaking in favour of it are the two honourable gentlemen who introduced it. All the other speakers are hostile to it. I think it would be wise of the honourable gentleman to withdraw it now. Let him do as the honourable member for the Dunstan did: let him stick up maps in the lobby; let him educate honourable members on the matter; and then when we come to discuss the subject we shall know all about it. I cannot at present conscientiously support the second reading of the Bill, when the little I know of it is to its disadvantage.

Mr. T. THOMPSON.—I have already stated that I shall vote against the second reading of this Bill, and my only object in rising now is to express regret that the honourable member for Marsden felt it his duty to make an attack on the honourable member for Rodney. I wish to say—and I think I shall be borne out by every honourable member who comes from Auckland—that the honourable member for Rodney is one of the most respected members we have from that district. The proof that he does not misrepresent his constituents is that he is here. There is not a member in this House who would be less likely to be chargeable with being connected with land-speculations, or rings of any kind, than the honourable member for Rodney.

Mr. R. THOMPSON.—I never charged the honourable member for Rodney with being connected with land-speculations.

Mr. T. THOMPSON.—I was not in the House at the time the honourable member for Marsden was speaking, but I heard that he had made a serious attack on the honourable member for Rodney, and I simply rose to express my regret that he had thought proper to do so. I again repeat that there is not a representative from the Auckland District who is more respected than the honourable member for Rodney. I am sure the honourable member for Marsden will, on mature reflection, regret that he has made such an attack.

Mr. TAYLOR.—I trust the honourable member for Marsden will withdraw the statement. I have had the pleasure of knowing the honourable member for Rodney for two or three sessions, and I must say this of him: that he is a man of his word at all times; and I believe that he conscientiously does his best to represent the people who sent him here. It is unfair to attack the honourable member for Rodney for the purpose of making political capital out of the attack. I was prepared to support the second reading of the Bill brought in by the honourable member for the Bay of Islands, but I understand that the Premier has advised the honourable gentleman to withdraw the measure. I hope it is so. I thought the Bill was going to be withdrawn by a side-wind after discussion, and postponed until next session. Will the Premier say whether he is going to deal with any other Bills to-night?

Major ATKINSON.—No. I want to see this referred to the Waste Lands Committee, and have done with it.

Mr. TAYLOR.—If that is so, I shall not say any more about it. I think what was said about the honourable member for Rodney was very unfair. He is not a loud-talking man, but he is a sensible man, and I believe he honestly endeavours, to the best of his ability, to represent those who send him here: the proof of that is his re-election. This is not his first appearance here; but the honourable member for Marsden may not appear here again. And I am sorry, too, at the references that have been made to the honourable member for Auckland Central. That honourable gentleman sometimes wants assistance in this House, and I shall always be ready to do what I can to assist him, by moving the adjournment or otherwise, to enable him to give the people of the colony the benefit of his matured judgment and reflection. Honourable members may laugh, but the laugh does not come in here. The honourable member for Auckland Central can get elected to the House without a contest; and is not that a sufficient answer to all the abuse which the honourable gentleman gets? There is no member of this House, except, perhaps, myself, who is exposed to so much abuse as that honourable gentleman. I am always met by such accusations as this: "Oh, the honourable member for Sydenham always wants something for his district." Well, I ask those statesmen who say that, what about themselves? We have heard the honourable member for Thorndon, for instance, quite recently, saying, "I find by a return that two or three thousand pounds have been spent in the Addington workshops which ought to have been divided between Dunedin, Auckland, and Wellington." Now, is that a statesman's view? I should like to see those who will manage the railways henceforth manage them from the point of view of the interest of the colony, and not from a merely local-interest point of view. We find the Auckland, Dunedin, and Wellington members always asking questions and moving for returns, and when they get their answers and returns they say these show that too much money is spent in some particular locality which ought to be distributed throughout the colony. Now, any one who is acquainted with the facts knows that the reason why a larger proportion of the work is done in one particular part of the colony is that it can be done at least 40 per cent. more cheaply there than anywhere else. As to the matter just now before the House, I ask the honourable member for the Bay of Islands, seeing that we have discussed the subject, to withdraw his Bill till next session, and then we may go into the question thoroughly on its merits, which we certainly cannot do this session.

Mr. CADMAN.—Sir, I have listened carefully to all this discussion, and especially to the references made to the honourable member for Rodney by the honourable member for Marsden; and, while listening, the thought flashed through my mind: Supposing it was asked, in the streets of Auckland, to the statements of which of those honourable gentlemen credence would be most likely to be given, what would the answer probably be? There can be no doubt whatever that the statement of the honourable member for Rodney would be taken far in preference to the statement of the honourable member for Marsden—and especially in reference to this subject. Now, as to the railway which is the subject of this Bill, I would ask this: Besides the two honourable members whose districts are to some extent interested, is there one other Auckland member out of the whole twenty who could stand up in this House and support the making of that railway? We have heard a good deal in this House about political railways and rotten railways; but this line, if made, would be both a political railway and a rotten railway. The Auckland people know well that, if the line were running to-morrow—except for the timber in the bush, which would soon be worked out—the line would not pay for the grease used on the axles. There can be no doubt it is a mineral district, and that coal has been found in many places on the route of the proposed line; and, if they want the railway, why do not the people there bore for coal, and prove there are good seams to be worked, before the railway is begun? But, instead of that, the idea seems to be to go the other way about—to get the line made first, and then try to find minerals to make the line pay. No doubt the forest is a valuable one: it cost the Government £12,000 or £14,000, and they could get £50,000 for it to-morrow. There is no doubt that while the bush was being cut and utilised the railway would pay; but directly the bush was all cleared the line could not possibly pay, unless good coal-seams were found and a large coal traffic made. Sir, I felt sorry when I heard the honourable member for Marsden speak in the way he did about the honourable member for Rodney. The honourable member for Rodney, although he does not occupy the time of the House often, yet is always listened to with respect when he does speak; he speaks always to the point, and is well worth listening to; and I am sure it will be felt in Auckland, when the personal references which have been made to that honourable gentleman to-day are read, that they are quite unwarrantable.

Mr. T. Thompson

Mr. R. H. J. REEVES.—Sir, I may say that I had intended voting for the second reading of this Bill; but after the remarks of the honourable member for Marsden I certainly could not do so.

Mr. LAWRY.—Sir, I believe the honourable member for the Bay of Islands deserves well of his constituents for the painstaking manner in which he has brought this Bill before the House. I know the district fairly well, having visited it on many occasions, and I have heard about this railway question from a number of settlers there, who have all expressed their opinion that this would be a beneficial work. I believe that, if a poll of the ratepayers were taken from one end of the district to the other, nine-tenths of the settlers would be found to be in favour of the railway being constructed; and if this Bill were passed I have no doubt a company could be formed which would take the enterprise up; because the bush there is a very valuable one, and I believe also there are many valuable coal-seams in that district. But all this is evidence to me against the Bill, because if the natural resources of the district are so very valuable, if the coal-measures and the timber-supply are likely to give so considerable a traffic, it is evidence to me that this railway should be a national work and not a private one. While, therefore, I am very desirous indeed to see the honourable member for the Bay of Islands have his industry rewarded, I must vote against the second reading of this Bill, for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. TAIWHANGA.—I come from the district which is the subject of this Bill, and I know that we need the railway there, and I think that the district will be able to support it. The Puhipuhi Bush certainly belongs to the Government; but there are other bushes on the route of the railway, and they will give it traffic. I am surprised to find some honourable members speaking against it who have done so. I think the least they can do is to let us have this railway down to the Bay of Islands, because the Bay of Islands is one of the richest districts in New Zealand. We have coal, and we have population there—there are about thirty thousand people there, both English and Maori, contributing to the revenue of the country; and we are paying for the railways in other districts instead of having a railway of our own. That is why we are strongly opposed to paying rates and taxes for the benefit of other districts—for the purpose of giving railroads to Dunedin, Christchurch, and Wellington—while we get none at all. And therefore the best way for us is to pay nothing. I believe that this small railway would be one that would pay well, and certainly benefit our district; and I hope this Bill will be passed. I think honourable members should simply assist us to get this railway, for the Maori members have assisted them in many things in this House. I think there should be one complete railway in the whole of the North of Auckland district. If my Maori Relief Bill were passed, giving the Maoris control over their lands, we could borrow money on our lands to make our own railways, because we own the best part of the North Island. Why should we not have our own railways as well as the white people? And if my Bill were passed we should have them.

Mr. PARATA.—I wish to say a word on this Bill, and my reason for doing so is that I believe the proposed railway would benefit the Natives in the North Island, and therefore I support the proposal. But I think we should apply to the Waste Lands Committee as to the value of the land in connection with this railway, and I think we should wait for the report of that Committee, and then discuss the whole subject next session. Another thing: we should be able to find out what population is in that district. The honourable member for the Northern Maori District has told us that they have a large quantity of land in that district to support the formation of this railway. Therefore I think that we should vote for the second reading of this Bill, and then leave the matter over until next session, when we could get a report from the Waste Lands Committee.

COUNT-OUT.

The attention of Mr. Speaker having been called to the state of the House, and the House having been counted, and a quorum not being found,

Mr. SPEAKER adjourned the House at twenty-five minutes to ten o'clock p.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, 12th December, 1887.

Second Readings—Third Readings—Walton Park Coal—Education—Public Works Statement—Pensions—Wellington College and Girls' High School Bill—Land Bill—Local Bodies' Loans Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER took the chair at half-past two o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SECOND READINGS.

Civil Service Reform Bill, Government Loans to Local Bodies Bill.

THIRD READINGS.

Civil Service Reform Bill, Government Loans to Local Bodies Bill.

WALTON PARK COAL.

Dr. FITCHETT.—Sir, with your leave, and with the indulgence of the House, I beg to be allowed to make a personal explanation. A few days ago I placed on the Order Paper notice of a question relating to the use of Walton Park coal on the southern railways.

I asked that question in consequence of information that had been supplied me, stating that when that coal had been used on locomotives it had thrown off such fumes that the engine-drivers had been rendered unconscious when their trains were passing through long tunnels. Subsequently to that question being asked, the honourable member for Caversham was about to give notice of his intention to ask me the source of my authority, when he was informed by you, Sir, that it was not competent for one private member to put a question to another in the House. Since then I have received a letter from the Walton Park Coal Company, in which they suggest that I was acting from other motives than a sense of public duty in putting the question I did. I desire, therefore, to be allowed to explain. So far from being actuated by any other motive, I desire to say that I have personal friends and political supporters connected with that company, and I should be the very last person to do anything to wantonly or needlessly injure the company. I believe their coal is very good for domestic and manufacturing purposes; but, if my information is true, it is evidently unfitted for use on railway-lines where there are long tunnels, such as some of those on the southern lines. The company, in their letter to me, further suggest that, as their tender for the supply of coal to the railway had been rejected before my notice appeared on the Order Paper, I should not have put it there. If this be so, I did not know it. I was induced to put it there from seeing in a Dunedin paper that a meeting of the company had been held when it was stated that it was likely that the railways of the colony would use the coal; and, knowing what I did about the coal, I deemed it my duty, if possible, to prevent it, at least, until full inquiries had been made. At the time I put the question on the Order Paper I thought that the tenders were still sealed. If I had known that the tender of the company had been rejected I should have seen the Minister privately, and not brought the matter before the House. Knowing what I did, I acted under a serious sense of public duty and responsibility in the matter. It is unnecessary to say that, if my information was correct, there would be terrible risks to life and property in using the coal on railway lines with long tunnels; and I considered it my duty to bring the matter promptly under the notice of the Government. In my judgment it was a matter of urgency. It has also been suggested that I should have interviewed the Minister privately. Well, I thought of that; but it seemed to me to be very unfair to the company for me to approach the Minister privately and behind the back of the company, and say anything to the Minister to the detriment of the company. I took, only after very careful consideration, the step I deemed it my duty to take. I deemed it my duty to suggest that inquiry should be made before the use of the coal on the railway-lines was sanctioned; and I gave my reason. In doing this I gave the company every opportunity of meeting anything that might be said against their coal. If my information was wrong, no harm could be done to the company—rather good, indeed, for it was a common topic in Dunedin; and I gave the company the most public opportunity of clearing the character of their coal. If, on the other hand, my information was correct—and I firmly believe it to be correct—I think it would have been very wrong if I had not brought the matter under the notice of the Government. I have been asked to give the source of the information on which I asked the question; but, Sir, a member of Parliament is continually receiving from all sorts and conditions of men all sorts of information. We receive that information with the distinct or implied understanding that the source shall not be divulged. I have always so treated such information, and always shall so treat it. The company have ample opportunity of ascertaining if what I have said is true, but I desire to most emphatically disclaim any intention to say anything to the injury of the company.

Dr. Fitchett

Mr. BARRON.—I have information from the company, showing that their coal has been analysed by competent persons—amongst others, Professor Black—with the result that it appears to be quite suitable for locomotive purposes. I have also information that it has been properly tried by officers of the Government, and found to be not injurious in the way formerly alleged by the honourable gentleman. I hope the Government will make such inquiries as may set the matter at rest. In justice to the company they are called on to make the promised further inquiry as to the merits of the coal.

EDUCATION.

Mr. TURNBULL.—Sir, I move the adjournment of the House to bring up a matter of very great importance. In doing so I wish to say that I have consulted no one on my side of the House in regard to it. It might have been better, perhaps, had I done so; but the subject is one which, to my mind, should not be made a party question. I have no desire whatever to see it made a party question, and I hope it will not be. The question affects the privileges of this House; but I do not bring it forward as a question of privilege, though I have a full sense of the responsibility I incur in bringing the matter forward on a motion for the adjournment of the House. I can only characterize what has been done, which prompts my action now, as one of the most ill-advised acts any Ministry has ever committed, and I think it is calculated to bring the Governor into collision with the House. I wish to call the attention of the House to certain regulations under "The Education Act, 1877," made by the Governor in Council on the 7th December instant, and published in the Gazette on the following day. These regulations are of a most extraordinary nature, and I will read the first:—

"From and after the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, it shall not be lawful for the teacher of any public school to retain upon the roll of his school, or to place upon such roll, the name of any child whose age is less than six years, or of any child who has passed the Sixth Standard of education prescribed by regulation made under the said Act."

And there are other regulations of the same kind. Sir, I maintain that the issuing of this Order in Council, though it may be quite within the meaning of the Act, is a most ill-advised proceeding, because the House has been discussing that question, and a decision on it is pending in this House. While this House is in session, and while this very question is yet in abeyance before the House, for the Government to take upon itself to issue such regulations is a most extraordinary proceeding, especially when we know that the subject is one of the greatest importance to the whole country. I think, in ignoring the House as they have done in this matter, the Government have done one of the most extraordinary things of which any Government could be guilty. It strikes at the root of all independence of Parliament. It is simply a blow struck at every member of the House, whether he is on the Government side or on the side of the Opposition. Here, while the House is considering a matter of the greatest national importance, and before a decision can be come to by the House, the Government step in and anticipate any decision by issuing these regulations, and say they shall be brought into force at a certain time. I say it shows that the Government are determined to force this course on their own friends—to cause them to sacrifice their own feelings and opinions, whatever they may be. The Government make a matter a foregone conclusion, and then their friends are compelled to support a motion the Ministry bring forward. Sir, this is a most dangerous course, and I am quite sure that honourable members who agree with me will say that it is a very serious blow struck at the privileges of the House. Sir, I do not propose at present to do more than bring the matter under the notice of the House. I am not now going to enter into the subject itself, because I do not wish it to be raised at this juncture—I mean, the expediency of doing what the Government say by these regulations shall be done. I do not wish now to raise a debate on that question, but I consider it a duty incumbent on every member of this House to strictly guard its privileges, so that the House shall not be put in the unfortunate position it is put in by the issue of these regulations. By this course a question in issue is made a foregone conclusion, and we are treated as if we had no voice in the matter. If this is allowed, any Government can, by Order in Council, set the wishes of this House at defiance: they can come to a decision, cause the course they have decided on to be taken, and then they can tell this House that discussion is useless—the matter has already been done. Sir, I have deemed it my duty to bring this matter under the notice of the House, and I will now say no more, but leave it to other honourable members.

Dr. FITCHETT.—I beg to second the motion for the adjournment of the House, not for the purpose of saying much, but simply to indorse what the last speaker has said, and to point out that not only is a serious blow being struck at the privileges of this House, but that a serious blow is also being struck at our education system. I do not know whether the Minister of Education knows the extensive results which will follow upon his action in this matter; but, if not, he ought to be informed of it. If the Order in Council be carried into effect in Otago, it will inevitably diminish the educational revenues of the Board to the extent of 20 per cent., and will thoroughly disorganize the whole system there. I asked the Premier some days ago whether we should have an opportunity of discussing the whole of the educational proposals of the Government, and I understood the Premier, in reply, to say that we should have such an opportunity. But it seems to me that in first issuing this Order in Council, and then promising an opportunity for discussion afterwards, the Government are playing with the House. What is the use of discussing it after it is done? For myself, I think the Order in Council illegal. The Act does not authorise it. If so, then until an amending Act is passed the Government cannot refuse to pay capitation on the full age, and any Board or Committee which is short-paid can sue the Government, and recover the amount due to them, which is really fixed by statute.

Mr. SAMUEL.—I am rather surprised that the honourable gentleman who has brought this matter before the House has not told us whether, in his opinion, it is or is not illegal to make such regulations by Order in Council as appear to have been made. If it is legal—that is to say, if the Act of 1877 provides that an Order in Council may be issued, making regulations such as those I now see before us—I do not see what he has to complain of, because, after all, it is merely one of those acts upon which the House may form a judgment as to whether Ministers possess its confidence or not. It is quite clear to me that if Ministers have power to do this their action is proper in this sense: that they have intimated this change while the House is in session, and while the House has an opportunity of taking their action into consideration. If it is necessary to pass an Act, of course the Order in Council is illegal; but, if the Order in Council is legal, I do not see why we should expect the Government to adopt any other course than they have taken.

Mr. TURNBULL.—I do not deny its legality.

Mr. SAMUEL.—Then, how can you find fault with the Government for having taken such a course? If the action had been taken whilst the House was not in session, and we had no opportunity of considering the matter, then there might have been some reason for complaint. If it had been made while we were not here, we should have had no opportunity of considering it; but, being done while we are here, and being duly published, it becomes one of those things upon which we may express an opinion—one of those acts by which we may judge as to whether the Government is worthy of our confidence or not. I certainly do not see what we have to complain of if the Order in Council is not ultra vires.

Mr. O'CALLAGHAN.—Another phase of this question that ought to be brought before the House is this: There is no doubt that no question occupied the public mind more than did this one during the late election; and I venture to say that a great majority of the members of this House expressed their opinions in respect of this proposal. The proposal before us is that we should pledge ourselves on either one side or the other, while not able to express our opinions as to whether it is justifiable or not in the public interests that this change should be made. That is a strong point which the Government ought to have considered before they issued this regulation.

Major ATKINSON.—I am not going to say that the honourable gentleman who moved the adjournment misunderstands the whole position, but I will say that there is no interference with the privileges of this House, actual or intended. The fact is this: The time is getting very short for giving the Education Boards notice of the intention of the Government, and it was decided to give notice in this way; but the Order in Council does not come into force until after Parliament rises. I have already undertaken to give Parliament an opportunity of discussing this matter, but it seemed desirable to give notice to the Education Boards of the policy of the Government; and there is no harm done. If this House should determine that such a reduction shall not be made, there will be plenty of time to rescind the Order in Council, and it will be the duty of the Government to rescind it if they agree with the decision that the House comes to. I can assure the House that there is not the slightest idea of interfering with its privileges. All we desired to do was to give the Boards timely notice of what we proposed to do.

Mr. O'CALLAGHAN.—Then the House will have a full opportunity of discussing the whole matter?

Major ATKINSON.—Yes; I have already promised that the House shall have ample opportunity of expressing its views before the proposals of the Government are given effect to.

Mr. SEDDON.—I received a telegram this morning from the Secretary to the Westland Education Board, which I will read to the House. To the Minister of Education I may say that a number of members were anxious to see him this morning; but he was engaged on other business, and could not give us an audience, or otherwise we intended to consult him upon the subject of the effect of the proposals upon the Westland Education Board. The telegram I received is to the following effect:—

"Just received notice of reduction of capitation to £3 15s., and that payment will be made on strict, instead of working, average. Reported in papers that children under six years and past Standard VI. are also to be excluded. If this be true the Westland Board will lose annually upwards of £1,200, or exactly a fifth of last year's income.—JOHN SMITH, Secretary."

Mr. Samuel

What I complain of in regard to the Order in Council is this: that it was issued by the Government before the House had had an opportunity of deciding upon the financial proposals of the Government; and it is no fault, I would say, of this House that we have not had that opportunity—the Government is solely responsible for that, because during the last three weeks we have been asking them to fix a day when we could go into the discussion and come to a definite conclusion upon their proposals. I regret also that the Government should have gone further by this Gazette notice than they proposed to go in their financial proposals. What they said in their proposals was as follows:—

"Our principal proposal will be to limit the capitation grant to the statutory amount of £3 15s. a head, which we think, under the circumstances of the colony, is ample for necessary purposes, and not to pay a capitation upon any child under six years old; but we shall make provision so that no country school shall be closed in consequence of this change."

There are two points on which the Gazette notice conflicts with what is here stated. In the first place, the Government now propose to pay upon actual attendance, instead of upon average attendance as heretofore; and that in itself makes a very serious difference to the Board's revenues.

Major ATKINSON.—I would suggest that it will be really spoiling the debate if we debate this matter this afternoon and then have it all over again.

Mr. TURNBULL.—It will not be reported then.

Major ATKINSON.—Oh! yes; all matters connected with finance are reported. And I would suggest that, the time being so short, we should not have two debates.

Mr. SEDDON.—Well, I was just about to finish. The second point I was going to refer to was this: In the Financial Statement the honourable gentleman states distinctly that no school shall be closed in consequence of this change. But if this Gazette notice is to be carried out in its entirety it must have the effect of closing schools in the case of Education Boards which have a large number of small schools under their control—Boards such as they have in the Education Districts of Taranaki, Marlborough, Westland, Grey, and such small districts. Their country schools must be closed unless there is a special allowance. These districts are therefore naturally alarmed, because in this Gazette there is no provision made for country districts. That is where the Gazette notice differs from the Financial Statement, and, naturally enough, the Boards in those places have telegraphed to members representing their districts. As to the question raised by the honourable member for New Plymouth, as to the legality of this proposal, I would point out that, under section 83 of the Education Act, "school-age" is defined to mean "any age between the years of five and fifteen, reckoned in each case from the last-preceding birthday." That is clear on that point. Then, the 100th section provides the subjects on which the Governor in Council may make, alter, and repeal regulations and orders. The subjects are as follow:—

"(1.) For the organization and management of the Department of Education:

"(2.) For defining the principle on which daily average attendance shall be calculated:

"(3.) For the examination and classification of teachers:

"(4.) For the employment, education, and examination of pupil-teachers:

"(5.) For the issue of certificates of competency to teachers:

"(6.) For the establishment and management of normal or training colleges:

"(7.) For defining the standards of education which, under the provisions of this Act, may be prescribed by regulations:

"(8.) For prescribing the times and manner of auditing the accounts of Boards and Committees:

"(9.) For making such other regulations as may be necessary to secure the due administration of this Act."

It is true that I am only a layman, but it seems to me that where the law clearly defines the subjects on which Orders in Council may be issued, while not one word in the Act bears on the subject now in question, there certainly is no power in the Governor in Council to issue such an order as has been issued in this case. I think it would be much more convenient if we had come to a conclusion on the financial proposals of the Government before this Gazette notice was issued, because it does conflict with the financial proposals of the Government in the direction I have pointed out.

Mr. SMITH.—I do not wish to discuss this question at present, but I should like to ask the Premier whether he will give us an opportunity of considering the question as to whether this Order in Council regulating the school-age shall or shall not take effect so far as the country schools are concerned. I wish that the House may have an opportunity of saying that it shall not have effect so far as country schools are concerned—that is to say, schools outside boroughs.

Major ATKINSON.—I have already told the House that it shall have full opportunity of discussing this matter, and that the Government have no intention of injuring any country schools by the reduction. When the matter comes up we shall be able to give full explanation; and I do hope the House will see that no good can be done by debating the matter now.

Mr. BARRON.—I wish to point out that the whole subject is being inquired into by a Select Committee appointed by the House, and, if honourable members will defer discussing the matter until the report of that Committee is made, they will come to the discussion with information such as no member of the House can at present be expected to be able to lay his hands upon. They will be able to consider the matter not only on the report of that Committee, but also when the estimates are under consideration. I may add that I may claim that there are not many honourable members who are more jealous of any encroachment upon the essentials of our education system, or more anxious to maintain them intact, than I am; and I know, as a member of that Committee, that information has been placed at our disposal which will be exceedingly valuable in considering this question.

Sir G. GREY.—I submit that the real question we have to consider is, whether the Government were authorised in advising the Governor to issue a Proclamation of this kind. I think we should very earnestly consider the conduct of the Government in taking this most serious step, for it is a most serious step to advise the Governor to issue a Proclamation which is unlawful, and which deprives large numbers of children of advantages which the law secures to them; and we should have an opportunity of considering this subject. What confidence can we repose in a Government that does an act of this kind?

Mr. FISH.—There is no doubt that the last speaker is correct in saying that the first thing we ought to do is to consider the fact of the Government having advised the Governor to issue this Proclamation. The honourable gentleman need not be surprised at that, because this is the second Proclamation the Government have issued this session. The other Proclamation was also in direct contravention of the law, and was regarding the election of Mayors on a certain day. That was an illegal Proclamation, issued hastily and without authority; and an Act has been introduced to validate the illegal Proclamation of the Government. And here we find the same thing. I think the honourable member for Timaru has done quite right in raising the question at the present time, not for the purpose of discussing the question of education or the education proposals of the Government, but as to whether the Government is justified or not in issuing an illegal Proclamation. The honourable member for Caversham is very disingenuous in his remarks, for he tells us, in order to prevent honourable members speaking on this subject, to wait till a report from the Committee comes down. It will take a month to get that, and that month will see the end of this session of Parliament; and therefore it is all very well for the honourable member for Caversham, in his new-born zeal for the present Government, to give expression to that opinion, which is calculated to mislead the House. I think we ought to require of the Government of the country that they should be the best acquainted with the law of the land.

Sir G. GREY.—We have not yet had any statement from the Government as to when a day will be fixed for considering this matter.

Major ATKINSON.—I cannot fix a day now, but it will be as early a day as possible; and I undertake that the House shall have an opportunity of discussing it. As I am advised, the Proclamation is not illegal in any sense of the word.

Mr. TURNBULL.—Nothing that has been said has changed the opinion I have formed in respect to this matter. Rather, I think, myself, on looking over the Act, that the honourable member for New Plymouth is probably wrong in his conclusions; but, even if he is not, I contend that while Parliament was sitting it was a most unwise thing to issue this Proclamation. It was quite competent, before that was done, to submit the question at once, and have it decided. If we are to be governed by Orders in Council, I do not see the necessity for honourable members at all; we are quite useless. In reference to this matter, I may say there is one honourable gentleman who is generally remarkable for his probity, but who has had the hardihood to stand up in the House and state that the matter was to be considered by a Committee, and to ask for an extension of one month. It is enough to surprise any member of the House. I was very much astonished at the conduct of that honourable member, because I consider he has hitherto always acted in a fair and open manner; but he now attempts to get rid of fair discussion by a statement which is calculated to mislead the House. He is a member of many years' standing; if he had been a new member he might have been pardoned. I hope the Government will lay on the table the opinion of the Law Officers on this subject. It is a most important subject, or I would not have ventured to call the attention of the House to it as I have done. But I think my duty as a member compelled me to do so, and that had I not done so I should have failed in my duty.

Mr. SAMUEL.—Would it be convenient for the Government to inform the House under what Act and under what section of that Act this Proclamation purports to be made? There are so many Acts on the subject that it would be impossible to look them all up now. Therefore I should be glad if he would say under what Act it was made.

Mr. SEDDON.—I beg to ask the Government if they will lay on the table the opinion of the Crown Law Officers on this matter. If we had that before us it would be more satisfactory.

Major ATKINSON.—I think it would be more convenient to leave this matter where it stands, so that we may go into the whole question when we discuss this particular vote. There can be no harm in that. This is merely putting in form certain proposals of the Government. It would be an advantage to the school bodies, because they would then see definitely what was proposed. Honourable members have, moreover, been informed of this.

Mr. FITZHERBERT.—In the meantime, I think the opinion of the Law Officers should be placed on the table of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER.—I must point out that, the honourable member for Timaru having replied, I must now put the question.

Motion for adjournment of the House negatived.

Mr. FITZHERBERT.—I again ask the Government to lay the opinion of the Law Officers on the table. The Premier knows he is relying on that opinion he has received, and I ask him to submit it to honourable members.

Mr. FISHER.—I suppose the honourable gentleman is quite aware that that would be a most improper thing to do.

PUBLIC WORKS STATEMENT.

(For all Tables and Returns referred to in this Statement, see Appendix D.-1.)

Mr. MITCHELSON.—Mr. Speaker, in the Statement which I am about to make this evening I shall not attempt, in describing the various works, to go into minute details, as I find that all essential particulars as regards the progress of the construction of the railways and other works are more completely given in the reports of the Engineers—which have already been laid on the table of the House—than I could hope to give them in any Statement of reasonable length. In the case of the several railways which I shall have to treat upon, therefore, I shall merely endeavour to state, as shortly as possible, the present condition of the various lines; the funds already available, and now proposed to be provided for them; the rate at which we propose to expend these funds; and the condition into which the several railways will probably be brought when these funds are expended.

RAILWAYS IN COURSE OF CONSTRUCTION AND PROPOSED, INCLUDING ADDITIONS TO OPENED RAILWAYS.

To commence, therefore, with the railways—as I find it has been usual to commence with that class of works—I find that the total length of railways opened on the 31st March last was—in the North Island, 632 miles; and in the South Island, 1,090 miles: total, 1,722 miles. On the 31st October last there were opened for traffic 1,734 miles, of which 632 were in the North Island, and 1,102 in the South Island. There were also at that date 176 miles of railway in course of construction, of which 87 were in the North Island and 89 in the South Island. The total expenditure on railways, including cost of provincial lines and purchase of district railways, up to the 31st March last was £14,082,711; and the liabilities on the 31st March were £486,976; making, in all, £14,569,687.

Helensville Northwards.

On the railway from Helensville northwards a contract is in progress for the formation of four miles, and it is expected to be finished during the present month.

Until the line is completed to Kaukapakapa, a distance of seven miles from Helensville, it will not carry much traffic, and it is therefore proposed to complete it to that extent as soon as practicable; but it is not intended to put a terminal station at Kaukapakapa, as it can be worked as a branch from Helensville until further extended. The funds already provided, with addition of £25,000 now proposed, will complete the railway for traffic for seven miles, up to Kaukapakapa, and will also enable the formation to be extended for a further distance of eight miles. The rate of expenditure proposed is—£10,000 for this year, and £27,000, £20,000, and £17,761 for the three following years: total to end of March, 1891, £74,761.

Auckland to Penrose Doubling-line.

For the Auckland to Penrose doubling-line an allocation was made under the loan of 1886; but, as it would have gone only a short way towards the completion of what was required, none of the necessary works have as yet been put in hand; and, as the balance necessary to complete the work, some £77,000, cannot conveniently be provided out of the money now proposed to be borrowed, it is not intended at present to take any further steps in the matter.

Grahamstown—Te Aroha.

On the Grahamstown—Te Aroha Railway the rails are laid from Grahamstown to Kauaeranga, about five miles, and the formation, without bridges, is complete between Kauaeranga and Hikutaia, about eight miles; and in progress, from thence to near Ohinemuri, about six miles. It is expected that the latter section will be finished in July next. From Ohinemuri to Te Aroha, thirteen miles, the contract survey is complete, but works have not yet been put in hand. Total length from Grahamstown to Te Aroha, thirty-two miles.

The funds already provided will complete the line to Ohinemuri, twenty miles from Grahamstown; and it is proposed to put the remainder of the bridging and platelaying still required for this section in hand this year.

The rate of expenditure proposed is—For this year, £10,000; and for the three following years, £15,000, £10,000, and £6,921 respectively: total, £41,921.

Putaruru—Rotorua.

On the Putaruru—Rotorua Railway a contract has been let for formation, platelaying, and stations from Putaruru to Ngatira, eight miles, and the works are progressing satisfactorily, and are expected to be finished in June next. At the Rotorua end, five miles, between Rotorua and Ngongotaha, have been set aside for Maori piecework, and a considerable extent of formation has already been done by the Natives in a satisfactory manner. The intervening distance between Ngatira and Ngongotaha, about nineteen miles, has been surveyed for a contract, but works have not yet been put in hand. The total length from Putaruru to Rotorua is thirty-two miles.

The funds already provided, with the addition of £18,000 (including £9,000 for rails) now proposed to be allocated, will complete the railway for traffic from Putaruru to the Okohiriki Saddle, a length of eighteen miles, that being the shortest distance that can be opened with any real advantage, and will also enable communication to be established by road from that point to Ohinemutu, distance about fourteen miles. The rate of expenditure proposed, exclusive of amount required for rails, is—£40,000 for this year, and £25,000, £25,000, and £7,377 for the three following years: total to end of March, 1891, £97,377.

North Island Trunk Railway.

Coming now to the North Island Trunk Railway, I find, with very much regret, that the original estimate of this line was altogether misleading, the probable cost originally indicated having been £1,360,000, whereas the present estimate, exclusive of the probable costs and charges of raising the loan, and the amount allocated to purchase of Native lands, is £2,085,000. If to this amount there is added, say, £100,000 for raising loans, and also the £100,000 already allocated for Native lands, it brings the total to £2,285,000; and, taking the £1,000,000 already authorised from this, shows £1,285,000 as still required to be authorised in order to complete the whole line from Te Awamutu to Marton.

If the work is to go on, under the altered circumstances now disclosed, then the proposals which I have shown on Table C attached to this Statement, and which I shall presently describe, would, I think, be suitable for adoption in so far as regards the amount of money which might reasonably be expended during the present and three following years at each end of the railway; but before any further work is undertaken I think the House should have an opportunity of expressing its opinion on the new aspect which the matter has assumed; and, in any case, I do not propose to put any new contracts in hand until after next session.

With regard to the alternative route proposed for this railway, I find that the original estimate for the line from Stratford to Te Awamutu was £1,036,000; and at first sight, therefore, this project might appear to have a great advantage as compared with completing the railway from Marton to Te Awamutu; but, excepting that the estimated rate per mile was much higher than that for the central line, we have no guarantee that this estimate is any more accurate than that for the central route, and it would therefore be premature to express any opinion on the subject until a trustworthy estimate of this line is completed for comparison with the revised estimate now made of the central line. It would therefore, I think, be desirable that a survey should be made of the Taranaki route of a more accurate character than those which have hitherto been made, in order that something like a correct estimate may be formed of the probable cost of a railway in that direction. The cost of this survey would not be lost, even if the railway is not made, as the information gained could be utilised in locating a road, which must be made in the future in the event of no railway being made.

The best point to diverge from the Main

Trunk Railway in order to reach Taranaki would be at a point near Maramata, about fifty miles from Te Awamutu; and the cost of construction of railway, complete and equipped for traffic, from Te Awamutu to this point, including due proportion of cost of raising loan and departmental and other expenditure of every kind, is estimated at £500,000. This is inclusive of about £250,000 for expenditure and liabilities already incurred.

The only doubt, therefore, as regards the probable cost of a railway from Te Awamutu to Taranaki is as to the cost of the link between Maramata and Stratford, or wherever might be the best place to join the existing Taranaki Railway. The present estimate of this connection is £800,000; but, as there are no trustworthy data on which such an estimate can be based, it cannot be relied upon as being even approximately accurate.

In connection with this phase of the subject it should also be stated that the expenditure and liabilities (with a reasonable margin for contingencies) on account of works already undertaken between Maramata and Marton—including surveys £16,000, roads £40,000, Native-land purchase £100,000, and a due proportion of departmental expenditure and costs and charges of raising loans—will amount to within a trifle of £300,000; and if any further contracts are let at the south end of the line this amount will of course be increased.

Having thus dealt with the subject generally, I will now proceed to state the present condition of the line, and the rate of expenditure per annum which could reasonably be undertaken upon it, if decided to be carried on, and also the points to which that expenditure would probably carry the railway at each end by the end of the financial year 1890-91.

North End.—At the north end the railway is completed and ready for traffic from Te Awamutu to Te Kuiti, a distance of twenty-five miles and a half; and from Te Kuiti to the Upper Mokau Valley, length nine miles, a contract for formation and platelaying is in progress, and expected to be completed in December, 1888. From the Upper Mokau Valley to the Poro-o-tarao Range, eleven miles, the contract survey is completed; but works have not yet been put in hand. Through the Poro-o-tarao saddle a contract of a mile and a half is in progress, including a tunnel of fifty-three chains. Total length from Te Awamutu to end of tunnel contract, forty-seven miles. South of the tunnel a contract survey has been made for about eight miles, to the Maramata Junction. During the four years ending the 31st March, 1891, which is the extent of the programme which I have sketched out so far, it is proposed that the line shall be carried on steadily from Te Kuiti to near Maramata, in the Ongarue Valley, about fifty-five miles from Te Awamutu, this being the point at which a line could diverge to Taranaki. And the rate of expenditure indicated is £70,000 for this year, and £75,000, £75,000, and £80,000 for the three following years: total to end of March, 1891, £300,000.

Mr. Mitchelson

South End.—At the south end of the railway the section from Marton to Hunterville, nineteen miles, is nearly completed, and will be ready for opening about Christmas. From Hunterville, for about twenty-five miles, to a point about five miles up the Hautapu Valley, the contract survey is completed, and a contract for about eight miles of it is prepared, but the works have not yet been put in hand. The contract survey is also in progress for a further distance of about nineteen miles, to the end of the rough country at Turangarere, near the head of the Hautapu Gorge, sixty-three miles from Marton. As in the case of the works at the north end of the line, the proposal indicated on Table C is to carry on steadily from Marton for the four years ending 31st March, 1891, by which time it is anticipated that the railway will have reached to Powhakarua, near the mouth of the Hautapu Valley, a distance of about thirty-two miles from Marton; and the rate of expenditure suggested is £25,000 for this year, and £35,000, £40,000, and £42,000 for the three following years: total to end of March, 1891, £143,000.

After carrying out these proposals at both north and south ends of the line, it is estimated that there will be a balance of loan still available for further works to the extent of about £54,000.

Further Works and Surveys.—Further preliminary surveys have been made for the railway to extent of about twelve miles, at various places between the Murimotu and Waimarino Plains, and to extent of about twenty miles between the Waimarino Plains and the Upper Wanganui Valley; and service roads and tracks in connection with the railway have been made, in whole or in part, from Hunterville to Turangarere, twenty-four miles; Upper Rangitikei to Turangarere, four miles; Pipiriki to Ohakune, twenty-five miles; Murimotu to Upper Wanganui Valley, fifty miles; and Te Koura to Waimiha, fourteen miles. The Wanganui River has also been cleared of snags and otherwise improved from Wanganui to near Pipiriki, about fifty-six miles. The expenditure and liabilities on these roads and river-works up to the 30th September last were £39,239.

Purchase of Native Lands.—Of the £100,000 allocated for purchase of Native lands under the loan for the North Island Trunk Railway, about £70,300 was expended last year, leaving about £29,700 for expenditure during the present year.

The work done up to 30th November ultimo consisted of the purchase of 490,000 acres, at a cost of £54,100; and there is now under negotiation the purchase of blocks aggregating about 750,000 acres, on which £33,000 has already been paid. The lands purchased and under negotiation are situated mainly around Ruapehu and Tongariro, with the Wanganui River as their boundary on the west. The surveyed line of railway intersects the purchased land for forty-five miles, and that under negotiation for about fifteen miles, or sixty miles in all, out of the total 216 miles between Marton and Te Awamutu.

Napier-Palmerston.

The Napier to Palmerston Railway was completed and opened for traffic to Woodville (ninety-seven miles from Napier Spit) in March last, and now only remains to be completed from Woodville to Palmerston, a distance of about fifteen miles. Of this distance, four miles in the Manawatu Gorge is under contract for formation and bridges, exclusive of tunnels, and is expected to be finished in October, 1888. From Woodville to the upper end of the Gorge, three miles, and from the lower end of the Gorge to Palmerston, eight miles, the contract survey is completed; but works have not yet been put in hand.

To complete this very important link in the railway system of the colony an addition to existing funds is required to the extent of £120,000 (which includes £22,000 for rails), and this sum is proposed to be allocated to it accordingly; and it is hoped that the work will be completed by March, 1890. In order to get it done by that time it will be necessary to proceed at once with the tunnels in the Manawatu Gorge, and to let a contract for the Pohangina Bridge as soon as practicable.

The rate of expenditure proposed, exclusive of amount required for rails, is £40,000 for this year, and £50,000 and £70,813 respectively for the two following years: total to the end of March, 1890, £160,813.

Wellington-Woodville.

The Wellington-Woodville Railway is completed and open for traffic from Wellington to Mangamahoe, a distance of eighty-two miles; and a combined road- and railway-bridge has been constructed over the Manawatu River at Awapurua, near Woodville. From Mangamahoe to Eketahuna, length six miles, a contract for formation and platelaying is progressing satisfactorily, and is expected to be completed in August, 1888. Total distance from Wellington to Eketahuna, eighty-eight miles. From Eketahuna to Woodville, twenty-seven miles, the contract survey is completed, but works have not yet been put in hand. Total length from Wellington to Woodville, 115 miles.

The balance of the old loan will finish the line to Eketahuna, and complete some protective works which are requisite at the Awapurua Bridge. It is not proposed to provide for anything further at present.

The rate of expenditure proposed is £37,000 for this year, and £24,421 for next year: total to the end of March, 1889, £61,421.

In relation to the distance, just stated, from Wellington to Woodville by the Rimutaka route, 115 miles, it may be interesting to honourable members to know also the distance by the Palmerston route, which is 105 miles.

Blenheim-Awatere.

On the Blenheim-Awatere Railway the formation, without bridging, is made for four miles and a half, south of Blenheim; and a contract, called the Dashwood contract, has also been let for formation three miles and a half further, and is progressing slowly. It is estimated that the works will be finished in February next. From the end of the Dashwood contract to the Dashwood Pass, two miles and a half, the contract survey is completed, but works have not yet been put in hand. Total length from Blenheim to Dashwood Pass, ten miles and a half. A preliminary survey has been made from the Pass to a convenient stopping-place on the southern bank of the Awatere, five miles and a half further. This makes the total distance from Blenheim to Awatere sixteen miles.

To complete the line to the Awatere would cost about £99,000, which is much more than could be afforded for it out of the loan now proposed. It has therefore been decided to recommend an allocation of £9,000 only, by means of which, in conjunction with existing funds, it will be possible to complete the first five miles at the Blenheim end for traffic, and to connect it with the Awatere by a dray-road, and also to build the railway-bridge over the Awatere, for use in the meantime as a road-bridge. This will be a great boon to the locality, as the river is a very dangerous one to cross, and is also the only large river remaining unbridged between Picton and the Bluff.

The rate of expenditure proposed is—For this year £7,000, and for the two following years £15,000 and £18,675 respectively: making, in all, £40,675.

Greymouth-Hokitika.

On the Hokitika to Greymouth Railway, at the Hokitika end, the line is finished and ready for traffic from Hokitika to near the Arahura, four miles; and between that point and the Kapitea Creek, seven miles, the formation is partly made, and the bridge over the Arahura River is completed.

At the Greymouth end the rails are laid for a mile and a half, and the formation is partly made for a further distance of seven miles and a half, to the Teremakau River, and a contract has been let for the bridge over the Teremakau. The total length finished and under construction at the two ends is thus twenty miles. This leaves a gap of four miles between the Kapitea and the Teremakau, on which no work has been done, pending final decision as to route; and it is intended that exhaustive inquiries shall be made as to the best route to adopt throughout this distance before any works along it are undertaken.

The money already available, with the addition of £2,000 now proposed to be allocated for the purchase of further rails, will finish this line, with permanent-way complete, for nine miles at the Greymouth end and four miles at the Hokitika end, and will also complete the formation from the fourth to the eleventh mile at the Hokitika end; and it is proposed to go on with the works to that extent without delay.

The rate of expenditure proposed, exclusive of amount required for rails, is for this year £24,000, and for the next two years £20,000 and £19,904 respectively: the total sum available for construction-works being £63,904.

Mount Somers.

The Mount Somers Railway is completed and open for traffic from Tinwald to Mount Somers, a distance of twenty-three miles; and from Mount Somers to Springburn, length four miles. The work is in progress by the "unemployed" of Christchurch. It is estimated that this length will be completed in May next. Total distance from Tinwald to Springburn, twenty-seven miles.

The funds provided for this work under the loan of 1886 are already exhausted; but it is proposed to allocate £7,000, including £2,000 for rails, out of the loan now contemplated, in order to finish the line to Springburn, which is a very convenient stopping-place. If this is authorised the whole work can be completed by about the end of the present financial year.

The rate of expenditure proposed, exclusive of amount required for rails, is £7,000 for this year, and £2,027 for next year; the total sum available for construction-works as from the 31st March last, including the additional sum now proposed to be allocated, being £9,027.

Livingstone Branch.

The Windsor - Livingstone Railway, from Windsor to Tokaraki, twelve miles, was completed and opened for traffic in August last. It is not intended to carry it any further at present, the sum of £1,000 allocated to it under loan, now proposed, being merely to provide for some additional accommodation required at the stations.

Otago Central.

On the Otago Central Railway the rails are laid from the Chain Hills to Big Mount Allen Creek, thirteen miles; and the formation and tunnels are completed for a further distance of about twenty miles to the Sutton Stream. Throughout this distance also, from Big Mount Allen Creek to the Sutton, the masonry of the bridges is under contract and making satisfactory progress; and a contract has also been entered into for the superstructure of the bridges along seven miles of the distance between Big Mount Allen Creek and the Deep Stream. It is estimated that the line will be ready for opening to the Deep Stream (twenty miles from the commencing-point) about September next.

From the Sutton Stream to Middlemarch the distance is seven miles, and from Middlemarch to Lake Hawea about 143 miles; and along the whole of this distance the contract survey is completed, but no works have as yet been put in hand. The total length, from Chain Hills to Lake Hawea, is 183 miles.

The balance of the loan of 1886 being insufficient to complete this railway to the first point to which it could be opened with any real advantage, it is proposed to supplement the funds already provided by a further sum of £105,000, including £20,000 for rails, which, it is estimated, will enable the railway to be completed for traffic from Chain Hills to Middlemarch, a distance of forty miles; and, if our proposals in this respect are authorised, this work will be carried out with all reasonable despatch.

Mr. Mitchelson

The rate of expenditure proposed, exclusive of amount required for rails, is—For this year £70,000, and for the next two years £60,000 and £40,974 respectively: the total amount available for construction-works, including the additional sum now proposed to be allocated, being £170,974.

Catlin's River.

The Catlin's River Railway is completed and open for traffic from Balclutha to Romahapa, a distance of eight miles; and from Romahapa to the Ahuriri Flat, length about five miles. The formation is under construction by "unemployed" from Dunedin, and is progressing satisfactorily. It is estimated that this length will be finished in May or June next. From the Ahuriri Flat, over the saddle, and to the Owake Flat, about six miles, the contract survey is completed; but works have not yet been put in hand.

The money already provided for this railway under loan of 1886 will finish it from Romahapa to the Ahuriri Flat, and will also complete the formation for two miles further.

The rate of expenditure proposed is—For this year £12,000, and for the next two years £15,000 and £10,398 respectively: making, in all, £37,998, which was the total balance of the allocation of 1886 on the 31st March last.

Riversdale-Switzers.

On the Riversdale-Switzers Railway the rails are laid from Riversdale to the Mataura River, a distance of two miles; and the formation, exclusive of bridges, is constructed for five miles further; and the contract survey is completed throughout. The total length from Riversdale to Switzers is fourteen miles.

The balance of the allocation for this railway under loan of 1886 is only sufficient to complete it, with permanent-way, &c., from Riversdale to a point on the north side of the Mataura River, a distance of three miles, and to do the formation from thence to the Switzers Township, eleven miles further. It would require a further sum of £15,000 to complete it altogether, and this amount the Government does not see its way to provide out of the loan at present proposed, as there are so many more-promising undertakings which also require to be completed. It is therefore merely proposed to go on with the expenditure of the funds in hand for this line so far as they will reach.

The rate of expenditure proposed is—For this year £3,000, and for the next three years £5,000, £5,000, and £6,646 respectively; which makes up the total available at the 31st March last—namely, £19,642.

Seaward Bush.

The Seaward Bush Railway is completed and opened for traffic from Appleby to Waimatua, a distance of about five miles; and from Waimatua to Oteramika, length about six miles, the work is in progress by the "unemployed," and expected to be finished about the end of March next. From Oteramika to Waimahaka, twelve miles, the contract survey is completed; but no works have as yet been put in hand.

Total length from Appleby to Waimahaka, twenty-three miles.

The balance of loan of 1886, together with £10,000 (including £5,000 for rails) proposed to be allocated under loan now contemplated, will be sufficient to finish the line for traffic to Oteramika; and, if the allocation proposed is approved of, the work can be completed by April or May next.

The rate of expenditure proposed, exclusive of amount required for rails, is £5,000 for this year, and £2,508 for next year: the total funds available for construction-works as at the 31st March last, including additional sum now proposed to be allocated, being £7,508.

Lumsden-Mararoa.

The Lumsden-Mararoa Railway is completed as far as it is contemplated to carry it at present, being open for traffic from Lumsden to Mossburn, a distance of ten miles and a half.

Edendale-Fortrose.

The Edendale-Fortrose Railway is completed and opened from Edendale to Wyndham, a distance of four miles; and the formation is finished for three miles and a half further. A contract has also been let for another two miles, including a tunnel ten chains long. This brings the line to the crossing of the main road at Glenham Homestead. It is estimated that the tunnel-works will be finished by about the end of March next. The total distance from Edendale to Glenham is nine miles and a half. From Glenham to the Waimahaka Valley, nine miles further, the contract survey is completed; but no works have as yet been put in hand.

The money already provided under the loan of 1886 will complete this railway to the crossing of the main road at the Glenham Homestead already referred to, and it is not proposed to carry it any further at present.

The rate of expenditure proposed is—For this year £9,000, and for next year £18,656, making, in all, £27,656: and it is hoped that the line will be completed to Glenham by about March, 1889.

ADDITIONS TO OPENED LINES.

The expenditure on additions to opened lines, which includes a multiplicity of works, such as additional railway-stations, additional goods-sheds and engine-sheds, additional sidings, and additional rolling-stock, &c., has in the past been a very considerable item of our outgoings under the Public Works Fund: the amount thus expended in 1883-84 having been £174,169; in 1884-85, £140,326; in 1885-86, £90,962; in 1886-87, £79,761. It will thus be seen that the expenditure has been continuously decreasing, the fact being that the railways in many cases were very poorly equipped previous to 1883-84, while they are at present fairly well equipped in every particular. I anticipate, therefore, that the expenditure which I have provided for during the present and the next three following years on this class of works will be sufficient—namely, for the present year, £40,000; and for the three following years, £39,000, £29,000, and £19,239 respectively; and I am in hope that after the year 1890-91 works of this character will have become so insignificant that they can be made a charge on revenue.

WORKING RAILWAYS.

Coming now to the working railways, I find that the receipts for the year ending the 31st March last were £998,768, and the expenditure £699,072; the net profit being £299,696, or £2 6s. per cent. on the outlay of £18,017,567 which the lines open for traffic had cost up to the end of March last.

The rates of profit on the different sections have varied from £5 10s. 2d. on the Greymouth Section to 11d. on the Pictou Section.

In considering this profit it should be borne in mind that the railways do a large amount of free work for other departments, probably to the extent of about £35,000 per annum.

The mileage open at the end of the year was 1,722 miles, 114 miles having been opened or purchased during the year.

The tables attached to the report of the General Manager, which have already been laid before the House, show in what respects the traffic has fluctuated. It will be seen that in merchandise, timber, and grain there is a less tonnage, while live-stock, wool, and minerals have considerably increased.

Honourable members will find it very interesting to study these tables, as there is no better index to the business of the colony than what we have disclosed in the railway returns. Revenue is of course largely affected by the rates which are charged, but the tonnage very clearly indicates the volume of business in the colony.

Thus, in the case of the farming interests, the tonnage of grain being much smaller than in previous years, and being indeed less than in any year since 1879-80, while the traffic in live-stock and wool has largely increased, shows clearly that greater attention is being paid to sheep and cattle, and that the area of country under crop has been reduced.

Again, as regards the building trade, the timber-tonnage on railways having been very much less shows that this trade, during the year ending March last, must have been in a depressed state.

During the year ending March last a large amount of additional rolling-stock, which has been almost entirely built in the colony, has been supplied; and improvements of various kinds, at stations and on the various lines of railway, have been carried out, whereby public accommodation has been increased or working facilitated.

None of the engines which are being manufactured in the colony have yet been completed, but delivery of some of them is expected about the end of the year.

The result of the working during the present financial year, up to the period ending the 15th October, is that the revenue for the twenty-eight weeks of this year is nearly £20,000 in excess of that for the corresponding period last year, while the expenditure is slightly less.

In the short time I have had at my disposal I have not been able to examine closely into all matters of detail; but reductions in expenditure are being made wherever I have seen them to be possible; and I believe that still further economies can be effected, even with the considerable addition to our business which I confidently look forward to, as I am assured that we may expect a largely-increased grain-tonnage this season.

It may be well, however, to remind honourable members that economy can very often be effected by reducing conveniences which have been previously enjoyed, but which are in some cases too liberal for the small population and the business which requires to be done. All such endeavours to economize are, however, generally stoutly resisted in the particular districts where the necessary economies are attempted to be carried out.

Under ordinary circumstances there would be many other matters which I should properly be expected to deal with; but, as circumstances at present stand, I shall not attempt to indicate in detail the directions in which I may think that the management might be improved, the revenue increased, and the expenditure reduced, because the Government has already stated that, in its opinion, the groundwork of the system is defective, and that it is essential for the proper administration of this valuable property that Commissioners should be appointed who can act independently, and who will deal with the railways and conduct their business unfettered by political control. For this purpose I have prepared a Bill, which is now before the House; and I believe that, great as are the benefits which the colony has already derived from its railway system, much better results may be reasonably expected if the proposals now before Parliament are assented to.

Before leaving this branch of my subject, however, I would wish to repeat what has already been said by my colleague the Colonial Treasurer—namely, that I have no fault to find with the officers of the Railway Department. While the groundwork of the system, however, involves continual change, and want of finality in any principle of action, no good can come of it; but I expect to learn that, under the Commissioners, officers who have served the colony faithfully for many years will do much more useful work in the future than the surrounding circumstances have admitted of their doing in the past.

ROADS.

The next subject which I have to treat upon is that of roads of all classes; and, before going into the details of this subject, it may be interesting to honourable members that I should give them the results of a return recently prepared, showing the length of roads constructed and improved in the colony generally out of the Public Works Fund from the commencement of the public-works policy. These I find to be as follow:—

Mr. Mitchelson

Dray roads—			Miles.
North Island ..	..	..	3,284
Middle Island ..	..	..	1,108
Total ..	..	..	4,342
Horse roads—
North Island ..	..	..	2,452
Middle Island ..	..	..	1,126
Total ..	..	..	3,578

Grand total of roads of all classes.. 7,920

Mostly in connection with these roadworks, but in some cases as separate undertakings, a number of large bridges have also been constructed, not to mention smaller bridges and culverts which have been taken no special account of; and I find that the number of these large bridges is—In the North Island, 611 bridges, having a total length of 48,239ft.; and in the South Island, 154 bridges, having a total length of 32,750ft.: total for both Islands, 765 bridges, having a total length of 80,989ft.

ROADS NORTH OF AUCKLAND, MAIN ROADS, MISCELLANEOUS ROADS AND BRIDGES, AND GRANTS IN AID.

Roads north of Auckland.

On roads north of Auckland the expenditure for the year ending on the 31st March last was £30,738, and from the end of March to the end of September there was a further expenditure of £2,957, leaving a balance then available, out of the amounts provided for this class of works, to the extent of only £913. Of this sum, £420 is due to counties under grants already made; so that there is only £493 remaining for any further undertakings.

A further allocation for this class of works would be very desirable; but the area of country requiring development is so great, and the counties requiring aid are so numerous, that nothing short of £50,000 or £60,000 would be sufficient to attain any material benefit, and the Government has not seen its way to making an allocation to anything like that extent.

Main Roads.

The works undertaken by the Government under the head of "Main Roads" consist, principally, of the maintenance of the roads from Oxford to Rotorua, Tauranga to East Cape, Tauranga to Napier via Taupo, Nelson to Westport, Greymouth, and Hokitika, Hokitika to Christchurch, and the Haast Pass Track. The amount expended on this class of works during the last four years has ranged from about £32,000 to £22,000, and the amount proposed for the present and next three years ranges from about £19,000 to £5,000, the intention being to gradually reduce the charge for this class of works against the Public Works Fund until it disappears altogether at the end of the fourth year, handing over such of the works as can reasonably be so handed over to the local bodies, and providing for the others out of the Consolidated Fund.

Miscellaneous Roads and Bridges.

Under the head of "Miscellaneous Roads and Bridges" a number of new works have from time to time been undertaken, varying in extent during the last four years from about £61,000 to about £40,000 per annum, and we have thought it necessary to make provision for the completion of such of these works as are incomplete, and also to some extent for works of a similar character in the future. It is proposed, however, that the expenditure shall be gradually reduced, for the present and three following years, from £85,000 to £5,000 per annum, and it is intended to stop such expenditure altogether at the end of the fourth year. The principal works in hand during last year have been—Improvements in road from Lyell to Westport, cost about £5,000; bridge over the Buller River at the Lyell, for which a contract is in progress, estimated total cost about £9,500; bridge over the Waiau at the Hanmer Plains, cost about £15,000; bridge over the Clarence River, now completed, cost about £18,600; road, Kaikoura to Clarence, estimated cost £12,000; road, Kaikoura to Waiau, also now completed, cost about £31,500; and bridges over the Clutha at Beaumont and Roxburgh which have cost, respectively, about £12,500 and £9,900.

Grants in Aid (including Roads under the Roads and Bridges Construction Act, Subsidies to Local Bodies under Finance and Powers Act, and Provision for Work for "Unemployed").

Roads under the Roads and Bridges Construction Act.—The transactions under the Roads and Bridges Construction Act have been brought almost to a conclusion. The only grants made during the past financial year were for completing some bridges in Collingwood and Tuapeka Counties that had been commenced under the provisions of the Act, and the amount thus granted only came to £314.

The liabilities outstanding on the 31st March last were £12,932—namely, £11,648 on main roads, and £1,284 on district roads.

Since the 31st March these liabilities have been largely paid off, and the only important undertaking that is still unfinished is the Wairoa Bridge at Clyde, which is well advanced, and is expected to be completed by about the end of March next. The remaining liabilities consist of sundry small balances, several of which have been outstanding for a long while; and, as it is considered that the time has now come when all transactions under the Roads and Bridges Act should be closed, the local bodies have been informed that these balances will shortly be written off, unless good reason is shown to the contrary.

Subsidies to Local Bodies.—As regards subsidies to local bodies under the Local Bodies' Finance and Powers Act, my colleague the Colonial Treasurer has already, in his Financial Statement, alluded to this subject, so I shall do no more than reiterate that it is proposed to reduce the amount of subsidies paid last year by one-half for the current year, and provision has been made in the current year's estimates for this purpose.

Further provision will also be made under the Public Works Fund for half the subsidies due next year, in the event of its not being practicable to throw them entirely on the Consolidated Fund before that date; but, in any case, they will cease to be a charge on the Public Works Fund after March, 1890.

Work for "Unemployed."—It is to be regretted that, owing to the depressed condition of the country, it has been necessary for some time past to expend considerable amounts of money on more or less unproductive undertakings, in order to provide work for the unemployed, and these amounts have hitherto been mostly charged to loan.

As the Government, however, does not consider that any moneys expended on relief-works are a proper charge to loan funds, it is intended that, for the future, only such amounts for "unemployed" shall be charged to loan as are expended on works of a reproductive character. And, if further assistance than that is required to meet the "unemployed" difficulty, it is intended to provide for it out of consolidated revenue.

It is also considered that no relief-works that can possibly be avoided should be undertaken, as we believe that it is detrimental to the interests of the men themselves to keep them employed on purely relief-work,—which, after all, is merely another name for charitable aid.

One of the great difficulties in connection with the matter is to get the men out of the towns and into the country; but this difficulty must be got over, as it is out of the question that we can continue to provide work within the towns, and we have therefore determined that such further work as is provided should be entirely in the country districts, and of, so far as possible, an immediately-reproductive character.

On the class of works hitherto undertaken for providing work for the "unemployed" the expenditure last year was £16,629; and provision has been made for further expenditure, if requisite, to the extent, in all, of about £30,000 for the present and three following years.

ROADS TO OPEN UP CROWN LANDS BEFORE SALE, ALSO VILLAGE SETTLEMENTS.

Roads to open up Crown Lands.—The important work of rendering the Crown lands more accessible to settlement, by the clearing and formation of road-lines, has been and is being promoted extensively throughout the colony, as will be seen from the annual report of the Survey Department for the year 1886-87.

The expenditure on this class of works has been very considerable, having been about £84,000 in 1883-84, £49,000 in 1884-85, £62,000 in 1885-86, and £57,000 in 1886-87; and for the present year the expenditure will have to be about £60,000. In the two following years, however, it is proposed to considerably diminish the expenditure, the amount proposed for 1888-89 being £45,000, and for 1889-90 being £20,000, subject to some slight modifications, which I shall refer to presently under the head of village settlements; but it is not anticipated, in any case, that the expenditure out of the Public Works Fund should proceed beyond 1889-90, as my colleague the Minister of Lands hopes that by that time he will have sufficient revenue in the shape of Land Fund to cover works of this character which may require to be done.

Village Settlements.—For village settlements the expenditure during the year ending 1886-87, on the basis of the vote of £5,000 then granted for this class of undertakings, was £1,891; and it has been found necessary to make further provision to the extent of £72,200, to cover the expenditure of £4,092 between March and September last, and the liabilities of £68,118 existing at the end of September: total, £72,150, or, in round numbers, £72,200. Under this allocation it was anticipated that the expenditure would be £23,000 this year, and £20,000, £20,000, and £9,200 respectively for the three following years; but the Government has since been given to understand that the liabilities, as stated at the end of September, may possibly not all accrue, and that consequently something less than the £72,200 may eventually be found to be sufficient: and, if this is so, the balance thus saved will be made available for further works in the shape of roads to open up lands before sale.

ROADS ON GOLDFIELDS.

Coming now to the last of our very numerous classes of roads—between some of which, I may say, the line of demarcation is so very slight that they are rather apt to overlap—I find that on account of roads on the goldfields the expenditure for the four years ending March, 1887, has been, in round numbers, £27,000, £15,000, £32,000, and £32,000 respectively; while for the present and two following years the amounts proposed to be provided are £31,000, £30,000, and £10,760 respectively. The amount thus allocated for next year is large, but most of it will be required to meet existing engagements.

WATERWORKS ON GOLDFIELDS.

On account of waterworks on the goldfields the expenditure during the last four years has been, respectively, in round numbers, £16,000, £8,000, £9,000, and £7,000; while for this year and next year the expenditure proposed is only £1,200 and £800 respectively, the intention being merely to complete certain works which are in hand, as it is considered that works of this character can be more satisfactorily carried out by private enterprise.

PURCHASE OF NATIVE LANDS, NORTH ISLAND.

On the purchase of Native land in the North Island (exclusive of land along the North Island Main Trunk Railway) the expenditure during the last four years has been, in round numbers, respectively, £24,000, £70,000, £34,000, and £18,000. For this year the expenditure required to meet engagements will amount to about £12,000; but, as £11,000 will come to the credit of the vote from the fund provided for land-purchase along the North Island Main Trunk Railway, the actual charge this year will amount to only about £1,000; and for the next two years the expenditure is proposed to be £10,000 and £5,000 respectively. The total allocation proposed for this purpose is, thus, £16,000.

The amount of land in respect of which transactions were completed under this heading, and which has consequently become the property of the Crown, for the period from the 31st March, 1886, to the 30th September last was 207,000 acres; and the area of land in respect of which negotiations are still pending, and upon which more or less payments have been made, is about 575,000 acres.

IMMIGRATION.

As regards the important question of immigration, I find that, for the period between the 1st May, 1886, and the 30th November, 1887, 1,460 nominated immigrants have arrived in the colony, towards the cost of whose passages the sum of £12,162 15s. has been contributed by their friends in the colony.

During the above period eighty farmers have arrived who satisfied the Agent-General that they were possessed of the requisite capital (amounting, in all, to £34,405) as required by the regulations of the 28th September, 1885.

The total number of immigrants, exclusive of small farmers, introduced since the inauguration of the immigration scheme by the Colonial Government is 113,953.

Details of the nationalities and classes of the immigrants introduced to the 30th April, 1887, will be found in Parliamentary Paper D.-9, 1887, presented last session.

The expenditure on immigration during the last four years has been, respectively, in round numbers, £107,000, £57,000, £12,000, and £12,000; and for this and the three following years the expenditure proposed is, respectively, £16,720, £20,000, £20,000, and £14,000, being a total allocation for immigration purposes, out of funds in hand and now proposed, amounting to £70,720.

TELEGRAPH EXTENSION.

As regards the subject of telegraph extension, I find that during the present financial year telegraph or telephone communication has been established between Clevedon and Papakura, Pukekohe and Mauku, Tahoraite and Danevirke, Springston and Prebbleton, Upper Riccarton and Middleton; and a line is now in course of construction from Masterton to Mauriceville and Mangamahoe.

The proposals for further telegraph extension in the estimates for the present year include the construction of lines between Kaipara Heads and Te Kopuru, Blenheim and Awatere, Ophir and Tinker's (Matakanui), Miller's Flat and Lawrence, Henley and Berwick, and the erection of an additional wire between Wellington and Auckland by way of Foxton, Woodville, and Napier, as well as a local wire from Foxton to Woodville.

Mr. Mitchelson

The expenditure for the last four years has been, respectively, about £19,000, £26,000, £36,000, and £19,000; and for the present and three following years the amounts proposed are £20,100, £10,000, £6,000, and £5,000, the intention being that the cost of future extensions of the telegraph system should be gradually thrown on the Consolidated Fund, and that after March, 1891, no further expenditure of this character shall be charged to loan funds.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The principal public buildings in course of erection during last year were some additions to the Lunatic Asylums in Christchurch and Auckland, the construction of a new Printing-office in Wellington, and the continuation of the works for the new prisons at Wellington and Auckland. During the current year it is proposed to put in hand gasworks and a doctor's residence at Seacliff Asylum; a doctor's residence and farm-buildings, &c., at the asylum at Sunnyside; and the addition of a male wing to the asylum at Auckland. It is also proposed to ask for a vote for a new asylum at Porirua, for the Wellington District; and also for the long-proposed public offices in Auckland.

The re-erection of the Post Office in Wellington will shortly be undertaken; but, as the Government considers that this is not properly chargeable to loan, it has been determined to provide for it out of consolidated revenue.

On public buildings generally the expenditure during the last four years has been, in round numbers, respectively, £164,000, £117,000, £87,000, and £89,000; and during the present year the liabilities already incurred are such, especially in respect of lunatic asylums, school-buildings, and the Printing-office at Wellington, that the expenditure will have to be about £109,000. It is proposed, however, to materially reduce the expenditure out of loan on this class of works during the following three years, the amounts proposed being respectively £69,700, £26,000, and £7,600.

The total amount allocated for public buildings during the four years is, thus, £212,410, of which departmental buildings, including the Wellington Printing-office and the Auckland departmental offices, will absorb £40,000; judicial buildings, including the gaols at Auckland and Wellington, £34,550; lunatic asylums, including a new asylum at Porirua and additions to the asylum buildings at Auckland, Christchurch, and Dunedin, £77,000; and school-buildings, £50,000.

As regards school-buildings, I should mention that provision is only proposed to be made for this year's grant, together with the liabilities which will probably exist at the end of the year, the intention of the Government being that after the end of this financial year provision should be made for this class of work in some way other than by drawing on the Public Works Fund.

LIGHTHOUSES AND HARBOUR WORKS.

Lighthouses.—On lighthouses the expenditure during recent years has never been very large, the amounts expended during the last four years being, respectively, about £6,700, £7,400, £300, and £3,300; and for this and next year the expenditure proposed is £4,300 and £4,000 respectively, making, in all, £23,300 as the total amount intended to be devoted to this class of works out of funds available and now proposed.

The amount so allocated is principally for the Cuvier Island Lighthouse, the apparatus and lantern for which have already been received in the colony; and plans for the tower, which is to be of cast-iron, have also been prepared, ready to call for tenders. Steps are also being taken to acquire the land for the buildings, and it is proposed to shortly commence the necessary works on the island to complete this long-promised undertaking.

Harbour Works.—For harbour works a sum of £500 only has been allocated, and it has already been expended, being the balance of a grant of £1,500 made under vote of last year to the Hokitika Harbour Board, of which £1,000 was paid before March last, and the remainder since then.

HARBOUR DEFENCES.

The cost of the harbour defences of New Zealand up to the end of March last was £318,827; and I find that a further sum of £180,000 is required to pay off existing liabilities and complete the undertakings which are at present in hand. This sum has therefore been allocated to harbour defences, and will be required for payment to the extent of £80,000 this year and £50,000 next year. Up to the end of September last the total expenditure was £353,483; of which, £174,012 was for guns, ammunition, torpedo-boats, torpedoes, and other war-material imported from England, and the remainder, £179,471, for works within the colony itself, including land-purchase. Up to the 31st March last the works in the colony were carried out by the Engineers of the Public Works Department; but since that date the Defence Department has taken them into its own hands entirely.

RATES ON NATIVE LANDS.

Under the heading of "Rates on Native Lands" the expenditure last year was £25,139; and the amounts required to meet our engagements under the existing Act will be, for this year £15,000, and for next year £10,700; beyond which nothing more has been provided, as it is proposed that the Act should be repealed.

THERMAL SPRINGS.

The expenditure on thermal springs last year was £7,814, and the amount required for this year is £3,200, and for next year £300. This is principally for the completion of the water-supply at Rotorua, and planting and improvements of the baths and grounds; and, as it is not intended to undertake any further works than those at present in hand, no further funds have been allocated beyond the £3,500 for this year and next year.

PUBLIC WORKS FUND.—PART I.

To sum up the proposals of which I have now given the details, they amount to this: In Part I. of the Public Works Fund we had on the 31st March last a balance of £491,246, and we are further entitled under this fund to a sum of £83,814 under section 31 of the Government Loans to Local Bodies Act, making, in all, £575,060; but, as against this, we had expenditure up to the 30th September amounting to £243,958, and liabilities actually brought to book at same date amounting to £280,495, and further engagements which, though not brought to book, were, to all intents and purposes, liabilities, amounting to £184,836.

The total amount of these engagements over and above actual expenditure and liabilities, in point of fact, amounted to £205,446; but, as against these, there were credits to come in from Consolidated Fund and Parts II. and III. of Public Works Fund amounting to £20,610, thus bringing the net amount of engagements to £184,836, as before stated.

My colleague the Colonial Treasurer, in his Financial Statement, referred to these engagements as amounting to about £150,000; but since then they have been more accurately gone into during the preparation of the public-works estimates, and are now ascertained to be £184,836.

Adding together the expenditure up to end of September with liabilities and engagements at that date gives, in all, £709,284 as expenditure, liabilities, and engagements up to end of September, as compared with the £575,060 assets on the same date; thus showing that our actual present expenditure, with liabilities and engagements on the 30th September, exceeded our assets on that date by £134,224; and this, too, without allowing anything for recurrent charges, such as immigration, departmental expenditure, roads maintenance, subsidies to local bodies, work for "unemployed," completing engagements in aid of land-purchases, telegraph-extension, additions to lunatic asylums, school-buildings, and rates on Native lands, &c.

In view of these recurring charges, therefore, and also in view of the deficit of £134,224 already existing, it was considered and it is still considered by the Government that nothing short of £500,000 additional funds would be sufficient to admit of a reasonable sum being allowed for immigration, and at the same time permit of our bringing our recurrent engagements in respect of the other services to a close otherwise than in an abrupt and unsatisfactory manner.

In the case of the several main roads, for instance, for the maintenance of which the Government has made itself responsible, we cannot abandon these roads to their fate, as we might thus become liable for damages in the event of any accidents happening through our negligence, and neither can we divest ourselves of the responsibility attaching to these roads all at once by handing them over to the local bodies, or placing the whole charge on the Consolidated Fund. The same also applies more or less to the class of buildings and other works.

With great reluctance, therefore—for we had hoped to be able to do without a loan at all—we came to the conclusion that we must ask for authority for £500,000 under Part I. of the Fund; and, assuming that this is granted, our total assets under this Fund, counting from the 31st March last, would be £1,075,060; and we would propose to allocate the expenditure of this sum, during the present and next three years, as follows:—

For immigration, with debits (consisting of expenditure, liabilities, and engagements at 30th September), amounting to £13,702, we propose to allocate £70,720.

For Public Works Departmental services, with debits amounting to £6,000, we propose to allocate £13,000.

For railways (other than those provided for under Parts II. and III. of Fund), with debits amounting to £3,500, we propose to allocate £3,500.

For roads of all classes, with debits amounting to £366,020, we propose to allocate £528,330.

For waterworks on the goldfields, with debits amounting to £2,000, we propose to allocate £2,000.

For purchase of Native lands, North Island (exclusive of purchases under the North Island Trunk Railway Loan), with debits amounting to £12,000 (less £11,000 which is to come in to credit from Part II. of Fund), we propose to allocate £16,000.

For telegraph-extension, with debits amounting to £26,070, we propose to allocate £41,100.

For public buildings, with debits amounting to £120,360, we propose to allocate £212,410.

For lighthouses, with debits amounting to £2,932, we propose to allocate £3,300.

For harbour works, with debits amounting to £500, we propose to allocate £500.

For harbour defences, with debits amounting to £130,000, we propose to allocate £130,000.

For rates on Native lands, with debits amounting to £25,700, we propose to allocate £25,700.

For Thermal Springs, with debits amounting to £3,500, we propose to allocate £3,500.

And for charges and expenses of raising loans, with debits amounting to £8,000, we propose to allocate £20,000.

Finally, for all the services under this fund, with debits (consisting of expenditure, liabilities, and engagements at 30th September last) amounting to £709,284, we propose to allocate £1,075,060.

The following table will probably show these results in a form which will be more convenient to honourable members:—

Mr. Mitchelson

Class of Works.	Debits.	Proposed Allocation.
	Consisting of Expenditure from March 31 to Sept. 30, 1887, and Liabilities and Engagements at the latter Date.
	£	£
Immigration .. .. .	13,702	70,720
Public Works departmental services .. .. .	6,000	13,000
Railways (other than those provided for under Parts II. and III. of Fund)	3,500	3,500
Roads of all classes .. .. .	366,020	528,330
Waterworks on goldfields .. .. .	2,000	2,000
Purchase of Native lands, North Island, exclusive of purchases under the North Island Trunk Railway Loan £12,000
Less amount which is to come into credit from Part II. of Fund .. .. .	11,000
	1,000	16,000
Telegraph extension .. .. .	26,070	41,100
Public buildings .. .. .	120,360	212,410
Lighthouses .. .. .	2,932	8,300
Harbour works .. .. .	500	500
Harbour defences .. .. .	130,000	130,000
Rates on Native lands .. .. .	25,700	25,700
Thermal Springs .. .. .	3,500	3,500
Charges and expenses of raising loans .. .. .	8,000*	20,000
For all services under this Fund .. .. .	709,284	1,075,060

* This amount would have been required for expenses of raising sufficient loan to cover actual deficit.

PUBLIC WORKS FUND.—PART II.

Coming now to Part II. of the fund, being the portion devoted to the North Island Main Trunk Railway, we had unexpended on the 31st March last the sum of £674,315, and on the 30th September this was reduced to £615,258, with liabilities amounting to £197,474. Starting with the balance at the end of the year—namely, £674,315—the expenditure suggested by the Engineer-in-Chief, if the work is to go on vigorously from both ends during the present and next three years, is £619,800, which would leave a balance unexpended on the 31st March, 1891, of £54,515.

PUBLIC WORKS FUND.—PART III.

Under Part III. of the Public Works Fund we had unexpended on the 31st March last the sum of £769,235, and by the 30th September last this was reduced to £556,645, with liabilities amounting to £304,004. The net amount available for further undertakings on the 30th September was therefore only £252,641; and, as this amount was quite inadequate for carrying the most of the railways in hand to points at which they would be even moderately reproductive, it was decided to ask for further authority of £500,000, which is proposed to be allocated as follows:—

	£
Helensville northwards .. .. .	25,000
Putaruru-Rotorua .. .. .	18,000
Woodville-Palmerston .. .. .	120,000
Blenheim-Awatere .. .. .	9,000
Greymouth-Hokitika .. .. .	2,000
Mount Somers .. .. .	7,000
Livingstone .. .. .	1,000
Otago Central .. .. .	105,000
Seaward Bush .. .. .	10,000
Additions to opened lines .. .. .	122,000
Surveys .. .. .	6,000
Charges and expenses of raising the portion of the loan allocated to railways .. .. .	30,000
Departmental (engineering and supervision) .. .. .	45,000
Grand total for railways .. .. .	£500,000

Adding this sum of £500,000 to the £769,235 before alluded to as existing at the 31st March last will give a total of £1,269,235, the expenditure of which (including the expenditure which has already taken place) we propose to spread over the present and next three years at the following rate—namely, 1887–88, £442,500; 1888–89, £437,403; 1889–90, £298,917; and 1890–91, £67,444: giving a total for four years of £1,246,264, which will leave £22,971 unexpended at the end of the term.

Costs and Charges of raising Loan.

As regards the item of £30,000 for charges and expenses of raising the £500,000 allocated to railways, I should explain that about £10,000 of this is required to supplement the amount allocated to charges and expenses of raising loans, and contingencies in connection with the loan of 1886, which will be exceeded to about that extent. The amount actually required for raising £500,000, at present asked for, will probably be about £20,000.

TOTAL EXPENDITURE PROPOSED UNDER PUBLIC WORKS FUND AS A WHOLE.

Taking the whole three funds together, our proposed expenditure is—For 1887–88, £1,127,550; for 1888–89, £986,903; for 1889–90, £577,677; and for 1890–91, £248,994; giving an average throughout the four years of about £735,281 per annum.

While on the subject of this expenditure, I should explain that it was the wish and intention of the Government, if possible, to have distributed the expenditure more evenly over the four years; but it was found that we had practically very little control over the expenditure during the current year and part of next year, as that is fixed to a very large extent by existing engagements; and there was also the consideration that, if we spread the expenditure on each one of the railways over the whole period, a work which might quite easily be completed in two years would be left unproductive for another year or two without any great good being attained. In the case of several of the railways, therefore, I have put expenditure into the year 1889–90 which I originally intended to have thrown into 1890–91, with the view of getting such of the railways completed by March, 1890, as could then reasonably be completed. Even as the proposed expenditure stands, however, it indicates a very considerable reduction as compared with the expenditure of the previous years, which has been—For 1883–84, £1,409,588; for 1884–85, £1,336,727; for 1885–86, £1,475,386; for 1886–87, £1,333,484.

In actual practice, too, it is probable that the expenditure during this year and next year will be somewhat less than I have estimated for, the amounts set down being the sums necessary to meet the liabilities which will probably come in for payment during those years; and, if these liabilities do not fall due so rapidly as is anticipated, the expenditure will of course be reduced accordingly during the first two years, and can thus be spread more evenly over the whole four years, as we originally intended.

As affecting the proposed expenditure for the year after this one—namely, for the year ending March, 1889, which I have already stated will probably be larger than we wished it to be—it should also be mentioned that the amount required to be expended that year will include about £80,000 for charges and expenses of raising loans, as the North Island Trunk Railway Loan of £1,000,000 still requires to be raised, as well as the £1,000,000 which we now propose to ask authority for, and it is estimated that the expenses for each £1,000,000 will be about £40,000.

Probable Effect of determining the Rate of Expenditure for Three Years in Advance.

In thus endeavouring to fix the expenditure over a series of years, I am quite alive to the fact that I may be met with the assertion that it is impossible to absolutely adhere to any such programme, or to keep the expenditure rigidly within the limits which I have fixed. But, while admitting that this, to a certain extent, is true, I nevertheless maintain that we shall probably come much nearer what is the intention of the Government and, I believe, also the wish of most honourable members as regards the so-called “tapering-off” in borrowing by shaping out some definite programme to guide us, such as I have endeavoured to do, rather than by leaving everything to the chapter of accidents in the future.

Allocation for Rails, Sleepers, and Rolling-stock, £125,000.

As honourable members may possibly not be prepared for the large sum—£125,000—which is set down in proposed loan-allocation for permanent-way and rolling-stock, and especially as regards the sum of £65,000 shown as required for permanent-way and rolling-stock for additions to opened lines, it may be desirable that I should explain that £45,000 of this amount is due to insufficient provision having been made for this class of expenditure in the loan-allocation of 1886; and I have charged this £45,000 to additions to opened lines in order to avoid an undue charge falling upon any of the individual railways. This was the only way to fairly meet the case, as some of the railways provided for in 1886, and which have been already completed, and which, consequently, do not appear in the present allocation at all, have already received their full complement of rails; and the deficit, if charged otherwise than to additions to open lines, would have to fall entirely on the railways which have still to be completed, which would manifestly be unreasonable. In the final accounts showing cost of railways from time to time, it would make no matter, as each line is of course only eventually charged with the actual expenditure upon it; but, even in making an allocation, it seemed to me to be unjust to include an amount in present loan schedule for a service which purported to have been fully provided for in the allocations of 1886.

Proposals as to carrying on Formation-works on Railways beyond the Points up to which the Lines can be entirely completed with the Funds available.

The first intention of the Government, in view of the desirability of stopping all expenditure where practicable, was to omit any provision for carrying on formation-works (even when already provided for) beyond the points to which funds are available for entirely completing the various railways; but, on further consideration, it was decided that it would be better to retain power to carry on these formation-works, in the event of its being necessary to provide work for the unemployed; and I have therefore shown the amounts authorised, as proposed to be expended over the present and next three years accordingly, in the event of such expenditure being requisite.

Mr. Mitchelson

Departmental Expenditure.

In connection with our future proposals to gradually reduce loan-expenditure on all classes of works it will be necessary to correspondingly reduce the departmental expenditure, which was £90,156 for 1884-85, £29,632 for 1885-86, and £25,835 for 1886-87.

The expenditure for this year will be about £25,000, which is somewhat short of 4 per cent. on the portion of the loan-expenditure under the control of the Public Works Department proper; and, on the same basis, I think it is probable that the expenditure for the next three years could be reduced to £20,000, £15,000, and £13,000, respectively, making in all, for the four years, £73,000. It is also intended that this expenditure should be charged proportionately in accordance with the amount of works under the control of the department in each of the several subdivisions of the Loan Fund, which would give, for the four years, £13,000 chargeable to Part I., £15,000 to Part II., and £45,000 to Part III., making, in all, £73,000, as before.

Public-works Estimates.

As regards the general shape in which the public-works estimates will be brought down, I have not found it desirable to alter the form recently in vogue, with one exception—namely, in respect of the estimates for the North Island Trunk Railway, the amount required for which has hitherto been voted in one lump sum to cover construction-works and surveys of all classes at both ends of the line. In that case I have made an alteration, as it seemed to be desirable that full information should be given as to the expenditure at each end of the railway, firstly, on railway works proper, and, secondly, on roads; and also that separate information should be given as to cost of surveys as distinct from construction-works. I have therefore now divided the estimates for this line into the several items of "Departmental expenditure," "Railway construction (north end and south end)," "Permanent-way and rolling-stock," "Surveys," "Roads (north end and south end)," and "Purchase of Native lands;" but, as regards the roads, as I have already mentioned, no further roadworks are intended to be undertaken under the loan for this railway. The votes proposed for road-works are therefore merely sufficient to cover the liabilities already incurred, with a slight margin for contingencies.

CONCLUSION.

Finally, Sir, I would wish to state that, in approaching this task of dealing with the public-works expenditure of the colony, the Government was convinced that, however much the construction of public works may have tended to develop the country generally, and also to meet the demands of growing settlement, it was nevertheless evident that our rate of expenditure in the past has been more than the colony could well afford, and that the time has come when we must materially curtail it. With that object in view we prepared the proposals which I have now had the honour of laying before this House, and I may say that throughout the whole of this allocation our object has been to do justice to all concerned, and to endeavour, where practicable, within the limits of the funds at our disposal, to avoid stopping ruthlessly any works on which the expenditure already incurred would be altogether thrown away, or which would yield a reasonable percentage on their cost if completed as hitherto intended.

To the best of our belief, these objects have been attained by the allocation which I have described; and we now therefore lay it before Parliament, in the full confidence that honourable members will aid us in carrying these proposals out, in the interests of the colony as a whole, at whatever sacrifice it may be to their individual districts. Taken as a whole, the chief feature in our proposals is to steadily reduce expenditure under loan from, in round numbers, £1,100,000 per annum for this year, to £300,000 per annum for the third year from March next; and we believe that in this way the loan expenditure may be gradually brought to an end, after March, 1891, without, on the one hand, increasing our burdens overmuch, or, on the other hand, putting too sudden a check on the progress of colonial industries.

I would also wish to say, Sir, in conclusion, that throughout the whole of the investigations necessary to frame proposals calculated to bring about this result—and which, I confess, I have found to be a very difficult task—I have received the most cordial assistance from all the chief officers of the departments over which I have the honour to preside.

On the question, That the estimates be referred to the Committee of Supply,

Mr. W. P. REEVES said.—Sir, I should like, if I might, to ask the Minister for Public Works a question without notice. Some weeks ago a deputation of Christchurch members waited on the Minister, requesting that a certain work in the neighbourhood of Christchurch should be undertaken, as being likely to meet the distress prevailing there. He gave us to understand that he was somewhat favourably inclined towards it, and we expected either that it would appear in the Statement he has made or that some reason would be given why it did not appear. It has not appeared in the Public Works Statement, and no reason has been given us. I ask the Minister now why the Sumner Railway has had the cold shoulder given to it.

Mr. MITCHELSON.—Sir, the Government have very carefully considered this railway. At one time it was intended to include it among the works to be proceeded with; but, after giving it due consideration, the Government came to the conclusion that, it being a new line of railway, they would not be justified in asking the House to authorise it, there being an understanding that no new lines should be undertaken. I say that with great regret.

Mr. TAYLOR.—I, also, should like to say that I am exceedingly sorry that the matter brought forward by the honourable member for St. Albans has not been dealt with in the Public Works Statement, because I can bear out what he has just said, that, at any rate, there was a promise that this matter would be carefully considered—kept steadily in view. But, so far as I have learned from the Statement this evening—of course I may be labouring under a misapprehension—I certainly think the Provincial District of Canterbury is not getting that fair share of the loan which, from her population, she has a right to expect; and I feel it my duty to enter my protest on this occasion, and, when the time comes, to endeavour to amend the estimates for the purpose of carrying on works which would be equally valuable with, and far more profitable from a paying point of view than, many of the works which have been mentioned to-night. I protest that we are “over-railroaded,” and we should cut the railways off rather than incur further burdens by carrying on railways through country that will never pay. The railway to Sumner is one of a certain and profitable character. We have the evidence of the Public Works officials to prove that.

An Hon. MEMBER.—Make it yourselves.

Mr. TAYLOR.—It is all very well to say, “Make it yourselves;” but when it comes to making roads for themselves what do they say? Look at the enormous sum which has been spent for roads which are of a perishable character, and which require a very large expenditure to keep these roads in condition for the public to traverse them. I trust that the Government and the Minister for Public Works will seriously reconsider the question mooted to-night by the honourable member for St. Albans in reference to the expenditure he has mentioned. I take the opportunity of saying this: that, so far as I have been able to gather from the Statement, there is too large a sum of money to be expended on railways to suit my view. I think the time has arrived when this borrowing should be entirely stopped. As far as I can judge, a good deal of it is to carry out works which have been already proved to be unproductive. Of course the Minister says he will endeavour to carry them to a point at which they will pay; but we have been told that from year to year, and with what result? Every additional mile of railway that has been opened for some time past has been an additional burden upon the country. I trust this matter will be reconsidered.

Motion agreed to.

PENSIONS.

Mr. W. D. STEWART said there were three applications on the table for pensions, and, having consulted the Premier, he found that that honourable gentleman was quite willing that a Committee should be appointed to consider these applications. He therefore begged to move, That a Select Committee be appointed, with power to call for persons and papers, to inquire into and report on the applications for pensions or allowances to Messrs. A. T. Alston, H. C. S. Baddeley, and A. Muir: the Committee to consist of Mr. Goldie, Mr. Guinness, Dr. Fitchett, Mr. Peacock, Mr. E. Richardson, and the mover.

Motion agreed to.

WELLINGTON COLLEGE AND GIRLS' HIGH SCHOOL BILL.

Mr. FISHER, in moving the second reading of this Bill, said that, although it contained nineteen clauses, they were of a purely formal character, relating to the reconstitution of the Board and altering, in some respects, the composition of the Board. There was one clause relating to a monetary liability of the College Governors; but that was rendered necessary in order to carry out an undertaking by Sir Robert Stout, the previous Minister of Education, given to the Board. This clause gave the Board legislative power, under mortgage-deed, to raise money for the erection of the Girls' High School. If any discussion should take place upon that clause, it could be considered in Committee, and he would therefore content himself with moving the second reading.

Mr. PEACOCK did not object to the power asked for in the way of raising money for the Girls' High School, but he did object to the manner in which it was proposed that the Board should be elected. It would be seen that of the nine members to be elected outside the ex-officio members, the Mayor and the Chairman of the Board of Education, three were to be elected by the members of the House of Representatives residing within the Wellington Provincial District. It was a very objectionable principle that the members of that House should create themselves into a constituency to elect members to any other body. He was aware that there was a precedent for this in the Auckland College and Grammar School; but, far from being a precedent to follow, it was one that should be avoided. He did not think it was likely that honourable members, scattered all over a provincial district, would take such interest in the election of members of this Board as would be desirable: and the consequence would probably be that the elections would be very much left in the hands of one or two active individuals who would take the trouble of moving in the matter. He did not think past experience was such as would warrant their following the example. He believed that this mode was adopted in the first instance from a feeling that there should be more of the elective principle in the constitution of these Boards: at the same time it would be better if a more popular form of election existed. He might be asked what he would substitute. He thought they might fairly substitute the election of three members of the Board by the parents or guardians of pupils attending the school for a certain length of time. He was sure the Minister of Education would sympathize with the idea of popularising the mode of election of secondary educational Boards. He would be prepared to move in the direction he had indicated when the Bill got into Committee; but he still hoped that the Minister would see himself that it was the right and proper course to take. He also wished to express his regret that, while this Bill was before the House, the Government had not put on the Order Paper the Auckland Girls' High School Bill. No discussion could have taken place over that Bill, as it was of a precisely similar nature to this one, so that one discussion would have been sufficient for both. With the exception of that portion relating to the mode of electing the Board, he would support the Bill, and hoped the Minister himself, in Committee, would see his way to alter the form of election in the way he (Mr. Peacock) had indicated.

Mr. Mitchelson

Sir G. GREY said there was one very great objection to this Bill. He understood the Minister of Education to say that it was intended to allow sums of money to be raised upon the security of the site, or the value of the site, on which the Girls' High School stood. He wished to point out that a very great injustice had been done. That site was an endowment for the Wellington Hospital, and would have been a most valuable site for a branch hospital in the case of accidents; and, looking at the great distance of the hospital from the town, it was certain that there must be a branch hospital at that end of the town before long, and no better site for such a purpose could be found than this one. It really belonged to the whole of the poor of the district, and was a valuable endowment for them; and he understood it was taken for a girls' high school under a clause of the Special Powers and Contracts Act without anybody knowing what was taking place. That site had been taken from the poor of the district to give it to an educational institution which would only benefit the higher classes. Such practices ought not to be allowed to take place as that a valuable hospital-site of that kind should be given over to education. The cost of education should be charged to the whole colony in the usual manner; and, if this was persisted in, he would endeavour in Committee to make an alteration providing that an equivalent should be given to the Wellington Hospital, if this site was retained permanently for education purposes. He also felt, with the honourable gentleman who spoke last, that it was unfair that this Bill should go on and that the Government should not allow the Bill for the Auckland Girls' High School to go on also. It was very unjust towards Auckland, and no sufficient explanation had been given by the Minister of Education for not carrying that Bill through. He would have thought that that establishment would be equally dear to the honourable gentleman, and that, particularly as he was a member for Wellington, it would be becoming in him to do as much for Auckland as for Wellington. He hoped the Minister of Education would still allow the Auckland Bill to be carried on by the Government exactly as this Bill was being carried on.

Dr. NEWMAN thought the objection raised by the honourable member for Ponsonby to the mode of election of the Governors, and his proposal that they should be elected by parents of the pupils, would entail a great deal of unnecessary expense upon the College Governors through having to send out so many notices. With regard to the power given to the Governors to raise money to pay for building the Girls' High School, he might say that the credit of the colony was pledged to carry this Bill out, in consequence of the pledge given by the late Premier.

Mr. IZARD said it was very desirable that this Bill should be passed, and for this reason: The Governors of the Girls' High School of Wellington, to whom the land had been granted under power of an Act of Parliament, had erected a costly building on it at their own expense, under a minute by the late Minister of Education promising that he would bring in a Bill to allow the land to be used as security for raising the necessary funds to reimburse the contractor. He hoped, therefore, that honourable members would see that this Bill was carrying out an agreement entered into on behalf of the colony by a Minister of the Crown, and that therefore to decline to pass the Bill would be doing a great injustice. With regard to the observations of the honourable member for Ponsonby, who objected to three members of the governing body of the school being elected by the Wellington City members of the House of Representatives, that was an objection to be dealt with in Committee, and did not affect the principle of the Bill.

Mr. CADMAN hoped the Minister of Education, in reply, would tell the House why the Bill for the Auckland Girls' High School had been ignored.

Major ATKINSON said the Government hoped to bring that up next day.

Bill read a second time and committed.

IN COMMITTEE.

Clause 2.—Constitution of governing body of Wellington College and Girls' High School.

Mr. PEACOCK moved, That the words empowering the members of the General Assembly of the Wellington District to elect three members be struck out, for the purpose of inserting others conferring such power of election upon parents or guardians of children who have been in attendance at the College or High School for not less than one quarter.

The Committee divided on the question, "That the words proposed to be struck out stand part of the clause."

AYES, 30.

Allen	Fergus	McGregor
Anderson	Fisher	Moat
Atkinson	Graham	Rhodes
Barron	Hislop	Richardson, G.
Beetham	Hutchinson	S.-Menteath
Bruce	Isard	Tanner
Carroll	Macarthur	Thompson, B.
Duncan	Mackenzie, M.	Turnbull

Ward	Wilson	Tellers.
Whyte	Withy.	Guinness
		Newman.
	NOES, 37.
Buchanan	Levestam	Ross
Buxton	Mackenzie, T.	Seddon
Cadman	Marchant	Seymour
Cowan	McKenzie, J.	Smith
Feldwick	Mitchelson	Steward, W. J.
Fish	Monk	Stewart, W. D.
Fitchett	Moss	Taylor
Goldie	O'Connor	Thompson, T.
Grey	Ormond	Walker.
Hodgkinson	Parata
Joyce	Perceval	Tellers.
Kelly	Reeves, R. H. J.	Lawry
Kerr	Richardson, E.	Peacock.

Majority against, 7.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported to the House, and read a third time.

LAND BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

Clause 27.—All Land Boards abolished.

Major STEWARD moved, That the word "All" be struck out, with the view of inserting the words "In lieu of the."

The Committee divided on the question, "That the word 'All' stand part of the clause."

AYES, 28.

Anderson	Izard	Richardson, G.
Atkinson	Jackson	Ross
Cadman	Lance	Seddon
Fisher	Lawry	Thompson, R.
Fraser	Monk	Valentine
Goldie	Newman	Withy.
Graham	O'Connor
Grey	Ormond	Tellers.
Grimmond	Pearson	McGregor
Hobbs	Reeves, R. H. J.	Tanner.

NOES, 36.

Allen	Jones	Peacock
Beetham	Joyce	Pyke
Blake	Kelly	Rhodes
Bruce	Kerr	Richardson, E.
Cowan	Levestam	Smith
Dodson	Mackenzie, T.	Taylor
Feldwick	Marchant	Thompson, T.
Fish	McKenzie, J.	Turnbull
Fitchett	Moat	Ward.
Fitzherbert	Moss	Tellers.
Guinness	O'Callaghan	Barron
Hodgkinson	Parata	Steward, W. J.
Hutchison

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Fergus	Fulton
Hall	Vogel
Hislop	Seymour
Larnach	Walker
Mackenzie, M. J. S.	Reeves, W. P.
Samuel.	Duncan.

Majority against, 8.

Word struck out.

The Committee divided on the question, "That the words 'In lieu of the' be inserted."

Allen	Joyce	Seddon
Anderson	Kerr	Smith
Beetham	Levestam	Taylor
Blake	Mackenzie, T.	Thompson, R.
Bruce	Monk	Turnbull
Cowan	Moss	Walker
Feldwick	Newman	Ward
Fitchett	O'Callaghan	Withy.
Graham	O'Connor	Tellers.
Grimmond	Parata	Steward, W. J.
Guinness	Pyke	Tanner.
Hutchison

NOES, 29.

Atkinson	Hodgkinson	Pearson
Barron	Izard	Rhodes
Cadman	Jackson	Richardson, E.
Fisher	Jones	Richardson, G.
Fish	Kelly	Ross
Fitzherbert	Lance	Thompson, T.
Fraser	Lawry	Valentine.
Goldie	McKenzie, J.	Tellers.
Grey	Moat	McGregor
Hobbs	Ormond	Peacock.

PAIRS.

For.

Duncan
Fulton
Reeves, W. P.
Seymour
Vogel

Against.

Samuel
Fergus
Mackenzie, M. J. S.
Hislop
Hall

Majority for, 4.

Words inserted.

Clause 31.—Repeals.

Dr. FITCHETT moved, That the words "the proviso to section two hundred and thirty-seven, the proviso to section two hundred and forty," be struck out.

The Committee divided on the question, "That the words be retained."

AYES, 31.

Atkinson	Jones	Richardson, G.
Beetham	Kerr	S. Menteath
Cowan	Marchant	Tanner
Dodson	Monk	Thompson, R.
Fisher	O'Callaghan	Turnbull
Graham	O'Connor	Valentine
Hislop	Ormond	Walker.
Hobbs	Pearson
Hutchison	Pyke	Tellers.
Izard	Rhodes	Lance
Jackson	Richardson, E.	Steward, W. J.

NOES, 35.

Allen	Guinness	Peacock
Anderson	Hodgkinson	Reeves, R. H. J.
Barron	Joyce	Reeves, W. P.
Blake	Kelly	Ross
Bruce	Lawry	Seddon
Buxton	Mackenzie, T.	Smith
Cadman	McGregor	Taylor
Feldwick	McKenzie, J.	Thompson, T.
Fish	Moat	Ward.
Fraser	Moss	Tellers.
Grey	Newman	Fitchett
Grimmond	Parata	Fulton.

Majority against, 4.

Words struck out.

Mr. BEETHAM moved the insertion of a new clause providing that two members of the Board shall be nominated by the Governor and two elected by the County Councils.

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON moved, That the words, "Section thirty-six of the said Act is hereby repealed, and the following substituted in lieu thereof," be struck out, with a view of testing the opinion of the Committee as to whether the amendment should be made.

The Committee divided on the question, "That the words be retained."

AYES, 48.

Allen	Hobbs	Reeves, R. H. J.
Anderson	Hodgkinson	Reeves, W. F.
Barron	Jones	Rhodes
Beetham	Joyce	Seddon
Blake	Kelly	Smith
Bruce	Lawry	Steward, W. J.
Buxton	Loughrey	Stewart, W. D.
Cadman	Marchant	Taiwhanga
Duncan	McKenzie, J.	Taylor
Feldwick	Mills	Thompson, R.
Fitchett	Monk	Thompson, T.
Fraser	Moss	Turnbull
Fulton	O'Callaghan	Walker.
Goldie	O'Connor	Tellers.
Graham	Parata	Buchanan
Grey	Perceval	Hutchison.
Grimmond

NOES, 32.

Atkinson	Lance	Ross
Cowan	Larnach	Samuel
Dodson	Levestam	Seymour
Fergus	McGregor	S.-Menteath
Fisher	Mitchelson	Tanner
Fish	Moat	Whyte
Fitzherbert	Ormond	Wilson
Hislop	Pearson	Withy.
Izard	Pyke	Tellers.
Jackson	Richardson, E.	Peacock
Kerr	Richardson, G.	Valentine.

PAIR.

For.	Against.
Ward.	Mackenzie, T.

Majority for, 16.

Words agreed to.

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON moved, That in the subclause fixing the representation of counties at two members, the word "two" be struck out, with the view of inserting the word "three."

The Committee divided on the question, "That the word 'two' stand part of the subclause."

AYES, 31.

Allen	Lawry	Reeves, W. P.
Barron	Loughrey	Richardson, E.
Blake	McGregor	Ross
Fisher	McKenzie, J.	Stewart, W. D.
Fish	Mills	S.-Menteath
Fraser	Mitchelson	Taylor
Goldie	Moss	Thompson, T.
Grey	Newman	Tellers.
Hislop	Ormond	Feldwick
Joyce	Peacock	Fitchett.
Larnach	Perceval

NOES, 46.

Anderson	Jackson	Seddon
Atkinson	Jones	Seymour
Beetham	Kelly	Smith
Buchanan	Kerr	Steward, W. J.
Buxton	Lance	Tanner
Cadman	Levestam	Thompson, R.
Carroll	Marchant	Turnbull
Cowan	Moat	Valentine
Dodson	Monk	Walker
Duncan	O'Callaghan	Whyte
Fergus	O'Connor	Wilson
Fulton	Parata	Withy.
Grimmond	Pearson
Hobbs	Reeves, R. H. J.	Tellers.
Hodgkinson	Rhodes	Bruce
Hutchison	Richardson, G.	Graham.

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Ballance	Mackenzie, M. J. S.
Fitzherbert	Pyke
Samuel	Hall
Vogel	Taipua
Ward.	Mackenzie, T.

Majority against, 15.

Word "two" struck out, and "three" inserted.

Progress reported.

LOCAL BODIES' LOANS BILL.

This Bill was read a second time, and committed.

IN COMMITTEE.

Clause 5.—Verbal amendments in original Act.

Mr. GUINNESS moved the addition of the following subsection: "(7.) In the second section the words, 'and persons duly enrolled in a county as holders of miners' rights or business licenses,' shall be omitted."

The Committee divided.

AYES, 33.

Allen	Joyce	Perceval
Anderson	Kelly	Samuel
Atkinson	Lawry	Seymour
Barron	Levestam	Steward, W. J.
Beetham	Macarthur	Thompson, R.
Bruce	Mackenzie, T.	Thompson, T.
Buchanan	Mitchelson	Ward
Buxton	Moat	Wilson.
Cowan	Monk	Tellers.
Dodson	Newman	Cadman
Fisher	Peacock	Guinness.
Hutchison

NOES, 11.

Fergus	Kerr	Tanner.
Graham	McGregor	Tellers.
Grimmond	Reeves, R. H. J.	Pearson
Hislop	Richardson, G.	Seddon.

PAIR.

For.	Against.
Fraser.	Fulton.

Majority for, 22.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported, with amendments.

Mr. SEDDON.—I move, That the Bill be recommitted with the view of considering the amendment which has been made in clause 5.

Amendment negatived.

On the motion, That the amendments be agreed to,

Mr. SEDDON said,—I cannot permit myself to lose the opportunity of having my final protest recorded in Hansard against the amendment which has just been made in this Bill. I fought against this amendment in previous years. The effect of the amendment will be that the holders of miners' rights or business licenses are not to have a voice in the borrowing of money by local bodies on the goldfields. The proportionate amount raised by way of rates on goldfields is generally as about £1 in rates to £5 contributed by those who hold miners' rights and business licenses. I say it is a moral impossibility for the ratepayers of the counties in mining districts to pay the money that is wished to be borrowed, and they have to fall on the general revenue contributed by the holders of miners' rights and business licenses to pay interest and sinking fund, and it is not safe to allow them to borrow money unless the miners and business people I refer to have a voice in the matter. The Government will find, before long, that a call will be made on the colony to find interest and sinking fund. I say it is a safeguard to leave it to the people generally, and not to leave the matter simply to the ratepayers. The rate-roll of the Grey County shows, net, only £1,000 a year, and the rate-roll of the Westland County only £500 a year net; and the gold duty and goldfields revenue amount to from £3,000 to £4,000 in each case. How can the revenue from rates possibly pay interest and sinking fund on the amount of money which from time to time the Grey Council have in the past borrowed, or in future may wish to borrow under this Bill? Why the honourable member for Greymouth, who represents a purely mining community, wishes to deprive the holders of miners' rights and business licenses of their power of voting is a thing I cannot understand. I say this has been brought about by a catch-vote, and without the Premier or the Government knowing the meaning of it. The question has been discussed three times before, and divisions have been taken upon it. I protest against this proposed change; and if ill comes to the colony or to the Government through taking away this power from the people in the districts who have to find the great bulk of the money, then the responsibility rests upon the shoulders of the Government. I wash my hands of it. The honourable member for Greymouth has not fought the matter fairly. It has been done by a snatch-division. In another place time will tell who wins in the long-run.

Major ATKINSON.—I hope we shall not get into a long debate to-night. I confess I am not quite satisfied with the understanding we have come to, but I think we should leave it with the understanding that the Government will carefully consider the matter; and I shall be happy to confer privately with those honourable gentlemen who consider that it would have been better to have arrived at another arrangement. But I think we cannot get much further by a long argument to-night.

Mr. Seddon

Mr. GUINNESS.—I cannot allow the remarks of the honourable member for Kumara to pass, and be recorded in Hansard, without shortly placing my case before the ratepayers whom I have the honour to represent. In the first place, the amendment that was made in the Committee upon my motion was an amendment to take away the power from holders of miners' rights to vote upon the question whether the electors in the district should sanction a loan under the Local Bodies' Loans Act or not. Under the law as it stands miners are not liable to pay any special rates payable for the purpose of paying interest and sinking fund on the loan thus borrowed. The argument adduced by the honourable member for Kumara in favour of giving miners a vote is simply this: that when a rate is levied the Councils have power to pay those rates into the general county funds, and that, as miners contribute a very considerable portion of those rates, they should have some voice in it. Now, in the district I represent the proportion is not at all what is stated by the honourable member for Kumara. He states it is three to one. The ratepayers contribute £1,900 and £2,000 in rates, and the revenue from miners' rights and business licenses does not amount to £1,500, and the gold duty amounts to £2,500. It comes to £4,000 as against £2,000—that is the proportion. I say it is unfair to give a voice in deciding whether a loan shall be raised or not to persons who are not liable for repayment of the money borrowed. That is the principle I went on, and I believe it is on that principle the Committee acted, by a large majority. It is not a catch-division at all. This Bill was in Committee, and there was no occasion to give a warning or notice to members. Honourable members knew to-night that the Bill was coming on. I stood in my place, and when the proper time came I moved my amendment. The honourable member for Kumara was in his place, and used arguments against it. The Committee heard both sides, and decided by thirty-three to eleven in favour of the amendment.

Amendments agreed to, and Bill read a third time.

The House adjourned at fifteen minutes past two o'clock a.m.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

Tuesday, 13th December, 1887.

First Readings—Third Readings—Australian Centenary—South Island Pastoral Runs—Representation Bill.

The Hon. the SPEAKER took the chair at half-past two o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Building Societies Bill, Wairarapa North

County Council Empowering Bill, Otago Harbour Board Bill, Pukekohe Borough Bill, Invercargill Water Reserve Bill, Gisborne Harbour Board Bill, Christchurch District Drainage Bill (No. 2), Otago Central Railway Extension and Construction Bill, Government Loans to Local Bodies Bill, Local Bodies' Loans Bill, Civil Service Reform Bill, Wellington College and Girls' High School Bill.

THIRD READINGS.

Municipal Corporations Bill, Sounds County Hospital Representation Bill, Sheep Bill, Napier Harbour Board Amendment and Endowment Improvement Bill.

AUSTRALIAN CENTENARY.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—Before proceeding to the orders of the day, I desire to inform honourable members that I have received a telegram from the President of the Legislative Council of New South Wales in reference to the Australian centenary, about to be celebrated in Sydney.

The CLERK read the telegram, as follows:—

"Have the goodness to inform honourable members of the Legislative Council of New Zealand that invitations to the State banquet to be given in this city on the 26th January next, in celebration of the completion of the first hundred years of Australian settlement, will be sent to each of them at the earliest possible date.—JOHN HAY, President, Legislative Council, Sydney."

SOUTH ISLAND PASTORAL RUNS.

The Hon. Mr. SHRIMSKI moved, That a return be laid upon the table of all pastoral runs in the South Island of which the licenses expire between January, 1888, and 30th December, 1890, giving in detail the number of the run, the provincial district, the acreage, name of present occupier, and present rental paid.

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS said the Government would be very glad to supply this return; but, he presumed, the honourable gentleman hardly expected that he would be able to get it this session. He was afraid that it could not be got ready in so short a time. In the event, however, of the honourable gentleman wishing for any information with regard to the runs in Canterbury, specially or only, he would find it in Paper C.—8, 1879.

The Hon. Mr. SHRIMSKI said these did not give all the information he desired. He wished to get numbers, acreage, owners, occupiers, and price paid; and, if he could not get the information this session, he supposed he would have to wait till next session.

Motion agreed to.

REPRESENTATION BILL.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—I move, That this Bill be now read a second time. The object of it is to reduce the number of members of the House of Representatives from ninety-five, as it is at present, to seventy-four, a reduction of twenty-one. One object of the Bill is also to reduce the amount of the expenses, which will be considerably reduced by reducing the number of members; and it is considered, in connection with this reduction, that the business transacted by the House will be transacted more speedily than, and quite as efficiently as, before. As the members of the other House are themselves in favour of this measure, I apprehend the Council are not likely to stand in the way of giving effect to their wishes.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE.—I shall not oppose the second reading of this Bill; but I think it contains one very important provision that is worthy of the consideration of honourable members, and is, as far as I am aware, an entirely new feature in legislation of this character. I see its introduction here with a considerable amount of regret. It is perfectly legitimate, I think, that the reduced number should come into operation at the expiration of Parliament by the effluxion of time, but I am not certain it is an advisable or constitutional proceeding that it should come into operation whenever the Government deem a dissolution of the Assembly desirable. I say, Sir, I doubt whether it is a constitutional proceeding, and for this reason: that it does give the Government an immense power over the Assembly. It gives them an enormous power: honourable members cannot be free agents; they know they could be severely punished if the Government were to put this into operation, for they would know that, of the ninety-five who voted, twenty-one would be absolutely incapable of returning, and no one would be positively certain to return. It gives the Government a power over the Assembly which I do not think it desirable they should possess, and the pressure of which would be continually felt. The Bill has no doubt been introduced in the interests of the colony. I do not know how far the drastic system of retrenchment that we hoped for will be carried out. There is such a thing as saving at the spigot and letting out at the bung, and it seems to me, judging from a document that has been put into our hands lately—I refer to the Public Works Statement—that all our efforts in this respect are likely to be lost by extravagant expenditure in other directions. I am not, as I have said, going to oppose this Bill, but I should like to see retrenchment not confined to ourselves, but entering into the public works to a much greater extent than is indicated in the document to which I have referred. It is for the Council to say whether the first point I have referred to—whether it is constitutional or desirable to give the Government this immense power over the Assembly—should not be considered; but I could not permit you, Sir, to put such a question without calling attention to this important point.

The Hon. Mr. MANTELL.—I think the honourable member need have no doubt whatever as to the constitutional or unconstitutional nature of this Bill. First of all, I take this opportunity of correcting a misreport, which was made in some observations of mine at the beginning of the session. I then said I was not prepared to say that the House of Representatives was too numerous. I repeat it now. I remember the time when the House of Representatives was far less numerous than it is now; and the difficulty then was this: that each member's vote was far too valuable. I do not mean to say in a purchase point of view—there was nothing of that kind going on in those simple times; but each individual was far too important an entity, and it was thought that by increasing the number of members it would be more easy to get at accurate judgments on public questions than under the then-existing circumstances. I rejoiced to see the increase in the number of representatives; but now we are going to vote for an alteration in the other direction. It is an experiment. The other Chamber has voted in favour of the experiment, and it is not for us to say whether it is done gracefully or not: I refer to the words in the second line of the 2nd clause, "or other sooner determination of the present General Assembly." In that, it is easy to recognise not merely an alteration of the Constitution, but a coup d'état. We so arranged matters, not long ago, that it was competent for the Government at any time to silence the voice of the Council by introducing a sufficient number of members to swamp the Council, and the Council therefore can be muzzled—they may be considered half-muzzled already, because that power exists. Now we have a similar method applied to the other branch of the Legislature. Well, Sir, the effect of this will be, it seems to me, to alter what I conceive to be the constitutional relations between the Ministry and Parliament: that is, the Ministry should be, as far as possible, responsible to Parliament; but now we transpose those positions, and make Parliament responsible to the Ministry. The Ministry can, under these two Bills that we have lately been discussing, force any measure that it pleases through both Houses. I think there is no doubt about that. Now comes the question, Is it not rather desirable that the Government should have that power? I believe, if they had, they would be in a position of autocratic power; but I do hope they would exercise that power for the benefit of the country. It is absurd for us to think that any good will be done by altering this Bill. Not the slightest good will be done. We have passed one Bill in this direction; and let us pass this, and throw the entire responsibility—not on Parliament, for Parliament is relieved of that, but—on the Ministry. The Government, for three years, will have it in their power to do an infinity of good for the country. Let us hope they will do it. For my part I shall sit quite silent in reference to this Bill, and I shall not oppose or support the amendment to relieve the other House by the excision of the words to which I have referred in the 2nd clause; but let it pass, and let us see what will happen afterwards.

The Hon. Mr. McLEAN.—I look at this Bill as the real Bill of retrenchment of the session. The Government have commenced at the top of the tree in their reduction of expenditure, and the country has called for reduction in this direction. In reference to what has been said by the Hon. Mr. Waterhouse and the Hon. Mr. Mantell as to the power of the Government to obtain a dissolution, I say they would not have the power of a dissolution. We have seen dissolutions refused by the Governor over and over again; and it will be so again. I feel, myself—without casting any reflection on the honourable gentleman who holds the position of Governor now—that the last dissolution was an injustice. I feel that it has done harm to the country, and upset matters, and got it into a position worse than ever. It may have been a good move for the party now in power; but it was a false move on the part of the party who held power. They should have neither asked for nor got a dissolution, and it was an error of judgment on the part of the Governor: and we are all liable to that. I do not hold that the Ministry have the power of dissolution, because they have not; and it is purely for the Governor to say to any Ministry asking for a dissolution, whether he will grant it or not. He may give it, or he may not. Besides, how is this unconstitutional, as has been said by the Hon. Mr. Waterhouse? I hold that the only proper way to deal with the matter is according to the Bill as it stands at present. The object of clause 3 is fairly open to argument—whether it is a right thing to leave the Act to come into force on the direction of the Governor or in the ordinary course. This is a Bill which the other House has well considered, and, as a rule, we have never interfered with Bills which concern the adjustment of its own representation.

Hon. Mr. Mantell

The Hon. Mr. PHARAZYN.—The honourable gentleman who has just sat down expresses his regret at seeing the Bill now before us attacked. Well, I fail to see that it has been attacked in the sense in which the honourable gentleman supposes. The statements made have simply called the attention of the Council to the fact that this Bill does give the Government a very large power, which my honourable friend Mr. Waterhouse thinks is unconstitutional. Possibly it may be so; but it does not at all follow that, because of the large power he has pointed out, those interested are in any way unfairly affected by the measure. I think that the Hon. Mr. Mantell expressed himself on the whole in favour of the Bill; and, certainly, for my part, I think, in the existing circumstances of the colony, it is a very reasonable measure. It is, no doubt, an exceptional measure—a measure which, if passed, as has been said, will give very large power to the Government. But we must remember that the Government have undertaken a very great and difficult task, and in order to carry out that task they require exceptional powers; and, under these circumstances, I think the Council may very well support the Bill as it stands, acknowledging the fact that it is a very unusual and exceptional measure, but, under the circumstances, cordially approving the action of the House of Representatives with regard to it. I may say the same with regard to the Honorarium Bill and the other Bills we have passed. All these Bills are required in the circumstances of the country, and I only regret that there was any disinclination on the part of the Council to passing that Honorarium Bill—a disinclination that was more apparent than real, so far as reduction was concerned. But I think it was unfortunate such a difference of opinion did exist, and I hope on this occasion no difference of opinion will be expressed in regard to this Bill.

The Hon. Mr. SCOTLAND.—I think this is a most preposterous Bill, and I do not believe it expresses at all the wishes of the people of New Zealand. I dare say that a number of the younger members believe they are expressing the opinions of their constituents; but it will turn out that they are doing nothing of the kind. Then, this is a most dangerous Bill; it is a sword of Damocles held over the heads of the House. How the House has submitted to it is incomprehensible to me, violating as it does the spirit of the Constitution, of which we are guardians just as much as the members of the other branch of the Legislature. I do not think we should be doing our duty in letting the Bill pass, and I should be only too glad if some honourable member moved that it be read a second time this day six months, or got rid of it in some other way.

The Hon. Mr. OLIVER.—I think the wishes of the people were plainly declared at the recent elections, and the fact is recognised that a majority of the members of the House of Representatives were returned pledged to support such a measure. If that were not the case, is it to be supposed that a measure of this kind would be passed? I have no doubt whatever as to the extreme desirableness of reducing the number of the members of the other House. Any member of the Council will know that the smaller the number of members the fewer pulls there are on the public purse, and I think that is a much greater consideration than the mere saving of the honorarium.

The Hon. Mr. PEACOCK.—I think that the fact that this arrangement will only happen once ought to justify us in reading the Bill a second time.

The Hon. Mr. MENZIES.—I think it would be well that the Council should hear a plain statement of what the purport of this Bill is, and what its effect will be. My honourable friend the Hon. Mr. Mantell stated very plainly that there could be no doubt that, by means of this Bill, the Government gets as firm a grip of the House of Representatives as a former Bill gave them in respect of this Council; and, although I wholly disapprove of the course taken, I admire the dexterity with which it has succeeded in effecting this object. The manner in which was secured what was apparently a great reduction in the expenses of the other House was by securing to the old members an increase of what their honorarium would have been for this session, or what it would be under the existing Act, by the alteration which is effected by the Bill. That this was not noticed by many members of the House, I can very well understand. But, with regard to this particular Bill, I do not in the least sympathize with the objection which has been taken to it—that it gives too great a power to the Ministers. I entirely agree with my honourable friend Mr. Mantell that such a power is calculated to have a most excellent effect in guiding the policy of the Administration, provided that the Government exercise that power wisely. Whether they will do so or not is something which we cannot say. I believe the Government does not thoroughly understand the position of the country; otherwise it would not, in announcing the policy of public works which was disclosed last night, indicate its desire to expend such large sums, in the administration of which it will be necessary to borrow further large sums. That borrowing will necessarily involve further taxation, and what I grieve to see is that the Government is not so thoroughly advised of the position of the country as to be aware that the country is already burdened to such an extent that, if these burdens continue unlightened, the country will see a day of insolvency. No one who is familiar with the position of country settlers can blind his eyes to the fact that they are at present taxed to a greater extent than even in Great Britain; that they have a great deal of difficulty in making a living; and that they are living from hand to mouth, and are unable to do more than secure the necessities of life. Under such circumstances, then, it is sheer madness to go on increasing the public burdens. I am quite certain that not one member of this Council would for a moment hesitate to give up the whole honorarium if that were to be an indication of the policy of the Government right through. It was accepted as such; but we find, unfortunately, that, while the Government is willing to lessen the expenditure in some directions and promote retrenchment in salaries and current expenses, it still goes on with unnecessary and extravagant expenditure in those very directions in which economy should be exercised to a much more marked extent. No one who knows much of the colony, and looks over the proposals of the Government with reference to public works, can fail to see that a great number of those public works, on which a large amount of money is proposed to be expended for the next three years, are totally unnecessary at present. It is proposed to complete some railways which have been started, and carry out some branches which have been surveyed, through parts of the country where the population is comparatively scanty, and in which the soil is much less fertile than in other parts of the country where the population is larger, and where the fertile soil would encourage the hope that a large traffic would follow the construction of a railway. We do not find that even in those districts which are most populous and where the country has been under cultivation for a number of years the traffic is large. We find that the railways do not give a large return for the expenditure which has been occasioned. Therefore how can it be expected that we should continue spending money on any districts where the local traffic is less likely to afford an ample return? I do not suppose that any remarks that members may make on the subject will be of any service, but the opportunities which occur in the Council of speaking on such subjects are so infrequent that one can hardly decline the temptation of referring to them whenever the opportunity occurs. Referring to the question of the reduction of the number of members in the other House, I am not able to say that there can be any objection to the proposal. I think the proposal is an excellent one; and I am certain of this: that, inasmuch as the business of the country was conducted much more promptly and expeditiously, and quite as wisely, when the number of members of the Legislature was not larger than the Government proposes it shall be, the business will be quite as well conducted with a reduced number as it was then. The business of the country at present is subjected to a number of unconstitutional obstructions, and I am afraid that, in many instances, it is not completed wisely.

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS.—I should not have anything to say in reference to this question had it not been for the remarks which have been made with reference to the Public Works Statement. My honourable friend Mr. Menzies says the opportunities are so infrequent in this Council of discussing questions of that character that the opportunity of referring to them when it occurs should not be lost. I do not know that that is altogether the case, because I believe that there are many occasions in the course of a session when honourable gentlemen can express their opinions on matters of that sort. But I do say I am very much surprised to hear the remarks that have been made. This Government never undertook to put a full stop to the public works of the colony. From the very first up to the present time we have said that we consider it to be indispensable that the reduction in the public works should be large, but should be gradual; and that is the whole character of the proposition that has been made. I do not propose now to go into details in regard to that aspect of the matter, because I think it can be much more conveniently dealt with on another occasion than at the present time. But I must certainly say I am surprised at the remarks made, because they seem to indicate a hasty judgment on the proposals themselves. I believe, if the honourable gentlemen who expressed these opinions make a careful examination, they will, after taking into consideration the circumstances surrounding all the different cases, not keep to the opinion that they have just expressed—at all events, not wholly so. The view of the Government is that they should carry on works up to something like a paying point. That has been the burden of our song from the very first; and I submit that to stop short in the middle of all these undertakings at points where they lead to nowhere, and where nothing but expense would ensue, is not a course which it would be best to adopt. In concluding these few remarks on that point I would ask the honourable gentlemen to pay more attention to the particular circumstances themselves than they have done. I have only further to say that, whatever may be the possible effect of the Bill in regard to the Government exercising violent powers over the House of Representatives, certainly I am convinced there is no practical danger of anything of the kind. I am certain that the fate of any Government, in this free country, who attempted to exert any such powers in the restriction of the rights of the people in regard to the other Chamber, would very soon suffer complete extinction. That is, with me, a matter of conviction; otherwise I should not have concurred in what is contained in this measure. I trust the Bill will not be criticized in that spirit, because I am perfectly satisfied, from what I have heard, that from one end of the colony to the other it was the earnest desire of the constituencies, as a whole, that the number of members of the House of Representatives should be reduced; and I consider it must be admitted all round that this proposal of the Government is nothing more than the outcome of that view taken by the country, and is a fair and reasonable attempt to give effect to that view.

Hon. Mr. Menzies

The Hon. Mr. SHRIMSKI.—No one denies that the public desire a reduction in the number of members of the House of Representatives. The public have no desire, however, to place such power as is proposed in the hands of the Ministry, to be used whenever they think proper—a power by which they could at any time get a dissolution, in order to carry any measures they might think proper. If the Ministers are of opinion that this power will not be used, then why do they put it in the Bill? There is no use for it, except as a threat.

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS.—Not use it injuriously.

The Hon. Mr. SHRIMSKI.—If it will not be used, whether injuriously or not, they have no right to put it in the Bill. They could use that power in the case of the tariff for instance. The Government might be defeated on that, and they would have it in their hands to go to the country. I say it is rather too much to put the country to so much expense. The Hon. the Attorney-General was in a Ministry not many years ago when an increase of eight members was effected in the House of Representatives, and now, a short time afterwards, we are asked to reduce the number by twenty-one. I do not object to the reduction, and I suppose there are reasons for making it; but I object to giving into the hands of the Government the power to say when this reduction shall come into operation. To say that it is the Governor who has the power is absurd, because I have never known in this country a Governor refuse a dissolution when it has been asked for—it has always been granted. In regard to what the Hon. Mr. Pharazyn has said about introducing new matter into this subject, referring to the Honorarium Bill, I do not know what grieves him so much about the honorarium. It does not grieve other honourable gentlemen.

The Hon. Mr. PHARAZYN.—It must be so when you mention it.

The Hon. Mr. SHRIMSKI.—The honourable gentleman himself is put to no expense. He lives in Wellington, and has a good library to go to here, and no wonder he finds it an enjoyment.

The Hon. Mr. BONAR.—I disagree entirely with the honourable gentleman who spoke last, that the power of dissolution rests with the Government instead of with the Governor. I think that is an entirely wrong principle to lay down in this Council, and should be contradicted. We know that the Governor has hitherto always exercised his own judgment and good discretion as to whether he will grant a dissolution. In fact, he sometimes imposes conditions in granting a dissolution, and we may rely upon him not to grant a dissolution unless the circumstances of the colony really require it. Nor do I believe that the Government will ask for a dissolution unless the circumstances of the colony really require it. It is possible that the circumstances may not require such a thing to take place; but, I say, since it is in accordance with the wish of the country that the number of the members of the House of Representatives should be reduced, and, acting on that wish, the other House thought proper to pass the Bill that is brought before us, it is necessary for us to confirm the action of the other House, and also to confirm the will of the country. It may be that this Bill will not come into force until the ordinary effluxion of time; but, if the country required it at an earlier date, the will of the people ought to be given effect to by having the number reduced, and thereby a large economy would be effected not only in the expenses of Parliament, but also, as was pointed out by the Hon. Mr. Oliver, in the demands upon the public purse made by honourable members. I do think that the larger a district which a member represents is made the less that member will be likely to be considered a local delegate, and he will feel it is his duty all the more to consider the best interests of the colony at large. I think that this Bill is for the public weal; and, this being so, I hope that the Council will pass it without any dissension whatever.

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS.—I do not think the Council will be at all wise in interfering with this Bill. I think, after what we have seen in another branch of the Legislature, it is very clear that it cannot be expected that the Council will make any amendments in this Bill. I have no fear—though I confess I have no very great confidence in the present Government—that, with respect to the power of dissolution, the Government would take advantage of their position so as to force on a dissolution unless there was some real necessity for it. I am not sure whether it would not be the best thing to dissolve immediately after this session, because it would involve a saving of £12,000 in honorarium alone. At the same time, I do not advocate such a thing; I merely point out that such a saving could be effected if the Government took advantage of their power of a dissolution after this session. But no Government would endeavour to do so. I intend to support the Bill: and, with reference to what has been said about the Public Works Statement, I do not think that this is a proper time to review that question. There is one matter, however, that I would call the attention of the Council to. There are other savings which might be made with very great advantage. It is not enough simply to provide for a reduction of the honorarium; there are other reductions in the Legislative Department which should receive the consideration of the Government. We have the folly here of having two watchmakers to keep the clocks in order. That is a mere trifle, no doubt; but it shows how these things are managed. There is a watchmaker who attends to the clocks in the Legislative Council rooms and the library, and there is another watchmaker who attends to the clocks in the House of Representatives rooms. The Government should resume the entire control over the Legislative Departments, and take it entirely out of the hands of the Speakers, and see that these anomalies do not exist. That is simply one case; but I could name many more of a similar character. It is for the Government to take this matter into consideration. There is no doubt that we have too many employés in connection with the Legislative Department.

The Hon. Mr. DIGNAN.—I say with great satisfaction that I support this Bill, and I hope the Council is convinced by the voice of the country that there is a necessity for both retrenchment and reform in the administration of the government of the country. Therefore, if such retrenchment as the public require can be effected by the passing of this Bill, or by a Bill that has been previously passed affecting this Council, I think we have done our duty in passing that Bill, and that we shall be doing our duty in passing this measure. I regret to hear so many references to the Honorarium Bill. It is to be regretted that such expressions should have been made use of from time to time against the Government and the Parliament for passing that Bill. It is the only means, in my opinion, in which a sincere and true retrenchment can be brought about. There was one point referred to by the Hon. Mr. Stevens in his remarks on that subject that was sufficient to convince me of the necessity for voting for these measures, and that was that these Bills are part and parcel of a great scheme which the Government have in contemplation for effecting retrenchment in the affairs of the country. Therefore I voted for the Honorarium Bill, as I shall vote for this Bill. However it may affect us personally, I shall give it my hearty support.

The Hon. Dr. GRACE.—I think the effect of the Bill will be quite different from what honourable members have supposed. I take it for granted that if we pass this Bill a dissolution is less likely to occur, as the granting of a dissolution would involve the country in a great deal of expense and confusion. On the last two occasions on which dissolutions were granted, in my opinion they were not necessary in the interests of the country. I cannot conceive that any man performing the functions of Governor would so strengthen the hands of a Ministry against the will of the House of Representatives as to grant a dissolution under this Bill. We are bound to rely on the performance of its duty by the Crown. In the next place, I hold that we are bound to look with the greatest respect on the desires of the House of Representatives in relation to a measure of this kind. And I venture to remind the Council that eight or nine members walked out of this chamber on a former occasion when they were entirely opposed to a Representation Bill—to the policy of the Bill, to the details of the Bill, opposed in every particular to the Bill; walked out of the chamber rather than furnish a majority against the Government in a matter which referred solely to the other Legislative Chamber, though the measure deprived the Province of Nelson of its proper representation, and tore down the landmarks which had been preserved for years. The Hon. Sir Frederick Whitaker was then in charge of the measure, and I challenged it in every detail, as I felt it my duty to do. I do not think we have any right to interfere with important provisions in the present Bill, and I shall support it. In addition, I sincerely hail the diminution in the number of members; and the next measure I shall be glad to welcome in this Council will be an alteration in the law to the old system of quinquennial Parliaments. I think it will be admitted that we have paid sufficiently for our democratic experiences. I have always opposed these measures, which I foresaw would lead only to crudity and extravagance.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—I will not digress by going into the question of the Public Works Statement, which has been referred to by the Hon. Mr. Menzies, who says that we have very few opportunities of discussing such questions as that, and that therefore we should take advantage of such opportunities when they occur. I say we have many opportunities, and that there will be a few opportunities during the remainder of this session when honourable members may legitimately go into this question. I do not intend, therefore, to go into that part of the question at present, more especially as my honourable colleague the Hon. Mr. Stevens has already referred in a measure to it. The Hon. Mr. Waterhouse has suggested two reasons why we should deal with this matter carefully: one, that it might not be desirable that this change should be made; and the other, that it was unconstitutional. In regard to the unconstitutional part of the question, I say there is nothing whatever unconstitutional in it. It seems to me perfectly constitutional and perfectly right. I think, under all the circumstances, and looking at what took place during the recent elections, and at the view taken by the constituencies that there should be a reduction in the number of members of the House of Representatives, the House could do nothing less than pass a Bill of this kind; and had they not done so they would have violated all their pledges and what was expected of them. In regard to the words of the clause objected to by the Hon. Mr. Waterhouse—that is, the first portion of section 2: "or sooner determination of the present General Assembly"—I think he does not see the effect which would follow by striking out those words. It would then be competent on all occasions to prevent the Bill from coming into operation at all; and, if I recollect rightly, there has been no occasion, certainly not more than one, on which the Assembly has ceased by the effluxion of time—it has always been dissolved. And, supposing, at the end of the three years for which the present Parliament was elected, the present Ministry or other Ministry in power did not want this Act to come into operation, all they would have to do would be to dissolve Parliament a day before it would expire by effluxion of time. There are two checks upon the Government: one is that the Governor has power to refuse to grant a dissolution; and that power he exercises without the advice of the Ministry—he need not take the advice of his Ministry upon that subject. It is for him to judge between the parties, and it is for him to decide the matter according to his own judgment. In 1879 Sir Hercules Robinson took a long time to consider the matter, and hesitated very much as to whether he should grant a dissolution or not; but, after all, he came to the conclusion that he should grant it. But during the time this power has been in existence the Governor has refused a dissolution on several occasions. In regard to what has been said about other parts of the Bill, there are other occasions on which we can discuss them. I think, under all the circumstances, the Council would be quite justified in agreeing to the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Dr. Gruce

Bill read a second time.

The Council adjourned at twenty-five minutes past four o'clock p.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Tuesday, 13th December, 1887.

Second Readings—Third Reading—Wairoa Resident Magistrate's Court—Rabbit-exterminator—French Reciprocal Trade—Stock Conference—Imported Material for Public Works—Postal Question with France—Standing Orders—Local Government—Assays—"Unemployed" on Catlin's River Railway—Auckland Islands Light-house—Education—Public Libraries—Torpedo lost—Hutt County Tolls—Motueka Native Trust Lands—Railway Freight on Pressed Straw—Persons imprisoned for Debt—Teremakau Bridge—Lincoln Agricultural College—Discharged Warders—Canterbury Education Board Office—Privilege: Words used by Sir J. Vogel—Legislative Councillors—Education—Land Bill—Government Railways Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER took the chair at half-past two o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SECOND READINGS.

Auckland Girls' High School Bill, Pharmacy Bill, Public Reserves Sale Bill.

THIRD READING.

Christchurch Hospital Bill.

WAIROA RESIDENT MAGISTRATE'S COURT.

On the motion of Mr. GRAHAM, it was ordered, That there be laid upon the table a return showing the cost to the country of the visit of the Napier Resident Magistrate to the Wairoa District during the last three years.

RABBIT-EXTERMINATOR.

On the motion of Mr. DODSON, it was ordered, That there be laid before this House copies of Inspector Blundell's report upon the efficacy of Stenhouse and Smith's rabbit-exterminator, as shown by public trial in August last at Dumgree and Woodbourne, in the Marlborough District.

FRENCH RECIPROCAL TRADE.

Mr. JOYCE asked the Government, Whether they have any information of the result of Sir Francis D. Bell's visit to Paris, whither he intended to go, about May last, to discuss with the French Customs authorities certain reciprocal trade advantages, especially the question of New Zealand frozen meats, a trade for which has sprung up in France, and is capable of large extension but for the heavy duty recently imposed by the French Government?

Major ATKINSON said the Government had no information upon the subject; but he would make further inquiries. Perhaps the honourable member would indicate where he obtained his information?

Mr. JOYCE said he found it in the proceedings of the Colonial Conference, in a memorandum written by Sir Dillon Bell on the 27th March last.

STOCK CONFERENCE.

Mr. LANCE asked the Government, Whether they will adopt the resolutions passed at the Stock Conference held in Sydney in October, 1886, and inform the Government of New South Wales thereof?

Major ATKINSON understood that this matter was before the Stock Committee at the present time; but the Government would look into it. There was no doubt that there ought to be a common law on the subject.

IMPORTED MATERIAL FOR PUBLIC WORKS.

Sir J. VOGEL asked the Minister for Public Works, Whether he will take into favourable consideration the question of abandoning the practice, in future contracts for public works, of allowing cement and other materials to be introduced free of duty? He would briefly state that a practice had grown up of inserting in contracts a proviso that material, especially cement, required and imported specially for the works under contract should be admitted duty-free.

The Customs Department had been asked what they thought of the arrangement, and replied that they thought very badly of it. It was difficult to follow material and ascertain whether the material was actually used for the purpose of particular contracts, or whether some of it was not sold and payment of duty on it escaped. Obviously, this was a disadvantage to the importer who paid the duty; but he would not disguise the fact that the greater objection he had to the practice was that it bore very hardly upon local producers. In the case of cement, there was cement produced at Mahurangi, and also near Dunedin, of first-class quality; and, if the duties by law leviable were charged, contractors would be much more inclined to use the local article than they now were. He might say that Mr. Wilson, of Mahurangi, had communicated with the Industrial Association of Auckland, that Association communicated with a similar one in Christchurch, and through the Christchurch Association the matter had been brought before him; and he recollected that on its being brought before him the Customs Department, during the time he had presided over it, had come to the conclusion that it would be desirable to put an end to any such provisions in the contracts. He hoped the Minister for Public Works would be able to tell him that he would consider the matter favourably, for by doing so he was sure to give a great deal of satisfaction to local producers.

Mr. MITCHELSON said the Government had considered this question very carefully, and had decided that all cement and other articles which could be produced in the colony that were used for the purpose of public works would have to pay the ordinary duty. He did not consider that cement should be admitted free, as he was informed by the Public Works Department that there was a great deal of difficulty in tracing these articles from the ship to the works. Although they could not alter the arrangements made under existing contracts, they would take care that in future the practice of admitting contractors' materials free of duty should be discontinued.

POSTAL QUESTION WITH FRANCE.

Mr. JOYCE asked the Government, Whether they will inform this House—(1) The date when the Agent-General was, upon a postal question, accredited to Lord Lyons, the British Ambassador in France, and placed in direct communication with M. Coehery, who at that time controlled the French Postal and Telegraph Service; (2) what were the particulars of such postal question, and the result of the Agent-General's mission thereon? This was suggested to him on reading a memorandum from Sir Dillon Bell as to negotiation with foreign Powers in matters of trade. He found in this memorandum the following passage:—

"More recently, when it was decided to reopen negotiations upon certain trade questions pending between Canada and Spain, Her Majesty's Government were pleased to grant to Sir Charles Tupper joint plenipotentiary powers with the Ambassador at Madrid for negotiating the proposed treaty. Sir Charles Tupper alluded to this on a public occasion in the City (London) in the following terms: 'So far as the foreign commerce of Canada is concerned, Lord Derby and Lord Granville have responded in the most generous spirit to the wish of Canada that her representative should be charged, as plenipotentiary, with the duty and responsibility of negotiating treaties in regard to foreign Powers; and they did me the higher honour of at once placing me on equal terms with Sir Robert Morier in the negotiation of a treaty with Spain.' In a recent speech in Canada Sir Charles Tupper announced his intention of going soon to Madrid to resume the negotiations."

It appeared from this that the Dominion of Canada had been in communication with foreign nations with regard to treaties respecting her natural products, and Sir Dillon Bell referred to a journey he proposed to make in relation to the frozen-meat trade. He thought this was a question which should come before the House, and that the House should know what had been done in respect to it; and therefore he asked the Premier if he could give them any information upon the subject.

Major ATKINSON was sorry he could not give the honourable gentleman any information on this point, either. All the original papers were burned in the Post Office when the fire occurred.

Mr. JOYCE asked the Premier whether he would communicate with the Agent-General, so that he might be supplied with fresh information or duplicate papers.

Major ATKINSON said he would make inquiries about it; but he thought nothing would come of it, because, if the negotiation promised success, probably they would have heard about it again.

STANDING ORDERS.

Major STEWARD asked the Premier, Whether he will take steps to give effect to the recommendations of the Standing Orders Committee, as contained in the report presented on Friday, the 9th instant?

Major ATKINSON said the Government would take this matter carefully into consideration during the recess, and hoped to be able to propose something that would be satisfactory to the House.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. LARNACH asked the Premier, Whether the Government will place a sufficient sum of money on the estimates to provide bonuses to be paid for the three best essays on a thorough system of local government specially suitable and adaptable to the well-being of the inhabitants of both Islands of New Zealand? He put the question on the Order Paper with the view of assisting the Government. He thought they would be glad to receive useful hints upon the question of local government—the Premier had said as much—and he believed that the best way of acquiring them was to pay for them. A sum of, say, £300 would be money very usefully spent in this direction.

Mr. Joyce

Major ATKINSON said he thought there were so many local-government men in the House that he hoped to receive some hints without payment. The Government would take the matter into consideration, and if they thought it desirable—and he considered that very likely—they would perhaps ask the House to put a small sum on the estimates for this purpose.

Mr. SEDDON hoped that this reward would not apply to members of either House of Parliament.

Major ATKINSON said he would be inclined to give them double.

ASSAYS.

Mr. LEVESTAM asked the Minister of Mines, Whether he will give instructions to have assays made free of charge at the Government Laboratory?

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON might inform the honourable gentleman that instructions had been issued fixing the cost of assays at the nominal sum of 5s. in every case. It had been considered desirable to have some nominal charge made, to prevent quantities of valueless ores from being sent.

"UNEMPLOYED" ON CATLIN'S RIVER RAILWAY.

Mr. R. THOMPSON asked the Minister for Public Works, In the return of the "unemployed" laid upon the table it is stated that seventy men are engaged upon the Catlin's River Railway, yet the local paper circulating in that district asserts that the County Council cannot obtain labour to carry out ordinary roadwork: will the Minister make inquiries as to whether the services of the "unemployed" cannot be dispensed with? His reason for asking this question was as follows: The Clutha Leader stated that, while the Government were providing relief-works for many hundreds of men, the County Council could not get their works carried out for want of men to do them. At a late meeting of the Clutha County Council a number of works had to be postponed from this cause.

Mr. MITCHELSON replied that the men referred to as working upon the Catlin's River Railway were doing very good work, and were doing it, he understood, at a cheaper rate than it would otherwise be done for. The following paragraph from the Otago Daily Times showed that a mistake had been made in inserting the paragraph in the Clutha Leader, which now turned out to have been incorrect:—

"As secretary to the Dunedin Labour Exchange, Mr. Colin Allan addressed the following letter to the Chairman of the Clutha County Council: 'I enclose a paragraph from the Clutha Leader; and, if it be true that works cannot be proceeded with for want of men, I will take in hand to supply good honest labourers at the shortest notice, to take pick-and-shovel work either by contract or by day-labour, as may be agreed upon. The Board of Advice has no desire to send men to relief-works as long as other work can be obtained.' To which the following reply was received yesterday: 'The paragraph in the Clutha Leader with regard to works is misleading. What was implied at the last meeting of the Council was, that there seemed to be a scarcity of contractors to carry out the works of the county.—HENRY S. REUNERT, County Clerk, Balclutha.'

From this it would appear that the Clutha district was in want of contractors, and not of labourers.

AUCKLAND ISLANDS LIGHTHOUSE.

Mr. WARD asked the Government, if they will open negotiations with the Australian Colonies with a view to establishing a lighthouse on the Auckland Islands? He asked this question at the request of the Invercargill Chamber of Commerce, and of other residents of Southland. It would be in the recollection of the Minister that a number of wrecks had taken place on the Auckland Islands, and a great many lives had been lost, and it was thought desirable that the colonies should have a lighthouse erected on either the Auckland Islands or Enderby Island, the Snares, or one of the adjacent islands. He would be glad to hear that negotiations with the other colonies would be entered into regarding this matter.

Mr. FISHER said the question related to a matter that almost entirely affected the trade of the Australian Colonies. Some time ago there were negotiations with reference to the establishment of a light on the Auckland Islands; but those negotiations came to nothing. However, he would promise the honourable gentleman that the negotiations should be renewed. The necessity must be admitted, from the number of wrecks that took place; but, as he had said, the matter more affected the shipping trade of Australia than that of New Zealand.

EDUCATION.

Mr. TURNBULL asked the Premier, Why the Order in Council of the 7th instant, issuing regulations under "The Education Act, 1877," was published, the House of Assembly being in session, and no opportunity having been afforded them of expressing their opinion thereon previous to its issue; and also if they had obtained the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown before issuing the regulations in question? He would not detain the House for more than a few minutes; but he wished to call attention to it, because he believed it to be a very serious matter, and one which was calculated to bring the Governor into collision with the House: in fact, he had been actually placed in the position of superseding the powers of the House, by saying what should be done. There was no getting behind that fact. It was all very well to say that this was only a tentative measure; but the fact was that the Governor had superseded the powers of the House by issuing the regulations as to what should be done. And not only did this affect the Governor, but it also affected the privileges of the House. The matter was a very serious one, and he hoped to receive a satisfactory answer.

Mr. FISHER, in reply, said he would take the latter part of the question first. On the 10th of November, rather more than a month ago, the honourable member for Greymouth put a question on the Order Paper asking whether the Government had taken the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown upon the point. The answer he gave was, that the Government at that time were in possession of the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown on the subject. With regard to the larger part of the question, as to the possibility of the House being brought into collision with the Governor, he might say—with all respect for the honourable gentleman, for he did not wish in any way to wound his feelings—that he thought that was straining the position a little too much. The position of the Government in the matter was this: They had intimated in the Financial Statement their intention to make certain changes with regard to the education vote, and consequent upon that statement the Government had been besieged with applications from Education Boards and other persons interested in education in all parts of the colony desiring to know what the exact proposals of the Government were; and they thought it better to put their views clearly and distinctly in the form in which they appeared in the Order in Council. The Government had no desire to force their views upon the House; and, as the Premier had stated on the previous day, the whole question would come up for discussion upon a future occasion. The sole object of putting the views of the Government in the form of an Order in Council was that the Education Boards, and all other persons affected by these changes, should have definite and exact information on the points to which these changes related. He thought the matter had been made pretty clear by what the Premier had said. The whole subject would again come up for discussion, and it was hardly desirable that the debate on this subject which would shortly take place should be anticipated in this way.

Dr. FITCHETT wished to know if it would be competent to discuss the subject on the estimates.

Mr. SPEAKER thought it would be.

Dr. FITCHETT.—Supposing the House wished to increase the vote, and the Government indicated their intention not to do so, could the wish of the House be given effect to?

Mr. SPEAKER said the Committee of Supply could not increase the votes.

Major ATKINSON said he would undertake to put some vote in such a form that an expression of the opinion of the Committee should be given as to the action of the Government in this matter.

Mr. SEDDON wished to know if the Government had considered whether they would put the House in possession of the opinion of the Crown Law Officers on this point. Sir Robert Stout had given an opinion to an Education Board to the effect that the Order in Council was illegal. As the House had to discuss this, in fairness to the Crown Law Officers and to the Government he thought it would be well if the opinion of those officers were placed on the table. He hoped the Government would accede to that request, and would allow honourable members to have the opinion which the Law Officers had given.

Major ATKINSON could not think of laying the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown on the table. The Government had issued an Order in Council, of the legality of which they had no doubt at all. If it was not legal, of course it was not worth the paper it was written on. But he took it the House would decide this question on the education vote. The question as to whether the Order in Council was illegal or not was irrelevant. The real question was, whether the House would make other provision; if so, the Order in Council would be cancelled.

PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

Mr. GUINNESS asked the Government, Whether they will forward to each of the public libraries in the colony copies of all public Bills introduced to Parliament during each session? He wished to explain that the object in getting Bills forwarded to each public library was to enable those persons who read Hansard and took an interest in the proceedings to have the Bills before them, in order to see the discussion that took place in the House on the wording of particular measures. There were not many public libraries in the colony, and therefore a very trifling expense would be incurred.

Mr. HISLOP said the Government did not see their way to give this direction, as it was competent for each member of the House to send Bills to public libraries if he felt disposed.

TORPEDO LOST.

Mr. SEDDON asked the Minister of Defence, —(1.) If it is true that at a recent date, during torpedo-practice, one of the three mines laid was lost, and cannot be found? (2.) If the answer is in the affirmative, will the Minister cause inquiry to be made into the circumstances under which the mine was lost, and, if through carelessness, neglect, or incompetency, will he compel the responsible parties to pay to the colony the cost of the said mine? Honourable members would remember that at the commencement of the session, during the torpedo-practice, one of two valuable torpedoes had been lost, and had not since been found. It had been seen by a steamer crossing the Straits a short time ago, but had not yet arrived at Lyttelton. Probably the Defence Department had given instructions to the torpedo corps there to look out for it. About three weeks ago, by direction of Sir George Whitmore, or, at all events, with his consent, a torpedo-practice took place in the presence of Captain Duncan, of the Wellington Naval, and three mines were laid down. On going to take up these mines, two of them were there, but the other was missing. There had been a constant search for the last three weeks for this missing one, and he believed it had not yet been found. They had found the sinker; but, as to finding the mine itself, it had not yet been discovered, unless that had taken place within the last twenty-four hours. He might say, for the peace of mind of mariners visiting this port, that the mine was not charged. He believed the "Ellen Ballance" was out last Sunday morning in search, and it was then the sinker was found. Between losing torpedoes and mines a considerable loss was entailed on the colony, and this loss pointed to carelessness or incompetence, and did not say much for those who were responsible. He asked this question with a view of having full information given to the House, as he believed it was not a very satisfactory state of affairs, considering the cost to the country.

Mr. FERGUS understood that some little time ago four mines were put down, in order to test the force of the currents and strength of the tides. The currents happened to be very strong, and one shackle gave way; but he understood that the most valuable portion of the mine had been found. It was quite necessary that those in control of the defences of the colony should have some tests made, to be of some use in time of invasion or scare, so that they should know exactly what they were doing. The mines were not loaded. With regard to the torpedo which was lost, he was informed that it was now on shore at the Heads, and would be brought in in due course.

HUTT COUNTY TOLLS.

Mr. FITZHERBERT asked the Government, If they will make good to the Hutt County Council the amount of tolls which were uncollected during the time between the judgment of the Supreme Court in the recent Hutt toll-gate case and its reversal by the Court of Appeal?

Major ATKINSON could see no ground why the Government should pay this sum of money.

MOTUEKA NATIVE TRUST LANDS.

Mr. KERR asked the Native Minister, —(1.) Will he cause inquiry to be made into the position generally of the Native trust lands, Motueka? (2.) Will the Minister recommend the trustees, on the expiry of existing leases, to have a right of renewal granted to the present lessees, and to have future rents fixed by arbitration, in like manner to that which obtained in fixing rents of the Bishop trust lands? (3.) Will the Minister obtain from the trustees a detailed statement of the said trusts, and showing the amounts received and disbursed in relation thereto?

Major ATKINSON did not know what sort of inquiry the honourable gentleman meant. The Government were possessed of full information upon all questions relating to these reserves. As to the second part of the question, there was a Bill now before the House to deal with this matter. With regard to the accounts, if the honourable gentleman turned to the Appendix to the Journals he would find full particulars with regard to them in G.-5.

RAILWAY FREIGHT ON PRESSED STRAW.

Mr. ANDERSON asked the Minister for

Mr. Seddon

Public Works, If he will reduce the railway freight on pressed straw by 25 per cent., so as to equalise it with that on chaff, which weighs and bulks about the same as pressed straw?

Mr. MITCHELSON said he had made inquiries into this subject, and found that it was quite true that the weight of pressed straw was equal in bulk to the same weight of chaff; but the fact was that the chaff rate was exceedingly low, being about the same as that charged for firewood, and it was now a question of whether the straw rate should be reduced to that charged for chaff or the latter raised to the price charged for the former. He was now considering which of these courses to adopt. The reduction of the straw rate would mean a considerable loss of revenue: still, the fact remained that there was an anomaly which required remedying.

PERSONS IMPRISONED FOR DEBT.

Mr. SEDDON asked the Minister of Justice, If it is true that persons imprisoned for debt are, at the Wellington gaols, placed in the same cells with prisoners who have been convicted of criminal offences? In reference to this question, he had before him a letter which appeared in the leading journal of Wellington, in which the writer said,— “SIR,—According to the law as at present in force in this colony, any person can be imprisoned for debt. I may be told that it is not so—that imprisonment follows the disobeying an order of Court for payment of a debt, or, in other words, contempt of Court. Well, put it so. Still, it remains imprisonment for debt. For instance, a man is committed to gaol for disobedience, and after being lodged there his friends pay the amount of the claim, and he is liberated. This surely shows that he has been imprisoned for debt. But my object in writing upon this subject is not to find fault with the present law in relation to imprisonment, but to point out that, if persons are to be imprisoned for debt, at any rate let the gaol of the Empire City of New Zealand be provided with a debtors' ward, and not have poor but honest men thrust into cells occupied by criminals. A case has just been brought under my notice. A respectable resident of Wellington was sent to gaol the other day for making default in payment of a small debt, and upon arrival at the gaol was placed in a cell occupied by three criminals—namely, a murderer, Lord Tyler, and another burglar. I hope that, now I have called attention to the matter, abler pens than mine will take the matter up, until a howl of indignation will be heard throughout the country against a Government of which the late Minister of Justice was a member.—I am, &c.,

“DISGUSTED.”

He objected, himself, to recovery of small debts, because he thought it should not be a charge upon the country. He objected to imprisonment for debt; and, reading that persons so imprisoned were mixed with criminals, when he knew that the gaol regulations strictly forbade it, perhaps this letter might be written with a view of doing an injury to those in charge of the Wellington Gaol. By bringing the matter up it gave fair-play to the authorities: if, on the other hand, it was true that debtors were mixed with criminals, as alleged, then there was a gross breach of discipline, and he thought it would do no harm to call the attention of the Minister to it, so as to exonerate the gaol officials. At the same time, if there was any want of room, it would be better that proper accommodation should be provided. He thought he was perfectly justified in putting the question, and hoped the answer would be a satisfactory one.

Mr. FERGUS said he was informed that there was no truth whatever in the statement.

TEREMAKAU BRIDGE.

Mr. GUINNESS asked the Minister for Public Works, Whether he will take into consideration the advisability of having the railway-bridge over the Teremakau River, on the line of the Greymouth-Hokitika Railway, altered so as to make the bridge suitable for dray traffic?

Mr. MITCHELSON said the cost of the alteration of this bridge so as to make it a combined one would not be very great, the estimate being £750; but the Government could not recommend this expenditure, as the department had furnished a report stating that a bridge at this place for combined traffic would be exceedingly dangerous, seeing that the approaches were not open to view.

LINCOLN AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

Mr. O'CALLAGHAN asked the Government, Whether, during the recess, they will consider the necessity of a complete reform in the system of management of the Lincoln Agricultural College, in the direction (1) of placing the control in the hands of an experienced and practical body of agricultural experts, instead of the Board of Governors of Canterbury College; (2) of providing regulations to render the institution suitable to the requirements of the colony, and available for the farmer or yeoman class, and not confined, as at present, by the high rate of fees charged, to the use of the wealthy alone; also to render the farm, so far as possible, self-supporting; and that the public be supplied with a minute detailed statement of accounts of annual income and expenditure? And whether they will bring in proposals next session to effect the above-mentioned objects? He wished to ask this question in order to place before the Government and the House the necessity that existed for reform in the system of management of the Agricultural College at Lincoln. The directions in which he wished to see that reform take place were as follow: that the institution should be made a more popular one, and should be placed within the means of the whole of the farming class. The fee of £65 per student rendered the institution not available for that class. Another direction in which he desired to see reform was, that a detailed statement of accounts should be placed before the public every year. Hitherto there had only been a statement laid before the House of receipts and expenditure for each year — a rough statement. That statement for the last year was as follows: Receipts: Rents, £1,007 17s.; fees, £1,226 10s.; sales and produce, £1,512 17s. 6d.: total, £3,747 4s. 6d. Then, there was the expenditure under the different items of salaries, board of students and staff, travelling - expenses, farm - labour, stock, seeds, &c., and maintenance; amounting, in all, to £4,894 8s. 4d. This showed a debit balance to the amount of £1,147 8s. 10d. for the year ending the 31st of March last. This showed that the institution, with the large amount it received from the rents of the endowments, was not self-supporting; and he thought it was only right that the public should be made aware of that fact. Now, at a late meeting a motion was tabled by a member of the Board of Governors to the following effect: "That the Superintendent should be instructed to furnish an account of the work done at the school during the past year." One of the Governors stated that he doubted the wisdom of placing their accounts before any person who chose to ask for them; and the motion was withdrawn on account of the opposition of the Board of Governors to it. The Chairman stated that a full statement of receipts and expenditure was laid before the House, and was audited in Wellington. But this was not the mode of keeping and publishing the accounts that he (Mr. O'Callaghan) desired to see adopted. He thought the public had a right to see a detailed statement laid before them of all the work done in the institution, and the expenditure that took place. The institution as it was now being carried on was certainly not fulfilling its proper functions, and it certainly was not adapted to the requirements of the country. This was his only opportunity of bringing the matter under the notice of the Government; and he hoped that during the recess they would cause full inquiry to be made, and that the result of a thorough examination will be the effecting of very considerable improvement in the future.

Mr. FISHER said the honourable gentleman was, no doubt, aware that his observations opened out an entirely new phase of the question relating to the management of the institution. The College was under the management of the Board of Governors of the Canterbury College, a body established by Act, and therefore a body over which the Government had no control. He quite agreed with the general tendency of the honourable gentleman's remarks in regard to the Agricultural College not being managed in the most advantageous way; but the general answer to the honourable gentleman's question must be that the Government had no power to interfere. As to making the fees of the College more moderate, so as to bring the benefits of the institution within the reach of persons of moderate means, to give effect to that would mean an entire revolution in the management of the institution, because, as the honourable gentleman himself had said, the fees charged at the present time had resulted in a debit balance of £1,150. He fully agreed with the honourable gentleman that some effort should be made to popularise the institution, and he thought the most satisfactory way in which he could conclude his remarks would be by saying that the Government would, with a view to popularising the institution, take the whole question into consideration during the recess.

Mr. O'Callaghan

DISCHARGED WARDERS.

Mr. ANDERSON asked the Minister of Justice, The reason why Chief Warder Ferguson and Warders Scott and Corrigan were discharged from the Government service; what compensation was granted to them; and was the compensation granted in conformity with the then-existing law?

Mr. FERGUS said Chief Warder Ferguson was discharged from the Government service for misconduct; but, as he had served upwards of nineteen years, and it was only towards the end of that long service that his habits became such as to necessitate his discharge, the Cabinet granted him a compassionate allowance of £66 13s. 4d. Warder Scott and Assistant Warder Corrigan were discharged on account of failing health, and received compensation as under: Scott, £135 8s. 3d.; Corrigan, £40. In each of these cases the compensation granted was in conformity with the then-existing law.

CANTERBURY EDUCATION BOARD OFFICE.

Mr. O'CALLAGHAN asked the Minister of Education, Whether he has been informed that a Registration Officer, who holds also the appointment of schoolmaster, has been warned by the Canterbury Education Board that he must resign one or other of these offices; and whether the Government approves of such interference with an officer in the public service?

Mr. FISHER said the Government knew nothing whatever of the matter beyond the fact that there was an electoral officer in the district who, in addition to being Registration Officer, was a teacher in the employ of the Education Board. He received £15 a year as Registration Officer. If the officer had received such an intimation, he (Mr. Fisher) thought the interference somewhat unreasonable. If the services of such an officer could be utilised for the benefit of the public in this way, he thought it a somewhat unreasonable straining of official intervention if what the honourable gentleman had stated had been done.

PRIVILEGE: WORDS USED BY SIR J. VOGEL.

Sir J. VOGEL.—Sir, with regard to certain amendments I have given notice to move, on the motion for going into Committee of Supply, I wish to say that it appears to me that there is a strong desire on the part of honourable members that the session should be ended by Christmas, and that therefore any particular subject other than Government business, no matter what it may be, can hardly be brought forward without limiting the time available for discussing the Government measures. There is another point which has a great deal of influence with me in the course I propose to take; and it is this: that I feel it is not desirable to interpose any obstacle, so to speak, in the way of considering—and giving the greatest amount of consideration to—the appropriations on the estimates of public expenditure. I can well understand that, with a large number of notices of amendments to the motion for Committee of Supply given by honourable members, the Government may feel less inclined to give to honourable members a number of opportunities by adjourning the Committee of Supply—in other words, may allow not so large an amount of consideration to questions relating to public expenditure. I would not on any consideration let any matter personal to myself act in the way of an obstacle to the full consideration of questions relating to public expenditure, and I may say that that consideration influences me in the largest degree. I have therefore come to the conclusion that I shall not bring this matter before the House this session, and when the time comes I shall withdraw these notices; so that the Government may feel, in the first instance, that I shall not take up time which may be devoted to other subjects of larger public importance, probably, and also that, as far as I am concerned, there will be no reason for their refusing to adjourn Committee of Supply from time to time, to give the largest amount of attention which can be given, under the circumstances of our very limited time, to questions relating to the public expenditure.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCILLORS.

Mr. SAMUEL.—Sir, I wish to make a statement to the House on a matter of great importance which, I think, ought to be brought under the notice of the House and the Government. I believe that some six gentlemen who are now in the habit of taking seats in the Legislative Council have no right to take such seats there, and that their seats have been vacated. The gentlemen to whom I refer are the Hon. Mr. Pharazyn, the Hon. Mr. Oliver, the Hon. Mr. Waterhouse, the Hon. Mr. Holmes, the Hon. Mr. Menzies, and the Hon. Dr. Pollen. The reason that causes me to believe those gentlemen have lost the seats they formerly held in the Legislative Council is that, so far as I have been able to discover from the Journals of the Council, they have been absent for two successive sessions without the permission of the Governor, signified in accordance with section 36 of the Constitution Act. That section provides,—

“If any Legislative Councillor shall, for two successive sessions of the General Assembly, without the permission of Her Majesty or of the Governor, signified by the said Governor to the Legislative Council, fail to give his attendance in the said Legislative Council, . . . his seat in such Council shall thereby become vacant.”

Now, all those gentlemen have been, as far as I have been able to discover, absent during the whole of two successive sessions without permission for more than one session. The Hon. Mr. Pharazyn was absent during the whole of the session of last year and the first session this year, having had permission only for the year 1886; the Hon. Mr. Oliver was absent during the whole of the sessions of 1885 and 1886, having had permission only for that of 1885; the Hon. Mr. Waterhouse was absent during the whole of the sessions of 1885 and 1886, having had permission only for the year 1885. That honourable gentleman, too, if I have made no mistake in my search, and if my reading of the law is correct, had previously vacated his seat, as he was absent during the sessions of 1882 and 1883, having had permission only for the year 1882. If he vacated it the first time, he had, of course, no right to take his seat again in the Council. The Hon. Mr. Holmes was absent during the two sessions held in 1884; the Hon. Mr. Menzies was also absent during the two sessions of 1884; and the Hon. Dr. Pollen was absent during the sessions of 1870 and 1871, having had permission only for that of 1870. That honourable gentleman also, I believe, had previously vacated his seat, having been absent during the sessions of 1866 and 1867, with permission only for 1867. There might possibly have been some doubt about the interpretation of section 36 of the Constitution Act, but whatever doubt there might formerly have been appears to me to have now been set at rest by the decision of the Privy Council in the case of The Attorney-General of Queensland versus Gibbon. In that case a member of the Queensland Legislative Council had been absent during three sessions, but had obtained leave of absence for a period covering the whole of the first session and a part of the second; and the question arose whether, having been absent the whole of three sessions, including one session and part of another not included in the period for which he had permission, his seat was vacated. The Constitution Act of Queensland is almost identical with that of New Zealand in these respects; and a Committee of the Legislative Council decided, by a majority of three to two, that the seat was not vacated. Against this decision the Attorney-General appealed to the Privy Council, and there it was decided that the seat had been vacated. The Bench deciding the appeal was a strong one, consisting of the Right Hon. Lords Bramwell, Hobhouse, and Herschell, Sir Barnes Peacock, and Sir R. Couch. The judgment of Lord Hobhouse sets out the facts of the case clearly, and I will read it from the Law Times report (23rd April, 1887, Vol. LVI., N.S., 239):—

“The difficulty in this case arises from the circumstance that Mr. Gibbon received permission to absent himself, not during any specified sessions of the Legislature, but for a definite period of time, not coinciding with the sessions that have been held. His leave of absence was for one twelvemonth—viz., from the 23rd December, 1882, to the 23rd December, 1883. He was actually absent, first, during the session which began in June and ended in July, 1883; secondly, during the session which began in November, 1883, and ended in March, 1884; and, thirdly, during the session which began in July and ended in December, 1884. In the course of the next session the question arose whether his seat had become vacant. He had thus been absent during the whole of three sessions, but his leave of absence covered the whole of the first and a portion of the second, so that it cannot be said that he was absent during two successive sessions without a permission extending to some portion of those sessions. The question is, whether such a permission prevents Mr. Gibbon's seat from becoming vacant. The question was referred by the Legislative Council to a Committee of five, who sifted it very carefully, and, by a majority of three to two, decided that the seat was not vacated, and reported in that sense. The Council adopted the report, which therefore comes to their Lordships with all the weight due to that decision. The effective words of the statute are that 'If any Legislative Councillor shall for two successive sessions fail to give his attendance, without permission, his seat shall thereby become vacant.' The word 'fail' is not applicable only to instances of wilful or negligent failure. It would apply also to the case of failure wholly blameless—e.g., from the illness of the Councillor. 'Fail to give his attendance,' then, is equivalent to 'be absent from;' and the section therefore is to be read, 'If any Legislative Councillor shall, for two successive sessions, be absent from the said Legislative Council without permission.' Without permission for what? Why, absence for two successive sessions. Mr. Gibbon has had no permission to be, and has been, absent for two successive sessions. To say that permission to be absent for one, or a period including one, prevents the application of the provision, is in effect to say that permission cannot be given to be absent for one session without its operating in effect for two sessions. In their Lordships' opinion the statute treats the non-attendance which entails a penalty as an entire thing, and they consider that the permission which is relied on to avoid the penalty must be for that entire thing. They think the object of the enactment is attained by this construction. Absence, short of two sessions, even by one day, is attended by no consequences. But absence for two successive sessions vacates the seat, unless leave is given for a period covering such absence as a whole. It is the absence on the last day added to the prior absence that has to be justified by permission, and that permission must be for the entire absence. They must therefore humbly advise Her Majesty to allow the appeal, and declare that Mr. Gibbon's seat became vacant."

It seems to me that there can be no doubt whatever that this decision is binding in the present case, and that therefore the seats of the honourable gentlemen whom I have named have become vacant. I have thought it right to bring this matter before the House, as the House seems to me to be the proper medium for me, as one of its members, to make known the discovery, if I may call it so, which I have made. I have no doubt the Government will consider the subject, and cause a careful search to be made of the records of the Council, and cause proper steps to be taken as pointed out by the Constitution Act—that they will have the matter investigated, and find out whether the seats are vacant. I may express a hope that, if they do find that the seats have been vacated, they will lose no time in bringing in an Indemnity Bill, to prevent these gentlemen being subjected to possibly very heavy pecuniary loss. I have taken the earliest opportunity of bringing the question before the House, for the session is considerably advanced, and it may be necessary to take some legislative action in the matter.

Mr. Samuel

Mr. LARNACH.—Is there any penalty or fine for honourable gentlemen in that position holding seats which are really vacant?

Major ATKINSON.—I cannot inform the honourable gentleman definitely. Of course it will be the duty of the Government, now that the matter has been brought under its notice, to look into the question, and see what steps should be taken, if any.

EDUCATION.

Mr. WILSON.—I am sorry that I was absent yesterday when the discussion took place with regard to the education question. I understand from some honourable members who were present that there was an impression on the minds of some honourable gentlemen that the Education Committee lately appointed is shielding the Government in some way; and I wish to disabuse the minds of honourable members upon that point. I am sure the Government can perfectly well shield itself. And I am certain that all the members of the Committee take the same view as I do on this matter. A great deal of valuable evidence has been taken by the Committee. On the 19th of last month I asked for an extension of time for a month, not for the purpose of shelving the question, but simply that we might get evidence from all parts of the colony, and in order that I might not have to ask for an extension of time from week to week. We have sent all over New Zealand asking various people for evidence, and of course it will take a long time for this evidence to come in. I think the Committee are quite satisfied that they cannot make an exhaustive report this session; but they will bring up an interim report, and hope the House will consent to the Committee being set up again next session in order that they may pursue their inquiries further. As education is such an important matter in this colony, I think it would be a very good thing if a standing Committee were set up, so that matters relating to education might be referred to it. The members of that Committee would then have a better knowledge of the education question than any fresh Committee that might be set up for that purpose. The proposal which I now make will increase the cost of printing very considerably; but, as it seemed to be the wish of honourable members during the discussion yesterday that they should have this evidence before them, I thought it right that I should give them an opportunity of voting on the question, at any rate. There is still a considerable amount of evidence to come in. I beg to move, That the evidence, so far as it has been taken by the Education Committee, be laid on the table and printed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. TURNBULL.—In personal explanation, I beg to say that I understand that the honourable member for Caversham felt aggrieved at some remarks which I made yesterday. If the honourable gentleman was aggrieved at anything I said I am very sorry. I understood that the papers from this Committee were laid on the table, but not the report, and that that could not be brought down for a month, and I said that it would be useless then; and I accused him rather of having misled the House. I beg to express my regret for having said so, and withdraw the remark.

Mr. WILSON.—The reason why I asked for an extension was, as I have explained, that the Committee knew that the evidence could not be brought in for a long time, and I thought it would save time to ask for a month's extension of time instead of coming to the House every week.

Mr. BARRON.—I did not feel personally aggrieved at anything which the honourable member for Timaru said; but I thought that the statements of the honourable member for Timaru and the honourable member for Dunedin South were very unfair to the Education Committee: and the House will now see that those statements were altogether unwarranted.

LAND BILL. IN COMMITTEE.

Mr. MARCHANT moved a new clause providing that, where two or more persons have taken up or become holders of a section of deferred-payment or perpetual-leasehold land as joint tenants, it shall be lawful for the Governor, on request of such persons, and on such terms as he shall think fit, to order subdivision of such section or sections into as many parts as there are joint holders.

The Committee divided on the question, "That the clause be read a second time."

AYES, 23.

Barron	Lawry	Steward, W. J.
Beetham	Moat	Taylor
Buchanan	Moss	Thompson, R.
Carroll	O'Connor	Thompson, T.
Fraser	Peacock	Walker.
Hislop	Perceval	Tellers.
Kelly	Richardson, E.	Guinness
Larnach	Samuel	Marchant.

NOES, 44.

Allen	Feldwick	Hodgkinson
Anderson	Fergus	Izard
Ballance	Fisher	Jackson
Buxton	Fish	Jones
Cadman	Fitchett	Joyce
Cowan	Goldie	Lance
Dodson	Graham	Loughrey

Mackenzie, M.	Ormond	Stewart, W. D.
Mackenzie, T.	Pyke	S.-Menteath
McGregor	Reeves, R.H.J.	Tanner
McKenzie, J.	Rhodes	Valentine
Mills	Richardson, G.	Ward.
Mitchelson	Ross	Tellers.
Monk	Seddon	Blake
O'Callaghan	Seymour	Hutchison.

PAIR.

For.	Against.
Vogel.	Russell.

Majority against, 21.

Second reading negatived.

Mr. MARCHANT moved the following new clause: "Where any block of land exceeding one thousand acres in extent has been in possession of any person or persons for a period exceeding three years before the first day of December, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven, and no bonâ fide occupation or improvement has taken place on such land, then it shall be lawful for the Governor, upon payment of the property-tax valuation of such land, and an additional amount equal to ten pounds per centum thereon, to take possession of such land, and to proceed to administer it as if it were, and such land shall thereon be deemed to be, waste lands of the Crown. The Governor in Council may make such regulations for giving due effect to the provisions of this section as to him may seem fit."

The Committee divided on the question, "That the clause be read a second time."

AYES, 27.

Ballance	Grimmond	Reeves, R.H.J.
Barron	Guinness	Richardson, E.
Blake	Hutchison	Samuel
Buxton	Joyce	Smith
Feldwick	Kelly	Thompson, T.
Fish	Loughrey	Turnbull.
Fitchett	McKenzie, J.	Tellers.
Fraser	O'Callaghan	Marchant
Goldie	O'Connor	Taylor.
Grey

NOES, 32.

Allen	Hodgkinson	Pyke
Anderson	Jackson	Rhodes
Buchanan	Lance	Richardson, G.
Cadman	Lawry	Ross
Carroll	Mackenzie, T.	Seymour
Cowan	McGregor	Tanner
Dodson	Mills	Thompson, R.
Fergus	Mitchelson	Ward.
Fisher	Moat	Tellers.
Graham	Monk	Pearson
Hislop	Ormond	Valentine.

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Steward, W. J.	Atkinson
Vogel.	Russell.

Majority against, 5.

Second reading negatived.

Mr. WALKER moved a new clause providing that, notwithstanding anything contained in sections 237 and 240, the Governor in Coun-oil, if requested so to do by the Waste Lands Board of the district, may, by Proclamation, declare that any education reserve or reserves, or any part thereof, shall, at the expiry of any existing lease, license, or other tenure, be dealt with, under the provisions of the said Act or any amendment thereof, in such manner as shall be set forth in such Proclamation.

The Committee divided on the question, "That the clause be read a second time."

AYES, 41.

Ballance	Hutchison	Pyke
Beetham	Jackson	Reeves, R. H. J.
Blake	Joyce	Richardson, E.
Buchanan	Kerr	Richardson, G.
Buxton	Lance	Samuel
Carroll	Larnach	Smith
Cowan	Loughrey	Steward, W. J.
Dodson	Marchant	Thompson, R.
Duncan	Mitchelson	Walker
Feldwick	Monk	Ward
Fisher	O'Callaghan	Withy.
Graham	Ormond	Tellers.
Grey	Parata	Turnbull
Grimmond	Pearson	Valentine.

NOES, 25.

Allen	Guinness	Seymour
Anderson	Hislop	S.-Menteath
Barron	Hodgkinson	Tanner
Bruce	Lawry	Taylor
Cadman	Mackenzie, T.	Thompson, T.
Fergus	Mills
Fish	Moat	Tellers.
Fraser	Moss	Fitchett
Goldie	Ross	McGregor.

Majority for, 16.

Clause read a second time.

Mr. BARRON moved, That progress be reported, and that it be referred to Mr. Speaker to decide whether the amendment now moved by Mr. Walker is the same in substance as one already negatived during the present session, and therefore contrary to Standing Order No. 100.

The Committee divided.

AYES, 26.

Allen	Hobbs	Reeves, W. P.
Anderson	Joyce	Ross
Bruce	Macarthur	Samuel
Duncan	Mackenzie, M.	Taipua
Fergus	McGregor	Taylor
Fitchett	McKenzie, J.	Wilson.
Fulton	Mitchelson	Tellers.
Goldie	Moss	Barron
Hislop	Newman	Fish.

NOES, 37.

Atkinson	Graham	Parata
Ballance	Grey	Rhodes
Beetham	Hutchison	Richardson, E.
Blake	Jackson	Richardson, G.
Buchanan	Kelly	Seymour
Cadman	Lance	Smith
Cowan	Larnach	Steward, W. D.
Dodson	Levestam	S.-Menteath
Feldwick	Monk	Tanner
Fisher	Ormond	Thompson, R.

Mr. Walker

Turnbull
Walker
Ward

Whyte
Withy.

Tellers.
Peacock
Valentine.

Majority against, 11.

Motion negatived.

Mr. BARRON moved, That, after the words "Waste Lands Board of the district," there be inserted the words "and the bodies in whom such reserves are vested."

The Committee divided.

AYES, 34.

Allen	Hodgkinson	Perceval
Anderson	Jones	Reeves, W. P.
Blake	Joyce	Rhodes
Bruce	Mackenzie, T.	Ross
Duncan	Marchant	Samuel
Fergus	McGregor	Stewart, W. D.
Fitchett	McKenzie, J.	Taylor
Fulton	Mitchelson	Thompson, T.
Goldie	Moat
Grey	Moss	Tellers.
Guinness	Newman	Barron
Hislop	Peacock	Fish.

NOES, 40.

Ballance	Levestam	S.-Menteath
Beetham	Macarthur	Taipua
Buchanan	Mackenzie, M.	Tanner
Buxton	Monk	Thompson, R.
Cadman	O'Conor	Turnbull
Cowan	Ormond	Valentine
Dodson	Parata	Walker
Feldwick	Pearson	Ward
Fitzherbert	Pyke	Whyte
Graham	Reeves, R. H. J.	Wilson.
Grimmond	Richardson, E.
Hobbs	Richardson, G.	Tellers.
Kelly	Seymour	Hutchison
Kerr	Smith	Steward, W. J.

Majority against, 6.

Insertion of words negatived.

The Committee divided on the question, "That the clause be added to the Bill."

AYES, 31.

Ballance	Hobbs	Thompson, R.
Beetham	Kerr	Turnbull
Buchanan	Mackenzie, M.	Valentine
Buxton	Monk	Walker
Cowan	Parata	Ward
Dodson	Reeves, R. H. J.	Whyte
Feldwick	Richardson, G.	Wilson.
Fitzherbert	Seymour
Graham	Smith	Tellers.
Grey	S.-Menteath	Hutchison
Grimmond	Tanner	Steward, W. J.

NOES, 35.

Anderson	Guinness	McGregor
Blake	Hislop	McKenzie, J.
Bruce	Hodgkinson	Mitchelson
Duncan	Jones	Moat
Fergus	Joyce	Moss
Fish	Kelly	Newman
Fitchett	Levestam	O'Conor
Fulton	Mackenzie, T.	Peacock
Goldie	Marchant	Perceval

Reeves, W. P. Samuel Tellers.
 Richardson, E. Taylor Allen
 Ross Thompson, T. Barron.

Majority against, 4.

Clause negatived.

Sir G. GREY moved the insertion of a new clause constituting a Land Court to determine fair rents of holdings.

The Committee divided on the question, "That the clause be added to the Bill."

AYES, 21.

Ballance	Joyce	Smith
Brown	Kelly	Taylor
Buxton	Loughrey	Ward
Duncan	McKenzie, J.	Wilson.
Feldwick	Parata	Tellers.
Fitchett	Perceval	Moss
Grey	Richardson, E.	O'Connor.
Grimmond

NOES, 41.

Allen	Hodgkinson	Richardson, G.
Anderson	Levestam	Ross
Atkinson	Macarthur	Samuel
Beetham	Mackenzie, M.	Seymour
Blake	Mackenzie, T.	S.-Menteath
Bruce	Marchant	Taipua
Buchanan	Mitchelson	Taiwhanga
Carroll	Moat	Tanner
Cowan	Monk	Thompson, R.
Dodson	Newman	Turnbull
Fergus	Ormond	Whyte.
Fulton	Peacock	Tellers.
Graham	Pearson	Hobbs
Hislop	Rhodes	McGregor.

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Fitzherbert	Fisher
Seddon.	Withy.

Majority against, 20.

Clause negatived.

Mr. MONK moved the addition of a clause providing for village-homestead settlers acquiring the freeholds of their sections.

The Committee divided on the question, "That the clause be read a second time."

AYES, 26.

Allen	Mackenzie, M.	Taipua
Anderson	Mackenzie, T.	Taiwhanga
Barron	Mitchelson	Tanner
Bruce	Moat	Thompson, R.
Goldie	Ormond	Whyte
Grey	Parata	Wilson.
Guinness	Rhodes	Tellers.
Levestam	Stewart, W. D.	Hobbs
Macarthur	S.-Menteath	Monk.

NOES, 34.

Atkinson	Fitchett	Mills
Ballance	Fulton	Moss
Blake	Graham	O'Connor
Buchanan	Hutchison	Pearson
Buxton	Joyce	Richardson, E.
Cowan	Loughrey	Richardson, G.
Duncan	Marchant	Samuel
Feldwick	McGregor	Seymour
Fish	McKenzie, J.	Steward, W. J.

Taylor	Walker	Tellers.
Thompson, T.	Ward.	Perceval
Turnbull		Smith.

Majority against, 8.

Second reading negatived.

Mr. GUINNESS moved a new clause providing that the Governor in Council may reserve Crown lands for endowments for such boroughs as he may think fit.

The Committee divided on the question, "That the clause be read a second time."

AYES, 33.

Allen	Joyce	Reeves, W. P.
Ballance	Kelly	Richardson, E.
Barron	Loughrey	Steward, W. J.
Brown	Macarthur	Stewart, W. D.
Buchanan	Mackenzie, T.	Taiwhanga
Buxton	McKenzie, J.	Taylor
Dodson	Mills	Walker
Fitchett	Moss	Wilson.
Goldie	Ormond	Tellers.
Grey	Parata	Guinness
Hobbs	Perceval	Ward.
Hutchison

NOES, 29.

Anderson	Hislop	Seymour
Atkinson	Jones	S.-Menteath
Beetham	McGregor	Thompson, R.
Bruce	Mitchelson	Thompson, T.
Cowan	Moat	Turnbull
Duncan	Monk	Valentine
Feldwick	Pearson	Whyte.
Fergus	Rhodes	Tellers.
Fish	Richardson, G.	Graham
Fulton	Samuel	Tanner.

PAIR.

For.	Against.
Levestam.	Marchant.

Majority for, 4.

Clause read a second time.

The words, "County Councils, Town District and Road Boards, Harbour Boards, River Boards, Drainage Boards, Charitable Aid Boards, and public libraries," having been inserted,

The Committee divided on the question, "That the clause, as amended, stand part of the Bill."

AYES, 16.

Ballance	Macarthur	Ward
Brown	O'Connor	Wilson.
Cadman	Parata
Grey	Smith	Tellers.
Hutchison	Thompson, R.	Guinness
Kelly	Thompson, T.	Levestam.

NOES, 42.

Anderson	Fergus	Mackenzie, M.
Atkinson	Fish	Mackenzie, T.
Barron	Fulton	McGregor
Beetham	Goldie	Mills
Buchanan	Grimmond	Mitchelson
Buxton	Hislop	Moat
Cowan	Hobbs	Monk
Duncan	Jones	Newman
Feldwick	Joyce	Ormond

Peacock	Samuel	Tanner
Pearson	Seymour	Turnbull.
Reeves, W. P.	Steward, W. J.	Tellers.
Rhodes	S.-Menteath	Perceval
Richardson, E.	Taiwhanga	Whyte.
Richardson, G.

Majority against, 26.

Clause negatived.

Mr. PARATA moved the following new clause: "The Governor may set apart certain Crown lands for Natives in the South Island, in compliance with the promises made to the Maori people by the Commissioner purchasing land on behalf of the Queen."

The Committee divided on the question, "That the clause be read a second time."

AYES, 26.

Allen	Hutchison	Taiwhanga
Anderson	Kelly	Taylor
Ballance	McKenzie, J.	Thompson, R.
Cadman	Rhodes	Walker
Fitchett	Richardson, E.	Ward
Grey	Smith	Wilson.
Grimmond	Steward, W. J.	Tellers.
Guinness	Stewart, W. D.	Brown
Hobbs	Taipua	Parata.

NOES, 42.

Atkinson	Jones	Ormond
Barron	Levestam	Peacock
Beetham	Loughrey	Pearson
Blake	Macarthur	Perceval
Bruce	Mackenzie, M.	Richardson, G.
Cowan	Mackenzie, T.	Russell
Feldwick	Marchant	Seymour
Fergus	Mills	Tanner
Fisher	Mitchelson	Thompson, T.
Fish	Moat	Turnbull
Goldie	Monk	Whyte.
Graham	Moss	Tellers.
Hislop	Newman	Buchanan
Hodgkinson	O'Connor	McGregor.
Jackson

Majority against, 16.

Second reading negatived.

Bill reported, with amendments, and read a third time.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

Clause 5.—Constitution of Commissioners.

Mr. FISH moved, That progress be reported.
The Committee divided.

AYES, 14.

Blake	Joyce	Taylor
Buxton	Loughrey	Walker.
Fitchett	Moss	Tellers.
Guinness	Seddon	Reeves, W. P.
Jones	Steward, W. J.	Ward.

NOES, 38.

Allen	Goldie	Lawry
Atkinson	Graham	Macarthur
Beetham	Hislop	Mackenzie, T.
Buchanan	Hobbs	Marchant
Fergus	Izard	McGregor
Fisher	Jackson	Mills

Mitchelson	Richardson, E.	Thompson, T.
Moat	Richardson, G.	Whyte
Monk	Russell	Wilson
Newman	Seymour	Withy.
O'Connor	S.-Menteath	Tellers.
Peacock	Tanner	Levestam
Rhodes	Thompson, R.	Pearson.

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Ballance	Anderson
Feldwick	Ormond
Fish	Hutchison
Grey	Mills
Kerr	Fulton
Lance	Taiwhanga
O'Callaghan	Valentine
Perceval	Taipua
Parata	Bruce
Turnbull	Ross
Vogel.	Pyke.

Majority against, 24.

Motion negatived.

Mr. W. P. REEVES moved to amend the clause by inserting in the first line, after the word "he," the words "two Boards, each consisting of."

The Committee divided on the question, "That the words be inserted."

AYES, 16.

Buxton	Loughrey	Walker
Fitchett	Moss	Ward.
Grimmond	Rhodes
Guinness	Seddon	Tellers.
Jones	Steward, W. J.	Blake
Joyce	Taylor	Reeves, W. P.

NOES, 35.

Allen	Levestam	Russell
Atkinson	Macarthur	Seymour
Beetham	Marchant	S.-Menteath
Buchanan	McGregor	Tanner
Fergus	Mitchelson	Thompson, R.
Fisher	Moat	Thompson, T.
Graham	Monk	Whyte
Hislop	O'Connor	Wilson
Hobbs	Peacock	Withy.
Izard	Pearson	Tellers.
Jackson	Richardson, E.	Mackenzie, T.
Lawry	Richardson, G.	Newman.

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Ballance	Anderson
Feldwick	Ormond
Fish	Hutchison
Fitchett	McKenzie, J.
Grey	Mills
Kerr	Fulton
Lance	Taiwhanga
Loughrey	Izard
O'Callaghan	Valentine
Parata	Bruce
Perceval	Taipua
Turnbull	Ross
Vogel.	Pyke.

Majority against, 19.

Amendment negatived.

The Committee divided on the question,
"That the clause stand as printed."

AYES, 34.

Allen	Marchant	Richardson, G.
Atkinson	McGregor	Seymour
Beetham	Mitchelson	Tanner
Buchanan	Moat	Thompson, R.
Fergus	Monk	Thompson, T.
Fisher	Newman	Whyte
Hislop	O'Connor	Wilson
Hobbs	Peacock	Withy.
Jackson	Pearson
Lawry	Reeves, W. P.	Tellers.
Levestam	Rhodes	Russell
Macarthur	Richardson, E.	S.-Menteath.

NOES, 11.

Blake	Jones	Ward.
Buxton	Joyce	Tellers.
Grimmond	Moss	Seddon
Guinness	Walker	Taylor.

PAIRS.

For.

Anderson
Bruce
Fulton
Hutchison
Izard
Mackenzie, T.
Mills
Ormond
Pyke
Ross
Taipua
Taiwhanga
Valentine.

Against.

Ballance
Parata
Kerr
Fish
Loughrey
Fitchett
Grey
Feldwick
Vogel
Turnbull
Perceval
Lance
O'Callaghan.

Majority for, 23.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 34.—Commissioners may grant licenses to sell liquors.

Mr. HOBBS moved to insert the words
"with the approval of the Licensing Bench."

The Committee divided on the question,
"That the words be inserted."

AYES, 26.

Allen	Moat	Taylor
Atkinson	Monk	Thompson, R.
Beetham	Newman	Thompson, T.
Hislop	Peacock	Ward
Hobbs	Pearson	Whyte
Jackson	Rhodes	Wilson.
Lawry	Richardson, G.	Tellers.
Marchant	Seymour	Joyce
Mitchelson	Tanner	Withy.

NOES, 7.

Buchanan	Levestam	Tellers.
Fergus	Macarthur.	McGregor
Fisher		S.-Menteath.

Majority for, 19.

Words inserted.

Clause 35.—How license-fees dealt with.

Mr. HOBBS moved to strike out "Commissioners for the purposes of this Act," with a view to insert "local bodies."

The Committee divided on the question,
"That the words proposed to be struck out stand part of the clause."

AYES, 17.

Atkinson	Mitchelson	Tanner
Buchanan	Monk	Thompson
Fergus	Rhodes	Withy.
Fisher	Richardson, E.	Tellers.
Marchant	Richardson, G.	Jackson
McGregor	Seymour	Levestam.

NOES, 12.

Allen	S.-Menteath	Whyte.
Beetham	Taylor	Tellers.
Lawry	Thompson, T.	Hobbs
Macarthur	Ward	Joyce.
Moat

Majority for, 5.

Amendment negatived.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 9.—Chief Commissioner.

This clause, being an appropriation clause, was specially referred to a Committee of the whole House.

Mr. MITCHELSON moved, That the blanks be filled up by the words "one thousand five hundred pounds" for the Chief Commissioner and "one thousand pounds" for the other Commissioners.

Mr. TAYLOR moved, That the item of £1,500 be reduced by £500.

The Committee divided on the question,
"That the item be reduced."

AYES, 2.

Tellers.

Taylor
Joyce.

NOES, 24.

Allen	McGregor	Seymour
Atkinson	Mitchelson	S.-Menteath
Beetham	Moat	Thompson, R.
Fisher	Monk	Thompson, T.
Hislop	Newman	Ward.
Jackson	Pearson	Tellers.
Lawry	Rhodes	Buchanan
Macarthur	Richardson, G.	Levestam.
Marchant

Majority against, 22.

Amendment negatived, clause agreed to, referred to Committee on the Bill, and agreed to.

Bill reported, and amendments agreed to.

The House adjourned at five o'clock a.m.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

Wednesday, 14th December, 1887.

First Readings—Second Reading—A. Owen—Pacific Mail Service—Native Land Administration Bill—Hon. Dr. Pollen—Government Business—Reporting Debates—Mortgages of Public Reserves—Privilege—Native Land Administration Act Repeal Bill—Native Land Court Bill—Government Loans to Local Bodies Bill—Local Bodies' Loans Bill—Representation Bill—Wellington College and Girls' High School Bill.

The Hon. the SPEAKER took the chair at half-past two o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Land Bill, Christchurch Hospital Bill.

SECOND READING.

Civil Service Reform Bill.

A. OWEN.

The Hon. Mr. BONAR presented a petition from A. Owen, praying that certain blocks of land, in which he claimed to have an interest, might not be dealt with under the Native Land Administration Bill. He (Mr. Bonar) presented this petition at the request of the petitioner, but he did not hold himself responsible for any allegations made in it, without further inquiry.

The Hon. Mr. MANTELL asked if it was competent for an honourable member to make any remarks on the question that a petition do lie on the table; because he had read this petition, and it appeared to him to contain charges of fraud against different officers of the Native Land Court, and charges of collusion on the part of the Judges, which should, he thought, preclude it from being received at a period of the session when no time remained for its proper investigation.

The Hon. Mr. BUCKLEY said, if this petition was similar to one which appeared in the newspapers, he entirely agreed with the Hon. Mr. Mantell. It appeared to him that if the petition were brought into Parliament it might prevent parties going into a Court of justice.

The Hon. Mr. BONAR might say that he felt some difficulty in regard to the petition, as the allegations made in it were certainly of a very strong character, and reflected seriously on persons holding high positions. At the same time, it appeared to him that no person should be debarred from the right of bringing a grievance before Parliament. Of course it would be for the Public Petitions Committee to inquire into the matter, and deal with it as they thought proper. He knew nothing of the petitioner at all, or of the facts of the case; but he thought the right of approaching Parliament should not be denied to any one.

The Hon. Mr. McLEAN asked if the petition was couched in proper language. He had not seen the petition. He would suggest that the debate be adjourned in order to allow the Hon. the Speaker to look at the petition and see if it was a proper petition to present to the Council.

The Hon. the SPEAKER said he saw nothing in the language, however grave might be the charges, which would debar the petitioner from approaching Parliament.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE thought where petitions contained charges against Judges they were not allowed to be presented unless there was an undertaking on the part of the person presenting them that he would take further action in the matter. If the honourable member was prepared to take further action in reference to this petition, it appeared to him (Mr. Waterhouse) right that the petition should be presented. But, unless the honourable gentleman was prepared to take further action, it seemed to him that the course proposed might be attended with dangerous consequences, inasmuch as they might have persons rushing the Legislature, calling in question the decisions of the Judges not only of the Native Land Court, but of the Supreme Court. He thought the course suggested by the Hon. Mr. McLean was the better one to adopt, in order that the Hon. the Speaker might look into the matter.

The Hon. Mr. RICHMOND said he had looked over the petition. It certainly impugned the integrity of the Chief Judge of the Native Land Court. The matter was otherwise quite proper to be received by the Council. The petition ought to be withdrawn and amended. The matter could not now rest where it was.

The Hon. Captain FRASER hoped the Council would agree to the Speaker's ruling. If there was nothing objectionable in the petition he thought it should be received. They would be denying justice to people if they refused to accept petitions, as was proposed.

The Hon. Mr. McLEAN did not know anything about the petition. If it was determined to prosecute the matter further, he, for one, would not refuse to accept the petition. But it was a very serious thing to receive such petitions, making charges against Judges. When the petition was received it then became privileged, and was telegraphed all over the colony.

The Hon. the SPEAKER said the Hon. Mr. McLean had already spoken on the question.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE said Standing Order No. 23 read as follows:—

"No petition containing serious charges affecting the integrity of individuals shall be ordered to lie on the table unless the member presenting the same shall intimate that he will propose to the Council a resolution in support of the charges."

So far as he had seen, the petition under consideration contained serious charges.

The Hon. the SPEAKER said that was a question for the honourable gentleman who presented the petition. In his capacity as Speaker he could not interpose his authority to prevent any petitioner approaching the Council with a grievance, however serious any charge in it might be, so long as the terms of the petition were respectful to the Council.

The Hon. Mr. SHRIMSKI said honourable members had not heard what the name of the petitioner was, or what the petition was about. If this petition was the petition of Mr. Owen, a similar petition had been presented to the other Chamber, and had been made public.

The Hon. Captain BAILLIE said Standing Order No. 21 provided that the only question which should be put on a petition being presented was, "That this petition do lie on the table."

The Hon. the SPEAKER did not think that that would preclude the question of adjourning a debate. It appeared to him to be reasonable that any question that was put should be capable of being delayed.

The Hon. Mr. MANTELL asked whether the Standing Order referred to by the Hon. Mr. Waterhouse did not strictly apply to such a petition as this. This petition contained serious charges affecting the integrity of individuals—not of private individuals only, but of public officers. He thought the Standing Order pointed out by the Hon. Mr. Waterhouse applied to a case of the kind under consideration. If that should be so, and the honourable gentleman who proposed to lay the petition on the table desired to reconsider his responsibility, if the debate were adjourned he would then have time for further consideration of that point.

Debate adjourned.

PACIFIC MAIL SERVICE.

The Hon. Mr. MENZIES asked the Hon. the Attorney-General, Whether the Government, before entering into any new contract for the Pacific Mail Steam Service, will take into consideration the propriety of making Vancouver the terminus instead of San Francisco? He wished to say, in explanation, that, as he believed that before the end of the session the Government would take into consideration the question of a new contract for the carriage of these mails, he would like to ascertain whether they would take into consideration the fact that by an alternative route which was now open to it those mails could be carried through the Empire overland across the Continent of America—a course which might be attended with many advantages.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER might inform his honourable friend that no new contract would be entered into without fully considering the circumstances of the whole of the routes available, and he assured the honourable gentleman that the Government would not come to any decision which was not for the best interests of the colony.

NATIVE LAND ADMINISTRATION ACT REPEAL BILL.

The Hon. Mr. SHRIMSKI moved, That all the lists of persons interested in the passing of the Native Land Administration Act Repeal Bill be laid upon the table.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER could not allow this motion to go in the form in which it was proposed. It was absolutely impossible. The honourable gentleman wanted a list laid on the table of all persons interested in the passing of this Bill. He did not know to what the honourable gentleman particularly referred; but, if he referred to anything specific, that was right enough, and he (Sir F. Whitaker) should have no objection to it; and, if the honourable gentleman meant that certain documents which were laid before the Committee should be laid on the table, he would also consent to that course.

The Hon. Mr. SHRIMSKI said that was exactly what he wanted.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER said, then there could be no objection to that course. The documents were in the hands of the Committee, and he had no control over them, but would see what could be done.

Motion agreed to.

HON. DR. POLLEN.

The Hon. Colonel BRETT moved, That leave of absence be granted to the Hon. Dr. Pollen for the remainder of the session, on urgent private business.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER, in moving the motion standing in his name, said it was a usual motion to submit at this period of the session; and, as no objection had been taken to it on former occasions, he presumed none would be taken to it on this occasion.

Motion made, and question proposed, "That the Standing Orders be so far suspended for the remainder of the session as to allow Government business to take precedence, and, if deemed necessary, to enable Bills to pass through all their stages at one sitting."—(Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.)

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS would like to add to the words of the motion the following: "upon motion made in each case to that effect." He did not do this in any spirit of opposition to the Government; because all Governments had acted alike in regard to this matter since he had been in the Council—rushing down with the business during the last few days of the session; and he had actually seen Bills coming down from the printer when the second reading had been moved, and sometimes carried before the Bills had been circulated among honourable members. He did not think there should be any objection to this amendment, as, according to it, it would only be for the Government to move that each particular Bill which was then being dealt with by the Council should pass through all its stages at one sitting.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER said the amendment brought the thing to an absurdity, if a motion was to be made in each case. He presumed that the object of the amendment was to nullify altogether what was asked for in the motion itself; and it was the first time he had ever heard of any opposition to a motion of this character. Every Government, as far as he recollected, had moved it, and he did not understand why any opposition was made to it now.

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS would like to explain that he did not mean to nullify the effect of the motion by the addition of the words he had moved. All he wished was that the Standing Orders might be suspended, but that no Bill should be allowed to go through all its stages as was proposed. This amendment had nothing to do with the Standing Orders, which were to be suspended for the rest of the session.

The Hon. Mr. McLEAN said the Hon. the Attorney-General had pretty well stated what he wanted on this point. However, he did not like the statement of the Hon. Mr. Reynolds to go forth uncontradicted, that in the Council Bills were read a second time without being circulated. He did not remember any occasion on which a Bill went through without being circulated, unless it was one of a most unimportant character, and one which every honourable member knew all about before it came forward. He thought that honourable gentlemen were particularly careful as to how Bills went through that Chamber, and took great care to look after every Bill that came there. He did not think they did their business in the slipshod way which might be inferred from the amendment of the honourable gentleman. He quite believed, however, that that amendment would nullify the effect of the motion.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE said it was true that Bills had been circulated before the second reading came on; but it was a question whether time had always been given to consider the Bills in order to discuss them. He only knew of one case—which occurred thirteen years ago—of a Bill which had been passed without being circulated. He recollected that occasion, because it was a Bill of a most important character. He hoped that his honourable friend the Attorney-General would take care not only that Bills were distributed before they came on for the second reading, but that time would be afforded for honourable members to fairly consider them before they came on for discussion. Referring to the Land Bill, that was a measure of the utmost importance, and he might point out that it would not be in their hands, probably, before the following morning. And yet the second reading of that Bill was ordered for the following afternoon. He thought that that was a motion they ought not to be called upon to agree to. Another Bill was the Special Powers and Contracts Bill, a measure which always required close investigation; and he hoped that his honourable friend would give the Council a distinct assurance that, as regarded this Bill, they should have it in their hands at least twenty-four hours before it came up for discussion.

The Hon. Mr. MENZIES concurred very much with what had fallen from the Hon. Mr. Waterhouse. But he begged to remind the Council that the matter was entirely in its own hands, and even though it agreed to the proposition of the Hon. the Attorney-General it could still arrest the progress of a Bill if it were satisfied that there had not been sufficient time to consider it. If the Council took that course no Bill could go through without being fully considered. He would be glad to see the Council, even at the end of the session, take such a decided step that it would not be hurried through its business. In regard to the Special Powers and Contracts Bill, he trusted the Government would not find it necessary to bring in a Bill of such a character this session.

Amendment negatived, and motion agreed to.

REPORTING DEBATES.

The Hon. Mr. MENZIES, in moving the motion standing in his name, said he put it on the Order Paper with the view of calling attention to some circumstances which he thought the Council should properly understand. It was with the view of ventilating the subject more than with any desire to get the Council to agree to the proposal made that he now moved the resolution. And, in order that the Council might understand the nature of his motion, he would just indicate in a few words the subject-matter. In a report of one of the early debates in the session a mistake appeared in the printed slip, which attracted the attention of the honourable member who spoke. Attention was called to it in the Council, the mistake was corrected, and, on looking at the Hansard that was afterwards published, it appeared that no notice was taken of the correction. But, as the mistake attributed certain words to an honourable member whose other remarks found in the context expressed exactly a contrary opinion, the attention of the Reporting Debates Committee was called to the circumstance; and, after some correspondence with the reporting staff, the honourable member who communicated with the Reporting Debates Committee was asked to attend a meeting of the Committee, when the chief of the reporting staff was also present. Some conversation occurred. The reply of the chief of the reporting staff in this matter was not such as one might have expected after the member of the Council had called attention to the mistake, but was one which the honourable member who communicated with the Reporting Debates Committee conceived was altogether inadequate as coming from the agent who was employed by Parliament to present a correct report of what occurred in the Council. The correspondence which had been laid on the table included a letter from the chief of the reporting staff, to which he would now refer. It appeared in the course of the inquiry that not only had these remarks in which the corrections had been made been omitted from the number of Hansard in which they should have appeared, but, by some accident no doubt, the report of the proceedings of the Council on that day was also omitted. The chief of the reporting staff explained that that was in consequence of an accident: the copy was mislaid, and it was not noticed for some time afterwards. Mr. Barron went on to say,—

Hon. Mr. McLean

“The Hansard staff is, numerically, inadequate to report everything that takes place in the Council as well as in the House of Representatives. Consequently, when I undertook the duty, in 1867, of establishing an official reporting staff, I was clothed by Sir Edward Stafford's (then Mr. Stafford) Government, who initiated the system, with the power of exercising my judgment as to what portion of the proceedings should be reported in a condensed form, and what should be omitted, so that full reports could be given of questions of greater importance. I have exercised this discretionary power for the last twenty years.”

The Council would observe that the chief of the reporting staff claimed discretion as to whether the reports he gave of the proceedings of the Council should convey the whole of the record, or only that part of the record which he saw fit. This part of the claim of the chief of the Hansard staff was based on instructions which he received twenty years ago. The report of the Committee simply intimated that the Committee had reported on the subject, but made no reference whatever to the incidents which were the subject-matter of the correspondence; and he (Mr. Menzies) thought that the Committee might have given some expression of opinion upon the matter. He did not know what the order of reference to the Committee might be; but it seemed to him that a Committee which had a subject of this character under its consideration should have instructions ample enough to admit of its expressing some opinion on the subject. If the Committee did not feel at liberty to express any opinion, he was at a loss to see what useful purpose the Committee could serve. He did not wish to press the motion. Having brought the subject under the consideration of the Council, he was quite willing to let the motion drop.

Motion made, and question proposed, "That the report of the Reporting Debates Committee and correspondence connected with it, laid upon the table on the 9th instant, be printed."
—(Hon. Mr. MENZIES.)

The Hon. Mr. OLIVER said the Committee, investigating circumstances which had been brought before the notice of honourable members by the Hon. Mr. Menzies, found, in the course of examining a complaint which he had made as to some omission or some misreport, that one day's proceedings of the Council had been altogether omitted from Hansard, and the Committee called on the Chief Reporter to explain how that had taken place. His explanation was a candid confession of having made a mistake. He could not explain why the notes of the proceedings of the Council on that date had disappeared: all he could say was that they had disappeared, and he was very sorry for it. He, having made that candid admission, placed himself at the mercy, as it were, of the Committee; and the Committee thought it would be strictly performing its duty if it reported to the Council in full the whole of the proceedings—the questions which were asked the Chief Reporter, and his explanation. He (Mr. Oliver) might say that the Hon. the Speaker, as Chairman of that Committee, directed a search to be made through the Hansard report of the proceedings of this session, in order that it might be ascertained whether any similar omissions had previously taken place. It appeared to the Committee that, generally speaking, the proceedings of the Council had been faithfully reported in Hansard. He did not know whether the Committee had failed in its duty in omitting to do more than report in full as they had done. The matter was before the Council now. The Council had the report of the Committee before them. Honourable members had had the report of the Reporting Debates Committee before them for several days, and the question had been brought up again by his honourable friend opposite. But, as mistakes might occur under the most careful supervision, it seemed to him (Mr. Oliver) that no great good would result from pursuing this subject further.

The Hon. Mr. JOHNSON thought the Council was indebted to the Hon. Mr. Menzies for having drawn attention to the matter. There was one point which seemed to him of greater importance, perhaps, than this which had been more particularly referred to, and that was that, from the Chief Reporter's reply to the question that had been put to him, it appeared that he used his discretion as to what should be reported in Hansard and what omitted; that he was guided, apparently, by instructions, as he stated, which had been given him many years ago, when Mr. Stafford, now Sir Edward Stafford, was in office. He (Mr. Johnson) was not aware that any such rule existed with regard to reporting the debates of the Council. He did not know whether honourable members were aware of it, nor did he know whether much importance should be attached to it—that was to say, whether it was ever carried into effect; but he thought that it should be clearly understood. He, for his part, thought that it was a discretion which should not be placed in the hands of the Chief Reporter. He thought that the reporters should give full and clear reports of everything that took place, and not simply omit what the Chief Reporter might deem to be insignificant and unnecessary to be reported.

The Hon. Mr. SCOTLAND desired to point out that Mr. Barron had taken upon himself to introduce another innovation this session. On the second reading of a Bill, where no debate took place, he noticed that what the honourable member who moved the second reading said was not reported at all.

The Hon. Mr. MENZIES was quite satisfied with having drawn the attention of the Council to the matter. He trusted honourable members would not fail to see that it was a matter of very considerable importance to the Council to know whether they could rely on the reports of the proceedings being given or not. The power he had referred to ought to rest with the Council, and not upon the discretion of the Chief Reporter. If Hansard was to be regarded as of any value whatever, the reports should be an accurate account of what took place.

Motion negatived.

MORTGAGES OF PUBLIC RESERVES.

The Hon. Mr. HART.—Having seen in the copy of a Bill—which may not have come up to this Council, but will come before it—a proposal to give a power to a certain body to mortgage, with power of sale, a public reserve in this town, I thought it desirable to amend my motion by inserting, after the words "in any public reserve," the words "in any city, town, or township." The object of my motion is to obtain an expression of opinion on the part of the Council upon a subject of very considerable importance. There can be no doubt that, in the laying-out of towns in this colony, in most cases there has been an absence of due provision for the wants of the public in the way of public reserves; and it becomes therefore a matter of the utmost importance that what reserves there are for public purposes should not be disposed of and become private property. It occasionally happens that such reserves become vested in some trust for the public purpose approved of by the State, and with the intention and in anticipation that the reserve vested in the body for that public purpose will continue in perpetuity to be used for that purpose. Then, it is discovered that the body, in order to make it more useful, requires certain buildings to be placed upon it; and, for the purpose of obtaining the money for erecting such buildings, it seeks from the Legislature authority to execute a mortgage on the reserve, with the power of sale, so that, if the body fails to pay interest on the mortgage, this reserve is sold, and becomes private property. I think the Legislature is unwise in giving such powers, when, by giving another power, it can authorise arrangements to be made which will probably answer every purpose—that is, by authorising a mortgage for a term of years only, so that at the end of that term of years the land so mortgaged will again be deemed the public property of the colony. I think the Legislature should regard the interests of the future inhabitants of our towns, and not give the power of sale outright of property which should be a perpetual endowment for the public benefit. Under these circumstances, I move the motion standing in my name, That, in the opinion of this Council, every power to mortgage land included in any public reserve in any city, town, or township under the authority of an Act of the General Assembly should be limited to the execution of such mortgage for a term of years not exceeding sixty-three years, with power of sale for such term of years only.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—I think it would be unwise of the Council to pass this resolution in the form in which it is proposed. It appears to me, as my honourable friend has stated, that there is very great difficulty in reference to these mortgages of property of the character to which he refers; because, no doubt, in the case of sale they would pass away altogether from the purpose for which these reserves were intended. I should like very well to see mortgages made on property of this description simply enabling them to be taken possession of for the time, and that there should be no power of sale given at all. I am afraid, however, that that would amount to a prohibition of mortgaging. No one, unless the power of sale is given, will lend money upon mortgage, and especially upon buildings such as my honourable friend refers to, because these buildings would not be available for letting for many purposes. I apprehend that the honourable gentleman is alluding to the Wellington Girls' High School Bill. Whether it is desirable that the Board of Governors should be able to mortgage that property or not will be a matter for our consideration presently. The Bill is down for second reading, and will come on later. I think to pass a general resolution of this kind would not do at all, for every year, of course, the property would decrease in value, and I do not think it would be found that any persons would be willing to lend money on it. The question will come more properly before us when we come to consider the Bill in which such a power to mortgage is given. Then it will be a matter for consideration whether any limitation should be made in this case or not. I think it very unwise for the Council to lay down any general rule. Each case should stand on its own merits. In the case of the Wellington Girls' High School Bill, if my honourable friend desires to limit the power of sale in that instance he could move an amendment when the Bill comes before the Council. I think that is a very much better way of dealing with the matter than passing a general resolution of this description; because the question will come up again when the motion for the second reading of the Bill is made, and this resolution will only prejudice the consideration of it to a certain extent. I shall therefore oppose the motion.

The Hon. Mr. McLEAN.—I do not agree with the motion, but I propose to amend it, and to amend it in such a way that it will follow the course which the Council has always taken on similar occasions—namely, to refuse to give the power of sale altogether. As surely as we give a power of sale so surely will these reserves go some day or other. In the cases of other high schools this power has not been given: then why should Wellington be specially excepted? I know cases in which there has been no difficulty in raising the money without the power of sale. To any one who wants to lend money this is one of the best securities he could lend upon. There is an income from the property; and as long as he gets the interest what does he care about the principal? There are many people who keep on receiving interest, and who do not think of the principal at all. I propose to amend the motion as follows: To strike out the words "with power of sale for such term of years only," and to insert the words "without the power of sale."

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—I hope the Council will accept neither the motion nor the amendment, but will allow each particular case as it comes before the Council to be dealt with on its merits.

The Hon. Mr. BONAR.—It seems to me that there would be an inconvenience in passing a general resolution like this. I think it would be much better to deal with each question as it arises. If we pass a resolution in either of the forms proposed the Council will not be bound by it. Therefore I think it is not desirable to pass such a resolution.

Motion amended, and motion, as amended, negatived.

PRIVILEGE.

The Hon. Mr. TAIAROA.—Before you call on the orders of the day, Sir, I wish to draw attention to a paragraph which I saw in one of the newspapers this morning.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—Is the honourable gentleman speaking to a point of order or a question of privilege?

Hon. Mr. Hart

The Hon. Mr. TAIAROA.—Sir, I believe I am speaking to a question of privilege. I think that the paragraph referred to ought to be read to the Council. It refers to the Legislative Council, and purports to be a report of proceedings in another Chamber, where Mr. Samuel raised a question.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—It appears to me that any question referring directly to a debate in the other House is quite out of order.

The Hon. Mr. TAIAROA.—But it is a paragraph which appeared in one of the local newspapers.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—But we cannot notice questions that are debated in another Chamber.

The Hon. Mr. TAIAROA.—Sir, I wish to ask for some explanation, because I have heard statements made about certain honourable members in this Council. I do not take this step because I have any enmity towards those honourable gentlemen, but because I think it is a matter which should be looked into. The honourable gentlemen referred to were the Hon. Mr. Waterhouse, the Hon. Mr. Oliver, the Hon. Mr. Pharazyn, the Hon. Mr. Menzies, the Hon. Mr. Holmes, and another honourable member, whose name I cannot recollect. Sir, when I heard this reference made to the seats of honourable members in this Council, it brought to my mind the facts of my own case when I was formerly a member of this Council. My seat in this Council was cancelled without my having done anything to justify that course; and, when I heard statements which were calculated to do harm to my name, and which threw doubt on my rights in this Council, I left the Chamber. I think this is a matter that should be considered by the Council. The matter is being discussed outside this Chamber, as it has appeared in the newspaper of this morning. I wish to assure the honourable members whose names I have mentioned that it is not from any personal feelings that I bring this forward; but I think it is a question which should be inquired into. I have no ill-feeling towards them, nor any desire to do them an injustice; neither do I like to hear their names spoken of as I myself was spoken of formerly; and I hope they will not attribute any ill-feeling or discreditable motives to myself. I have no doubt they have seen what I refer to, and are just as well aware of what has occurred as I am myself. I will therefore content myself with having brought the matter under the notice of the Council.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—Perhaps I should quote the authority generally acknowledged to be a standing authority on this question. May, in his "Parliamentary Practice," says: "Whatever matter arises concerning either House of Parliament ought to be discussed and adjudged in that House to which it relates, and not elsewhere."

NATIVE LAND ADMINISTRATION ACT REPEAL BILL.

On the motion for the committal of this Bill,
The Hon. Mr. SHRIMSKI said,—Before the Bill is committed, I wish to ask the honourable gentleman in charge to adjourn the further consideration of the measure till to-morrow, to enable us to look at the lists to which I have previously referred, as the Council may be in total darkness as to the objects which I have in moving for them. This measure, it is true, is a very small one, only consisting of a few clauses; but the object of the Bill is of very great importance, and I hope the Government will see their way to postpone it till to-morrow, in order that we may see the lists referred to.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—The only objection I have to that is the shortness of time that is now at our disposal in which these Bills have to go through the Council and also through the House of Representatives. I presume the list referred to is among the papers of the Committee, and can be obtained from the Chairman of that Committee. But I am anxious that these Bills should go on. There is much business before the Council. Probably it will answer my honourable friend's view if we go into the Bill to-day, and then allow it to stand over till to-morrow. He can obtain all he wants this afternoon or this evening, and if he will agree to that I will take care that the Bill shall not be passed till the honourable gentleman has had every opportunity of perusing the lists.

The Hon. Mr. SHRIMSKI.—I am sorry to say that I cannot accept the proposal of the honourable gentleman, because the Bill deals with very important matters, and many transactions, some of which, no doubt, are very just and proper, though, as to others, I am doubtful as to their nature. The measure also changes the legislation regarding dealing with Native lands which was passed in 1886, prohibiting the dealing with Native lands; and now a measure is summarily introduced, and its second reading has been passed, and it has been proposed that it should go into Committee, without our having an opportunity of satisfying ourselves with regard to the object and the effect of the Bill. I think this is a very serious thing, and I say that I do not take this action with the slightest intention of obstructing the Government in the conduct of their business; but we come here to discharge our duty; and I desire, before the Bill is proceeded with further, that the papers I have referred to shall be laid on the table, so as to show who are interested in these transactions. A former Attorney-General barred the way which has been opened by the present Attorney-General, by which means these transactions can be carried out.

The Hon. Mr. TAIAROA.—I agree with the Hon. Mr. Shrimski in asking that this Bill be postponed till to-morrow. I think, however, there is no objection to go on with the Native Land Court Act Amendment Bill. But the Native Land Administration Act Repeal Bill is a matter which requires considerable attention before passing it. I understand that the intention of the Bill is to allow certain transactions to be continued or completed which were prohibited and put a stop to by the Act which this repeals.

I have been told that this Bill is to allow transactions to be completed which transactions were the very ones which were intended to be closed by the Act of 1886. I have only just realised the effect that this measure will have, and that this Bill is to enable transactions to be completed which were refused and put a stop to under the Act of 1886. It was for that reason that I moved that this Bill should not apply to Native lands in the Middle Island and Stewart Island. I think I am quite justified in making this motion which appears on the Order Paper, seeing that I am the person who manages and directs nearly all the transactions of these lands; and when I agreed to the passing of the Act in 1886 I did so on the supposition that it only applied to transactions and dealings with Native lands in the North Island. I am convinced of this, because the Natives of the other Island have to take care of themselves, as the Government do not in any way make any provision for them; and I protest against my own people being treated in this way, as though they were not human beings. I trust that the Government will allow the amendment which I propose to be passed; otherwise I should feel compelled to oppose the passing of this Bill in all its stages. I do not think it is right that we should legislate only for the benefit of the Europeans, and not do so for the Natives, to whom the lands belong. I think, if any dealings are to be allowed at all, the whole matter of purchase should be allowed to be open and free to all, and that, if anybody should be allowed to deal, the Natives should also be free; otherwise everything should be closed. When the Hon. the Premier made his Financial Statement in the other Chamber he mentioned that the lands held by the Natives in severalty who were living among Europeans should be exempted from these restrictions. Now, I say that in this Bill he still prevents this very dealing with their property, and that he has only opened the door to certain Europeans whose purchases are incomplete. Now I will compare the speech made by the Premier with the Bill now before us. When that speech was delivered the Natives understood that the lands held by them in severalty might be dealt with, and the Premier also made that statement to the deputation of Natives who waited upon him; and the object of the Natives who this year applied for the restrictions imposed by the Act of 1886 to be removed was more in reference to the land held by themselves. I think that the lands in reference to which the Government should exercise much caution would be the land held by a number of Natives, and lands which have not yet had the Native title extinguished. When the Bill was first introduced I intended to support it, thinking that it imposed no restrictions upon the lands held in severalty, and would not apply to the lands in the South Island; and I urged that it should be referred to a Select Committee in order that the amendments which I desired might be inserted could be considered. I find that the amendments made in Committee only amount to certain verbal amendments, which do not meet my wishes. They only authorise the completion of deeds and leases which have been begun before a certain date; and the Government have not made any amendment to meet the case to which I refer, in which the Natives desire to be allowed to renew existing mortgages. That is one matter which is causing the Natives great trouble. And there is no provision made for Natives who have purchased land from other Natives, which was formerly the case, as though they were European holders. The only lands which they can now deal with are lands which they have purchased from the Crown or Europeans, and, further, there is no provision for lands which Natives have bought from other Natives by permission of His Excellency. Under the Acts which were formerly in existence such lands were considered to be on the same footing as European lands. I do not think that the Council can say that the Natives would be losers if that were permitted, because the Native is paid by money belonging to another Maori, and such Native would have to purchase with his own money: it is not as though any money was given to him by the Government. I do not see how the Government can possibly say that the prohibition of such dealings is for the benefit of the Natives, and I think the Council should insert a provision that any land bought by a Maori from another Maori should be treated as though it were European land. I think the Europeans completely misunderstand the case, and think that the Natives are not in the habit of purchasing each other's lands; but that was the course pursued by them for many years before the Europeans came. They of course did not make such purchases with cash, but bought with greenstone and other articles. I do not wish honourable members to misunderstand what I am alluding to. I refer to lands where a Native may have obtained a Crown grant from the Native Land Court, and when another man makes him an offer they conclude a purchase. And when such transactions are authorised by the Governor or Commissioner I think such land should be treated as European land. The Natives have always been told that when they hold their land individually they can do as they choose with it. And in the Crown grants that are issued to the Natives are inserted the words, "the Crown has granted to the individual named and his heirs for ever." In the Gazette notices it also states that when the title is ascertained the land shall belong to such persons. I will now speak more particularly with reference to the amendments standing in my name. I will give my reason for supporting the motion for the adjournment of the debate. I would ask leave to read a memorandum written by Judge Mackay with reference to this matter:—

Hon. Mr. Taiaroa

"Re your letter of even date, enclosing a copy of certain words you propose to move should be added to clause 9 of 'The Native Land Administration Act Repeal Act, 1887,' to exempt the Native reserve lands in the Middle Island from the operation of the Act, in which you request me to furnish an expression of opinion touching the effect of the words referred to if added to the Act—that is to say, as regards the advantage or disadvantage that might ensue if your object was affirmed, as well as the disadvantage that will occur if the Act is not amended so as to exclude the Middle Island. As regards the first point referred to by you, no disadvantage can occur, as the land in the Middle Island is held under an entirely different tenure from land owned by Natives in the North Island. In the Middle Island the land is held under restricted title, the owners being confined to granting a lease for twenty-one years. No other disposition can be effected without the consent of the Governor; consequently no injurious effect can take place through the Natives being allowed to deal with their lands so far as the nature of the title permits. With reference to the question asked as to the disadvantages that will occur if the Act is made to apply to the Middle Island, the consequence will be that Natives owning land in severalty, who have hitherto had the privilege of leasing these lands without fear of transgressing the law, will now be debarred from doing so, to their detriment and pecuniary inconvenience. No harm can come of the Middle Island reserves being exempted from the operation of the Act, for the reason already pointed out—that the owners have only the right of disposing of these lands by lease for twenty-one years. The position of the matter in the North is very different: there the land is held under many different conditions; and circumstances that would justify a measure of this kind being passed for such lands would have no applicability in the other Island, owing to the Natives' property there being held on a different basis."

I therefore support the Hon. Mr. Shrimski in his motion that the consideration of this Bill be postponed.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—If we are allowed to go into Committee on the Bill I will move that progress be reported, after the first clause is passed. The Bill will then come on to-morrow; and if I can obtain it I shall produce the document which has been referred to. I am anxious to advance the Bill a stage, so that we may be making some progress. As to the other two Bills, I apprehend that there will be no objection to them. We can move the three Bills into Committee, and then report progress on the Native Land Administration Bill.

The Hon. Mr. MENZIES.—The second readings of these Bills were moved formally, without debate. It was understood that the debate on the whole matter would be taken after the Bills came from the Committee. I think the honourable gentleman should state the reasons which have induced the Government to bring forward the Bills.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—The honourable gentleman is under a misapprehension. I made a speech of considerable length in explaining the provisions of the Bill on the motion for the second reading. No debate took place, I am aware; but I fulfilled my duty to the letter. I then said all that I had to say with regard to the Bill.

The Hon. Mr. McLEAN.—When the Native Land Administration Bill was put on the Statute Book I assisted to put the measure through, notwithstanding that I had considerable objections to the Committees constituted under the Bill. I felt that they would not work. I assisted the Bill for the purpose of getting back the right of pre-emption, and for the purpose of getting the whole of the dealing with Native lands out of the hands of private people and into the hands of the Government. I have looked into this Bill, and I have endeavoured to see how we could cut out all the provisions in the existing Act relating to Committees, which are useless, and can never work. If we could cut those clauses out, and leave the rest of the Act in operation, thus allowing all the land to be sold through the Waste Lands Boards, then we should still have something on the Statute Book. I see a difficulty in doing that, however. I should like the Attorney-General to take this matter into consideration and see if he could effect the object I refer to. He might probably find some way of doing it, and still keep the law on the Statute Book, but omitting these Committees. So far as this Bill goes, I have no objection to it, because it keeps the whole thing in the hands of the Government. It retains the right of pre-emption entirely in their hands—a right which I do not wish to see them part with. In fact, this Bill brings us back to stand as we did after the Treaty of Waitangi. I see that till next July is given within which certain transactions are to be completed. I see also, by another clause, the celebrated Mr. Jones of Mokaui is to be not limited to time in which to complete his title. I do not see why he should be placed in a different position from the others.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE.—It is only a lease.

The Hon. Mr. McLEAN.—It does not matter. The others have a certain time given to them in which to complete their leases or freeholds. It is not right that seventy or eighty thousand acres should be tied up for an indefinite period, to the detriment of all settlement in the neighbourhood. From what I hear, the district is a good place for settlement. This party, who may have good claims, should be put on the same footing as the others. I have no objection to the Hon. the Attorney-General taking the course which he proposes to take in reference to these Bills, but would like him to consider if the clauses in the Act relating to Committees might not be struck out, leaving the rest of the Act on the Statute Book.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—All that we can discuss much better in Committee. If we go into Committee, then the whole thing can be gone into. I move, Sir, That you do leave the chair in order that the Council may go into Committee on these three Bills.

The Hon. Mr. MENZIES.—I was in fault in saying that the honourable gentleman gave no explanation of this Bill. I ought to have said that he gave no explanation of the necessity for repealing the Native Land Administration Act.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—I made a full explanation.

The Hon. Mr. MENZIES.—It seems to me that, having carefully and deliberately altered the whole policy of Native-land administration which has been current for many years by the Native Land Administration Act of 1886, which it is now proposed to repeal, we should be acting rashly and inconsiderately in seeking to repeal that Act before its value has been ascertained, and before the Maoris can comprehend the value of the law. I believe that the measure is a most valuable one itself, and contains the true principle of our legislation in regard to the Maoris; and I am grieved to think that there is a desire on the part of a party in Parliament, who possibly may be strong enough to carry it, to put an end to that state of things, and to revert to what no doubt will by-and-by lead to a reversion to the right of private individuals dealing with Maori lands. I think such a thing would be most injurious to the interests of the Maoris. I cannot conceive of a better principle to be maintained in dealing with the Maori lands than that which is embodied in the Native Land Administration Act. I say the Hon. the Attorney-General gave no sufficient reason for laying aside that principle and reverting to what may be considered a modification of it—that is, reverting to the resumption of pre-emption, which is certainly safer than allowing private individuals to deal with Native lands freely. But I maintain that that is neither so safe nor so sound a principle as that embodied in the Native Land Administration Act. I feel at a loss what course to take in this matter. I am quite willing to follow in the division any one who will move that this Bill be read a second time this day three months, but I do not understand the subject so thoroughly myself as to make that motion.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE.—To my mind the great recommendation of this Bill is contained in the 11th clause. It is a new clause which has been suggested by the Committee, providing that this Act shall continue in force until next session of Parliament, but no longer. The effect of this clause is to necessitate the complete revision of the Native Land Administration Acts during next session. That complete revision of the Native-land-administration arrangements is necessitated by what took place last year in the passage of the Administration Act of that year. My honourable friend Mr. Menzies labours under a very different idea as to the value of that Act from the opinion which is generally held. I am satisfied that, if the honourable gentleman had lived in this Island, and had been associated in any degree whatever with persons who have dealings with the Maoris, he would have recognised at the time that the Bill passed that it was bound to be a dead-letter, that it would stop all transactions with the Natives, would lock up Native land entirely, and be a bar to further settlement. This view of it has been realised by the course of events. It is a fact that there has not been a single transaction under the Act. The whole of the Native lands have been tied up, and the progress of settlement has been arrested. The provision recommended by the Committee says this state of things shall last for another six months and no longer. Consequently, full and complete legislation on this subject must take place next session in the manner proposed by the Government in the Speech from the Throne. This Bill provides that certain cases that were not completed, and that were intended to be covered by the Act of 1886, but which have been proved not to be so covered, and remained in the position at which they were when the Act of 1886 was passed, shall remain in that position at any rate for a year longer. By that time there will be ample legislative provision, and, if the time allowed for the disposal of those cases is not sufficient, there will be an opportunity afforded Parliament of reconsidering the whole affair. I can see no reason why this Bill should not pass at once, although I am inclined to think that the view taken by the Hon. Mr. Taiaroa is a correct one, and that it might be desirable to withdraw Native transactions in the South Island altogether from the operation of this Bill.

The Hon. Mr. BUCKLEY.—I am quite sure the Hon. the Attorney-General will not lose anything by a short delay. A petition of an important character has been presented to-day, affecting one portion of the Native Land Administration Act, the difficulty about which may be probably all cleared away by the time the Council meets to-morrow. I have just received notice that the Native Affairs Committee will meet at half-past ten a.m. to-morrow, when no doubt the matter will come under our consideration. It is quite true that the Hon. the Attorney-General did make a speech on the second reading of this Bill; but I agree with the Hon. Mr. Menzies that the honourable gentleman made no observations which explained in any way the necessity for repealing the Act of last year. I think, if honourable members will look at the lists which the Chief Judge of the Native Land Court placed before the Committee, they will see that these lists are rather instructive, and will probably guide honourable members in reference to the course they may take in regard to this Bill. I do not wish to say anything about the merits or demerits of this Bill. My own impression is that it is not of much importance; that it will terminate at the end of next year, when it is to be hoped that some better legislation in regard to Native lands will be enacted; and I would again ask the Attorney-General to consent to the motion of the Hon. Mr. Shrimski. I am quite sure the Council will afford the honourable gentleman every facility for passing this Bill, if it is deemed a proper measure to pass.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—The only reason why I did not give way at once in this matter is that we have got so near the end of the session that I do not like to lose this opportunity of advancing the Bill a step forward. These Bills have to go through the other House when we have passed them, and, of course, the sooner they get through the better. At the same time, I do not desire to press the thing unduly. Therefore, if my honourable friend will move that the debate be adjourned until to-morrow I shall accept that motion.

Hon. Mr. Menzies

Debate adjourned.

NATIVE LAND COURT BILL.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—Sir, I move, That you do now leave the chair in order that the Council may go into Committee on this Bill.

The Hon. Mr. BUCKLEY.—I do not like to appear obstructive in any way, but I shall move, That the debate on this question be adjourned till to-morrow.

The Hon. Mr. McLEAN.—I do not think there is any question about this Bill. The Bill that the question is about is the one which we have just had under discussion. I hope the Hon. the Attorney-General will put this Bill into Committee, and let us get on with some of these Bills, and get them out of the road. I should like to see the work progressing, and I hope the Council will put this Bill into Committee, and the following one also.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER.—I am quite willing to let the Council settle this matter as to whether they will go on with the Bill or not.

The Council divided: on the question, “That the debate be adjourned.”

AYES, 13.

Brett	Martin	Shephard
Buckley	Menzies	Shrimaki
Fraser	Peter	Taiaroa
Holmes	Reynolds	Wahawaha.
Lahmann

NOES, 14.

Baillie	Hart	Stevens
Barnicoat	Johnson	Waterhouse
Bonar	McLean	Whitaker
Dignan	Pharazyn	Williams.
Grace	Richmond

Majority against, 1.

Amendment negatived, and Bill committed.

GOVERNMENT LOANS TO LOCAL BODIES BILL.

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS.—The object of this Bill is to render more workable what is called the original Act—the Government Loans to Local Bodies Act. The 2nd clause is simply to settle the date of the issue of a loan, and to regulate the date from which the interest shall be deemed to run on the permanent loan. The 3rd clause is to preserve the responsibility to pay rates in support of the loan, practically in case the Crown and Native Lands Rating Act should cease to exist. It will be obvious that the source of revenue in this case on which loans have been founded should continue. The 4th clause is simply one to provide, in cases where the debentures have been converted under the Roads and Bridges Construction Act to the bonds provided by the Local Bodies' Loans Act, that the rate shall continue as long as that is necessary to support the loan. The reason for this is that these debentures were issued for a shorter period than the bonds issued under the original Act, which it is proposed to amend. The period under the Government Loans to Local Bodies Act is twenty-six years, and it is clear that the rate must continue, in order to make good the change. The 38th section of the Act only authorised borrowing on debentures, but not on inscribed stock. The loans were taken, in some instances, under certain Acts of the Assembly authorising the construction or undertaking of a public work within the meaning of the Government Loans to Local Bodies Act. The 6th clause is merely to make the law at present harmonize with the Acts which govern the question under such circumstances. The only other point, and perhaps the most important point in the whole Bill, is the last clause. There it is proposed to give to boroughs having less than four thousand of population power to raise a loan of more than £800, the amount to which they are at present limited. The clause gives them power to borrow to the extent of £2,000 for a special purpose only—that is to say, for works for sanitary purposes or for water-supply. That, of course, is a new provision, and one indeed which honourable members will have to consider. These are the provisions of the Bill, and I do not think it necessary to say anything more about it at the present time.

The Hon. Mr. McLEAN.—What about the 7th clause?

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS.—The 7th clause is this: It provides that, if a local body has complied with all the conditions required in the Local Bodies' Loans Act, it shall not be obliged to comply with the conditions of any other Act relating to the matter. It appears that local bodies occasionally let slip some formalities required by a number of Acts which have been in existence for years, and under which they continue to work. If they let slip any small formalities, they are liable to have to go over the whole of the ground again. There is a long list of these Acts, some of which go back as far as 1876. It is considered right, for the convenient working of the law, that this provision should be made in modification of these requirements. I have no doubt that in Committee I shall be able to satisfy honourable gentlemen as to the necessity of this Bill more completely than can be done in a discussion on the second reading. I move, That this Bill be now read the second time.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE.—This Bill and the one that follows it must, for all practical purposes, be considered together. They both bear upon the same subject, and they both have in view the same object—that is, to grant additional facilities for local borrowing. The Hon. Mr. Stevens, in introducing the Bill, has followed the very commendable example set by the Hon. Mr. Reynolds—that of informing the Council as regards the object of the Bill by simply reading the side-notes.

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS.—I did not.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE.—There were a few additional comments, but the bulk of the honourable gentleman's arguments in favour of the Bill were in the shape of reading the side-notes. It is well that, in both these Bills, we should recognise that the object of them is to grant to local bodies facilities for borrowing. It is for the Council and for Parliament to decide how far these additional facilities for local borrowing are in the interests of the community at large. I contend that the only reason why we have not had by this time a complete breakdown in our financial system has been that hitherto local bodies have borrowed only moderately. Had they had but full facilities for borrowing, doubtless they would have borrowed to a much larger extent, and thereby would have seriously compromised the financial position of the colony. Under the existing Act, as honourable members know, local bodies have raised already very considerable sums even within the last twelve months. We have not the return laid on the table which was moved for by the Hon. Dr. Pollen the other day; but if it were upon the table we should be able to state more decidedly what has been the total amount borrowed. It comes, however, to several hundreds of thousands of pounds. With all these facilities, however, it seems to be thought by the Government that there are not sufficient facilities already granted, and that we must give additional facilities to enable local bodies to borrow to a still larger extent. The extent to which they have borrowed already is a serious drain upon the resources of the colony, and is attended with considerable danger likewise to many financial interests. In the Financial Statement it is understood that provision is to be made for borrowing two millions, to be devoted exclusively to the prosecution of public works; and it is contemplated here that some portion of these local loans made by the Government should be charged upon that fund. But what are the resources out of which payment of these local advances is to be made? It is stated, in the 38th clause of the Government Loans to Local Bodies Act of last year, he may, out of the "Public Account, or from any fund of such account under the control of the Treasurer," make the advances in connection with these local loans. Now, the Public Account consists of two kinds: the General Revenue Account, which we know will not be in a position to enable the Government to make advances from it towards these local loans; and the Public Works Account, which will be in the position to make advances to these local bodies. If we pass this Bill we must expect that the number of applications for loans will increase, and the Government will be placed in the position that, in order to give effect to the law, and to the promises of advances made, they will have to borrow from the Public Works Fund to do so. There are some other sources, it is true, out of which the needful financial assistance may be obtained; but upon these sources we have been relying in the past to a degree that makes it dangerous to presume upon them for the future. These are the Savings-Bank, the Government Insurance, the Public Trust Office, and probably some other accounts. These institutions have already taken up a large amount of our local loans; and I would ask honourable members, is it wise, is it proper, that we should authorise additional Government loans to be advanced to local bodies, with the view of these loans being taken up to a still greater extent by the institutions to which I have referred? We have not only to look to the institutions to which I have referred, but we have to look to the public behind these institutions. Look at the immense number of depositors in our Savings-Bank; look at the immense number of persons interested in the Life Insurance Department; look at the number of persons interested in the Public Trust Office! Are the funds attached to these institutions to be like eggs placed only in one basket? What would be the position of the investors in the Savings-Bank, of the insurers in the Life Insurance Department, of those connected with the Public Trust Fund, if these securities were required to be realised and they could not be realised? And there is great difficulty, as every honourable member must be aware, in realising these local securities in a small market like this. It might bring about a great financial crisis, which would carry ruin into the families of hundreds and thousands of people. Then, I contend that, in dealing with this subject, we should look not only at the fact that this Bill is intended to foster local bodies borrowing, but that by passing it we should continue the dangers to which we are exposing the public at large by looking up the funds of institutions which should keep their funds readily available. It seems to me that we are incurring a great amount of danger by the course that is suggested under this Bill—that is, of facilitating the borrowing of money by local bodies; and it is worthy of consideration by the Council whether we should increase the facilities which the local bodies at present possess of borrowing money. To my mind, they have at present more facilities for borrowing money than actually is safe, in the present circumstances of the colony. I do hope that we shall not endanger the position of the colony by giving them additional facilities. There are one or two features in this Bill of a more objectionable character. There is one clause which the Hon. Mr. Stevens has not referred to so fully as I think is desirable. The proviso to the 3rd clause contains an important principle, to which, it is true, the honourable gentleman has alluded, but with the importance of which, I gather from his observations, he is not fully impressed. At the present time, these local bodies have had assured to them, under the Act of 1882, certain funds which are to be paid to them by the Crown, as representing the amount of rating to which the Crown and Native lands would be exposed. This was given as a kind of endowment to local bodies, which was to go into their revenue, and be an asset for the payment of interest upon which they could rely. Now, it is provided in this clause that "nothing herein shall be deemed to establish any right or claim to the continuance of 'The Crown and Native Lands Rating Act, 1882,' or the powers conferred therein." After we have authorised them to borrow money upon the security of this revenue, is it justifiable on our part, in this somewhat insidious manner, to withdraw from them an important portion of that revenue to which they have looked as the means by which they were to pay their interest? There is an important principle at stake in this clause, which I do not think should be discussed with the few cursory observations, based on the side-notes, which the Hon. Mr. Stevens has made in regard to it. There is another important provision in this clause, which likewise the ratepayers—if they were as fully alive to the importance of looking after their own interests and guarding against excessive rating as they ought to be—would, in my opinion, take strong objection to. Under the Roads and Bridges Construction Act provision was made for a rate being authorised sufficient to insure the paying of the interest and principal in a period of fifteen years. Now it is proposed that these debentures shall be surrendered, and converted under the provisions of the 31st section of the Act of 1886; and then it is declared that the special rate struck in respect to the converted bonds shall be for the period not of fifteen years, but of twenty-six years. It is true the amount of interest is reduced: We know that properties have gone down throughout the colony. In nearly all cases in the country properties have gone down to one-half their original value; and under this Bill it will be necessary to continue to raise the old rate at its full amount—which was intended to pay off the additional interest for fifteen years—for a period of twenty-six years; in other words, under this Bill the ratepayers would be liable to the full burden of a rate which, under other circumstances, they thought would be sufficient to pay off their debt in fifteen years. This seems to me taking an unfair advantage of the ratepayers; and I think it is deserving of very serious consideration. Then, there is the clause which the Hon. Mr. Stevens told us was the most important clause of the whole Bill. I thought we had already given Councils and boroughs sufficient facilities for borrowing under the Municipal Corporations Act. I do not see what necessity exists for giving them powers for borrowing outside the powers which they at present possess. If they think the works referred to in the 8th clause are desirable, they have power at the present time to provide means, with the consent of the ratepayers, for carrying out those works. Here it is provided that they shall have the power of carrying out those works and imposing burdens on the ratepayers without the consent of the ratepayers. The Bill seems to me to be of an objectionable character. I am decidedly opposed to increasing the facilities of borrowing to local bodies. I believe that they have already sufficient power—as much power as is safe under the present circumstances of the colony—and that, consequently, the Bill itself is unnecessary and undesirable. I beg to move, as an amendment, That this Bill be read the second time this day six months.

Hon. Mr. Waterhouse

The Hon. Mr. McLEAN.—I was in hope that the Government would have seen their way to do without these measures. I think that they have taken them up too suddenly. They are the old Bills which were here last session. I think they have been taken, too, without consideration, and without that thought which might have been given them before they were introduced. In looking over the Bills, it certainly does seem that they are opening the door to more borrowing, and far more borrowing than it is desirable should be undertaken by these local bodies. Under that Bill—the Local Bodies' Loans Bill—it is proposed to extend the power of borrowing. In my opinion that power is already large enough now without opening the door wider. Last session I read out to the Council some specimens of how they could get loans under the Local Bodies' Loans Act, and I think that ought to be sufficient to satisfy the Council that the door was open wide enough. There is a provision in this Bill which the Council has over and over again positively refused to pass. I take the two Bills together, because they are connected with each other. Coming to the clauses, I think the municipalities and counties have plenty of power for borrowing in their own Acts without giving the power that is proposed in clause 8, where it is proposed that Borough Councils in towns of more than four thousand inhabitants may borrow any sum not exceeding £2,000 in one year. I think that was a mistake, and that it is meant to be "not less than four thousand."

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS.—May I ask the honourable gentleman which Bill he is discussing?

The Hon. Mr. McLEAN.—I am discussing one Bill with the other. But I will keep to the Bill before us. We have gone into these clauses at different times; but, in order to give the Government an opportunity for further consideration of the matter, and to ascertain whether or not the Government still wish to go on with the Bill, I shall move, That this debate be adjourned.

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS.—I propose to make a few remarks on the question of adjournment. The criticism which has been bestowed on the Bill makes me think that it would be better that I should speak now to the adjournment in preference to replying to the remarks that have been made. Any remarks that I may have to make in defence of the Bill I will take another opportunity of making. My honourable friend Mr. Waterhouse has been good enough to suggest that when I was introducing this Bill I did so by merely reading the side-notes. It may be a satisfaction to my honourable friend to know what I read was not a side-note at all, but my own notes, compiled after careful comparison of the statute law, in reference to this question. My honourable friend speaks of this Bill as giving additional facilities to local borrowing, and as a sort of encouragement to local bodies to borrow. There never was a greater illusion than the one which my honourable friend labours under. Nearly the whole of this Bill is merely of a machinery character, and it is not in the slightest degree aimed at assisting local bodies to borrow.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE.—I was referring to this Bill and the following Bill in that respect. I dealt with the two Bills together.

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS.—Then, I will say this: Of course, if I am not to discuss my honourable friend's remarks on the two Bills now, it is a little difficult to make the reply which I had intended to make, nor do I see that I shall have an opportunity of doing so; but I was going to remind my honourable friend that it is only a short time ago that he made a pathetic appeal to me to use my influence to prevent extravagant borrowing by local bodies under the present Act. This seemed to imply that my honourable friend contemplated more or less extensive borrowing in the future, and he looked to me to do what I could to restrain it.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE.—Hear, hear.

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS.—Quite so; but the long and short of the matter is this: that, if we are going to discuss this Bill fairly on its merits as a Bill, and apart from any other matter which may come under our consideration, we shall require to deal with it strictly on the question of what it is going to do itself. And I ask honourable gentlemen not to be led away by the discussion on another Bill; because this Bill is absolutely wanted in order to confer the facilities of machinery. I think that will be sufficient on the present occasion to induce honourable gentlemen to suspend their judgment in regard to the motion for adjournment, and to let us proceed with the Bill strictly on its merits.

The Hon. Mr. BARNICOAT.—I should like very much to know from the Government whether the interpretation put by the Hon. Mr. Waterhouse upon section 8 of this Bill is correct. If so, I shall vote against the Bill. I read it in the other way. The honourable gentleman has observed that the rates accruing to local bodies under the Crown and Native Lands Rating Act were of the nature of a subsidy to local bodies, and I understood the 3rd clause to mean that so long as debentures issued by the local bodies, partly on the security of such rates, remained unpaid, the rates in respect of Crown and Native lands would continue to be raised, collected, and received. If this is not the intention of the clause, I shall vote against the second reading of the Bill. This clause appears to anticipate the approach of the day when the Crown and Native Lands Rating Act will be repealed, but securing temporarily to local bodies the rates derivable therefrom till the payment of the debentures secured on these and other rates.

The Hon. Mr. BONAR.—I can only say that

Hon. Mr. Stevens

I read this clause exactly the same way as the Hon. Mr. Barnicoat does. But I would point out that there is also a proviso "that nothing herein shall be deemed to establish any right or claim to the continuance of 'The Crown and Native Lands Rating Act, 1892,' or the powers conferred thereunder." I hope that some provision will be made to carry on the government of districts that will be affected by the repeal of this Act. It has been said that this Bill is practically a machinery Bill. With regard to clause 4, I do not look at it in the same way as the Hon. Mr. Waterhouse, and I do not quite see his argument in connection with it, that, because these debentures are to be extended over twenty-six years instead of fifteen years, therefore the rate is to be maintained at the full rate for twenty-six years instead of fifteen. The effect will be that only sufficient rates will be raised in order to meet the interest on these debentures, and that the lesser amount of money will require to be raised annually; because in the Local Bodies' Loans Bill I see provision is made by which the rate may be reduced from time to time if the full amount is not required; and therefore I think, under ordinary circumstances, the charge would fall lighter annually if it were stretched over a longer period. I do not think there is anything more I need say about this matter.

The Hon. Mr. MENZIES.—I do not think that the decision of the Council on this Bill should rest upon such a minor consideration as a mere question of detail which is really a question of machinery, and is not the question at issue, which is, whether it is advisable to extend the facilities to borrow from the Government already given to local bodies. I think we have been doing a great amount of injury to the local bodies by giving them facilities for borrowing, and by leading them to live on borrowed money instead of depending on local rates for carrying on the improvements of the locality. And it must be remembered that, at the present time, the Government have the intention to attempt to float a loan on the London market; and there is a degree of uncertainty as to how such an attempt will be received. This being so, I think the local bodies ought not to be in a position to go to the Government to obtain a loan. On those grounds, therefore, I think it would be better not to pass this Bill. It would suit us better, I think, to repeal the Acts already passed in the same direction. I think it would lighten our labours if we rejected the amendment of the Hon. Mr. McLean, and dealt with this question at once—to-night—in accordance with the amendment moved by the Hon. Mr. Waterhouse.

The Hon. Mr. PHARAZYN.—There is one special reason against granting facilities to local bodies for further borrowing just now, and it is this: There can be no doubt that there is a tendency for wages to fall, and we are constantly hearing an outcry made about the unemployed; and it will very probably be found that in districts where there are a considerable number of persons who, as wages begin to fall, will object to take the lower wages, and will necessarily swell the ranks of the unemployed, a cry will be got up about these people, and all kinds of pressure will be brought to bear upon the local bodies to keep up wages. If the local bodies raised a loan settlers would be paying twice for this borrowed money—in rates and in artificially-raised wages—and we should find a good deal of reckless borrowing ultimately, intended to keep up wages, in order to satisfy the cry that had been raised.

The Hon. Dr. GRACE.—Clause 3 simply provides that the Crown and Native Lands Rating Act of 1882 shall continue in operation as far as it has been pledged as a security for loans; but it further sets forth that no guarantee for the extension of the operation of that Act shall be construed as being given by this clause under this Act. I do not agree with the Hon. Mr. Waterhouse that the mere fact of extending the payment of interest to twenty-six years instead of fifteen increases the liability of the ratepayers, because, if the rate leviable under the present valuation did not prove sufficient to pay the interest on the loan for a term of fifteen years, it would be necessary, in justice, to increase that rate rather than make default of the payment of interest. I therefore hold that the extension of the period from fifteen years to twenty-six years, by making each annual payment less, is a relief to property, seeing that, the real value of the property having fallen, its power to bear the incidence of taxation is lessened. I am prepared to support the whole of this measure, with the exception of clause 8, which, inasmuch as it gives borrowing powers, I propose to strike out in Committee. I quite agree with the Hon. Mr. Pharazyn that we should take care that the local bodies do not rush into extravagance to provide work for the unemployed, now that the General Government has been forced to restrict its expenditure. I cannot help seeing that in thickly-populated parts of the country a cry will be set up to induce local bodies to provide work, to encourage the maintaining of the rate of wages. As I think this Bill is a machinery Bill, with the exception of clause 8, to which I totally object, I shall support the measure.

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS.—I should like to make one or two remarks. I was not able to reply, in speaking to the adjournment, to the arguments that have been adduced since then. There are one or two points which have been raised in regard to which I think I ought to make some reply. With respect to the alleged breach of faith, which I understand it to be from the remarks of the Hon. Mr. Waterhouse in regard to the suggested repeal of the Crown and Native Lands Rating Act, I do not intend to discuss now the policy of that Act; but, in the observations I made in introducing the Bill, when I was supposed to be reading the side-notes, I specially called attention to the fact that it was necessary to save the rights of the ratepayers under the Crown and Native Lands Rating Act.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE.—What would be the effect of the proviso?

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS.—The proviso would, no doubt, leave the rights of the bondholders and ratepayers, as far as the loan-money is concerned, perfectly unaffected; and, as regards all others, we shall have an opportunity of discussing that question upon another measure which will come down here to repeal the Crown and Native Lands Rating Act. My honourable friend says ratepayers would suffer by paying for twenty-six years instead of fifteen years under the Roads and Bridges Construction Act.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE.—My honourable friend misunderstands me. I said they would be quite open to pay the same rate during the twenty-six years as they had undertaken to pay during the fifteen years.

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS.—Yes; but the honourable member forgot to say that they had undertaken to pay 9 per cent. under the Roads and Bridges Construction Act, instead of the low rate which they have undertaken to pay under this Act. Surely my honourable friend would not say that the ratepayers should not be allowed to take care of themselves. They had the right to come under this Act and relieve themselves financially. And surely they would prefer to come under the new system. It seems to me that the honourable gentleman's argument, in that respect, falls to the ground. I am also told by the Hon. Mr. Waterhouse that he thinks the loans in question fall either upon the Public Trust Office or to a large extent on the Post Office Department. I am informed, however, that in reference to the Post Office Department such loans have only been made to a very moderate extent, and that the Public Trust Office does not take these securities on special rates. I would ask the Council to allow the Bill to go into Committee, when we may discuss the clauses seriatim.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE.—If honourable members think this is a mere machinery clause, I will withdraw my amendment in regard to this Bill, with a view of proposing it in the next.

Leave to withdraw amendment refused.

The Council divided on the question, "That the word proposed to be struck out stand part of the question."

AYES, 20.

Acland	Johnson, G. R.	Pharazyn
Baillie	Kenny	Scotland
Barnicoat	Lahmann	Stevens
Bonar	Miller	Swanson
Dignan	Oliver	Whitaker
Grace	Peacock	Williams.
Hart	Peter

NOES, 8.

Holmes	Reynolds	Wahawaha
McLean	Shrimski	Waterhouse.
Menzies	Taiaroa

Majority for, 12.

Bill read a second time.

LOCAL BODIES' LOANS BILL.

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS.—Sir, the original Act, of which this is an amendment, is no doubt generally familiar to honourable gentlemen. I will simply pass over lightly the minor clauses of the Bill, and discuss the main principle at greater length. The 2nd clause really amounts to this: It enables part of a district desirous of floating a loan specially intended for that part of the district to dispense with certain provisions which now have to be complied with. It, in point of fact, brings them into the position of districts which contain only one hundred of population. The 21st section of the original Act allows a loan to be raised without a poll being taken in a district which contains not more than one hundred ratepayers. Instead of their having a poll, which I understand, because of their small numbers, would be inconvenient, they may obtain a loan by memorial. That is a part of the Bill which is quite independent of the rest of the Bill, and stands absolutely by itself. Section 3, I apprehend, is not one which is at all likely to cause any discussion, because it simply provides that, while the loan is raised for the benefit of part of the district, the part of the district for whose benefit that loan is to be raised shall be continuous and unbroken. The 4th clause contains a proposal of a very important character. In point of fact, I will frankly tell the Council, it really means an entire change of the present system in regard to polls upon which special rating is to be founded for the support of special loans. The Council has taken a view opposite to this in former years. The view which is embodied in the present Act is that, in order to carry what is called "the proposal for the loan," a majority in number of the ratepayers must vote for it, and the number so voting must be entitled to more than half in number of the votes which can be exercised by the whole number of the ratepayers. That, of course, means the whole number pollable but not polled. Honourable gentlemen will see that the proposal here is that the loan shall be carried if three-fifths of the total number of votes given at the poll are given in favour of it. I do not wish to be in the least misunderstood on this point. I call honourable members' attention to that great change in order that they may be perfectly well aware of it, and not be able to say that I have passed the thing over without calling sufficient attention to it. As to the 5th clause: I dare say I shall be forgiven if I do not go into an elaborate disquisition of those points. They are not at all of a vital character, nor do they involve any principle whatever, and they can be much more conveniently dealt with in Committee. At the same time, I shall call the special attention of the Committee to the first subclause. The 6th clause simply extends the Rating Acts in force to rates raised under the original Act—a matter which I do not think is likely to cause much discussion. The 7th clause, or a greater part of it, is old; the new portion of it, which is in the last five lines, is really, I think we may say, one of a very unimportant character. The 8th and last clause is solely devoted to providing for a penalty for forging of bonds, coupons, et cetera. Honourable gentlemen are no doubt quite familiar with the Bill, and I will simply conclude by moving, That the Bill be now read a second time.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE.—This, Sir, at any rate, is not a machinery Bill, and I do not think that any one will call in question my statement that it does materially encourage local borrowing. On that subject, when the former Bill was under consideration, I said so much that it is unnecessary to repeat here the arguments then employed. I would only say this: that it is useless to talk of tapering off borrowing if we are to encourage facilities being given to local bodies to follow an example which we have set them, and which we have set to our very serious cost. This Bill contains three radical vices. First of all, it is retrospective in its operation. The 2nd clause goes much further than my honourable friend Mr. Stevens states. There are to the 2nd clause added these words: "This enactment shall be deemed to have been passed at the date of the passing of the original Act." My honourable friend Dr. Pollen—whom, I am sure, we all regret not to see in our midst this evening—in dealing with Bills of this character, used to observe that in order to understand a clause aright it was often desirable to know the special cause which originated it; and I think, if we want to have a distinct understanding of the meaning of this clause, we should inquire what is the underlying cause—which has not been referred to—that really renders the clause necessary. It is this: Some time ago, in one of the Wairarapa Districts, an application was made for a Government loan. The Law Officers of the Crown, to whom this application was referred, declared that it was illegal, and that the Treasurer ought not to comply with it. In spite of this opinion distinctly expressed by the Law Officers of the Crown, the advance was made; and here by this clause we are asked to pass a covering Act. I do not think we should pass a covering Act without such expressions of regret at the occurrence as we have a right to demand. As to these persons who have wilfully and deliberately broken the law, we should let them be responsible for their proceedings. We shall have no end of covering Acts if every time a Minister violates the law we cover his laches without any demur on our part. I have no hesitation in declaring the retrospective character of the 2nd clause to be the radical vice of this Bill, and such as would necessitate its not being favourably considered by the Council. Then, the second objectionable feature in the Bill is with regard to the majority whose assent is required to the sanction of a loan. I need not say much upon this point. The Council has so frequently and so decidedly expressed an opinion that these local loans should be authorised by the sanction of a distinct majority of the ratepayers on the roll that I am satisfied honourable members will not consent now, at the request even of the Hon. Mr. Stevens, to depart from that rule which they have seriously laid down for their guidance in former years. There is a third radical defect in the Bill, to which my honourable friend has not referred. That is contained in the 5th clause. In subsection (4) it is provided that the existing provision regarding the setting-aside of sinking funds may be done away with. I regard it as a matter of vital importance in local loans that there should be a sinking fund. These works are not of a permanent and durable character, and in many parts of these roads they are of a particularly perishable character. For instance, where a road is carried over wooden bridges, these bridges do not last more than twenty-five years, I believe, as a rule. It is a matter, it seems to me, of vital importance that in all these cases we should maintain that there shall be a sinking fund. Unless provision is made for a sinking fund, depend upon it what has happened in the past will frequently occur in the future: local bodies will go on with local works as long as they can, and when these works get out of repair they will authorise fresh loans to renew the works. This is the third radical vice in the Bill; and these are the main features of the Bill, and I think they are of so objectionable a character that the Council will not refuse to accede to my request when I ask their consent to read this Bill a second time this day six months. I therefore move, That the Bill be read the second time this day six months. At the same time, as there may be some amended Bill introduced in the course of another year, I would call attention to the fact that, even were this Bill desirable on other grounds, there are omissions that would render it undesirable that it should be proceeded with as at present drawn. My honourable friend has laid great stress upon the 21st clause of the existing Act, which provides that special districts may be constituted, and that rates may be imposed and loans may be raised without any poll upon the assent of three-quarters of the ratepayers of the district being first obtained. If that is not to work very injuriously, it will be absolutely necessary to provide some checks towards preventing the inclusion in the proposed districts of properties not liable to be benefited by these works. At the present time there has been shown in several districts a desire to make separate districts under the Act which would be liable to a special rate, and to include in these districts the properties of persons who have no interest whatever in the works sought to be carried on, and for the simple reason that these properties would contribute a large proportion of the rates required to pay the interest upon the debt. I have before my mind at the present time the case of a gentleman well known to honourable members—if I thought it desirable to mention his name—whose property was deliberately added to a district with a view of getting the rates attachable to the property in reduction of the rates of other persons. The works were not of a specially-urgent character. There was great objection taken to them on the part of many of the ratepayers; it seemed probable that the works would not be sanctioned at a meeting of the ratepayers; and, consequently, by agreement, the promoters let off the owners of properties who were opposed to the project by excluding them from the district, and then, trusting to their numerical strength, added to the district a large property just outside the bounds of the district. This property, against the will and knowledge of the proprietor, was inserted in the new district, and a tax was imposed upon it that was altogether unwarranted. It is quite clear that there is in this power of constituting separate districts a power of abuse such as I have mentioned. Such a power of abuse was contained in some of our original District Railway Bills. That was provided against by its being rendered compulsory that plans of the proposed district should be published in the papers, and that every person claiming that he was injuriously affected should have the right of appeal against his property being inserted in the district to be rated. It is quite clear that some such provision should be introduced into this Bill; and if the Council should consent to read the Bill a second time, as I hope they will not, I trust a provision of this sort will be introduced. I do not intend to say anything more in regard to the facilities for borrowing, and the danger attendant upon these facilities, which are sanctioned by this Bill. I cannot, however, refrain from making one remark which bears not only on this subject but upon the general subject of borrowing for local works throughout the colony, especially for roads for so-called purposes of opening the country. The road-communication of the colony is to a great extent, at the present time, supported by subsidies from the Government, and helped out of loans. But the roads of the colony at the present time are so extensive that I believe—nay, I am certain—it will be utterly impossible for the ratepayers to maintain these roads whenever they are deprived of the assistance derived from loans and from the Government. The more roads we sanction making by local loans the more, I am sure, this difficulty will be felt in future, and the greater the danger of the roads falling into disrepair. I will not occupy the time of the Council any longer. I sincerely hope the Bill—which is, to my mind, of so objectionable a character—will not be sanctioned by the Council, but that the amendment which I have moved will be unanimously adopted.

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS.—I trust I shall be acquitted of any intention of covering breaches of the law by bringing forward a Bill containing the last two lines which appear in the 2nd clause of the Bill. This is the first time I have heard that this Bill is intended to cover a special case in the Wairarapa, and it is a great surprise to me that it is so. It does not, however, appear to me that that need be considered a vital principle of the Bill, inasmuch as nothing can be more easy than to strike out the provision if it appears objectionable. Precisely the same remarks apply to the objection raised to subsection (4) of clause 5, with regard to doing away with the necessity of attaching the sinking fund to the loans being raised. It appears to me to be a very small thing, if my honourable friend does not agree with that provision, to move in Committee that it be struck out, and then we shall take the sense of the Committee on the point. Then, there is the main point of the honourable gentleman's objection to the Bill. I think it is right, before the division is taken, that it should be clearly understood what is the allegation in regard to this system. It is alleged that the ratepayers cannot be found to come to the poll in sufficient numbers to support these proposals for loans, however necessary they may be; and that they are in the habit—some of them, at all events—of staying away and thereby making it absolutely impossible for the object sought to be attained. It is said that large numbers of districts are in this position: that they can get nothing in the way of improving their roads, and that these roads are in such condition during the winter as to prevent goods from being carried over them; and that all this is caused by the want of a little assistance of this kind. I think it right to state the argument in favour of the change proposed, in order that honourable gentlemen, before giving their votes on this subject, should be in possession of it.

The Hon. Mr. McLEAN.—The 2nd clause of the Bill refers to a well-known case. Correspondence relating to it has been published. It refers to a case in the Wairarapa in which the Colonial Treasurer overrode the advice of the Solicitor-General, and a loan was granted in spite of that advice. No doubt it was getting near an election, and I suppose it was necessary to be a little lax in these matters.

The Hon. Mr. BUCKLEY.—I do not know whether the honourable gentleman refers to a late colleague of mine; but, if so, I think it is unworthy of him that he should make these statements in a place where the gentleman referred to has no possibility of defending himself.

The Hon. the SPEAKER.—I think the honourable gentleman should withdraw the observation.

The Hon. Mr. McLEAN.—I shall be very happy to withdraw anything offensive which I have said. I do not see, myself, that unless there is some extraordinarily strong reason why these acts should be condoned, the Bill should be passed. These Bills are coming daily before this Council. There have been several Bills this session, and some one really must be made a woful example of. There are several indemnity Bills coming forward this session, and I think it will be necessary for the Council to make a stand somewhere. I look upon clause 3 as a little safeguard against the action which has to be taken under the Act, because the district must now be a continuous district, whereas under the Act it need not be so. I showed last session how half a dozen men might join together and borrow money in order to make roads to their own doors. I do not think it was intended when the Act was passed that such a thing as that should be permitted. Then, we come to clause 4, which is a clause that the Council has frequently discussed, and given two decisions upon. The Hon. Mr. Stevens said there were cases in which loans could not be obtained. I have no doubt that improper loans cannot be carried; but will the honourable gentleman point to any special case in which a loan has not been carried—that is to say, a deserving case? There are several cases in which the "majority" mentioned in the Act have carried loans without any trouble. I am not aware of any case where there has been a failure. I do not know of a case in Otago where the party in favour of borrowing have failed to get a majority. I should like to ask the Hon. Mr. Stevens if that is a vital principle of the Bill; because it would determine how one might vote on the measure. I need not say anything further. The whole Bill is opening the door to further borrowing.

Hon. Mr. Stevens

The Hon. Dr. GRACE.—If you take out that clause the remainder of the Bill is really not required. The crucial test of the fairness of the "majority" demanded by the Legislative Council for the purpose of sanctioning these loans was applied in the case of the Napier Harbour Board's Loan Bill when the necessary majority, as defined by the Council, was secured by the Harbour Board. I hold that the people of New Zealand are far too speculative where borrowed money is concerned, and I maintain that we are strictly bound to consider these matters, to insist upon thinking for those whom we are representing, and to insist that steps shall be taken to ascertain the real mind of the people before their property is pledged for the loans raised by local bodies. I shall certainly vote that the measure be read the second time this day six months, and I am sure that in doing so I shall be acting in the best interests of the colony.

The Council divided on the question, "That the word proposed to be struck out stand part of the question."

AYES, 8.

Baillie	Dignan	Whitaker
Barnicoat	Peacock	Williams.
Bonar	Stevens

NOES, 20.

Acland	Lahmann	Pharazyn
Buckley	Martin	Reynolds
Grace	McLean	Scotland
Hart	Menzies	Swanson
Holmes	Miller	Tiairoa
Johnson	Oliver	Waterhouse.
Kenny	Peter

Majority against, 12.

Word "now" struck out.

Bill ordered to be read the second time that day six months.

REPRESENTATION BILL.

On the motion for the committal of this Bill,

The Hon. Mr. BUCKLEY said,—Before you leave the chair, Sir, I should like to say a few words with regard to this Bill, as I had not the opportunity of speaking when the second reading of the Bill was before the Council.

My remarks will be very short, and will be made not with the intention of opposing the Bill, but of suggesting one or two amendments which I wish to move in Committee. And I take this opportunity of giving my honourable friend in charge of the Bill notice of these amendments. I have a lively recollection of the care and attention that were bestowed on me in connection with the Bill that was introduced last session—care and attention which probably no one has ever received in this colony before, and I believe no one ever will receive. It appears to me that the expressions which were used by the Hon. Mr. Waterhouse on the second reading of this Bill are true in every sense of the word, though it is possible they will not be strictly correct within the meaning of what is known as the Constitution Act. That the Bill is unconstitutional I have very little doubt; and, while I desire to afford representatives of the people all the facilities which they deserve for their own purposes, I think I should not be doing my duty if I were not to point out that, in my opinion, this Bill is unconstitutional. And I intend to move an amendment, that it shall not come into operation earlier than the 8th October, 1889. A similar amendment was moved in another place, and I believe that those who voted against it will have cause to regret it. Section 2 proposes to give to the Government a power which, in my opinion, should not be given to them. My honourable friend the Attorney-General, in referring to this matter yesterday, pointed out that this would also affect the members of the Government themselves—that their seats might also be affected. That is quite true; but nevertheless I do not think they should be allowed to have the power which is proposed to be given under this section. In regard to clause 3, I intend to move an amendment to this effect: to strike out the words “within such time as he shall determine,” and to insert the words “before the next session of the General Assembly.” It will be obvious to honourable members that that is an amendment which is essentially necessary. We all remember the manner in which the present electoral districts were constituted, and the hurry and confusion which occurred on that occasion, and the difficulty which occurred with regard to the formation of the electoral rolls. These difficulties, I think, were shown to have been very great. I may say that the electoral rolls of the colony now are in a worse state of confusion than they were ever in before. And it is with a view of enabling the Commissioners to make the divisions of the electoral districts that I propose sufficient time should be given under this Bill. It is only right that they should have that opportunity. This Bill is introduced for the purpose of effecting retrenchment, and I shall be glad to afford every facility in passing it through the Council. I hope the amendment of which I have given notice will be carried by the Council.

Bill committed.

IN COMMITTEE.

Clause 2.—House of Representatives to consist of seventy-four members, whereof four to be Maoris.

The Hon. Mr. BUCKLEY moved, That the word “sooner” be struck out.

The Committee divided on the question, “That the word proposed to be omitted stand part of the clause.”

AYES, 25.

Acland	Kenny	Pharazyn
Barnicoat	Lahmann	Reynolds
Bonar	McLean	Richmond
Chamberlin	Menzies	Stevens
Dignan	Miller	Swanson
Grace	Oliver	Taiaroa
Hart	Peacock	Whitaker
Holmes	Peter	Williams.
Johnson

NOES, 5.

Buckley	Scotland	Wahawaha.
Martin	Shrimaki

Majority against, 20.

Amendment negatived.

Bill reported without amendment, and read a third time.

WELLINGTON COLLEGE AND GIRLS' HIGH SCHOOL BILL.

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS moved, That this Bill be read the second time. He said it proposed to alter the constitution of the governing body of the College to some extent. There was one provision in the 2nd clause which was a little unusual. The Mayor and the Chairman of the Education Board of Wellington were to be members of the governing body, and then the other nine members were to be divided into three equal groups—three to be appointed by the Government, three to be appointed by the graduates of the University of New Zealand on the books of the Wellington College, and three by the parents of the pupils who had been attending the College for not less than one quarter. He understood that this last was adopted from an arrangement of the same kind which existed in Auckland. The greater portion of the Bill consisted entirely of the usual provisions for the procedure of the Board, and as to the conduct of its business, the proper auditing of its accounts, and the regulating of its meetings—in point of fact, the usual clauses affecting institutions of the kind. There was, however, a provision in relation to a portion of the reserves, power being given to borrow in a different manner from that under which the trustees could borrow under the existing law. The trustees were unable to raise money by way of mortgage with the power of sale. They could raise it without a power, but not with one. And this Bill enabled them to do that which they were at present unable to do. He understood that the trustees had already, in some manner, borrowed under mortgage—that was to say, they had given to some persons a mortgage, and that, of course, without a power of sale; and it was only desired that that should be put into a more satisfactory shape so far as those who lent the money were concerned. The building had been erected, he believed, by the individuals who at present held the mortgage.

The Hon. Dr. GRACE.—A short-dated loan.

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS said it was desired to raise the money on mortgage with the power of sale in order to pay the loan off. There was nothing beyond that, he thought, which was of an unusual character in the Bill; he should probably, therefore, be consulting the wishes of honourable gentlemen if he did not take more time in moving the second reading. He should be happy to give any further information to any honourable gentlemen who desired it.

The Hon. Mr. SCOTLAND said this Bill afforded a beautiful illustration of the manner in which public bodies go to work in New Zealand, and a great many private individuals also, for the matter of that. The Girls' High School was built upon what was commonly called "tick." They had a discussion about this matter in the Council last year. He went over the building before it was finished. Everything in it was of a sumptuous character. It was perfectly collegiate, and was far in advance of the requirements even of the important City of Wellington. He ventured to say that a building costing £600 or £800 would have been ample and more than ample for the money at the command of the governing body. He now understood why these gentlemen, last year, were so anxious to get hold of 10,000 acres of land at Taranaki. They had a keen eye for that fine reserve. They wanted to do what was vulgarly called "raise the wind." Honourable members managed to thwart the object last year, and he was glad to see that a lesson had been taken by the rough handling which the Bill received on that occasion. He supposed the Bill must be passed; or how was the poor contractor to get his money?

An Hon. MEMBER.—Vote against the Bill.

The Hon. Mr. SCOTLAND did not think he would be justified in voting against the Bill.

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS said the tradesman would not be done out of his money. He would far sooner see the building paid for by the colony than allow the Bill to pass as at present framed. The first part of the Bill was simply an altered constitution of the Board. That clause provided that three members should be elected by the graduates of the University of New Zealand on the books of the Wellington College. There was no occasion to provide for the election of three members by the graduates of a University College which did not exist. If they passed this Bill without striking out these words they were virtually relegating to a body which did not exist the election of three members. In the 18th section there were the words "the lands of." In the Act of 1878, to which this referred, there was a clause similar to this, with the exception of the words "the lands of." Under it it was provided that persons might lend money in one or more mortgages upon the rents or profits of all or any part of the lands vested in the governing body. According to the Bill now before the Council they could borrow money not only upon the rents or profits, but by giving power of sale over the freehold. The rents or profits at the present time were only £35 per annum. What they desired to do was to borrow £6,000 at 7 per cent.: that would involve an annual payment for interest of £420. The reserves only brought in £35, and if they were all let they would only bring in £150. Such being the case, he thought the Council would not be justified in allowing the Board to give a mortgage over the land. The Act of 1873 provided that in borrowing they were to do so without the power of selling the freehold of the land. This Bill gave the power to sell the freehold. Supposing they gave a mortgage upon the security of their endowments, and also upon the site of the building in Wellington, and upon the building itself, it was very clear that the income of the governing body would not be sufficient to pay the £420 a year interest; and if they failed to pay the interest the mortgagee would come down upon the whole of that property. Then there would be an outcry against allowing the school to be sold; the Government would be interviewed by all the Wellington members, and pressure brought to induce it to step forward and pay the money. They would say, "Oh, you can never allow the sale of our Girls' High School!" If the Government considered the colony liable, it would be far better to pay the money at once and have done with it. If it were the desire of Parliament to set the governing body free, let the money be paid and have done with it; but do not seek to do it in an underhand way, like that which was proposed in the Bill. It was only a deception to allow members to suppose that the governing body would try to pay their interest or principal. He had heard quite sufficient in the street to convince him that the governing body would not distress themselves to pay either principal or interest. It was very clear that they could not do so, and it would be better to meet the question at once. If the Government thought it absolutely necessary to acquire the building they should put a sum on the estimates for it.

The Hon. Dr. GRACE said that if the Hon. Mr. Reynolds's statement was a correct one the person holding the security at present had got rather a comfortable thing. As soon as ever the Government contemplated throwing the maintenance of charitable institutions on the rates it put a clause in the Special Powers and Contracts Act making over the valuable endowments of the hospital to the High School. He (Dr. Grace) did everything he could to persuade the Council that a gross injustice was being committed; but, in spite of his efforts, the Council without any hesitation gave the hospital reserves to the Girls' High School. It amounted to this: that at the present moment the rates of the people were paying for the land that was taken for the Girls' High School: that was to say, if this gross act of injustice had not been perpetrated the ratepayers of Wellington would be now receiving £300 or £400 a year ground-rent from that property in diminution of their charitable-aid expenditure. The next thing was, having performed that act of spoliation, the Premier of the day, with that enthusiasm for education which he exhibited, wrote a memorandum, upon the basis of which the Governors of the College erected the building. The building was put up, the contractor asked for his money, and there was no money, of course. A Bill was brought down to Parliament to ratify that expenditure. Parliament last year threw the Bill out. This Bill was practically a Bill to remedy evils such as he had described. Let honourable gentlemen go to the root of the evil and let them bring in a Bill reimbursing the citizens of Wellington for the endowment which had been taken from them and applied to this purpose.

Hon. Mr. Stevens

An Hon. MEMBER.—Nonsense.

The Hon. Dr. GRACE said the honourable member might call it "nonsense," but he called it simple justice. His honourable friend Mr. Scotland had an idea that the measure brought in last year for the establishment of the Wellington University College, which proposed to take an endowment of 10,000 acres of land within the Taranaki District, was the same Bill as this. The honourable gentleman supposed that one of the objects of that Bill was to get hold of that endowment for the purpose of the Girls' High School. The two things had no relation whatever. There was no kind of relationship between the two purposes. His only object was to point out to honourable members how very little these things were really understood. He did not think the Council would blame the Hon. Mr. Stevens for his want of enthusiasm in recommending the measure. The money was due to the contractor. A short-dated agreement had been made, but how the money at the end of the short-dated agreement was to be found he did not know. Honourable members ought to be fair and straight in these matters with each other. He was perfectly sure that the money expended on the Girls' High School was far away in excess of the needs of the place.

The Hon. Mr. McLEAN remarked that, whatever any one might think of portions of this Bill, there were clauses in it which he hoped the Council would never allow to pass. This practice of entering into engagements and requiring confirmation of those engagements afterwards was becoming too common, and it was time, now, that some one was taught a lesson; and probably this would be a case to pick out in order to make an example of it. He understood from what he had heard that the contract for this building was entered into with the contractors without competition, and the parties were to take a mortgage on the building and rents. On that understanding the contractors, as contractors always do—and he believed it was reasonable that they should do so—put on a large price for the risk they undertook. But if they took a risky security they made their bargain, and had the extra price for the building. Therefore he thought they should be left with their bargain as they made it. As to giving the power of sale over the reserves, he hoped the Council would never agree to such a provision. They had hitherto taken an even course in such matters as that, and had declined to give such a power. He hoped they were not going to give it now. In the first part of the Bill, as had been referred to by the Hon. Mr. Reynolds, it was proposed to establish a University College in Wellington. He hoped the Government were not going to bring forward a University College Bill again. The number of universities in New Zealand was far in excess of what the people should be asked to pay for. If New Zealand had been content with one university, it would have been a good university, and would have given proper teaching; but every province must agitate for one, and most of them had been successful in getting one—Dunedin had one, Auckland had one, and Wellington wanted one, and Napier would want one. They had had enough of universities, and he was not going to agree to the establishment of another one. He thought that the best way to deal with the Bill was to vote against it. He thought it was a very wrong thing to take away the reserve for the purpose of handing it over to the College Governors.

The Hon. Mr. WATERHOUSE did not agree with his honourable friend altogether, and thought the proper way to treat this Bill was, not to vote against it, but to move that it be read that day six months. He accordingly took that course. He was much interested in the remarks of his honourable friend Dr. Grace. As honourable members were aware, he was away from the colony for some time, and on his return he was astonished to see that steps had been taken towards the building of a high school on a reserve which had been set apart for charitable purposes. He had made inquiries as to how that had been done, and until the Hon. Dr. Grace mentioned the circumstances he was not aware that it had been done under the Special Powers and Contracts Act. He considered that that was a cruel measure of injustice to the poor people of Wellington,—to deprive them of an endowment that was set apart for charitable purposes. He had seen with some surprise about twelve months ago that efforts were being made towards erecting a school upon the site of that endowment. It was then that he first became aware of the fact that this endowment had been handed over to the Board of Governors of the Wellington College. He had watched their proceedings with a good deal of interest, and more especially when the Board decided to erect a building on this property. They had not the funds, nor had they the means of raising the funds; so that they put themselves into communication with one or two private contractors, and asked these contractors upon what terms they would build a high school, payment to be made in debentures to be issued under the High School Reserves Act, an Act which authorised Education Boards to borrow money on the security of the rents and profits of land temporarily mortgaged. The contractors offered to undertake this work and to receive payment in debentures. Of course, under these circumstances it was a second-class security, and the contractor would require to compensate himself by an increased price for the performance of the contract. The contractor performed the contract, and got paid in debentures; and, having got payment for the work in debentures of second-class security, it was now sought to turn these debentures into debentures of first-class security and to give the contractor power of sale over the land itself, in addition to the rents and debentures. The contractor, whoever he might be, had entered into this contract with his eyes open, and he knew that he was to receive, in payment for the work, debentures upon the security of the rents and profits of this land. It was open to him to either take the contract or reject it. He took the contract, and in doing so he undertook the risk that accompanied it; and the colony was no longer pledged to him. It was open to very great objection that engagements of this character entered into openly and wilfully should be sought to be reversed, and that the Legislature should be expected as a matter of course to cover those who engaged in them with its protecting shield. It was time, as the Hon. Mr. McLean had said, that they should teach these men a lesson. He thought it would be a benefit in all respects that the Bill should be rejected, and he begged to move, That the Bill be read the second time that day six months.

The Hon. Sir F. WHITAKER said he hoped the Council would not come to a conclusion to throw out the Bill. The whole of the discussion had taken place upon one clause—the 18th; but that could be dealt with in Committee; and therefore it would be a pity to throw out the Bill on account of the 18th clause. There were three Acts in operation in reference to this matter—the Wellington College Act of 1872, the Act of 1877, and the Act of 1878. This Bill consolidated these Acts, and put the whole into one measure. There was no doubt that the provisions for the management at the present time were not of the best description. The provisions in the Bill in regard to management were of great importance, and, whether the Council threw out clause 18 or left it in, there must be something done about the management of the institution. The Bill gave better opportunities of management than the existing laws, and he hoped the Council would not throw out the Bill, whatever they might do in regard to particular clauses in it. He was not now going into the question as to whether that clause was proper or improper, as he thought that was entirely a Committee question. It was only one clause out of twenty clauses, and nineteen out of the twenty clauses were useful; and it would be a pity to throw out the nineteen clauses on account of this objectionable one. When they went into Committee they could discuss the question about the 18th clause. In the meantime, he hoped the Council would allow the Bill to be read a second time.

The Hon. Mr. JOHNSON said he certainly was very much surprised at a good deal that had fallen from honourable members with reference to this Bill, and he could not congratulate honourable members on the liberality of their views in regard to this matter. He did not think honourable members knew the position of these things. If they looked at Dunedin, or Christchurch, or Auckland they saw how their schools were supported; they found that they were not obliged to come and adopt measures such as the Wellington people had to adopt in order to keep the school going: nothing of the kind. There were endless endowments for these places for aiding their schools; but in Wellington there was nothing whatever to assist the trustees, and they were obliged to do what they possibly could to keep this institution going. It was absolutely necessary to have this institution going on in a town of this description. It had been stated that the building was a very extravagant one. What did they say of the buildings in Dunedin, where the buildings of one establishment alone were said to have cost £30,000? What did the buildings cost in Christchurch or Auckland? There was no such disproportion between the population of Wellington and these towns as to warrant any great difference in their scholastic requirements; and he would point out that the school itself was increasing very rapidly. It would have been absurd for them to have put up a building which the Governors would have been obliged afterwards to add to or partially pull down in order to provide the necessary accommodation.

Hon. Mr. Waterhouse

An Hon. MEMBER.—How many pupils are there?

The Hon. Mr. JOHNSON replied that he did not exactly know. He was sorry that honourable members had taken this view of the matter. As regarded the transfer of the hospital reserve, he only wished there had been any other ground which the school could have been built upon. But there, again, there was an immense difficulty to contend with. There was no site in Wellington, unfortunately, that could have been useful for the purpose. He did not know exactly how it had come about that the reserve was transferred. That he would not argue at all. But the fact remained that the reserve had been handed over to the trustees, and they were perfectly justified in making use of it. It was not their fault that it was handed over to them, and yet they were now charged with making an ill use of the land. The suggestion which fell from the Hon. Mr. Reynolds was the only practical suggestion that had been made,—that the expenditure should be met by a direct vote. Was there any chance of that sort of thing happening? No. If a vote were brought up it would be rejected at once. The question was, How could that institution be carried on? and he knew that at the present moment it was a very great question whether they could continue it even as it now was. In all other towns the grants for educational purposes of this kind were larger than here. Indeed, every penny that had been spent here had been obtained with the greatest difficulty. Then, with regard to the reserves in the hands of the trustees, these had been looked up in such a manner that the trustees were not able to deal with them so as to obtain money upon them. While the reserves in other districts were larger than those of Wellington, he believed it would be found, upon looking up the Act, that the Otago trustees had far greater powers over their property than the trustees in Wellington had.

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS.—The trustees of the Otago reserves have merely the power which was given in the Act, the same as to Wellington, that they can dispose of their property for the purpose of putting up buildings; but the cost of the buildings must not exceed one-eighth of the whole value of the reserve.

The Hon. Mr. JOHNSON remarked that, having erected a building which cost £30,000, their property must then be worth £240,000.

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS said he did not wish to interrupt the honourable member, but, when the honourable member said that the building cost £30,000, he (Mr. Reynolds) felt bound to inform the Council that this was not so.

The Hon. Mr. JOHNSON stated that some educational buildings in Dunedin cost upwards of £30,000.

The Hon. Mr. REYNOLDS.—No.

The Hon. Mr. JOHNSON said he had often heard it stated so, and he believed there was a great deal of truth in it; and if it had not cost quite £30,000, he believed that was close upon it. But there was nothing to compare with that extravagance here; for extravagance it was. He trusted that honourable members would look with some favour upon the proposals brought forward; and, if they objected to the particular proposal in this Bill for borrowing money to get rid of this liability, some other means should be found of doing it. If members only looked into the circumstances of the case they would see that no other part of the colony was placed in the position that Wellington was in. The reserves which had been given to them were not of such value as could enable the Governors to carry on the duties falling to their lot. And, as he had said before, unless some assistance were given he believed matters would be very much complicated. He did not know whether the Governors would be able to continue the institution at all. At the present moment, as had been rightly stated, the interest on the money was 7 per cent. If means were provided by which this money could be obtained on proper security, that large interest would be reduced to 5 or 4 per cent., and the difference would enable them to make ends meet. A reduction of the interest would enable them to still carry on the school, though he heard the other day that the question of reducing the number of teachers had been taken into consideration. It was therefore absolutely a question of whether the Governors would be able to carry on the institution or not. He hoped, therefore, the Council would look with some favour on the proposal to place this institution on a proper footing.

The Hon. Mr. LAHMANN said the honourable member who spoke last seemed to take it as a matter of course that the colony was obliged to keep up these establishments for higher education. However, the colony had enough to do in providing the means for primary education, without providing for the high schools, whether of girls or boys. He thought the parents of these children could very well afford to pay for the education of their children, and that the colony could not afford to do so. He had not heard a word said about that during the debate. If this had been State-education no doubt they would not have heard a word about it. He thought there was another view to be taken in connection with that matter, and that was the more businesslike view that they might increase the fees of the pupils in order to pay the interest on the money, the more so as the Hon. Mr. Johnson had said that the interest was to be considerably reduced. There were 120 pupils, he believed, in that institution, and the fee they paid was £12 a year. If they paid £15, that would not be too much, and would enable the establishment to find means to pay the interest. Therefore, for his own part, he should not vote against the Bill, but he should vote in favour of the management being put on a more satisfactory footing, and of enabling the authorities to raise the necessary funds in order to pay the interest on the money.

The Hon. Mr. STEVENS remarked that his honourable friend Mr. Reynolds had made some reference to the provisions relating to the electoral power being exercised by graduates of a college not in existence. If he went further on in that clause, however, he would see that there was a provision made for conducting the election only when the graduates were up to the number of thirty. He would seriously ask honourable gentlemen to consider whether, because they disapproved of one part of the Bill—and no doubt with considerable justice, so far as want of caution in going to a large expenditure was concerned—it was wise to deprive that institution, and the other one connected with it in the Bill, of a constitution in regard to management; and he thought that, in spite of what had been said, this would be a very unwise and, to a certain extent, a very unjust thing. He therefore trusted that the Council would consent to read the Bill a second time; and if there were any points regarding which they wanted an explanation these could be discussed in Committee on the clauses.

The Council divided on the question, "That the word 'now,' proposed to be struck out, stand part of the question."

AYES, 14.

Acland	Laumann	Richmond
Baillie	Menzies	Stevens
Barnicoat	Miller	Whitaker
Bonar	Peacock	Williams.
Johnson	Pharazyn

NOES, 15.

Buckley	Hart	Martin
Grace	Holmes	McLean

Oliver	Scotland	Taiaroa
Peter	Shrimski	Wahawaha
Reynolds	Swanson	Waterhouse.

PAIR.

For.	Against.
Barnicoat.	Shrimski.

Majority against, 1.

Word "now" struck out.

Bill ordered to be read the second time that day six months.

The Council adjourned at eleven o'clock p.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, 14th December, 1887.

First Readings—Third Reading—South Canterbury Railway Reserves—Auckland Lunatic Asylum—Napier Mariners on Juries—Eketahuna—Alfredton Mail Service—Property-tax Valuation—Point Resolution—Rabbit Nuisance—Sheep Inspectors' Reports—Public Bodies' Finance and Powers Bill—Auckland Girls' High School Bill—Government Railways Bill—Loan Bill—Property-tax Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER took the chair at half-past two o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Municipal Corporations Bill, Sounds County Hospital Representation Bill, Sheep Bill, Local Bodies' Finance and Powers Bill, Public Revenues Bill.

THIRD READING.

Pharmacy Bill.

SOUTH CANTERBURY RAILWAY RESERVES.

Mr. DUNCAN asked the Minister of Lands, If the reservation of lands set aside for railway purposes in South Canterbury has been withdrawn, or will shortly be withdrawn; and, if so, will the Government take steps to have regulations put in force so that persons already having large holdings may not acquire this land to the detriment of settlement?

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON might state that it was intended to open this land shortly, but three months' notice was required to be given; and, after the land was opened, it would then be dealt with under the existing land-law.

AUCKLAND LUNATIC ASYLUM.

Mr. PEACOCK asked the Colonial Secretary, Whether he is aware that one of the inmates of the Auckland Lunatic Asylum, who had some money when admitted, is still confined there although cured, because the doctor is unwilling to discharge her owing to her being entirely without means? If so, will he endeavour to relax the harshness of the rule with regard to maintenance, and arrange that in such cases some discretionary power will rest with the Superintendent to return a small amount of money where he is satisfied that the discharged patient is penniless?

Mr. HISLOP said the woman referred to, having suicidal tendencies, was not considered by the doctor fit to be trusted at large unless looked after by friends. As she had no friends, she had been retained in the Asylum. The rule as to maintenance-money was not so harsh as indicated by the question. The agent of the Public Trustee arranged with the Asylum authorities what amount should be retained, and how much of the money which reached their hands should be given over to the patient when discharged. This often depended upon the ability of the person discharged to procure a situation or home.

NAPIER MARINERS ON JURIES.

Mr. ORMOND asked the Government, If they are aware that mariners employed on coasting vessels trading from the Port of Napier are called on to act on petty juries; and will the Government cause instructions to be given not to summon persons so engaged? He was informed that in other ports mariners on coasting vessels were not called on to serve on juries. At Napier, however, they were called on frequently for such service, and it entailed considerable loss on them, as their vessels might have to be detained while the seamen were absent from them. What he asked was that seamen at that port should be put on an equal footing with those in other ports.

Mr. FERGUS said this question was the only intimation the Government had had in regard to the matter. Seamen were not exempted by the Juries Act, and therefore the Government had no power to exempt them. The matter should be considered, and if it was thought advisable to amend the Juries Act it might be done.

Mr. ORMOND said all he asked was that the same should be done as in other ports. The police might be instructed not to summon seamen as jurors.

Mr. FERGUS said the Government would instruct the police not to summon seamen.

EKETAHUNA-ALFREDTON MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. SMITH asked the Postmaster-General, If he will arrange to have the present weekly mail service between Eketahuna and Alfredton made a bi-weekly one? A good many complaints were caused by the infrequency of these mails, and a great deal of inconvenience was caused. He did not know if the service might be altered now without much increased cost; but, at all events, when the present contract expired the new one might be for a twice-a-week service—probably at no increased cost.

Major ATKINSON said the Government could hardly see their way to doing what was suggested at present, but when tenders for the service were next called he would see if what the honourable gentleman asked could be done.

PROPERTY-TAX VALUATION.

Mr. COWAN asked the Government, Whether, in consideration of the depreciation in the value of property which has been occurring since the last official valuation, it is proposed to make a fresh valuation for the purposes of the Property-tax Act? This was a matter of great importance to those who had to pay the property-tax, as the depreciation in values of property had been very rapid, great, and general, and therefore taxpayers were called on to pay much more than they equitably should.

Major ATKINSON said there would be a revaluation next year; but the next tax must be levied on the present valuation, as the money was wanted before a new valuation could be made. Unfortunately there could be no doubt that there had been a great falling-away in the value of property. He thought, however, the reduction in value was pretty equal all over the colony, and therefore, though levying on the present valuation was apparently unfair, still, as the fall was equal, it was not so unfair as it appeared to be. He should be very glad if there could be a new valuation before the next collection, but that, he feared, was impossible.

POINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. SEYMOUR brought up the following report of the Public Petitions Committee (A to Z) on the petition of Sir George Grey, K.C.B. :—

"The petitioner states that the Government took for defence purposes the whole of an estate of over four acres at Point Resolution belonging to the St. Stephen's Orphanage Trust, and let by the trustees on lease: that only three-quarters of an acre was eventually used for defence purposes, and that the remainder, instead of being restored, as the law directs, to the trustees, was unlawfully conveyed to the lessee. The petitioner prays that the Government will make inquiry and restitution. I am directed to report as follows: The evidence before the Committee appears to show that the Government, by arrangement with the lessee, took a larger area of land than was actually needed for defence purposes, and that the balance not wanted was conveyed to the lessee, whereby the trust lost the whole of the property, receiving in compensation the sum of £632. The Committee is therefore of opinion that the Government should inquire further into the case, with the view of restoring the trust, if possible, to the position it would have occupied if the Government had taken only so much of the land as was absolutely necessary for defence purposes."

Sir G. GREY.—I ask the Government whether any arrangement can be made by which speedy consideration can be given to this question. My object is to see if a clause could be put in the Special Powers and Contracts Bill by which what the Committee suggests might be done. The matter should be dealt with before the lessee has taken any action which would make it more difficult to restore the land to the trust. Probably the Government will refer the matter to the Law Officers of the Crown, and in that case they might allow me to lay the papers before them, and try, if possible, to get the matter settled this session—that is to say, to prevent anything further being done which would make it more difficult hereafter to get the property back to the position from which it has been taken.

Major ATKINSON.—I will read the report during the afternoon, and will tell the honourable gentleman as soon as possible what I think should be done in the matter. I shall be very glad to take any action possible to set matters right.

RABBIT NUISANCE.

On the order of the day being called for the consideration of the report from the Joint Rabbit Nuisance Committee,

The CLERK read the report, as follows :—

"The Joint Committee of both Houses appointed to inquire into the best means of dealing with the rabbit pest have the honour to report that they have passed the following resolutions, which they now submit to the consideration of the House :—

"1. That a rabbit-proof fence be erected in the Tasman Valley, commencing at Tasman Glacier, and running about forty miles down Tasman Valley towards Hakateramea, and that, considering the early winter in that part of the country, the work should be proceeded with forthwith.

"2. That material for a further length of forty miles of fencing towards the Hakateramea River be ordered by the Government, so as to provide for its arrival in the colony not later than September, 1888.

"3. That a compulsory rate, not exceeding 1d. per head upon all sheep (exclusive of flocks of less than five hundred) depastured upon the land between the Waitaki and Waipara Rivers, be levied for the purpose of meeting the expenditure upon the maintenance of the eighty miles of fencing referred to in the above resolutions, with power to differentiate as under 'The Rabbit Act, 1886.'

"4. That the Committee recommend the Government to join with New South Wales and other colonies in offering a bonus to the scientific world for the discovery of means for eradicating rabbits, in accordance with a resolution passed at the Stock Conference held at Sydney in October, 1886: Provided that no payment shall be made by this colony until the discovery has been proved to be successful for the purpose and adapted for practical use throughout New Zealand, and until the subscribing colonies have agreed that it is a success.

"5. That the Government be requested to place the sum of £10,000 on the estimates for a discovery of a means of exterminating the rabbit, on similar conditions as to payment of reward as those offered by New South Wales.

"6. That this Committee desires to impress upon the Government the necessity of introducing, with as little delay as possible, a large number of stoats, weasels, and martens, both for sale to settlers and for turning out on Crown lands."

Major ATKINSON.—I am sorry to say that the Government have not had time to give this matter much consideration owing to the press of business, but they think it would be impossible for such a rate as proposed to be levied; but what they propose now to do is this: that as the wire has been ordered the fence should be put up; but they are not disposed at present to order further wire. They will, however, take steps in the matter, so that, if at the beginning of next session of Parliament it is decided to proceed with more fencing, wire may be got out for an additional length by sending a cable-message Home, if necessary. That was not what the Committee wanted exactly, but probably it will meet their wishes so far. With regard to offering a reward of £10,000, I do not see any objection to that; but I am afraid it will not do much good. I am sorry to say that I have overlooked the sixth paragraph, and I am not prepared to give a distinct answer, but I have no doubt that the Government would be ready to do anything in that direction which can be done.

Mr. LANCE.—I should like to ask the Premier whether, considering the urgency of the case, and the fact that the material for the fence has actually arrived in the colony, he will give instructions for its immediate transshipment to Timaru and transport to the places where it is to be used.

Major ATKINSON.—Yes; I will see to that matter.

Mr. LARNACH.—I am very glad that the honourable gentleman has met this question in the spirit in which he has met it. I may say that, although the time has been so short for considering the matter, the Committee have given the whole question the most careful consideration; and, while they felt the question was a very difficult one, they yet came to the conclusion that no one of the alternative antidotes proposed would be sufficient by itself to cope with the difficulty where the rabbits have been allowed to thoroughly establish themselves; and that it is necessary not only to fence, but to poison, and import natural enemies as well; and that all three methods should be used in conjunction by a kind of system of co-operation, if there is to be any hope of exterminating the rabbit. I hope that during the recess the Government will prepare such a measure as will effectually deal with this pest; for there can be no question of this: that the Crown is perhaps more largely interested in dealing with the matter than individuals; and, while I admit that individuals cannot be relieved altogether from responsibility even if they are only leaseholders, yet it is clear that it has become an imperative duty on the part of the Crown to take a leading part in dealing with this very serious question. There can be no doubt that the pest has already increased, and has advanced far across the borders of Canterbury and Otago, and that, unless very prompt means are taken to run arterial or dividing fences as suggested in this report, the nuisance will become so established that no means that can be undertaken will be sufficient to cope with the enormous difficulty; and the more tardily we deal with this question the greater difficulty shall we find ourselves in in the future.

Major Atkinson

Mr. ALLEN.—I should like to ask the Premier whether, if it is decided to obtain more wire, he will, instead of sending Home for it or making arrangements to send Home for it, take action to have it manufactured in the colony. I understand that it can be made in the colony as cheaply as, or even more cheaply than it can be imported. I believe that it can be manufactured by persons who are carrying on business in my constituency, and who have invented special machinery for the purpose.

Major ATKINSON.—Certainly. I was not aware that there was any manufacture of this kind in New Zealand.

Mr. O'CALLAGHAN.—I wish to ask the Premier this: It is recommended by the third paragraph that a rate, to cover the whole of the expense of erecting and maintaining the fencing suggested, should be struck. Is that what he pledges himself to accept, or are public funds to be used for the purpose?

Major ATKINSON.—I have not committed myself in any way. That requires consideration. If a large part of the Crown lands will benefit, of course it is only fair that the State should contribute something. But I do not pledge myself in any way as to the form; but I want the landowners to understand that, in going on with this work, they are distinctly pledged to accept whatever rate may be fair.

Mr. O'CALLAGHAN.—The third paragraph would seem to cover the whole cost of the erection and maintenance.

Major ATKINSON.—That is a matter for further consideration.

Captain RUSSELL.—A question of importance arises from the fact that the late Government promised to import a sufficient quantity of wire to do forty miles of fencing, without having previously obtained any authority whatsoever from this House. I thoroughly admit that it is necessary—absolutely necessary—that steps should be taken to cope with the evil that is threatening the Provincial District of Canterbury; but I do want to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the expenditure of money in purchase of fencing without the authority of Parliament being obtained is setting a very dangerous precedent indeed; and that, if a Government is at liberty to order without parliamentary authority wire for forty miles of fencing in one provincial district, surely any Government is at liberty to spend money in a similar manner in any other district equally without authority. Where is this sort of thing to end? I was very anxious in the Committee that before this fencing was proceeded with there should be obtained a distinct undertaking on the part of the people to be benefited by the erection of the fence that they would recoup to the country the cost of erecting and maintaining the fence, by a compulsory rate. I felt the more strongly on this point perhaps because I formerly was chairman of a committee which, by voluntary subscriptions raised in the district, erected a fence in another part of the country, and that in spite of applications we could get no consideration from the Government at all. Although assistance was refused to those who had taken action in the matter I have described, yet the material for forty miles of fencing was ordered by the late Government just as they were going out of office, to be used in another district for Government supporters. I think that that was quite wrong. Then, I know that in the Amuri District they are rating themselves for the erection of fencing, while in another district the fence is to be erected at Government expense, and before we even have any knowledge as to whether the line of fence decided upon is a proper line to be made. We should have at least had some information on that subject, and provision should be made for the levy of an annual rate until the whole cost of erecting and maintaining the fence has been paid. I do not wish that the Crown, being a large holder of property, should not pay a fair share of the cost of erecting the fence. I hold that it should pay a fair share, either in the way of subsidy or in some other way. What I wish to especially draw the attention of the Government to is the fact that there was no evidence brought before the Committee to show that the proposed line of fence is laid off on the best line of country for such a fence. We had no evidence on that point which I consider worth the name of evidence; but I heard to-day, on what I consider very good authority, that the proposed line is by no means the best line—that the rabbits have crossed the glacier and have made their way into Westland, and are likely to come into the district through another pass. So that we might find the country put to this expense to fence the rabbits in rather than to fence them out. I therefore hope that, before the Government take any action, they will get the Sheep Department to report on the matter, and that this fence will not be proceeded with unless it is shown to be laid off on the proper line.

Mr. LANCE.—Although perfectly satisfied with the explanation of the Premier as to the course of action he intends to pursue, and although I am not in the least anxious to debate the question, knowing the value of time at this late period of the session, still I cannot allow the remarks of the honourable member for Hawke's Bay to pass absolutely unchallenged. He has stated that this fence was ordered without any authority from the House. So far the honourable gentleman is perfectly correct; but I would like to inform him and the House of what took place in the matter last session. A report was made by the Chief Commissioner of Lands in Canterbury. It was, I may say, an accidental report: that is to say, he was travelling through the country on other business, when his attention was attracted to the progress of the rabbits, and he felt it his duty to make a special report to the Minister of Lands on the subject. That report was dated the 23rd April, and, having been placed in the hands of members, it was considered absolutely necessary that a deputation should be arranged to bring the matter under the special attention of the Minister of Lands. It was by no means a party deputation, as the House will readily admit when I mention that there was connected with it the late honourable member for Geraldine. No one will accuse him of being in favour of the late Government. He considered the matter was so important that something should be done, and the deputation was actually headed by him, and its object was to preserve this large stretch of country. We looked upon the matter in this light: It was simply a question of insurance against a great danger. The colony was very much depressed, with a falling revenue, and we put it in this way: Should we, for the sake of a very small expenditure, sit down open to the probable loss of £30,000 a year of revenue and take no action? That is what it came to. I do not wish to go into figures, but that was the loss threatening the colony; and would it have been businesslike, for the sake of a small expenditure, to go on incurring a loss of that kind? The Minister of Lands decided that it would not be; and the result was that the late Government decided that the only possible way to avert loss was to erect a fence in some place. This was strongly urged by the deputation, and the Government agreed to it. The matter would have been brought before the House had it not been for the exceptional circumstances that occurred. We all know what did occur last session. This was nipped in the bud, for there was absolutely no time to bring it before the House. But they considered it to be their duty—and I maintain that anybody who looks into it will admit that they were right in so doing—to defend the colony from a very serious loss by a very small expenditure. That is my answer to the honourable member for Hawke's Bay. Now, he has said, again, that there is no evidence as to the best line for this fence to take. I tell the House this: that this country has been carefully examined by capable men—by the men who have charge of the district; and their report is that there is one line, and only one, by which this fence can be taken with efficiency; and if there is any further delay, and the rabbits are allowed to cross that line, then an enormous tract of country will have to be sacrificed to the rabbits before we can find another line that will prove efficient. With regard to the statement by the honourable member for Hawke's Bay, that the rabbits have crossed this frontier, I am in a position to give it an absolute denial. That they are exceedingly near it, at the foot of the Tasman Glacier, I am free to admit. They are very near it—possibly within two miles; but I can state that that is the nearest they are to this frontier, where it is proposed to erect the fence. I urge upon the House to grant the erection of this fence, assuring them that, if immediate steps are not taken in that direction, the very serious loss I have described will accrue.

Mr. BUCHANAN.—As a member of the Committee that has gone into this question, I am bound to tell the House that the honourable member who has just spoken has scarcely given a fair description of the exact position of affairs. He has just told us that the erection of this fence will save to the country a revenue of £30,000. He is correct in stating that the Government have been receiving a revenue of £30,000 annually from the country which is threatened with rabbits, but he is scarcely so in stating that, even if the rabbits invaded the whole of this country, the Government would necessarily lose this £30,000. The loss would amount to perhaps one-third of that sum. Of course the estimates vary as to what the actual loss would be. The real question, then, is this: whether it is wise of the Government to spend a sum estimated at £10,000 in the erection of this fence, in order to save this diminution of the annual revenue. There can be no question that this or any other fence that may be erected will only delay the evil—that rabbits will cross the fence, and that it is only a question of time when the whole of this large tract of country will be infested with rabbits. Having paid careful attention to the whole subject, I am very much in doubt as to whether the expenditure is a wise one; but, as a member of the Committee, I gave the question, so to speak, the benefit of the doubt, and consented to the recommendation which is now before the House. But the vital point to be considered at the present moment is, whether the statement made by the honourable member for Hawke's Bay was correct when he said that the rabbits are already across the line on which it is proposed to erect the fence. If his statement is correct, then it is evident that a fresh line should at once be sought for, and the fence erected upon that line. It would be a great—a fatal mistake if the fence were to be erected upon a line already crossed by the rabbits; and I hope that the Government, before entering into any contract for this fence, will carefully investigate this question, and ascertain whether the statement made by the honourable member for Hawke's Bay on the one hand, or that of the honourable member for Cheviot on the other hand, is correct.

Captain RUSSELL.—If I may be allowed to do so, I will say that, though I was not authorised to mention my informant's name, I shall be happy to give it to the honourable member for Cheviot, and I think he will then realise that the information ought to be first-class, if it is not.

Mr. T. MACKENZIE.—I should propose that the Minister of Lands should give us any information he may possess on this subject.

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON.—I shall be most happy to inform the House in regard to points upon which I have information. I have asked a number of questions, and I will just give the simple facts without comment. The contract was accepted on the 6th of October last—that is, two days before the present Government took office. The amount of the contract is £3,659 5s., and the contract was let to a firm in this town and was not advertised.

Mr. Buchanan

An Hon. MEMBER.—What vote is it charged to?

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON.—I think it is "unauthorised expenditure." I asked how much of the material had now arrived, and find the department has not yet been advised that any has arrived.

Captain RUSSELL.—It has arrived.

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON.—That may be, but the department has not been informed of it.

An Hon. MEMBER.—You know it has arrived.

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON.—I have heard so from members of the Committee. This material is supposed to be sufficient to erect forty-two miles of this rabbit-proof fence, estimated to cost about £15 a mile—total cost, £630. I am sure there is some mistake about these figures as to the cost of erection, as cartage will be a considerable item. I asked also what would be the annual cost of the maintenance of these forty-two miles, and the department reply that they have not the information. I further asked what was the additional mileage required to complete the present scheme, and learn that another forty miles would be required. I may say, with regard to this, that press of business prevented me from attending the Rabbit Nuisance Committee; but, after looking into the matter as carefully as I could, the impression on my mind is, first, that better evidence should have been taken with regard to the line to be adopted for the fencing; secondly, that, even if the utmost care is taken, this fence can only be regarded as a check, a serious check perhaps, to the rabbits, but it will not absolutely prevent their extension, because it must be apparent to any one that, as this is extremely high country, and country that is covered deeply with snow in winter-time, the fence will in places be entirely covered. It is likely to prove a serious check to the influx of rabbits into the district, and, as the material is now ordered and the liability incurred, I think it desirable that the fence should be erected, after making further inquiries with regard to the line to be adopted.

Mr. LARNACH.—Will the Minister continue his explanation, and state at what date the late Government decided that this work should be undertaken? The date is given. From the statement that has been made by the Minister he would make it appear as if the late Government only determined upon doing the work two days before going out of office.

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON.—I have no further information on the matter.

Mr. LARNACH.—You have the papers, and you may see from them that the resolution by the Cabinet was come to two or three months before leaving office.

Mr. G. F. RICHARDSON.—I am quite willing to accept the honourable gentleman's explanation that such was the case. Privately, I understood, in common with other members of this House, that the late Government proposed to make some arrangement with the run-holders by which the Government were going to advance money to put up a fence; but this matter appears to have been on a different footing, the Government paying the whole cost.

Mr. BARRON.—This seems to have been elicited: that the late Government, after their defeat on appeal to the country, and two days before going out of office, gave an order to a firm in Wellington, without calling for tenders, without advertising or in any way inviting public competition, for material to cost about £4,000. I think that should be made perfectly clear to the House; and, if it was so done, I submit that it was one of those irregularities which may very properly be commented upon.

Mr. ALLEN.—I should like to say that I think it is obviously unfair that it should have been done; because I know that one of my constituents manufactures this wire. He has an invention of his own for it, which is not patented, the machinery being known only to himself. I know also that in the town from which I come another machine has been patented for the manufacture of this wire. I hold that it was obviously unfair not to call for tenders, and I mention it seeing that this description of wire could be manufactured in the colony.

SHEEP INSPECTORS' REPORTS.

Mr. DODSON asked the Colonial Secretary, If he will, during the recess, cause a précis to be made and laid before the House early next session of such portions of the Sheep Inspectors' reports (ordered by the House on the 26th July, 1886) as may relate to the number of hands employed and sleeping accommodation for the same on stations having four thousand sheep and upwards?

Major ATKINSON replied that this should be done.

PUBLIC BODIES' FINANCE AND POWERS BILL.

Mr. HISLOP, in moving the second reading of this Bill, said that the object of the Bill was to give to local authorities greater powers to deal with the lands which were vested in them. A Bill of a similar nature was passed in 1886. He would shortly explain the provisions of the Bill. The interpretation clause showed that the Bill enabled the various local bodies having possession of land for public purposes to dispose of that land by lease or otherwise, and also provided that a "special resolution" should be passed in regard to them. The 4th clause provided that the Governor in Council might, from time to time, declare that any leasing authority should be subject to the provisions of the Act, or any part of it, so that the local authority need not adopt the whole of the provisions; and the provisions it adopted were, by virtue of another section, to rule as against any provisions which might have been passed in any Act previously passed with regard to dealing with such property. It was not necessary to go through the whole of the provisions, inasmuch as most of them were re-enactments in a different form of the provisions of the Act of 1886. It was provided that these acts should be done by "special resolution," which meant that a resolution should be passed at one meeting of the body, and that then, after at least ten days had elapsed, it should be confirmed by another meeting. Full power was given to accept surrenders and to relet the land to the same tenants at a reduced rent, or to let it to new tenants. In the case of pastoral lands held by these bodies under authority of the Act, or reserved for primary or secondary education, nothing could be done without the consent of the Governor in Council. There were certain provisions with regard to Harbour Boards which were simply re-enactments of the provisions of the Public Bodies' Leaseholds Act of 1886. The last clause gave power to the local authority to make allowance to any person who had purchased land, and to reduce the amount which had been agreed to be paid in the event of its being found that the sum paid was greater than the value of the land; and the authorities could secure the amount by mortgage over the land. The Bill had been brought in at the instance of a great number of persons who had come to the conclusion, after careful inquiry, that some such provisions were absolutely necessary at the present time. A large number of leases were held of the local authorities where the tenants were unable to pay the rents, and the consequence was that unsatisfactory relations existed between them and the local authorities. There had been an almost unanimous assent on the part of honourable members to the provisions here enacted, and therefore he need not detain the House further.

Mr. SAMUEL said that, owing to the Bill having only recently been circulated, he had not been able to examine it as carefully as he could have wished; but there were one or two slight matters which he would like to call attention to. Section 5 provided,—

"A leasing authority may let any lands vested in it, or any part thereof, and which it is empowered to let on lease, for any term not exceeding twenty-one years, to take effect in possession or within six months from the making of the lease without any fine, premium, or foregift, and may in such lease covenant to grant renewals from time to time for a period not exceeding twenty-one years, but at a rent to be fixed by the leasing authority by a special resolution, or by valuation, or by arbitration."

He thought it ought to be made clear for how long a period this covenant to grant renewals should extend. Whether power would extend to grant renewals from time to time, or whether it should be one renewal only that should be granted, should be made clear. There appeared to be an error in section 7, which said, "Any land which has been offered at auction or public tender may be sold," &c. It seemed to him that that ought to read "Any lease," instead of "land," for the fee-simple should not pass. There were, no doubt, other amendments which would require to be made in Committee, but he thought the principle of the Bill was a sound one, and one that should be sanctioned by the Legislature.

Mr. W. D. STEWART was sorry the House had not a better opportunity of discussing this very important measure. He noticed that section 2 repealed the Public Bodies' Leaseholds Act of last year, and he did not know exactly why that was done. The measure was of a very technical and important character, and he presumed it would not be taken into Committee at once, so that he would have further opportunity of considering it.

Bill read a second time.

AUCKLAND GIRLS' HIGH SCHOOL BILL.

On the motion for the third reading,

Colonel FRASER said he hoped that the Government would not go any further with this Bill. It was quite clear, from the evidence which had been given, that the reserve which it was proposed to deal with had been set aside for primary education, and not for a girls' high school. This, therefore, was merely robbing primary education for the benefit of a high school, and he did not think the House would sanction that.

Mr. TURNBULL said it was his intention to oppose the third reading of the Bill. There were some very extraordinary circumstances connected with this reserve. It was one which was first gazetted as a temporary reserve for primary education. It consisted of 4,898 acres, and was set apart for that purpose in June, 1886. "The Land Act, 1885," gave permission for reserves to be made temporarily, and the papers connected with such reservation were to be laid on the table at the next meeting of Parliament, and then, if no objection were raised, the reserves were to come under the definition of permanent reserves. He had to remark, with regard to this laying of papers on the table, that not only the Gazette notice but also maps and plans connected with the reserves should be produced, and the fullest information should be given. In this case there had been a departure from that rule, for only the Gazette notice was laid on the table. That was laid on the table on the 24th June; and, the House raising no objection, the reserve was made permanent in September, 1886, but it was reserved for primary education. It was a reserve of very considerable value, and it had been shown by statements on the previous day that it contained 90,000,000ft. of the best kauri timber in the colony. Taking the royalty on that at the moderate figure of 1s. per 100ft., it would amount to £15,000. It was claimed that under the Act of 1878 the Auckland Girls' High School could take any reserves under the value of £5,000 for the purposes of that institution; but this had never been acted upon, and very important portions of the reserves had been taken for Gisborne and other places. Through the courtesy of the Minister of Education he had been able to see a memorandum by the late Premier and the Minister of Lands, stating it was their intention to reserve this land for the Auckland Girls' High School. But it did not matter what was in the minds of those honourable gentlemen. The question was, What had been determined on by Parliament? If what was in the mind of a Premier and a Minister of Lands was to supersede a Proclamation by the Governor and Acts of Parliament legislation would come to an extraordinary pass. He had no doubt that the Minister of Education would urge that it was in the mind of Sir Robert Stout that this reserve should be given to the Girls' High School; but the fact that the papers laid on the table showed that it was a reserve for primary education would prevent honourable members thinking that it could be taken for such a purpose as was now proposed. The contention of the mover of the Bill, or of the parties interested in the Girls' High School, was that under the Girls' High School Act of 1878 they had power to take this reserve. Well, in the first place, he (Mr. Turnbull) contended that the Act of 1878 only contemplated the reserves that were in the possession of the Board at the time, but did not contemplate that they should wait for a time when a valuable reserve was given and then come down upon it. If this Bill were allowed to pass—and he hoped it would not be—even if they carried out the law of 1878 they were entitled to no larger a sum than £5,000; and it would be necessary that a clause should be inserted, either here or in another place, to the effect that any sum beyond £5,000 which this lease might fetch should be handed over to primary education. That was taking the most favourable view that could be taken of the matter. The conditions of the sale of this land should also be submitted to the Minister of Education before it was submitted for sale. Without attaching the slightest blame to the Auckland members, and especially exonerating the honourable member for Rodney—who, he was quite sure, would not allow himself to be a party to anything that was not straightforward and honourable—he was of opinion that the House had been misled; and it was not until the previous night that he found how the matter stood. He admitted that the Premier and the honourable member for Wanganui did say that this should be for a Girls' High School; but, whether wilfully or not, they misled the House by laying on the table a Proclamation which reserved this for primary education, and had it appeared for anything else there would have been a very great objection to the passing of it. Under these circumstances, as he did not consider it wise to trust to the chance of the other House perfecting the legislation of the House of Representatives, as they were very much in the habit of doing, he was sorry to have to move, That the Bill be read a third time that day three months. He did so on the grounds that the House was not aware of the intention to make this a Girls' High School reserve, and that the Bill itself was supported on false premises, and that, had not the House been—he would not say wilfully, but—extremely misled on this matter, it would never have passed the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. W. D. Stewart

Mr. TAYLOR said that, in seconding the amendment of the honourable member for Timaru, he did so because he thought the House should have some further information: and, at any rate, there would be no harm in the Bill standing over till next session. He found that this reserve was actually worth in cash something like £37,000 at the present time. He understood the Government purchased this reserve from the Natives a few years ago at a cost of £12,000. He should say, at any rate, it was now worth £36,000. He held it was too large a sum to grant for the purposes of this Act, when the funds of the common schools were about to be curtailed owing to the exigency of the times. Before they parted with a large estate like this in the interests of a section of the community who, in his opinion, ought to educate themselves, he trusted the Government would hold this matter over for further consideration. There was not the slightest indication in this Bill as to the value of the property they were dealing with, and the inquiries made by members only revealed the fact that this was an exceedingly valuable property. He trusted that the third reading would be delayed for three months.

Mr. PEACOCK hoped the House would not accede to the wishes of the honourable member for Timaru by postponing this Bill. The urgency of the matter had been already represented to the House, and he should say nothing further on the point. But he wished merely to remark that there was no doubt whatever, with regard to the intention of the Governor in setting aside this particular endowment, that it was for the Girls' High School, and not for primary education. He was quite aware, as had been stated by the honourable member for Timaru, that in giving effect to that intention the reserve was gazetted in the first instance as for primary education, and possibly it might have been done in that way because the Act of 1878 made it possible for the Governor to set aside out of the education reserves an endowment for the Girls' High School equivalent in value to the endowment now under consideration. He himself knew that the Government were requested to give an endowment to this school, and that all the arrangements embodied in the papers showed that, in withdrawing this block from the Crown lands, there was no intention other than that the endowment was to be for this school. He hoped the House, under the circumstances, especially as a certificate of title had been issued in favour of the Girls' High School, would not hesitate in this matter, but would give effect to the Bill, and enable a very useful institution to get a building erected which was absolutely required for the purpose.

Mr. W. D. STEWART.—Who issued the certificate?

Mr. PEACOCK said the certificate or grant was issued, he believed, for the Girls' High School by the Land Transfer Department in the usual manner. He presumed that the Governor was empowered to grant from the education reserves an endowment for a Girls' High School; and the mere fact of this particular reserve being dedicated to primary education as a matter of form, and the Governor exercising his power under the clause of the High School Act, made very little difference in the merits of the question, which was whether the Board were to be enabled by this Bill to utilise the endowment to the best advantage.

Mr. W. D. STEWART said it was unfortunate, the Minister of Education did not take the House into his confidence in introducing this Bill and carrying it through Committee; because a new phase had been put on the matter, and honourable members were not sufficiently informed as to the precise rights which this Bill affected. He thought it would have been very much more satisfactory to the House if honourable members had been informed at the outset of what they were now partially informed: and he felt considerable difficulty in knowing what should be done. He did not wish to do any injustice to this high school. On the other hand, if this reserve had been set aside for primary-education purposes some definite decision should be come to by the House, and they might be doing as great an injustice by taking away the land from its present position as they might do by withholding it from the school. It was extremely difficult to say what the rights of parties were.

Mr. MOAT said, in order to show that it was never intended that this should be an endowment for primary education, he might just narrate to the House what occurred. The Auckland Board of Education had for many years been endeavouring to raise funds for the building of a Girls' High School. All the late Ministers of Education—Mr. Dick, Mr. Rolleston, and Sir Robert Stout—had said that the present building, for which a high rent was paid, was a disgrace to the department; so on one of Sir Robert Stout's visits to Auckland a deputation from the Board, of whom he (Mr. Moat) was one, waited upon him and requested that he would give the Board an endowment to build a new school. Sir Robert Stout expressed his willingness to do so, and asked the Board to consult the Surveyor-General as to a suitable block. That gentleman recommended the land referred to in the Bill, and the Board applied to have it set apart. An objection was at first made by the Crown Lands Department; but Mr. Ballance, shortly after, visited Auckland, and, having consulted the Assistant Surveyor-General and heard the matter explained, he agreed that the endowment should be granted. The House would therefore see that there never was the slightest intention of this land being made a reserve for primary education, and the fact of its being gazetted as such must have been simply a clerical error.

Mr. FISH said there appeared to be something extremely wrong in the matter, and he quite agreed with the honourable member for Dunedin West in expressing his regret that the Minister in charge of the Bill did not think it to be part of his duty to take the House thoroughly into his confidence. When members of the Government introduced a Bill of this kind, honourable members coming from parts of the colony not particularly interested were apt to take the fact of a Minister introducing a Bill as a guarantee that the rights of the people were not being infringed. It would appear to be quite plain that in passing this Bill, as they were asked to do now, they were infringing the rights of the people, to whom this reserve had been given for a certain purpose, and were applying the reserve to another purpose, without the House really knowing what they were doing in the matter. It appeared that these remarks were entirely borne out by the Act of 1878, which created this high school, because clause 5 said,—

“Out of any reserves set apart for education in the Education District of Auckland the Governor may grant any land not exceeding in value five thousand pounds to the Board, free from all charges or incumbrances, as an endowment for the said school, such value to be ascertained by the Land Board of the Auckland Land District.”

Now, it appeared that the whole of this reserve was absorbed, or was sought to be absorbed, by this school; and the reserve itself was made for the purpose of primary education. It was never contemplated by the Act of 1878 that the whole of the reserves should be taken, but merely that the Governor might grant, out of such reserves, land not exceeding £5,000 in value. Under any circumstances, it appeared to him that precedent to going on with this Bill there should have been a valuation by the Waste Lands Board of Auckland. The Legislature might be actually granting land to the value of £20,000 or £30,000. He did not know that they were not.

Mr. PEACOCK.—It has already been granted, whatever it is worth.

Mr. FISH did not know that it had been granted. He had only the Act and the Gazette notice to go by, and in the Gazette notice the land was distinctly set apart and reserved for the purposes of primary education; and by this Bill they were deliberately taking a reserve from primary education and devoting it to secondary education. His views on secondary education were perfectly well known—that the system now was utterly rotten, and it should be either swept away altogether or made to fit in with the primary system; and, until one of these things was done, he would resolutely resist, as far as his vote went, any application of colonial funds to bolster up secondary education. These institutions, as at present conducted, were class institutions of the worst and most objectionable kind. They were not secondary schools in the proper sense of the word, because in them the children were, in some of the classes, given the same education as was given in the primary schools, at a cost of about four times as much as it cost in the primary schools. He thought the House was entirely wrong in upholding in any shape or form such a system as that. He spoke on the assumption that the state of affairs was the same in Auckland as in Otago, where, he knew, children were being educated in the high schools in elementary classes at a cost of £16 a year each; whereas in the primary schools the same education was given at a cost of £4 a head. For that reason, amongst others, he objected to this Bill; and, had he had the slightest idea that the measure was one of the nature it had been shown to be, he should have opposed it at every stage, and now he should be compelled to vote for the amendment. He thought the House was indebted to the honourable member for Timaru for unearthing this scheme and exposing it; and he thought it extremely wrong for any Minister of the Crown, knowing that a reserve was being diverted from primary education, to bring in a Bill for the purpose, and not to tell the House what he was doing.

Mr. GOLDIE thought the honourable member for Dunedin South made a great mistake in imputing anything wrong to the present Minister of Education in connection with this matter. The provisions of this Bill were introduced last year by his predecessor in office in the Special Powers and Contracts Bill, and the clauses on this subject passed the House on that occasion, but they were rejected, with others, in another place. It would have been the duty of those who now objected to what was proposed to raise their voices then; but they had apparently not done so. Most certainly the present Minister of Education was in no respect blameworthy for what was being done. As to the statement of the honourable member for Timaru that this reserve was made for primary education, it was never reserved for primary education at all. It might be admitted that the Gazette notice showed that the land was at one time intended to be made a reserve for primary education; but it had been taken from being waste lands of the Crown especially to be a reserve for the Girls' High School, though, owing to some mistake, it was gazetted otherwise. That it was a mistake was shown by the fact that the Board of Education held a certificate of title under the Land Transfer Act, which specified its purpose. Here was a memorandum from the Under-Secretary for Crown Lands, which stated the fact:—

“I certify that a certificate of title has issued to the Board of the Education District of Auckland in terms of ‘The Auckland Girls' High School Act, 1878,’ for 4,770 acres of land in the Maungaru Survey District at Auckland. A copy of the certificate of title is filed in this office.—H. J. H. ELIOTT, Under-Secretary.”

He (Mr. Goldie) had also received this telegram from the Chairman of the Auckland Board of Education:—

“Girls' High School reserve is vested in Board, through certificate of title under Land Transfer Act, as an endowment for the Girls' High School, under the provisions of ‘The Auckland Girls' High School Act, 1878.’ Mistake in Gazette has probably arisen through school being under entire control of Board of Education, there being no separate Board of Governors.—S. LUKE, Chairman.”

Therefore the Board had been in the actual possession of the land for over twelve months, and, whatever the House might do, it could not take from the Board its right to the land for the purpose of the Girls' High School. All the Board now asked was to be allowed to so use the land as to get funds to erect a building for the school; and the absolute need of that was shown in the fact that they were now paying £300 a year rent for a most unsuitable building, on which they had spent a large sum in additions and repairs, and the lease of which expired in just a year from now. The Board were therefore most anxious to have power to use the land as proposed, so that the proceeds might be devoted to the erection of a school-building.

Mr. Fish

Mr. MONK supported this Bill, because he believed the assertion that it diverted a reserve for primary education to be an error due to misstatement, or a clerical error in one of the public documents. As to the value of the property, he thought there was a misapprehension. Experts estimated that there was 10,000,000ft. of timber on it, which, at 6d. per 100ft., would represent £2,500. An honourable gentleman had said that if the timber was worth 1s. per 100ft. the value of the whole, supposing it to be 8,000,000ft., would be £4,000. But he could assure the House that it was not worth 1s., and he believed that at the present time there would be great difficulty in getting even 6d. per 100ft. for it. He questioned very much whether the Board itself was not under some misapprehension as to the amount it would be able to obtain for this particular block. He did not think the Board would be able to make anything out of it by leasing it in small areas. Its situation was so peculiar that it could not be profitably cut up and worked in small areas, because, to get the timber out, a great expense would have to be gone to in making tramways for it to be got out, and this could not be done profitably unless the land were held in one block. He therefore believed the land would have to be sold as a whole, to make anything of it. After the timber was taken off the land would be of little or no value. It was a complete misapprehension to think the property was worth £10,000 to £30,000. He could assure the House it was not worth anything like that amount; and he questioned very much if so much could be got for it as was wanted for the purpose of this Bill.

Mr. TANNER thought a great injustice was proposed to be done by the Bill, if it was correct that the reserve had been made for primary education. It was a curious explanation that there must have been a clerical error in the Gazette; and, if there had been one, surely the matter might be cleared up and the actual facts be made known. The remarks of the honourable member for Rodney rather led him to think there had been no mistake at all, because that honourable gentleman said that when application was first made for the reserve they were told by the authorities that it could not be given, but that when the late Minister of Lands came to Auckland they interviewed him and he put the thing right. The honourable member knew that the late Minister of Lands had a way of putting things right when application was made to him, and he thought the least the House should have was that honourable gentleman's explanation of the matter. He thought, at all events, the House should defer deciding on this matter until they had heard what was the information and knowledge of the honourable member for Wanganui on the subject. They were asked to hand over a valuable reserve for secondary education at a time when the Government were reducing the grants for primary education—when the Government declared it was necessary, in the interest of retrenchment, to reduce the vote for primary education. Surely this was a wrong time for the House to be giving away valuable reserves for secondary education—for the education of those who could well afford to pay for the education of their own children. Surely, when primary education was languishing for want of sufficient means to provide the necessary accommodation for the children, it was time that the House should put its foot down and prevent such a wrong from being done as was proposed by this Bill. He should be very glad to hear an explanation from the Minister of Education on the subject. No doubt what had been done had been done before that honourable gentleman took office, and he was not in any way responsible for what was proposed now. But they should hesitate before passing this Bill, in the circumstances which had been stated; and, unless a far more satisfactory statement was forthcoming than had yet been afforded, he should vote for the amendment of the honourable member for Timaru.

Mr. FISHER would be extremely sorry that any honourable member should think he would be guilty, while holding the high and important office of Minister of Education, of withholding or concealing from the House any information which ought to be placed before it. He had never attempted that line of tactics in the whole course of his life, and he was confident that he would not begin now to adopt that course of conduct. His own ideas were in entire accord with those of the honourable member for Timaru as to the necessity of preserving any reserves which were, or had originally been, set aside for the purpose of supporting the primary-education system; but he was confident that the honourable gentleman would see, if he would examine the whole of the correspondence and documents in this case, that there had been a mistake in regard to the purpose for which the endowment was set apart. He had examined the whole of the papers very closely, and, as the result, he was convinced that the intention was, from the beginning, that this reserve should be set apart for the Auckland Girls' High School. There never had been a doubt on that point from the beginning of the question to the present moment. To show what the intention had been with regard to this particular reserve, he would read the following memorandum from the Education Department:—

"The Chairman, Board of Education, Auckland.

"I am directed to inform you that the Government have decided to set apart the land known as 'surplus in Walton's land-claim,' containing 4,898 acres, as an endowment for the Auckland Girls' High School, and that the requisite formalities are now in progress.

"W. J. HABENS.

"17th May, 1886."

This was following on a lot of correspondence prior to that date—correspondence which was very voluminous. There was this antecedent communication from the Under-Secretary of Crown Lands:—

"The Commissioner, Crown Lands, Auckland.

"Will you please send a description of the 4,898 acres, 'surplus land in Walton's land-claim,' which is to be set apart as an endowment for the Auckland Girls' High School, which will be reserved as an endowment for education, and then granted in terms of section 5 of 'The Auckland Girls' High School Act, 1878.'"

"H. J. H. ELIOTT.

"14th May, 1886."

It must be evident from that, to the mind of any impartial person, that the intention was, from the beginning, to set aside the reserve for the Auckland Girls' High School. Then, when the description of the land was forwarded from Auckland, the officer in the Auckland department addressed the Under-Secretary for Crown Lands in Wellington, as follows:—

"Crown Lands Office,

"Auckland, 21st May, 1886.

"Accompanying this I beg to hand you description of 4,898 acres, Walton's land claim (surplus land), for reservation as an endowment for the Auckland Girls' High School.

"S. ETHERIDGE,

"For Commissioner, Crown Lands.

"The Under-Secretary, Crown Lands."

The next step in the matter was the publication of the description. The description was written in ink, but by some accident—for he could not help thinking that it was done by accident—there appeared at the bottom of the description, written in pencil, "For primary education." He thought it must be clear to any person looking at the matter in an impartial way that there had been a mistake in the addition of those few words.

Mr. TURNBULL.—No mistake at all.

Mr. FISHER quite conceded that, looking at the Proclamation which had been put before the House, the honourable member for Timaru had a perfect right to move in the direction in which he had done; but he thought there was no justification for a suggestion of the honourable member for Dunedin West—a suggestion which had been intensified by the honourable member for Dunedin South—that there was an intention on his (Mr. Fisher's) part to withhold or conceal some of the facts of the case. It must be quite evident from the papers he had read what were the intentions of the department of the Government of the day, and he thought it was altogether a wrong thing to say that any attempt had been made to divert a primary-education reserve to the purposes of secondary education; and he must say, in conclusion, that it was a most unworthy suggestion for the honourable member for Dunedin South to throw out, that he, as Minister of Education, had attempted in any way to withhold or conceal from the House certain information in regard to this matter that ought to have been placed before it. In reality, that suggestion amounted to this: that he had attempted to pass the Bill through the House by means of a false pretence. There was no warrant for such a statement.

Mr. Fisher

Mr. TURNBULL said he had made no such charge.

Mr. FISHER was quite sure that the honourable member for Timaru would not entertain an idea of the kind; but the suggestion was made in the most definite form by the honourable member for Dunedin South, and he wished the House and that honourable member especially to understand that, while he held the position of Minister of Education, he should always be careful not to withhold any information that ought to be before the House.

Mr. W. D. STEWART, as a matter of personal explanation, wished to say that he had no intention of indicating that, in his opinion, the Minister of Education had designedly withheld information. But he thought that the honourable gentleman would get up and say that he was not aware, when he introduced the Bill, of the precise difficulty that had now presented itself to the House. He understood, from something that the honourable gentleman had said yesterday, that he had not realised the difficulty which the honourable member for Timaru had raised. He should be the last to suggest that the honourable gentleman had intentionally withheld information. What he felt was that the honourable gentleman should have been informed before he introduced the Bill—by some one, at any rate, he did not say by whom—what were the precise facts, and that he should have stated them to the House.

Mr. FISHER was bound to say that he was not aware of the difficulty until it was brought under the notice of the House by the honourable member for Timaru.

Sir G. GREY wished to say, in the first place, that he had for a long period of time observed the course of action always pursued by the Minister of Education; and that the honourable gentleman would attempt to withhold information, or to perform any such wrong act, seemed to him a most improbable thing; and he should bear testimony to that in all places and at all times. Then, he had to say that he had every sympathy in favour of securing this great advantage of a Girls' High School for Auckland; but he was compelled to state that, upon an examination of the documents, he thought, upon the whole, that the right to the land rested with the primary-education authorities. He had arrived at that view under these circumstances: He attached great weight to the correspondence which had been read out as showing a certain intention, but there were other facts which it was impossible to get over. Subsequently to that correspondence the Governor, on the 7th September, issued a Proclamation, which Proclamation was headed, "Land reserved for Primary Education," and at the bottom of the Proclamation it was stated that these lands were given "for primary education." Thus there were repeated at the conclusion of the Proclamation the very words that were used at the beginning of the Proclamation, and therefore he had come to the conclusion that, whatever might have been the original intention with reference to these reserves, the title was made good in a certain direction by the words of the Proclamation setting apart the land for a particular purpose. The date of that Proclamation was the 7th September, 1886, and the grant giving the endowment as an endowment for the Girls' High School was dated the 10th November, 1886—more than two months after the date of the Proclamation. Though it might be argued, he thought, that a certificate of title was really a title, he still was under the impression that a Proclamation, which was equivalent to an Act of Parliament and which therefore had the force of an Act of Parliament, ought to decide the question; and, as there was no special repeal of the original Act, he believed that the fair and just title to the land really rested in the authorities having charge of primary education. It was with great sorrow and disappointment that he came to this conclusion, because the matter had taken him quite by surprise; but he held that he was taking a proper line of action.

Major ATKINSON said it seemed to him that it would be a great pity if the House refused to pass this Bill. There was no doubt that it was a measure of considerable importance to the city and neighbourhood of Auckland. He had looked into the question carefully, and it was perfectly evident to his mind that the land referred to in the Bill was never in any sense a primary-education reserve. He was informed by the Secretary of Lands that in no case was land in the first instance set apart for secondary education in the North Island. It was always declared a primary reserve. In this case the land was selected by the department for this purpose while it was waste lands of the Crown, not to be made a primary-education reserve, and went through the required treatment that all these reserves for secondary education went through. It was proclaimed as land set apart for education in the Province of Auckland, and was then to be taken for the Girls' High School. It could not have been taken directly from the Crown. It was necessary to proclaim it primary-education land in the first instance. It could not be given to the Girls' High School unless it had been, in the first place, declared a primary-education reserve. The officers of the department stated distinctly that it was selected for this purpose, and went through this form in order to comply with the general custom in such matters. He might say that the governors had proceeded under the Land Transfer Act, and that great confusion would arise unless the Bill were passed. He felt strongly, quite as strongly as any honourable gentleman, that the House should not take any education reserve and divert it from the purpose for which it was set aside to another purpose; but it was not so in this case. It was selected by the late Government for this purpose, and merely passed through a certain form because the law, so far, required it to do so. He would suggest that, if there was a strong feeling on the subject—though he could not see how there could be—the Bill might be referred to the Waste Lands Committee for inquiry; but he was anxious not to see the Bill lost. It would be a great pity, now that they had taken so much time over it, and the facts appeared so clear, to put the Bill on one side; but, if it was necessary, he should be willing to refer it to a Select Committee.

Mr. GUINNESS said there was one point that he did not think the Premier had looked into, and that was the interpretation of the 5th clause of "The Auckland Girls' High School Act, 1878." The correspondence read by the Minister of Education clearly disclosed that the reserve was made with the intention of vesting it in the High School Board of Governors under section 5 of the Act of 1878. He ventured to submit that the correct interpretation of that Act was simply this: that it applied to reserves made before the passing of the Act, but did not apply to reserves made after it became law. That was the position that he took up. Section 5 read as follows—and the Act was passed on the 1st November, 1878:—

"Out of any reserves set apart for education in the Education District of Auckland the Governor may grant any land not exceeding in value five thousand pounds to the Board, free from all charges or incumbrances, as an endowment for the said school, such value to be ascertained by the Land Board of the Auckland Land District."

He maintained that that meant that, out of the reserves which had been set apart in the Auckland Provincial District prior to the date of the passing of that Act, it should be lawful for the Governor to grant to the governors of that high school land to the value of £5,000; and the power given under that Act could not be made applicable to reserves made after that. This was the irregularity. The reserve was clearly made, as mentioned by the honourable member for Auckland Central, in the Gazette of September, 1886, as a reserve for primary education; but the question was, whether even making the reserve for primary education came within the meaning of the words "reserves set apart in the district for education generally." The next question was, whether the grant by the Governor of this reserve, which had been set aside in September, 1886, was a valid grant, and whether these School Commissioners had any title to it. The Bill, he ventured to submit, ought to have been a Bill to validate this; but it did nothing of the sort, but simply gave power to deal with it. He should certainly support the honourable member for Timaru in preventing any of our funds, whether by way of money grants or grants in land, from being given for the purposes of secondary education. He had always opposed that, and should continue to do so, more especially now that they were strengthened in their arguments in that direction by the proposal of the Government to reduce the expenditure on primary education.

Mr. PEACOCK wished to explain that, personally, he would be quite willing—and he believed many others would be—if honourable members thought that the value of this endowment was more than £5,000, that a clause should be inserted in the Bill, in the other House, giving the balance over £5,000 to primary education. He believed the intention was that this reserve should be purely for the Girls' High School; but he would agree to that being done.

Sir G. GREY would like to make a suggestion that he believed would perhaps settle the difficulty. There seemed to be two decided opinions—one that the land was not intended for primary education, and the other that it was. If there were distinct words put in the preamble to the Bill, stating that, whereas it was thought that the reserve had originally been granted for primary-education purposes, notwithstanding these doubts it should be lawful to take it for the purposes of secondary education, then he could vote for it; but he must confess he could not support the Bill in its present form.

The House divided on the question, "That the word 'now' stand part of the question."

AYES, 30.

Allen	Kelly	Russell
Buchanan	Lawry	Seymour
Cowan	Marchant	Taiwhanga
Dodson	McGregor	Thompson, R.
Fisher	McKenzie, J.	Thompson, T.
Fulton	Mitchelson	Valentine
Goldie	Moat	Withy.
Hamlin	Moss	Tellers.
Hislop	O'Connor	Monk
Hobbs	Ormond	Peacock.
Jackson

NOES, 32.

Anderson	Hodgkinson	Reeves, R. H. J.
Beetham	Hutchison	Richardson, E.
Blake	Joyce	Ross
Duncan	Kerr	Smith
Feldwick	Lance	Steward, W. J.
Fish	Larnach	Stewart, W. D.
Fraser	Levestam	Vogel
Graham	Loughrey	Walker.
Grey	O'Callaghan	Tellers.
Grimmond	Parata	Taylor
Guinness	Perceval	Turnbull.

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Atkinson	Tanner
Newman	Samuel
Richardson, G. F.	Ward.

Majority against, 2.

Word struck out.

The House divided on the question, "That the words 'this day three months' be added."

Mr. Guinness

AYES, 29.

Anderson	Guinness	Perceval
Blake	Hutchison	Reeves, R. H. J.
Buxton	Joyce	Richardson, E.
Cadman	Kerr	Smith
Duncan	Lance	Steward, W. J.
Feldwick	Larnach	Vogel
Fish	Levestam	Walker.
Fraser	Loughrey	Tellers.
Grey	O'Callaghan	Taylor
Grimmond	Parata	Turnbull.

NOES, 36.

Allen	Lawry	Ross
Buchanan	Marchant	Russell
Cowan	McGregor	Seymour
Dodson	McKenzie, J.	Taiwhanga
Fisher	Mitchelson	Thompson, R.
Fulton	Moat	Thompson, T.
Goldie	Moss	Valentine
Graham	O'Connor	Whyte
Hislop	Ormond	Withy.
Hobbs	Pearson	Tellers.
Hodgkinson	Pyke	Monk
Jackson	Richardson, G. Peacock.
Kelly

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Atkinson	Tanner
Newman.	Samuel.

Majority against, 7.

Motion negatived.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS BILL.

Mr. MITCHELSON moved, That this Bill be read a third time.

Mr. T. THOMPSON.—I beg to move the recommitment of this Bill, for the purpose of considering the advisability of adding the new clause on Supplementary Order Paper No. 7, as follows:—

"Notwithstanding anything contained in section thirty-six of this Act, the Commissioners shall cause tables of rates and charges for the carriage of passengers and goods upon railways to be prepared as soon as practicable upon the system or plan known as 'Samuel Vaile's system of railway fares,' and shall bring the tables of rates and charges so prepared into operation at the commencement of the quarterly financial period next after the preparation thereof, and shall keep the same in operation, for a period of not less than twelve months from the coming into operation thereof, on the line of railway running from Auckland to Te Awamutu, including the branches therefrom to Onehunga, to Cambridge, to Te Aroha, and such other branches therefrom as there may be in the Waikato, and including the Kaipara line from Auckland to Helensville, to the termini thereof respectively.

"The said Commissioners shall make a report of the result of the working of the said railway upon the charges and rates as aforesaid to the Governor, who shall submit the same to both Houses of the General Assembly at the next session thereof.

"The Commissioners, if they find the result satisfactory, may continue the said rates and charges in operation on the aforesaid railway, and extend the operation thereof to other railways; otherwise they shall discontinue the operation of such rates and charges forthwith on the expiration of the aforesaid twelve months."

I may state that at an early hour this morning, when the Bill was in Committee, I moved this clause; but, seeing that there were very few honourable members present—on the last division there were only twenty-eight—and knowing that several honourable members feel, with me, that this clause is of very considerable importance, and thinking they might like to speak on the question, I took the vote on the voices, with the understanding that, upon the moving of the third reading, I would bring the matter forward and ask for the recommitment of the Bill. I may explain to honourable members that, although there are many members of this House who do not believe in Mr. Vaile's scheme, still there are many thousands of people in all parts of the colony who thoroughly believe in it; and, although the Railways Bill leaves it optional with the Commissioners to give this scheme a trial, I wish to make it compulsory, and therefore have given notice of this new clause. There are many honourable members who, I know, went before their constituents during the last election and pledged themselves in favour of giving this scheme a trial; and I am now moving the recommitment of the Bill with a desire to give those honourable gentlemen an opportunity of not only expressing their opinions upon the clause I have read, but also of voting on the question in accordance with the pledges they gave to their constituents. To my mind, it is deserving of very great consideration, and I hope the House will not hastily reject it, but will, at all events, give the scheme a trial. I understand that Mr. Vaile would be in a position, within six months from the time of this Act coming into force, to put this scheme into full working order, with regard to passengers, goods, and parcels traffic. Although several honourable gentlemen who may desire to speak on the question are not just now present, I intend to call for a division, so as to give them an opportunity of going into one or other of the lobbies in favour of the recommitment of the Bill or against it.

Mr. FISH.—I shall support the recommitment of this Bill for the purpose of assisting the honourable gentleman in carrying the amendment he desires to propose; but in doing so I do not wish to be understood as indorsing or favouring this scheme proposed by Mr. Vaile: at the same time, I think he has so intelligently put before the public a scheme, which must have given him a considerable amount of thought and care, that there should be an opportunity afforded him of putting that scheme into operation, if the Commissioners think fit.

An Hon. MEMBER.—The power is already given.

Mr. FISH.—I see no reason why the Bill should not be recommitted for that purpose; and I trust that when it is recommitted advantage may be taken to make one or two other alterations in the Bill. I observe that last night the Committee fixed the salary of the Chief Commissioner at £1,500. Now, Sir, I think it is futile to expect we can get the man we want for £1,500 per annum. If the scheme is to be a success it is a most miserable cheese-paring policy on the part of the Government to make the salary of the Chief Commissioner so small as £1,500 per annum. I have no doubt that the salaries provided for the two Under-Commissioners may be found to be sufficient, but I am strongly of opinion that the salary of the Chief Commissioner should be higher than is fixed in the Bill. The Government say that if they find they cannot obtain a good man at the price they will still engage him, and come down to the House next year and ask the House to increase the amount. That is a way of getting out of the difficulty, and no doubt the House would indorse the action of the Minister; but I think the effect of the amount being placed in the Bill at £1,500 will be to prevent the Ministry getting offers from the men we want. There is another thing, I take leave to say, I think should be in this Bill, and which I am sorry the Government have not thought it desirable to import into it. There should be some power of veto on the part of the Government with regard to the tariff the Commissioners may frame. I am given to understand the Victorian Bill contains a proviso of that kind, and I think this House or the Government should retain in its power the right to veto the tariff which the Commissioners may impose and which may mar commerce and settlement. I take this opportunity of again expressing my extreme regret that the Government should have pushed this measure to a conclusion this session. It appears to me that the one or two objects the Government have in view in introducing this Bill are, in the first place, to increase the rates; and, secondly, to reduce the wages of the men. I believe if the Government were to speak their real mind on the subject they would say these are the two great objects they had in view—namely, to increase the rates to the public generally, and to decrease the wages of the working-men; and, by placing ourselves in the hands of a Board, to take away from ourselves the power of having anything to say when an injustice is perpetrated; and my prediction is that, in a very short time indeed, one of the results of this Board will be universal dissatisfaction from one end of the country to the other. I say that, although the question may have been discussed during the last Parliament, it was never brought before the public in the same concrete form as now; and we should have an opportunity of placing the matter before our constituents in order to see how far public opinion is really in touch with this great change which the Government are making. We have no great reason to be dissatisfied, on the whole, with the management of our railways, except with incompetence, possibly, or unsuitability, I should say, on the part of the General Manager. The railways in New Zealand have been managed extremely creditably, and there can be no imputation of any corrupt influence having been brought to bear on the Minister from time to time, such as I believe was the case in Victoria. I take leave to say that neither the Government nor any of their supporters have given any solid reason for the introduction of this Bill. The only reason they have attempted to give is that the scheme in Victoria has been a success, and ergo it must be a success in this colony. I deny that wholly. I deny, first of all, that the causes which led to the introduction of the scheme into Victoria exist here, and I deny that the advantages predicted as certain to flow from it will flow. We shall, by passing this Bill, give up the control of sixteen millions' worth of property for at least five years to irresponsible men. I think in making an experiment of this kind the House should have insisted on limiting the time to as short a period as possible—not more than three years. It will be said that all these are Committee objections, and that members of the House ought to have remained here to discuss these questions during the last sitting. I may explain now why I thought it to be my duty to leave the House about half-past two this morning. It was because the Government had determined to make this measure in every sense a Government measure, and, knowing they had a majority at their back, it was perfectly useless for independent members to remain here with a view of making any amendments in the Bill. Therefore I declined to injure my health and constitution by sitting here till five or six o'clock. And, Sir, I take this opportunity of again saying that I hold it to be most improper, on the part of any Government, to introduce a measure of this magnitude in the short space of time we have, when such a measure can only be passed by taxing the vital energies of honourable members by making them sit up till six o'clock in the morning. That is not the way to pass important legislation. Honourable members, after being at work so long, cannot possibly bring to bear on important measures that brightness of mind and clearness of intellect which they ought to bring, and which they would retain if they were not exhausted by sitting in the House for these long periods. It is sometimes wondered why at the conclusion of a sitting at five or six o'clock in the morning there are only some twenty-six honourable members present; but it is almost physically impossible for honourable gentlemen to remain in the fetid atmosphere of this House for ten hours at a stretch. I protest in the strongest manner possible against any Government compelling honourable members, in order to pass Bills within a certain time so as to close the session, to sit for such a long time. There was no excuse for it in this case, because, as I have said, and as many honourable members must admit, this Bill might just as well be passed next session as now, and to have delayed it would have given us an opportunity to go before the public and explain the measure. By delaying it the Government could have taken all necessary preliminary steps for procuring a Chief Commissioner during the interval before next session, and then they would have been prepared, if the House passed the Bill, to make the appointment at once and let the Commission begin its duties. I felt it to be my duty to make this protest at this time, and to express a strong hope that at any rate next session the Government will bring down their Bills sufficiently early not to necessitate the extreme tension on the physical powers of honourable members at the end of the session which there is now.

Mr. Fish

Mr. TANNER.—The honourable member for Dunedin South has said the Government can force this measure through because they have a strong majority; but I should like to remind him that this large majority is composed of members on both sides of the House. It has not been treated as a party question at all, and there are many members on the opposite side of the House supporting the Bill quite as strongly as members on this side. In reference to other remarks by the honourable member for Dunedin South, I think we should be careful about going into Committee again and reopening the whole question on this Bill. There may be no objection to recommit it to consider one particular clause, but it would not be well to recommit it in order to go over the whole ground again.

Mr. FISH.—I have no intention of moving any amendment myself if the Bill is recommended.

Mr. E. RICHARDSON.—I remained in the House till about four o'clock this morning, and then left, being unable to sit any longer. I had several amendments which, as I had previously suggested, I intended to propose, which I think would have considerably improved the Bill; but, as I could not stay, I could not move them; and I will indicate now where I think some of them are needed. I think in clause 36 there are several omissions as to what should be the powers of the Commissioners; and notably one power is omitted which is given in both the Victorian and New South Wales Acts, by which the Commissioners are able to make special rates for quantities. As far as I am able to ascertain, this Bill does not give such a power. I am aware that "The Public Works Act, 1882," has to be read with this measure, and a thorough study of both this Bill and that Act together is necessary to enable us to see what powers the Commissioners will have; but, as far as I have been able to find, the power I refer to is not given. Then, I think there is an omission in the Commissioners not being declared to be common carriers. I think very great trouble will ensue if that is not done; and it could be done by a short clause, which might perhaps be introduced in another place. But the amendment I first suggested probably could not be made in another place, it being on a subject relating to the imposition of rates. I think the Government should carefully consider both those points before the Bill is finally passed. Then, the Acts in both Victoria and New South Wales prohibit the Commissioners from removing or closing railway-workshops; and I think there should be a similar provision in this Bill. There should also be some provision as to the granting of free passes. I am aware that by subsection (n) of clause 86 the Commissioners may make by-laws "for the issue, and prevention of the abuse, of free passes on the railways or any of them;" but I think that—seeing that these are Government railways, and that certain concessions have been and are being made to members of Parliament and others—it would be well to follow the example of the other two colonies and put in a clause saying what Parliament thinks should be done in that direction. Then, I think there should be some specific provision in relation to running Sunday trains. There has been a great deal of feeling, at one time and another, in most parts of the colony on that subject. As the Bill now stands, I do not think the Commissioners have sufficient power to deal with that matter, and in the other colonies it has been considered wise to specify what should be done in that direction. I think there are several omissions in clause 86, but those I have mentioned are the most important. I think the points I have mentioned want carefully looking into, to insure the proper carrying-out of the Bill; and I hope the Government will instruct the officers of the department, before the Bill is finally passed, to carefully consider if the Bill gives all the necessary power to insure its successful operation and the efficient discharge of their duties by the Commissioners. I throw out these suggestions, and I hope the Minister for Public Works will think them worth looking into. I am not, myself, going to move the recommitment of the Bill for the purpose of reconsidering any clauses that might endanger the passing of the measure; but I trust that the Government will consider the points I have mentioned, with a view to amendments being made, if they should be deemed to be necessary, either here or in another place.

Mr. WARD.—I wish to give notice that, if the Bill is recommitted, I shall move a new clause limiting the amount of damages payable in case of accidents. I understand that in Victoria a proviso of this character is in force, and I think there should be a similar one in this Bill; and I hope the Minister in charge of the Bill will move in that direction. I should further like to say, as one who was in the House all night yesterday and listened attentively to the clauses of this measure being read, that I do not consider sufficient time was given to members of the House to consider the details of the Bill. The Bill is of a very important character, and I do not think it has had that full consideration which it should have had. I should have preferred its being left over till next session. There are clauses in it that I do not agree with, and I shall vote against the third reading of the measure, as I consider it is of too important a character to be hurried through in this manner.

Mr. LEVESTAM.—I support the recom-mittal of the Bill, and I give notice that I shall move certain amendments. I may say, at the outset, that I cannot support the proposal of the honourable member for Auckland North, and it is not for that purpose I shall support the recommitment of the Bill. I want to move that clauses 84 and 86 be reconsidered. In clause 86 an amendment was introduced, on the motion of the honourable member for the Bay of Islands, to the effect that the Commissioners may, with the consent of the Licensing Committee of any district, issue licenses for the sale of spirits at any railway-stations in any such district. I think, if we can trust the Commissioners with such great powers as we have given to them in this Bill, we might very well leave them to deal with a matter of this sort according to their own discretion. I fully agree that it may be quite right that the people in localities should pass resolutions and come to an agreement about the licenses to be issued within the limits of their own particular district, so long as those licenses relate to houses for the convenience of the people in that district; but I do not see that they should apply to such a case as that of railway-stations. The people of the localities in which those railway-stations are situated are not the only people to be consulted in a matter of this kind; people coming from all the localities in the colony are interested in this matter. The railway-stations do not belong to any particular district, but to the colony as a whole. When clause 86 was in Committee I moved to strike out subsection (c); but, as I was unable to get a teller with me, I could not go to a division, and there was no record of my having moved that motion. Subsection (c) provided that the Commissioners might regulate the granting of licenses for vehicles of every sort plying for hire at a railway, and the plying for hire at a railway of any vehicle not so licensed. In my opinion it is not necessary to provide for that in this Act. It simply means that an additional fee is to be put on these people, for already they are licensed by the various local bodies. If this clause were carried it would impose great hardship on many hackney-carriage and express drivers. I was told last night that such a power already exists in the Minister for Public Works; but I say it does not. What exists is this: Where stands have been established in railway-station yards, express and hackney-carriage drivers have to pay a license if they wish to use those stands. But under this subsection no hackney-carriage or express driver may take a passenger from a railway-station unless he has paid a license-fee to the Commissioners. I think that subsection should be taken out. Then, I wish to move a new clause providing that the wages of working-men shall not be reduced by the Commissioners, unless the consent of this House be first obtained. The opinion has been expressed by a great many members of this House, and with great justice, I think, that one of the first acts of the Commissioners will be to reduce the wages of the working-men; and that is a power which, I think, should not be placed in their hands, because if they do that they will reduce the wages throughout the whole colony, and so a great hardship will be done. I think that is one of the powers that should be retained by this House. As to the amendment of the honourable member for Auckland North, to give Vaile's scheme a trial, I cannot agree with that. Perhaps it would be better if the honourable gentleman were to amend his motion so as to make it provide that Mr. Vaile should be the first Chief Commissioner. One of the arguments made use of by the honourable member for Auckland North was that many petitions had been sent asking for a trial of the scheme. But I think that such petitions are not worth much, especially when they come to us from Auckland, where people get up petitions for all sorts of objects. Why, I remember that they got up a petition to secure the reprieve from the gallows of murderers who were almost taken red-handed. Therefore I do not think these petitions should have any weight. Then, all those who have read the evidence brought forward by Mr. Vaile himself must admit that he has no argument on his side at all. The arguments of Mr. Vaile simply amounted to this: that he believes so-and-so, and, because he believes it, it must be right. We know that a Committee which sat last session, consisting mainly of Auckland members, who wished to give him every chance, had to come to the conclusion that they could not recommend giving the scheme a trial, unless the district in which it was tried would become responsible for any deficiency that might arise. While I do not support the amendment of which the honourable member for Auckland North has given notice, I wish to see the Bill recommitted for the purpose I have mentioned.

Mr. TURNBULL.—Before the Bill goes into Committee, I wish to say that, while we are making provision for the Commissioners constructing railways, I do not see that there is any power under which the plans of the railways, et cetera, would become the property of the Commissioners. The Public Works Department and the Commissioners would be two distinct bodies, and it would be necessary to hand over the plans to the Commissioners. I do not know whether it is necessary to provide for that.

Major ATKINSON.—It is not intended to give the Board power to make railways unless the work is specially handed over to them by Order in Council, and then the plans would have to be handed over.

Mr. TAYLOR.—I do not know whether the Government will accept the recommitment of the Bill for the purpose of adding a clause of the character indicated by the honourable member for Nelson—that is, to make some provision for the protection of men working on the railways. I am very much afraid that they will be the first sufferers under this Board, and for this reason: We are told that settlement is to be one main feature of the management of the Railway Commissioners, and commercial principles another. What will they do so far as the settlement part of the business is concerned? They will revise the tariff; and, as for the other, they will take 6d. or 1s. per diem off the working-men. I do trust that the Government will make some provision of the character indicated, so that these men shall not be reduced; because it does seem to me a serious thing that, in a young colony like this, men should only get just sufficient to keep them alive, and not be able to get sufficient to provide for themselves in their old age. I know that these sentiments are not very popular in this House with some honourable members; but I cannot help, and will not help, expressing my opinions whenever I have an opportunity on behalf of those who are not here to defend their interests. This morning there was no opportunity of getting inserted a clause of this character; but I trust that the Premier, in the interests of the masses, will see that such a clause is inserted; and I hope that he will accept the amendment of the honourable member for Nelson.

Mr. E. RICHARDSON.—I hope that the Premier will not overlook the matter I mentioned in clause 36, because I believe that that clause cannot be touched in another Chamber.

Major ATKINSON.—No. I have taken a note of the honourable gentleman's point, and thank him for the suggestion. But I propose that, if necessary, any amendments of that character shall be sent down by Governor's message. I might tell the honourable gentleman that this clause has been gone through very carefully by the officers of the department.

Mr. LEVESTAM.—May I ask whether the honourable gentleman will bring down by Governor's message a clause like the one indicated—that the Commissioners shall have no power to reduce the rate of wages except with the consent of Parliament?

Major ATKINSON.—I do not see my way to bring down any such clause as that at all.

Mr. WARD.—I may say that I mentioned to the Minister for Public Works this evening that I intended to move, if the Bill again went into Committee, in the direction I mentioned a short time ago. I should like to know if he will introduce a clause limiting the amount of compensation payable in cases of accident.

Major ATKINSON.—I will look into it, but I am doubtful of the propriety of saving any amount in compensation.

Mr. FISH.—I should like to ask the Premier whether he has considered the question I raised this afternoon and last evening—that is, with regard to the Government having the power of veto as to any tariff the Commissioners may frame. It is so, I am informed, in the Victorian Act. The Government there have power to veto a tariff if they do not think it in the interest of the country.

Major ATKINSON.—I will look into the matter and see.

Mr. MONK.—I must make some explanation to the House for the vote I feel myself compelled to give. I have paid some attention to railway grievances in the part of the country to which I belong. Though I think it is necessary that great reductions should be made in the rates now charged on the lines in the North, I have always felt that the plan as laid down by Mr. Vaile would not be practicable. In the first place, I do not think the population is sufficient to make it payable; and, then, I think that no allowance has been made for the wear-and-tear that would take place under Mr. Vaile's system. I should like a greater reduction in railway freights than I believe will be secured under a Board such as is contemplated; but if the Board is to be charged with the control of the railways by this House, and with the approval of the country, then I think we cannot tie up the hands of the Commissioners by supporting a motion which would virtually take from them the power which it is contemplated by this measure to give them. And I feel certain that, if Mr. Vaile's scheme were adopted on the Waikato and Kaipara lines, in twelve months' time such a loss would be revealed to the country as would startle us, and such as the country cannot afford. On the other hand, there are some features about the Railway Bill that I feel very anxious about. I do not like the idea of handing over the railways to an absolute power for such a long time as is contemplated by the Bill. Supposing we place our railways in the power of an autocrat, no matter how clever that gentleman may be, it is quite possible that his experience may be such as to lead him to attempt a policy which will not be applicable to our lines, where, no matter how strong our desire to make the railways a financial success, such considerations must be controlled by the prices of produce and concessions that, in the interests of settlement, must be made. I feel certain that any Railway Board that may attempt to manage our lines will have to contend with difficulties that do not exist on lines in any other part of the world. They have to contend with low water-freights, and, as time goes on, this difficulty, instead of disappearing, will rather intensify and become more difficult to cope with as sea-services increase. If this House expects that any Railway Board that can be devised can make our lines profitable, I feel certain in my own mind that it will be absolutely mistaken, and that the advantage of the Board will simply be this: that it will be withdrawn from political control. That will be some advantage, and for that reason I feel compelled to support the Bill. But I am certain that, if there is any expectation that our railways will be made to pay full interest upon the cost of construction, that expectation will not be realised; but, on the contrary, that the skill of any Commissioner will be shown not so much in the introduction of some system of which he may be the reputed master as in the facility with which he will adapt himself to grapple with difficulties that for a long time to come he will find besetting the management of our lines.

Mr. Levestam

The House divided on the question, "That the words, 'the Bill be now read the third time,' stand part of the question."

AYES, 52.

Allen	Kerr	Reeves, W. P.
Atkinson	Lance	Rhodes
Bruce	Larnach	Richardson, E.
Buchanan	Macarthur	Richardson, G.
Cowan	Mackenzie, M.	Ross
Dodson	Mackenzie, T.	Seymour
Fergus	McKenzie, J.	Stewart, W. D.
Fisher	Mills	S.-Menteath
Fitchett	Mitchelson	Taipua
Fitzherbert	Monk	Taiwhanga
Fulton	Newman	Tanner
Grimmond	O'Callaghan	Thompson, R.
Hamlin	O'Conor	Valentine
Hislop	Ormond	Walker.
Hobbs	Parata
Hutchison	Peacock	Tellers.
Izard	Pearson	Barron
Kelly	Pyke	Beetham.

NOES, 24.

Anderson	Hodgkinson	Steward, W. J.
Blake	Jackson	Taylor
Buxton	Jones	Turnbull
Cadman	Joyce	Ward
Feldwick	Lawry	Withy.
Fish	Moat	Tellers.
Goldie	Moss	Levestam
Grey	Perceval	Thompson, T.
Guinness

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Samuel	Duncan
Wilson.	Seddon.

Majority for, 28.

Amendment negatived.

The House divided on the question, "That the Bill be now read a third time."

AYES, 56.

Allen	Izard	Pyke
Atkinson	Kelly	Reeves, W. P.
Beetham	Kerr	Rhodes
Bruce	Lance	Richardson, E.
Buchanan	Larnach	Richardson, G.
Buxton	Lawry	Ross
Cadman	Levestam	Seymour
Cowan	Macarthur	Steward, W. J.
Dodson	Mackenzie, T.	Stewart, W. D.
Fergus	Mills	S.-Menteath
Fisher	Mitchelson	Taipua
Fitchett	Moat	Thompson, R.
Fitzherbert	Monk	Valentine
Fulton	Newman	Walker
Hamlin	O'Callaghan	Whyte
Hislop	O'Conor	Withy.
Hobbs	Ormond	Tellers.
Hodgkinson	Parata	Russell
Hutchison	Peacock	Tanner.

NOES, 18.

Feldwick	Joyce	Turnbull
Goldie	McKenzie, J.	Vogel
Grey	Moss	Ward.
Grimmond	Perceval	Tellers.
Guinness	Seddon	Barron
Jackson	Thompson, T.	Fish.
Jones

PAIRS.

For.	Against.
Pearson	Ballance
Samuel.	Duncan.

Majority for, 38.

Bill read a third time.

On the motion, That the Bill do pass,

Mr. SEDDON said,—Sir, I desire to lodge a last protest against the passing of this measure, because, notwithstanding that there is a very large majority in favour of it, I still hold to the opinion that the consideration which so important a measure ought to have at the hands of members of this House has not been given to it. I desire also to put on record the manner in which this measure was put through, and I think it will not place either the Government or this House in a very favourable light before the people of Great Britain and New Zealand. Here was a measure dealing with fifteen million pounds' worth of public property—for that is what our railways cost—forced through Committee at a quarter past five this morning, when there were only some twenty-seven members present. I was one who remained until about half-past three. I then lodged a protest against the Bill proceeding further under the circumstances, and left the responsibility with the Government, and they thought fit to see the measure through Committee. They did what I consider is against the Standing Orders, and is somewhat unconstitutional, inasmuch as they appropriated in payment of the salaries of these Commissioners £3,500 per annum for five years, making a total of nearly £20,000. I do not know that there is any parallel to the present course in regard to such a Bill as this—the action of the Government last night, after passing the Bill through Committee, in then putting the appropriation clauses through a Committee of the Whole, giving the assent of the Crown to them, and then recommitting the Bill and passing it through. By that proceeding we have bound the colony to pay this money for the next five years for a pure experiment. I am afraid the passing of this Bill means the reduction of the wages of the employés on our railways. I have heard it mooted, in the lobbies and outside, that a reduction can be made to the extent of some £30,000—an honourable gentleman near me says £50,000—and that means this: that the spending-power of those employés will be curtailed. I do not lay much stress upon that, but I am afraid it means a detrimental effect on the wages generally throughout New Zealand. If we place the control of our railways in the hands of an irresponsible body, and if that body, without having their power in this respect distinctly defined by the measure, are to cut down wages to such a point that it will interfere with the wages of the rest of the wage-earning classes of New Zealand, it will be a sorry day for this colony that so pernicious a Bill was ever passed. It also means raising the tariff on the producers, the farmers of the colony. We know full well that the amount they now receive for their produce is not sufficient to compensate them for producing, and they have to produce at a loss. I see nothing in this measure, and have heard nothing from the Government, in regard to what has been very much complained of, and that is, as to who is to be the Chief Commissioner; and it is very likely we shall have the late General Manager of Railways, Mr. Maxwell, in that position. There is nothing whatever in this Bill, as far as I can see, which compels the Government to seek elsewhere for the Chief Commissioner; and, whether rightly or wrongly, something strikes me that Mr. Maxwell will be one of the Commissioners, if not the Chief Commissioner. There has been a general complaint against his management, even when under the control of Parliament; and, if there was then any well-founded ground for complaint, how much more intensified will the evil be when he is placed as Chief Commissioner, free from parliamentary control! As I said last night, I say it here again, the management of our New Zealand railways has been commendable, taking all the circumstances into consideration. At all events I do not believe it has been so glaringly bad that we should hand over to an irresponsible body this large and valuable public property, when, I believe, a number of our railways may be closed altogether, when it is quite possible the railways may be worked upon purely commercial principles to the detriment of the work of colonisation, for which this large sum of money was raised. This Bill is, to my mind, a serious blow, so far as the progress of the colony is concerned, in that direction. I am afraid the public will suffer by the change; but the majority has decided, and we must for a time submit to be guided by the majority. The only thing I would say is this: that there is in the colony, at the present moment, a feeling in existence that delay should take place before this measure is given full effect to. I hold in my hand a resolution which has been forwarded to me from Auckland.

An Hon. MEMBER.—From whom?

Mr. SEDDON.—It is from the New Zealand Reform League.

An Hon. MEMBER.—Who are they?

Mr. SEDDON.—Some Auckland members are laughing derisively at the announcement that I have made—that it is from the Reform League of Auckland; but it appears to me that a very considerable change has come over those honourable gentlemen since the elections. There is one honourable gentleman, at all events, I have found in the lobby—Mr. Goldie—who did not hesitate to keep to his pledges and be guided in his actions by the wishes of those who were instrumental in securing his return to this House. The honourable member for Parnell was also quite consistent in not wishing to take from Parliament and the control of the House the management of our railways. This is what the League says—and I desire to put it on record, because there is a good deal in it:—

An Hon. MEMBER.—It is not worth the paper it is written on.

Mr. SEDDON.—This is not the only thing that is not worth the paper it is written on. I leave it to the honourable member for Franklin South,—perhaps he understands it. Seeing he is an authority on paper-writing, he should be the last to interrupt. This memorandum is as follows:—

“New Zealand Radical Reform League,

“Auckland, 7th December, 1887.

“SIR,—I beg to forward you, on behalf of the above League, the following resolution passed at its last meeting, held on the 5th instant:—

“That this League learns with regret that it is the intention of the Government to form a Railway Board, and import a railway expert to place at its head; and would direct attention to the fact that a Parliamentary Committee, in 1886, reported among other findings that, although the system now in force in New Zealand is similar to that in the United Kingdom and its dependencies, and is well administered, it is nevertheless not satisfactory as a system. This association, therefore, in the strongest manner, condemns the appointment of a Board to still further develop this system, and believes the result can only be to perpetuate a vicious railway policy and entail loss on the country generally.”—I have, &c.,

“JAMES BATTY, Secretary.”

Sir, from information I have received from Victoria about the working of that system, I find that the further it goes on the less satisfactory it is; and that information comes from one who is, I may say, connected with the working of that system. In writing to me, he says that New Zealand is going a little too far ahead—that it would be better to be cautious and see how the thing developed further in Victoria. I believe it would be better to wait a little longer before we commit the colony to what is intended by this Bill. I do no more than say this: that the responsibility rests with those who have supported this measure. Considering its magnitude and importance it has not had that consideration it was entitled to; and I do not think that in doing what we have done we are acting fairly to the public creditors of the colony. Hence I protest against it.

Mr. KERR.—I was one of those who supported this Bill, and I believe it is a really good Bill. At all events, I feel satisfied our railroads will run better than they have done in the past. But surely the honourable member for Kumara and other honourable gentlemen are talking to their constituents. They are continually yelping about the poor man's wages being lowered. The working-men of this country can take care of themselves, and they will have good wages. Railway-men cannot expect much more than farmers get now. Labour always protects itself, and always will do so. I am always glad to see men get good wages, as well as anybody else; but I am not going to see farm-labourers receive 2s. and 3s. a day less than railway-labourers. I wonder why railway-labourers should receive more wages than farm-labourers do.

Mr. R. H. J. REEVES.—How do they?

Mr. KERR.—They do at the present time.

Mr. R. H. J. REEVES.—Where?

Mr. KERR.—In Waimea and all over New Zealand there are men now going about, as good men as platelayers, and they would be very glad to get work at less money than is now paid to platelayers. That is my answer to the honourable gentleman? If times are bad for other people, the men on the railways must bear a share of the pressure. I do not want to see the wages lowered, but if the wages of other people are lowered the wages of railway-men must be lowered also. I feel satisfied the thing will come right of itself. There are plenty of men walking about the country in search of employment, and they would be glad to take less than the railway-men get.

Mr. MOSS.—It is a bad sign.

Mr. R. H. J. REEVES.—A sign of bad government.

Mr. KERR.—When I left twenty men a week were passing my place. I was feeding them, and they would have been glad to get employment. They went down the Coast looking for work, but could not get it. That is going on through the whole colony, I am sorry to say, to-day. I do not see why the present employes should monopolize the whole work of the railways. If they are not satisfied, let them go elsewhere and do better, like other people. The honourable gentlemen that are continually crying about the poor man are not the poor man's friends. Do they employ the poor men, or give them a meal when they are hungry? Not they. They are only throwing dust at the working-man, to help themselves for election purposes. Who ever heard of the honourable gentlemen—the honourable member for Auckland Central or the honourable member for Parnell—doing anything practical for the working-man's benefit?—only talking in this House! It is really sickening to hear them. They have done this for years; but I can tell the honourable gentlemen that the working-men can see things for themselves; and this game they have played so long is worked out, and the working-man will not be blinded by the honourable gentlemen's oratory any longer.

Sir J. VOGEL.—I wish to say, very briefly, that I consider the whole responsibility for this measure rests with the Government. I sincerely hope it will prove a success. I think it was a great mistake to hurry a measure of this kind through the House, and more especially a mistake not to take up the amendments which were proposed by several honourable members with a view to improving the measure. There has been, in my mind, a breach of faith in the matter, though I will not say a wilful one. I understand that last night all amendments were refused. Honourable members were told that it was of no use moving amendments. I confess that I cannot work in the middle of the night, and, if Bills of this character are forced on at such late hours, I and others have a difficulty in following them. When this Bill was read a second time there

